Dr. Thompson, of Boston, who was received with great applause, said: The seniority of the American Board among foreign missionary societies in the United States must be the only reason for my being called upon at this time. I am most happy, and I am honoured in responding on behalf of delegates from beyond the sea—delegates representing specifically sundry foreign missionary societies and kindred associations, and delegates also representing various parts of the country. In the persons of those present there is a representation of sundry religious denominations and occupations and positions—the merchant, the army, foreign embassy, editors, authors, clergy, and the executive of missionary and other associations—many, like the waves we have been traversing, one, like the sea we have crossed. Among those who have listened and who are officially present and have listened to your lordship's kindly greeting, are numerous women representing Women's Missionary Boards, of which there are thirty-five in the United States; and I speak without exaggeration in saying that connected with them there are thousands of auxiliaries. Your able and excellent Chairman of the Executive Committee has stated that ten years ago women came to the front. They have continued to the front, both in home administration and in foreign missionary enterprise. The graceful salutation from the Chair was listened to by Priscilla and Aquila, by Tryphena and Tryphosa, "who labour in the Lord"; and mine eye rests now on the "beloved Persis." Some of those who are officially present came, before reaching the Atlantic in this direction, a distance equal to that from Constantinople to London; but that is not to be mentioned, nor the voyage of 3000 miles, when a gathering like this is in mind. I have spoken of distance. There is one point on our globe where British landed possessions approach within a few hundred feet of the United States, and where the avalanche of waters reveals a vast volume of mist rising like incense to heaven. I have seén, and others present have seen, a beautiful bow arching the chasm—one end resting on one side, the other end resting on the other; and we may see in that a type of harmony. Neither nation may claim a monopoly of that beautiful arch, but each may see in it a token of good neighbourhood. And, friends, has not God placed his bow in the clouds spanning a distance greater that any ocean, co-extensive indeed with the great circle of our globe, the emblem of universal amity and brotherhood? Ten years ago, England sent a written invitation to us to be present at the Missionary Conference in Mildmay Park. In the present instance you honoured us by sending a secretary to bring personal invitations. We appreciate the marked courtesy; and, now, why are we here? It is not, my lord, to inspect the industrial products of Great Britain; it is not to contemplate the palaces, and halls, and cathedrals; it is not so much to look at the Tower of London, and the British Museum, or Parliament. It is to help to take an inventory of evangelistic achievements through the last 100 years. We are here, as at the first missionary meeting at Antioch, to hear the Paul and Silas of to-day rehearse all that God has done for them, and how He has opened the door of the Gentiles to them. Our hope is that He who shed his blood for us all, whose eye is on all lands—He who has business in all continents and islands, yes, has business in all worlds—may be the Alpha and Omega of this Convocation. In his adorable name, the American delegation most cordially responds to your graceful greetings.

Rev. Dr. Schreiber, of the Rhenish Missionary Society, in the course of a few remarks, gave expression to the great joy he felt at being present. He referred to the fact that he was at the Mildmay Conference ten years ago, and prayed that this Conference might be fruitful in blessing to the Church and the world.

Pasteur Dumas, of Paris, also spoke. He alluded to the activity of Protestantism in France, and rejoiced to tell of the vigour of the missionary spirit in the churches. He pointed with pleasure to what is being done by Frenchmen in Africa and the South Seas.

Rev. James Johnston, secretary of the Conference, made a statement explanatory of the programme. The meetings are divided into three classes. The first class for members only, deals mainly with the principles on which missions are based, and the methods by which they are carried on. The second class deals with such questions as the spread of Mohammedanism, and the relation of Buddhism and other false religions to Christianity, as well as the effect of commerce on the work. The third class has for its object and purpose the bringing of the real state of the heathen world and the results of missionary enterprise before the Christian public.

A hymn having been sung, and prayer offered by Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, the meeting was brought to a close by Rev. Nevile Sherbrooke pronouncing the Benediction.

MONDAY, JUNE 11.

There was a good muster of members in the Lower Hall on Monday morning, when the real business of the Conference was begun by a discussion on Missionary Training.

After praise, reading of the Scriptures, and prayer, the chairman (Sir Rivers Thompson) offered some words of cordial welcome to the delegates from afar. Whatever differences of view or organisation there might be among them, he said, they were all one in aim. In various parts of India he had found that the work of missions was chiefly carried out by workers from Germany and America.

A paper was then read by Rev. W. H. Barlow, B.D. The missionary candidate, he said, must be a true Christian, with clear views of doctrine, good health, love to souls, and of experience in work at home. With respect to training, Mr. Barlow first urged the constant and thorough study of the Scriptures; whatever other books were used in the curriculum, this must take the first place. The student should get to know it from beginning to end, better even if possible than do pastors at home. Then he must be a devout student of the Word of God for his own profit, as well as for teaching purposes. A critical study of the Latin and Greek, and, if possible, of Hebrew is desirable. No one can attempt to translate the Scriptures without some such knowledge, and most missionaries should aim at being a translator of the Bible at some time or other. Concurrently a knowledge of vocal music should be acquired. A well-trained ear is of great importance. Confusion of sound will lead to confusion of words, and from that to confusion of ideas. A careful knowledge of Church history is also of importance—especially the history of Christianity. He who has watched the rise and fall of heresy in one age will be better armed for the work of his own day. From the experience of the past he will know what to do and to avoid. A distinct knowledge of Christian doctrine is of great value. The works of standard divines ought to be studied. With these heavier books of study there should be an examination of the biographies of eminent representative servants of God in his own line of service. The present state and position of missionary enterprise over the whole world should be carefully reviewed. Instruction in the elements at least of surgery and medicine should not be omitted by any missionary. The difference between one with such a training and one who has no such training is simply enormous. The value of some sort of manual training, anything that makes a man ready with hand as well as heart, must also be a real benefit. In conclusion, Mr. Barlow pleaded for thorough training for all missionary candidates. Those who have done best service in the foreign field are those who have been most thoroughly equipped.

The next paper was by Mr. Grattan Guinness, who said the centenary of missions had been a glorious one, but the goal (the evangelisation of the world) was still unreached. We have now abundant powers and opportunities, and what we want is an earnest purpose and resolve in the use of them. If the world is to be evangelised before the present generation has passed away, there must be an enormous increase in the missionary army. There are only 6000 missionaries now in the heathen fields, all told. As to the qualifications required, it is of necessity that a missionary be a true Christian. Said John Newton: "Only He who created the world can create a true missionary"; he is a gift to the world from the ascended Saviour. A Christ-like compassion for the lost should be the ruling feature of his character. The most brilliant talents cannot be a substitute for this. Still, certification is needed as to health, temperament, or various physical and mental defects. There are also many moral prohibitory defects. Ignorance, or narrow-mindedness, or awkwardness of manner should not, however, make a man ineligible.

There should be special training, though not all in the same school. God has many ways of preparing his servants. Christ's example with his disciples is full of instruction. He chose them, and during three years set before them his own splendid example. "Follow Me," He said. He imparted to them instructions as to the principles of his kingdom—among them the power of prayer and self-sacrifice, the supremacy of the Word of God, and many things as to the future. The influence of such training transformed them. Men saw that "they had been with Jesus." The society of Christ was the college in which they graduated. The Holy Ghost continued the work in the early Apostolic Church; it was distinctly under the guidance of the Spirit. We cannot improve on these examples. The Acts of the Apostles forms the best book of guidance or training still. Is our mode of testing sufficiently thorough? Do we seek and select, and then cultivate the type of character that Christ selected. Education is good, but it is a poor substitute for grace. Mr. Guinness, for lack of time, had to omit about the half of his paper, the omitted part dealing with the practical development of evangelistic gifts and ability in actual work among our home heathen. Open-air preaching, he said, is a capital school. The more education the better, but the number of missionaries needed for the evangelisation of the world is so large that we cannot spend too much time and cost in preparation. The systems of training need relaxing. Medical training is also very valuable; even partially, if a full training is not possible.

FREE CONFERENCE.

Free conference having been invited, Herr Merensky, of Berlin, said the great want is the want of men. If we had the men, the Lord would send the money. The leading German societies have generally adopted the principles stated by Mr. Barlow.

Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson, of Philadelphia, said this was a vital topic. As the result of much study he was convinced that some deep and radical errors lie at the root of our system of training. A long literary course is too often fatal to spiritual power and success. The effect is to stimulate a type of worldly ambition. With intellectual culture there should be personal contact with the lost. If a man is not ready to preach the Gospel anywhere, he is not fit to preach it anywhere. If a man can preach to the lowest he can preach to the highest, but the converse is not always true. Work in the slums will test whether a man is after souls rather than salaries. Great stress ought to be laid on open-air work and extempore preaching. If a man is thoroughly consecrated, he can even dispense with a superabundance of common sense.

Rev. W. Macgregor, of the English Presbyterian Mission in China, said that experience in the mission field soon teaches a man he cannot proclaim a Saviour to the heathen if he does not know the power of the Gospel himself. Mental culture, however, is of great importance. The Church ought not to send to mission fields those whom she is not prepared to employ at home. The Apostles were not, as it is too commonly said, uneducated and illiterate men. Who was sent as the Apostle to the heathen? Not any of the first Apostles; they were to work at home. The Apostle to the Gentiles was one who had all the learning of Judaism combined with all the culture of Greece. It is not easy to preach to heathen so as to carry home conviction to the hearts of the people. It needs adaptability, and the power to realise their intellectual state. Ceteris paribus, the man with literary training will be the best fitted for the work. Observation has shown that such men have greater versatility and power of adaptation. The speaker again emphasised the point that the Church must not send out to heathen lands men of lower qualifications than those she will accept at home.

Rev. J. Hudson Taylor (after a brief season of prayer for illumination on this important subject) said he believed in not lowering the standard of missionary service, but in raising it. We have been too satisfied with men who have not been full of the Holy Ghost. We need to believe in the power of prayer. God will select right men and women; and it is at the peril of the Church that she refuses them. Many students have been spoiled by their intellectual training. Of course they need not be so spoiled. Let us be sure that the men are called. The work is very much the same as it was in our Lord's time, neither more easy nor more difficult. Let us see that candidates have proved to be soul-winners at home. A voyage across the Indian Ocean will not make a man a soul-winner. It is a profound mistake to give men a mere smattering of medical culture. Let us not seek to spoil a good evangelist by making a poor doctor of him. God will provide true medical missionaries, and these ought to be fully qualified.

Dr. George Post, of Syria, as a medical missionary of long standing, said that medical quacks were not wanted in the mission field. A man should be fully qualified, or not pretend to be a medical missionary at all. We want all sorts of men—city missionaries, farmers, blacksmiths, printers, cutters, engravers, &c., and all of them endued with the spirit of Christ. We want translators, though it would be a waste of time and talent for everyone to look forward to that vocation. There are diversities of gifts; we require them all. There is room for every man, be he a speaker or not. A printer may sometimes do a greater work than a preacher. Let all the talents be consecrated in the spirit of prayer, and by the power of the Holy Ghost.

Rev. L. Dahle, of the Norwegian Mission, said those who go out ought to be healthy—men who can rough it, and do not require to be nursed or sent home the year after they go out. Then let them have "go" as well as piety. A man cannot wander among the heathen, with folded hands and eyes, looking up to heaven all the time; he must look around on the needs of those about him. He must also be a man who can attract the people. As to training, the apostles had a very different kind of teacher from what we have, with all respect to the good men who preside over our colleges. Too much stress should not be laid on the knowledge of the dead languages; he had known men who never saw a Greek or Hebrew grammar who were yet most successful missionaries. It depends on what the man is intended for. There is room for all, and need for all.

Dr. Murray Mitchell said that at home and abroad the work is very much the same, and the qualifications are largely the same. Still, there is a great work in foreign fields for men with high mental culture. In India there is great scope for intellectual power. For the translation of the Scriptures, and other literary work that requires to be done, this kind of qualification is essential.

Mr. F. Freeman said that as a business man he knew many workers who longed to go to foreign lands, but preferred to abide in their calling. When there is an open door abroad for a business man, let us search for and send out a Christian. In his own case four years of study at Oxford had knocked out of his head all idea of self-denial, and it took about twenty years of street-preaching to bring it back again.

Dr. Syle, late Professor of the Imperial University in Tokio, Japan, suggested that every missionary should be trained in the early history of the Church, so as to meet the intellectual difficulties of the people. It is a terrible calamity to send out a missionary who has to be sent home again for lack of due certification. We want all kinds of sanctified talent. We want the leader, the translator, the educator, the teacher, the nurse, the colporteur. Let every man exercise his gift, and be content with it. The trouble is that some of the privates want all the privileges and position of the General.

Rev. C. H. Bell, of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, St. Louis, emphasised the need of special missionary professors in colleges and seminaries. We want the best men for the foreign fields, and we ought to give them the best possible preparation.

Rev. J. A. Taylor (Richmond, Va.), a coloured brother, referred pathetically to the fact that until recent years his people had been left out of the reckoning. He referred to the importance of instruction in manual industries.

Rev. James Calvert, of Fiji, said his experience as to medical knowledge had been somewhat different from that of some who had spoken. He had acquired a smattering of medical knowledge in his student days, and yet he did not consider himself a "quack." In Fiji there was no medical man within 1200 miles. The missionaries had to act, whether they liked it or not. They often had to guess—other and better men have had to guess—but they often guessed right. Let every man who goes where there are no doctors learn as much of medicine and surgery as he can.

Rev. T. Worthey Drury, of the Church Missionary College, Islington, said the general standard could not be too high, but it could not be equally and fully applied all round. It had been hinted that intellectual study tends to blunt spiritual enthusiasm. There is that danger, of course, but those who train missionaries must feel that it need not be so. Let there be great care as to the devotional life, and also let students be kept in touch with the outside world. The training time is a testing time, and it is better that students should be brought to the test sooner than later.

As the time had expired, several friends who desired to speak could not be heard.

The Influence of Mohammedanism.

A full meeting was held in the afternoon, in the Lower Hall, for conference on "The increase of Islamism, and the social, political, and religious influences of Mohammedanism."

The chair was occupied by that well-known Anglo-Indian, Sir William Hunter. In the course of a thoughtful address he asked what influence the missionary movements of the past century had exercised on the older faiths of the world. He reviewed some of the early triumphs of the Gospel in India, and the many obstacles with which it had to contend. "The missionary idea" had to grow up through much prejudice from within, and in the face of worse difficulties that came from the people themselves, by reason of the cruel behaviour of the white man. At the commencement of the century the political conscience of England awoke to the harm that was being done, and with it the Christian conscience awoke. Missionary work may, therefore, be regarded as an expiation for the wrongs of the past, and a pledge of right-doing in the time to come. Who had protested against the slave trade in the past and against the liquor trade in India as the missionary bodies had done? The difficulties are less now than they were a hundred years ago, but the problem is more complex. A new study has arisen in Europe—that of the history and science of religions. We have to face the necessity of meeting the great masses of superstition, tradition, and learning among the heathen nations. In thus meeting the false with the true, we have to go in the spirit of the Apostle Paul, who reasoned with his opposers. The churches are now sending their best men to the front, and our great public schools and universities are favouring missionary enterprise, so that there is a more scientific and thoroughgoing treatment of the question. No English clergyman would now, like Sidney Smith, dare to sneer at missions, because in doing so he would outrage the universal sense of the people. Still, we have to face much criticism as to methods and results. With respect to Islam in India, Sir William repeated what he had already proved in the columns of The Times, that Mohammedanism is progressing in India, not more quickly or slowly than the progress of the population. While the Mohammedan population increases at the rate of 10 per cent., it is stated that the Christian population has increased at the rate of 64 per cent. in the last ten years, but we can hardly expect this to continue during the next decade. In considering these questions we must guard against exaggeration of every sort. Our statistics will be examined by unfriendly critics, and we must not give them any ground for complaint. Let us quietly, accurately, and honestly state the truth.

Rev. Dr. Bruce, of Persia, entered on a brief survey of the influence of Mohammedanism on the mental, moral, and spiritual nature of the people in that country. We cannot judge a religion, he said, by the life of the majority of its professors in any age. We must go to the fountain-head, and look at the system in the life of its founder, and the book that professes to be its authentic expounder. This will convince us that a comparison between the life of Mohammed and that of our Lord is impossible; we can scarcely dare, indeed, to contrast them. Dr. Bruce highly commended Sir William Muir's "Life of Mohammed," published by the Religious Tract Society. A remarkable contrast exists between the first fifty years of Mohammed's life and his later years. The first stage reveals a beautiful career contrasted with the latest period of it, when the false prophet was the husband of eleven wives. In his system he degraded woman more than ever she had been degraded before. In the years when he was a prophet, he was guilty of the most terrible acts of murder in cold blood. Most Mohammedans are probably ignorant of his life as a prophet; and, regarding him as a pattern, the less they know about it the better. As to the Koran, it has never been used to elevate the people. It has never been translated for the use of the common people. It is not read at all by them, so it could not have an elevating effect, even if it were capable of doing so. Speaking of his own experience in Persia, Dr. Bruce said the Mohammedans do not educate their people at all. One of the most deplorable things among them is their terrible ignorance. He said that so far he had not been able to see much result in connection with his work among Mohammedans.

Rev. Dr. Schreiber, of Barmen, spoke of Islam in Dutch India. While there is no great progress in numbers there, there is a great advance in activity in opposing Christianity. No doubt increased facilities in travel largely account for the growth of the pilgrimages to Mecca. There also is an ominous increase in Mohammedan schools, not less than 55 per cent. in three years. At the same time, there is an encouraging growth in the number of Dutch Christian missionaries, and of native Christians in Java and Sumatra. Among these there is a considerable number of converts from Mohammedanism. Probably in no other part of the world are there so many converts from Islam.

Rev. Dr. Post, of Syria, said the Mohammedan question might be stated in terms of the position of woman. That is the test of the influence of any religious system. There are great rejoicings in Mohammedan lands when a boy is born, but when a girl is born the mother weeps, and there is universal condolence. By and by the girl learns that her mother is regarded as an inferior being. She is not taught to read; in fact, is not educated at all. If all the Mohammedan girls were educated, it would be impossible to maintain the system of the harem, with all its jealousies and cruelties. The girl is married, say, at ten, never later than fifteen. For a few days she is the object of interest and regard, and then she enters on a dark future. These poor women have the same minds and hearts and sensibilities as their sisters in Christian lands, but everything good is crushed out by the cruel system of polygamy. The consolations of religion are denied them, and thus one half of the population is utterly disregarded. Even at the grave the women are made to feel their inferiority. The effect of all this on the men, who in their early years are under the influence of the harem, is disastrous. It is very doubtful if Mohammedanism has done much to elevate even savage Arabia. But, granted that it has done something there, what of its baleful influence in Persia, Syria, Egypt, and all the other fountain-heads of Christianity? There is either a great want of candour or of historical knowledge on the part of those who exalt Islam as a benefactor of the people among whom it comes.

Politically it is the most absolute despotism known on the face of the earth. As a system it tends to depopulation. It is propagated by the sword, and has used that sword in a way unequalled in the history of the world. The conquered nations are either destroyed or absorbed. Still there has always been a Christian remnant preserved among the Mohammedan peoples—the Copts, the Maronites, the Nestorians, the Armenians, &c. And this is a pledge that these nations will yet be recovered for Christianity. The system has never created, but has destroyed the wealth of the past; neither does it encourage the acquisition of wealth. Its action blights the progress of agriculture, commerce, and manufactures. Desolation reigns everywhere. Everything tells of ruin, and nothing of reconstruction or prosperity. Let us pray that the time of its rule may be short.

At this stage Dr. Murray Mitchell led in thanksgiving to God for preserving these persecuted remnants, and in petition that the time might be hastened when the true Prophet should be known and believed in, where now the sway of the false prophet is owned.

Rev. E. Sell, of Madras, referred to some of the brighter aspects of the question. A modern and reforming school has arisen among Mohammedans in India. It ought to be stated also that Mohammedan women have a great deal more power, for instance, in the holding and disposition of property, than the Christian women had till very recent legislation. These Mohammedan reformers entirely deny the doctrine of the verbal inspiration of the Koran, and contend that polygamy, concubinage, and slavery were only temporary measures. In India there is, therefore, a small but growing and influential party who reject the commonly received orthodox interpretations of Mohammedan lawyers. Many young men who have been educated in Madras belong to this school. It must be remembered, too, that in Islam, as in other religions, there are men who are better than their creed.

Mr. E. H. Glenny, of the North African Mission, spoke of North Africa and the recent growth of Protestant missions in that part of the world. In Tunis, Algeria, and Morocco, Christianity has been quite extinguished for the last thousand years. We do not find good fruit produced in those lands where Mohammedanism has had it all its own way. Mr. Glenny said he did not dare to speak of the moral, or rather immoral, condition of Morocco. In Tunis and Algeria, which are under French rule or protection, there is less oppression, but not less immorality. The women themselves think they have no souls, and are looked on as mere animals. A man may purchase a wife for the same price as a mule, say £12 or £14. In Morocco there is no security for life or property for the natives. Socially, commercially, and politically, therefore, the Mohammedan people in North Africa are sunk as low almost as the heathen. Still these lands are fully open to the Gospel, and there are opportunities which we ought not to neglect.

A Dutch gentleman said that in past times the Government of Holland had done nothing for missions. But the new Government has thrown open the doors of Dutch India to missionaries. The Secretary of State for the Colonies has stated in a recent circular that the Government would be very glad if the missionary societies in the Netherlands would increase their numbers in Dutch India. That is a remarkable invitation to come from a Government official, and prayer is desired that this may be a turning point in the history of the work.

Count de Limburg Hirun, a young Hollander, said he had travelled in India and Java for four years. He was trained in a Christian home, but as a young traveller he had not cared much about missions, till he met with a missionary in Dutch India, and heard the school children singing Christian hymns round the Christmas tree. There the Gospel has elevated women, and the results have been wonderful.

In the closing two minutes the Chairman said the statements about Java were most satisfactory and encouraging. As to pilgrimages to Mecca, the increase was doubtless due more to the growth of steam navigation than to any increase of the faith of Islam. The fact remains that while Islam may have increased somewhat, Christianity has increased still more.

The Claims of the Heathen.

The subject considered at the evening meeting in the Large Hall was "The condition and increase of the heathen, and their claims upon the Christian Church." The Earl of Aberdeen, who occupied the chair, opened the proceedings with an address on the great significance of the Conference, and the grounds for hoping that many blessings will result from its deliberations.

INDIA.

Prebendary Edmonds, pleaded the cause of India. Science has shown that the Aryan race has broken up into seven branches, five of which are in Europe and two in Asia. Those in Europe have all come under Christian cultivation, and have been developed by the light of a revelation from God; those in Asia, deprived of Divine illumination, are to-day, as to civilisation, about where they were a thousand years ago. Here in the West, where so much has during recent years been attributed to environment, the sense of personality is not what it was until quite lately. The first thing required to-day in India is a sense of this personality, which will, as a matter of course, be accompanied by a sense of responsibility.

The needs of India and of all other countries are plainly indicated in the Old Testament. As for much that is to-day said of the "light of Asia," he maintained that it is rather the light of Oxford, or of Oxford-street; for English literary men have certainly read into Buddhism and Brahminism much that people professing those religions know little or nothing about.

Going back three thousand years, we learn what is absolutely necessary to the happiness of men. Without going behind the veil in the Israelitish Tabernacle, into a region which is still shrouded, we find placed before that veil three things, which show us what all men need—namely, bread on the table, light in the house, and prayer to sanctify both the one and the other. Where there are people without either of these, it is the business of those who enjoy them to supply the want. And we Aryans of the West owe a fraternal debt to our brethren in the East.

Moses in his day taught shepherds what Christ afterwards taught the rich young man, that men must love the Lord their God with all their strength, and have the commandment to that effect in their hearts. No religious progress has been made since then, and we can to-day stand on the same principle, and, indeed, there we must stand. To teach that commandment to the Hindoos, we must endeavour to understand the working of the minds of these people. It does not do to beat a drum and play a fife, and give a light message as you go along. Laying the burden of this people upon us, the Almighty has also given us power to understand them.

Then, again, in the language of the Epistle to the Hebrews, we must point these people to Him "with whom they have to do." What beautiful commerce! The people are ready for instruction. Let us, as brothers in race and blood, take them the knowledge of Him, whom to know is life eternal.

CHINA.

Rev. J. H. Taylor said the eighteen provinces of China are nearly as large as Europe, and with its dependencies the country is as large as a Europe and a half. Taking the lowest estimate of the population, it will stand on a par with India or Africa. The Chinese are a mighty nation, an intellectual people. Who have surpassed them in diplomacy or in commercial success? The Chinaman easily takes degrees with honours at our universities. They are a great people, and capable of great things. They have seen many ancient nations disappear, while they have remained. As to the country itself, is there no purpose in the great and well-nigh inexhaustible coal fields, and the vast mineral wealth of China? God surely has great things in store for her. The people do not lightly take things in hand, or lightly lay them down. They are now on the move. Railways are being arranged for, and the day may soon come when the rulers of Asia will have to reckon with the awakening of China, and a rude awakening it may be.

What has Christianity done for this great nation? Some of the early Christian disciples went there, but they did not give China the Bible. Later on the Nestorians were to be found in the land, but they too failed to give it the Bible. The Roman Catholics went in the 13th century, but they did not take the Bible with them. The Jesuits even condoned Chinese idolatry and ancestral worship. When they asserted the supremacy of the Pope, they were expelled. Our first British ships, alas, took opium with them. It was not till Dr. Robert Morrison went to China that the people got the Bible. Looking back at eighty years of missionary labour, we cannot lay our hands on results similar to those achieved by eighty years of commerce. We have given China more than the Gospel, and we ought to labour and pray that China may be free to deal with the opium as she sees fit. Mr. Taylor said he had painful experiences as a medical missionary as to the opium evil in China. In company with the revered William Burns, he was at Swatow, when that city was the distributing centre for the drug. The people were impoverished and greatly demoralised. Men even sold their sons to slavery, and their daughters, and wives to a life of shame, in order to procure opium. It was British greed that wrought this evil, and is doing it still. In two out of three cases of suicide, or attempted suicide, the opium was the cause. The evils of the opium traffic are the greatest result Great Britain has yet produced in China. We, as a nation, are responsible for every acre of ground devoted to its cultivation, for we have left no alternative to China but to produce it themselves. It is a greater curse than the drink, or slavery, or the legalisation of vice.

Now is our opportunity to give China something better. We are very near to China now in point of time, and can easily help her. The China Inland Mission had the joy of sending out 102 missionaries last year, and some of them were preaching the Gospel within six months after their arrival. The teaching of the language is not the great difficulty that it was. The whole country is open to the missionary. We can travel with safety along the great highways and waterways of the vast territory. Even the single sisters can freely and safely travel, and they find a warm welcome among the people. They do not take the Gospel message in vain. Two young women went there in December, and in February they saw sixteen families turning from their idols to serve God. I recently visited nine of the provinces during a six-months' tour, and saw how the missionaries had won the confidence of the people. Little country churches had been planted, and converts had been baptized. I was specially struck with the ripeness of the people for the Gospel. When we preached Christ as a Saviour, we had eager hearers, and were entreated to stay or to return. Everywhere we found an open door, and a hearty welcome. These millions of Chinese are unsaved, and they are passing away without hope, if we are to believe the Word of God. A thousand an hour are passing to Christless graves. What will we do? Will we open the door of hope and let them in, or lock it, and leave them out?

Rev. EZEKIEL LONES, of the South African Methodist Mission, followed with an extremely discursive speech on Africa, in which he said that the Gospel has been the chief means in bringing about the prosperous condition of the Continent, from a civilising and commercial point of view; not to speak of the blessed results in conversions to God.

DR. PIERSON'S APPEAL.

The closing address was by Rev. Dr. PIERSON, who said that in the exuberations of our congratulation on the completion of the first century of modern missions, we are in danger of forgetting that we have cause for penitence and humiliation. For more than 1800 years our Lord has been waiting to see of the travail of his soul, and during those centuries there have passed from the stage of human existence no less than sixty generations of our race, including, at the lowest computation, thirty thousand millions of souls, or twenty times the population of the globe to-day. The thousand years succeeding the time of Constantine ought to have been the introduction to a millennium of Christ's reign; but they were years of darkness, in which the light of Christianity was almost quenched. Even Luther failed to emphasise the individual duty of self-sacrifice for the evangelisation of the world. What is the state of the world to-day? With a population of some 1500 millions, it is safe to say that 750 millions of these have never heard of Christ, or seen a copy of the Scriptures, or the face of a living missionary. When we talk of 100 to 130 millions of Christians, we include all the atheists, agnostics, and infidels, because they do not belong to any other classification. But the simple fact is that so far as we know we have on the entire globe to-day from 30 to 35 millions of Christian Church members. The number of workers who are engaged in the evangelisation of the dark places of heathendom is only about 36,000; and of these 30,000 are native converts. How can we pourtray adequately these dark places of the world? There are vast spaces in Africa without a single Christian missionary; so there are in South and Central America, not to speak of other parts of the globe. What should be said of the apathy and lethargy of the Christian churches in face of these facts? Think of ten million dollars being the aggregate amount given annually by the great nations of Christendom for the evangelisation of the world. Why, there is enough money buried—the jewellery, the silver plate, and the other superfluities of Christian people—to evangelise the whole of the globe.

Notwithstanding many discouraging facts, however, there are some magnificent elements in this survey. People have said they do not care about missions, because they have not seen any great results from them. That is because they have not taken the trouble to examine or to inquire. Talk of missions as a failure! I am prepared to challenge successful contradiction of this proposition, that for the money, time, and men expended on the foreign mission field, results so stupendous have never been known since God said "Let there be light," and there was light. If we could do nothing more than the civilising and humanising of great peoples that are sunk in pagan darkness, it would be our duty to attempt the work. But the spiritual results have been wonderful. From a single missionary station in the East, near the Bosphorus, there have branched out in fourteen years twelve outlying stations, seven of them having self-supporting Christian Churches. All that has been done for less money than was spent on building the church in Detroit, where he had spent thirteen years of his ministry.

In referring to some great principles which must underlie the prosecution of foreign missions, Dr. Pierson said it was his profound conviction that the world will never be converted, or even evangelised, at the present rate of progress. The population of the globe is far outstripping all the efforts of the Christian Church to overtake it. There is something radically wrong in the prosecution of foreign missions. We have been following a policy of concentration instead of following the example of the early Church in promoting diffusion. Another great principle is that the work of the world's evangelisation will never be done by proxy. Christians cannot, by gifts of money, absolve themselves from the responsibility of personal effort for the salvation of the lost. The Primitive Christians were all evangelisers; they went everywhere preaching the Word. Then we must recognise the need for different kinds of workers—doctors of divinity and translators of the Bible, but also Christian blacksmiths, carpenters, sempstresses, and such like, as well as representatives of all the learned professions. In fact, the Christian Church ought to do exactly what a great nation does when she colonises any particular territory, such as Australia. If we were as earnest and as wise in missions as we are in promoting trade or commerce or national glory, we should soon overtake the evangelisation of the globe.

Dr. Pierson, in further developing his theme, urged the study of missionary biography, giving some striking examples of missionary consecration and success, the stories of which are of the deepest interest in the stimulation of others to like zeal. Besides this personal element of interest, we want a revived faith in the supernatural. Let us take note, too, of the fact that God, within recent years, has, by mystic keys of his own manufacture, thrown open the doors of the whole world. Obstacles have disappeared in answer to believing prayer. If this great Conference does not kindle in all our hearts the incense fire of a new devotion, so that from day to day importunate prayer should go up to God for a blessing on the work of missions, we shall have met comparatively in vain. "The King's business requireth haste." Shall we not solemnly declare in the presence of God, that we will forget the things in which we differ and emphasise the things in which we agree, and that before this century is out we will, by his grace, publish his Gospel to every living soul upon the earth?

☞ A Great Meeting for Young Women wil be held in Exeter Hall on Sunday next, at fou p.m. The Countess of Aberdeen will preside Mrs. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, and other well known American ladies will address the meeting. Information may be had at the Youn Women's Christian Association head office 316, Regent-street, W., and other Londo branches.

The closing meeting of the Conference wil be held on Wednesday evening next, whe resolutions will be presented respecting the gigantic hindrances to missionary labour in the shape of (a) the opium traffic in China; (b) the drink traffic in heathen lands; (c) the Governmental licence of sin in India. All being well, Sir Arthur Blackwood will preside, and several American and English speakers will take part.

LITERATURE FOR THE NAVY.

DEAR SIR,—While we rejoice in the work which is being accomplished amongst all classes of the community, we must not shut our eyes to the inroads of infidelity on all sides. In my own special field of work—the Royal Navy—its increase during the past ten years has been very great. I understand that the "National Secular Society" has recently determined to spare no pains or money in the matter, but to use their best endeavours to circulate still larger quantities of infidel publications in the British Navy. The result of the sowing of these tares among our blue jackets must be very disastrous, and we must be up and doing. I have been alternately denounced and laughed at in these publications for my Blue Backs, Ashore and Afloat, and other papers, and this probably is a very sure sign that they are doing anti-infidel work.

I would ask all who are anxious to provide an antidote to the moral poison circulating through our ships, or to enable me to provide an antidote in Mr. Hastings' cheap anti-infidel tracts. They are clear, terse, and to the point. A penny edition of his most valuable little book on "The Inspiration of the Bible" is published by Messrs. Marshall Bros., 10, Paternoster-row—for distribution 42s. per 1000. I could use 100,000 of these, and others, if I had them. Will not some Christian friends help me in this important matter?

Yours truly, AGNES E. WESTON.
Sailors' Rest, Portsmouth.

[It is impossible to exaggerate the significance of Miss Weston's statement, and we sincerely trust her hands will be generously upheld while she seeks to counteract the influence of the degrading literature to which she refers.—ED.]

MRS. REANEY'S CONVALESCENT HOMES, FOLKESTONE.—The report for the last half of 1887 shows a deficit of £75. Having removed to Manchester, Mrs. Reaney has transferred the Home to Rev. Andrew Mearns, and intends opening another at Blackpool, to be managed by herself. During the four and a half years that Stepney House, East Cliffe, Folkestone, was under Mrs. Reaney's control, seventeen hundred patients and holiday visitors were accommodated therein, for longer or shorter periods. Subscriptions towards covering the deficit above mentioned may be sent to Mrs. Reaney, at Cavendish House, Victoria-park, Manchester.

THE ST. PAUL'S REREDOS.—The Bishop of London having vetoed the representation which was made to him under the Public Worship Regulation Act by Mr. J. D. Allcroft, J.P., Mr. James Houldsworth, J.P., Lieut.-General Sir Robert Phayre, K.C.B., and Mr. J. W. Williamson, and having refused to comply with the memorial of the Church Association signed by 9000 Churchmen in his diocese, it has been decided to apply to the Court of Queen's Bench for a mandamus to compel the Bishop to allow the case to go forward, on the ground that the reasons which the Bishop is required to give under the Public Worship Regulation Act, and has given, are insufficient and unreasonable.

JIM AT THE MISSIONARY MEETING.

The sun had already set when Jim Harrow, the cowboy, rode into the main street of the little village of Blue Stem, tied his pony to the windmill derrick at the town pump, and hurried over to the store just opposite to buy some bacon and other articles of food such as the rough life of the cowboys demanded. Jim was cook for the gang this week, and after spending some time in laying in as much as he thought he could get trusted for, he walked slowly out of the store and turned up the street in the direction opposite to that taken an hour or more before by his fellows in work and revelry.

Jim did not want the company of the other herders to-night, the pain in his head and his disgust as he thought of the last night's carousal, which had ended with a demand from the saloon keeper for money due to him as he thrust Jim into the street, did not bring any wish for the fellowship which would probably repeat his experience for him. He was sober now, and he wanted to keep sober for a time at least. He strolled heavily and moodily along some distance over the dilapidated board walks, thinking about his debts when his aching head would let him think at all, and trying to study out some plan for relief: when the thought came to him to run off a few of the cattle to a distant point, sell them, and then, when questioned by the owner, swear they had died of black leg. This was risky, but he had seen it done once or twice successfully. Just then he stepped down suddenly from the sidewalk and nearly pitched over on his face, and was thereby reminded that the sidewalk had ended, that his head was still aching, and that the burden of his debt was not lifted.

"I mought hev known by the sidewalk stoppin' there was a church here," said Jim to himself, as his eyes fell upon a plain white building that stood in the middle of an unfenced lot before which he was standing. "She's lighted for business, too. An' now they're at it," as the strains of a hymn came through the open door. "I most b'lieve I'll go in. I'd ruther be in there, ef 'tis church, than with the boys gettin' drunk and playing the fool agin."

Jim did not know that the Broad Valley Association of Central Nebraska was in session at the Blue Stem church, and that the people of Blue Stem and the surrounding country had been gathering there three times a day for the past three days to see the delegates, hear the reports from the fifteen ministers of as many scattered churches, and discuss the various subjects assigned by the business committee. If he had known this fact, bold as he was, he might have been a little shy about entering such a condensed moral atmosphere alone. At this time, however, the church was a haven in which none other of his kind was liable to anchor. He walked up the steps, stood by the door until his eyes caught sight of a vacant seat near him, and then shuffled in as quickly as possible and sat down. The only other occupant of the pew, a little girl, eyed him and his pistols a minute or two, and then moved a little further along toward the other end of the seat. After the singing was over the chairman gave out as a topic of discussion, "The Pew as seen from the Pulpit," adding that "after the leader had finished all would be invited to take part."

Jim thought he could tell them a thing or two about how the pulpit looked from the pew the Sunday morning he shot his pistol through the church door down at Slippery Hollow, but he simply drew up his feet, stretched his legs out upon the seat, and prepared for a good comfortable time of it. "I'm corralled now an' I may as well take it easy," he thought, The speaker began with a few crisp conciliatory sentences, and then launched into his subject, striking right and left at the late comers, the sleepy heads, the noisy and inquisitive ones, and the loungers, with such raciness that Jim was soon sitting bolt upright and listening with all his might. "The boss preacher an' no mistake," was his mental comment, and, when the little man sat down, he could not refrain from giving, by way of approval, several vigorous thumps upon the floor with his heels, much to the consternation of a few in the audience who knew him.

A little further discussion of the subject followed, and then it was given out that the remainder of the evening would be given up to "The Women's Missionary Society." A band of little girls under the direction of a lady seated at the organ, first filed upon the stage. Each represented a flower and spoke a little piece, then all distributed through the audience the flowers which they carried. The very smallest of them all gave one to Jim. This was a feature of church entirely new to him, and something seemed to smite him as he took the flower in his great clumsy fingers. Nobody here owed him any favours, and why should he be noticed as others were? His very roughness appeared to him and made him sensitive, and what to another would have been an insignificant happening touched him where he thought there was no feeling. While he was thinking soberly of this incident a lady stood up to read —an earnest-looking, clear-voiced woman it was who began "How much owest thou unto my Lord?" The room was very quiet as she read, for it seemed as if someone were being arraigned, so direct and personal was the question. She asked in her pleasant way again, "How much owest thou unto my Lord? Have you never thought of it, the debt to my Lord, your Lord, the Lord who bought us? Have you paid this debt of gratitude?"

Nothing was said about making money, no mention of what are usually called debts, but "How much owest thou for the things which money cannot buy, the life you enjoy, the loving kindness and tender mercies with which you are crowned? Have you even tried to pay this debt? Have you given but the cup of cold water in his name when you had the chance? Amid the anxieties caused by your worldly obligations have you sought first the kingdom of God and his righteousness?" A little more and she had finished, but the effect of the few simple words was felt, and when the speaker sat down, one after another arose to speak. Each owed more than he could pay, and each felt his poverty.

The same impulse which made them humble was lifting them upon a higher plane and into a purer atmosphere. It was hardly a surprise to them when the cowboy rose from his seat and took advantage of their invitation to speak, for who could have been there and not felt the striving of the Holy One. They turned to look at him as he began. "I'm not straight like the rest o' ye. I haven't been as white as I had orter been. I'm a cowboy. I've this to say though, I want to pay my debts. The lady has told me o' One I didn't know about, an' Jim Harrow's not the boy to sit still when he's in debt." The meeting was soon over. They tried to get at him and talk with him, but the cowboy was gone. The message had reached him and was interpreted. It was not for them at that time to hear the answer; but out upon the prairie with none but his pony and his God the cowboy knelt for the first time in his life and uttered his broken petition: "O Lord, I'm owin' many, but I've gone agin ye worst of all. I've nothin' to pay ye with, but I've come to ye. She said ye was merciful. Amen." As the wind whispered to the grassy wilderness, so the still small voice, its counterpart from heaven, breathed upon the soul of the cowboy and there was peace. The problem of debt and credit was settled, and there was "joy in the presence of the angels."—New York Observer.

TURKISH MISSIONS' AID SOCIETY.

The friends of the Turkish Missions' Aid Society heard with great pleasure at the annual meetings at Exeter Hall on Tuesday last week that, while on the mission field the efforts of the Society are more than ever highly appreciated, at home its strong claims upon Christian people are being increasingly recognised. The new president, the Earl of Aberdeen, showed a lively interest in the operations of the Society.

Rev. Dr. T. W. Brown, secretary, read extracts from the report, and Lord Kinnaird, treasurer, presented the balance sheet. The total revenue last year stood at £2796, showing an encouraging advance. In a large measure the Society's aid was dispensed to American missionaries labouring in various Oriental countries. The aim and methods of the Society were well expressed in the report, as follows: "Our motto is: The Bible for the Bible lands; a Divine-human Saviour for the sunken masses of the East; salvation by grace (not by sacraments) for all." It was gratifying to hear of so much good being done with so little money.

An address of cordial sympathy was delivered by Rev. Dr. McEwan. The first thing that commanded attention was the fact that the Society is an Aid Society. There are, said the speaker, some people who never can enter energetically into any missionary enterprise unless it is entirely their own. In connection with Christian missions, however, there is too much denominationalism, and it is of the greatest importance that as far as possible a united front should be presented. By means of this Society, work carried on by many missionaries in many centres and over an immense area is touched and greatly helped. Another matter to which reference was made was the interesting fact that many of the missions in Bible lands belong to the American churches; that these should be assisted from England is specially gratifying, as such co-operation affords a blessed bond of union between the Christian people of the two countries. In conclusion, Dr. McEwan maintained that the work that is being done must tell in the future, even though at present the results seem small. The value of such efforts as these does not depend upon the number of converts made every year. Success is not yet ripe for manifestation, but the time will come when it will appear. There is a silent and progressive movement going on in the minds of the peoples inhabiting the Bible lands, a movement provoked by preaching, by literature, by schools—and gradually faith in the Mohammedan system is being undermined, and preparation is being made for the day when, with great suddenness perhaps, that system will fall. The work is certainly of God, and therefore there may well be strong faith as to its ultimate success.

Dr. J. P. Cochran having described medical mission work in Persia, Rev. Dr. Thomson, of Constantinople, gave some account of the needs of various parts of Turkey. Both speakers acknowledged the valuable assistance rendered them by the Society. Miss C. Borden, director of the American Women's Mission Board, took occasion to tender the Society sincere thanks for its co-operation with American workers. The proceedings were cordial throughout, and it was felt that the speakers did well to emphasise the gratifying fact that the Society had done so much towards demonstrating that on the mission field it matters not whether Christian workers are English or American. Rather, however, it is of the highest importance that, with an eye to God's glory, labourers should, as far as practicable, devote their united talents to whole-hearted service of the Lord.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sunday, June 17, Acts xvi. 1—13; Monday, June 18, Acts xvi. 14—24; Tuesday, June 19, Acts xvi. 25—40; Wednesday, June 20, Acts xvii. 1—15; Thursday, June 21, Acts xvii. 16—34; Friday, June 22, Acts xviii. 1—17; Saturday, June 23, Acts xviii. 18—28

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, Founder of the China Inland Mission.

In this issue we report the opening meetings of the International Missionary Conference in Exeter Hall. Our next issue will be a Double Number, price 2d., and will contain extended reports of the proceedings of the Conference during the present week.

Evidence of the timeliness of Scriptural injunctions appears in a recently published Essay, which obtained a prize at Cambridge. Comparing what we read in "Social Life in Rome" during the First Century (Murray), and the utterances of Apostles, we see how needful were warnings to the early Christians against wine-bibbing, revellings, and covetousness. In Rome there were contests in drinking at the dinner table, and potations of intoxicating wines were often continued all night. The unscrupulousness of Romans on money matters poisoned all social life, and led to forgeries, perjuries, and universal corruption.

From a recent report of an official committee on Sunday labour in Germany, it appears that a very considerable part of the German working people get no rest on Sundays, although on week days the hours of toil are longer than in this country. Apart from the religious sanctions and claims of the Lord's Day, it is surprising that a shrewd people like the Germans do not recognise the necessity, from a purely physical standpoint, of one day's rest in seven. We hope the report lately presented may lead to such legislation as will secure this boon to the industrial masses of the people.

The daily press must blame itself if some allege that an anti-Protestant influence is secretly inspiring it. Commenting last week on the grounds of the objection to a huge crucifix in a Reformed Church The Standard designates them as childish, frivolous, and antiquated; and condemns the action of the Church Association as churlishly narrow, bigoted, and intolerant. Next day The Daily Chronicle assailed the meeting in Exeter Hall to commemorate the Tercentenary of the defeat of the Armàda. It was stigmatised as a purely sectarian demonstration; instead of emphasising Protestantism, all differences of religious opinions should be sunk, and the selection of a Roman Catholic as president of a commemorative meeting was proper. Such utterances are calculated to awaken suspicion.

Diligent readers of the criminal records of the Metropolis must lately have observed frequent mention of the name of Mr. Wheatley, of the St. Giles' Christian Mission. On one day last week at the Middlesex Sessions this prison philanthropist intervened with effect on behalf of a man and two youths who had fallen into the clutches of the law. The man's sentence was reduced from five years to eighteen months. The lads, convicted of petty theft, were discharged to the care of Mr. Wheatley, who undertook to provide them with occupation at sea. In his own quiet and persevering way Mr. Wheatley is doing really splendid rescue work among young criminals. The St. Giles' Mission ought to be well backed up.

We observe with much pleasure that a similar work is being carried on among lads in Manchester by Mr. A. Devine, with the hearty concurrence of the officials. Mr. Devine has organised two clubs for lads in crowded districts of the city, so as to furnish an evening resort and diminish the temptations to evil courses. Advantage is taken of "The First Offenders Act" passed last year, and in many cases boys convicted for the first time are taken in hand, so as to preserve them from the prison taint, which is so difficult to wipe out when once contracted. Mr. Wheatley in London, and Mr. Devine in Manchester, are true successors to John Howard, of immortal memory.

Sir M. Monier-Williams has sent a letter to The Times against modern political indifferentism. He contends that formerly English people regarded religion, morality, and politics as closely interwoven and closely interdependent. He justifies the language of Manu's Hindoo Law Book, which is as old as Christianity, and which maintains that the holding together of the body politic depends on two mainstays—the fear of God, and a deep reverence for the fundamental principles of morality. Such a protest is called for; a school of sciolists is among us who are making their voice to be heard in sneers at the notion that law and politics should have their roots in moral principles.

Very timely, also, was Sir Monier Williams' address last week on Mystical Buddhism, at the annual meeting of the Victoria Institute. There is no living man who is a greater authority on the subject; and it is refreshing in these days when Neo-Buddhism is, even in England, becoming a fashionable creed, to find a scholar who can put aside modern literary fashions, and expose the new creed, which denies an Almighty and Independent Will, and is only a revival of notions that were current in India two thousand years ago.

We congratulate the Victoria Institute on its success. Numbering now 1300 members, it is drawing to itself from every part of the world eminent scientists and philosophers, who are leading the reaction against attacks on revealed religion in the name of culture and learning.

All history is but the development—sometimes startling in its rapidity, at others almost imperceptible in its slow progress—of the purposes of Him who "worketh all things after the counsel of his own will." He who observes the signs of the times by the light of God's Word may trace the hand of God in apparently commonplace matters, no less than in the most momentous. Thus, the making of the railway from Jaffa to Jerusalem, to which we recently alluded, may be a divinely appointed means of aiding and hastening the restoration of the House of Israèl to the Promised Land, which movement has of late years received a marked impetus from the progress of events in Russia and Central Europe, there being now, it is said, upwards of thirty thousand Jews in Jerusalem. True, a great part of Palestine remains arid and unfruitful, and much remains to be done before "the desert shall blossom as the rose," and before the ruins of the tabernacle of David are repaired, but "the Lord of Hosts hath sworn, saying, surely as I have thought, so shall it come to pass; and as I have purposed, so shall it stand."

In view of the glorious future which the Word of God indicates as being in store for the Jews, and of the important part which they are destined to play in the great events attending the close of the present dispensation, any particulars respecting the chosen people are noteworthy. In a recent interesting lecture on Judaism, Mr. F. D. Mocatta estimated the number of Jews in the United Kingdom at a hundred thousand, in the Colonies about twenty thousand, in France seventy thousand (of whom forty thousand are in Paris), in Germany more than half a million, and about the same number in America. In Persia there are supposed to be about fifty thousand, ten thousand in India, and a similar number in the Khanates, the total number of them throughout the world being reckoned at from eight to ten millions. The lecturer described the Turkish Government as being hostile to immigration into Palestine; but it must be remembered that the despotic power of the infidel is even now decaying, and will, according to "the sure word of prophecy," be ultimately brought to nought.

It is to be hoped that the Irish Exhibition (on the committee of which it is refreshing to find rival politicians sinking party differences) will serve a more practical and beneficial purpose than that of providing a merely fashionable show. A busy nation is a contented nation, and the judicious development of the natural sources of Irish wealth, and of the small cottage industries, such as hand-loom-spinning and weaving, shirt-making, lace-making, and embroidery—all which processes are exhibited at Olympia—will go far towards alleviating much of the present distress. The Donegal Industrial Fund has done and is doing good work in reviving these important industries: the difficulty, however, is to find a ready and steady market for the beautiful and useful work of the Irish women and girls, and the present exhibition will have conspicuously failed in its purpose if it does not create an increased demand for these home-produced articles, and, by providing the funds for extending the operations of Mrs. Ernest Hart and others, render permanent and practical help in the solution of Irish social and political problems.

A Blue Book has lately been issued which contains some of the mass of exhaustive and interesting facts and figures which have been gathered by a Belgian Commission appointed about two years ago to inquire into wages and kindred topics in that country. The gist of the information thus collected points irresistibly to the conclusion that, compared with their fellows in Belgium, the workpeople of England are very well paid: thus, the wages of a Belgian coal-miner are fifty per cent. less than those of his English confrère, though he works longer hours; English ironworkers can double the wages of the Belgian, the remuneration of skilled labour generally being twice as much on this side of the North Sea, whilst the prices of food and clothing are about the same in both countries. From a general view of the report, it would appear that only by combined thrift, energy, and good fortune, can the average Belgian working man earn a bare living, much less have any margin for amusements or luxuries. Indeed, the plain, unvarnished answer which the Commission received from Courtrai was: "How the average workman manages to exist, as well as bring up a numerous family, on the scanty pittance he receives, is a problem which we find impossible to solve."

With regard to the reply of the Procureur of the Holy Synod of the Greek Church to the memorial of the Evangelical Alliance (to which we alluded last week) it may be further remarked that the specious arguments and lofty pretensions of this apology for persecution will deceive none who remember the ignorance and gross superstition which characterise the orthodox Greek Church. If Lutheran Christians are deprived of the liberty of proselytising, there is still a way open whereby they may silently but effectually spread the knowledge of Christ among the benighted masses of Russia, who are still sitting in darkness; let them avail themselves of the freedom which still remains to them of circulating the Scriptures.

A powerful illustration of the consecration of talents is given in a recent article in one of the monthlies, in which it is stated that from the profits of one of Miss Charlotte M. Yonge's books a missionary college in New Zealand was built, and from those of another volume, the Southern Cross missionary schooner was provided and fitted up for the use of Bishop Selwyn. There would be less ground for complaint in regard to modern fiction if more of our writers were under the influence of motives such as those which moved Miss Yonge, for the object would sanctify the labour.

The Dark Continent is likely to become darker still unless something is done to limit the "blessings of civilisation," which the Christian races are forcing upon their darker brothers. The New York World recently had the following paragraph which eloquently speaks for itself:—

> There will sail from this port this week a vessel carrying 1400 packages of New England rum. This is the largest cargo of the kind ever shipped from here to the African coast. From May 1, 1887, to the same time the present year, there were sent out from Boston to the "dark" continent 8188 packages of New England rum, or 849,569 gallons.

It would appear that there is a probability of another trial, as interesting and remarkable as the celebrated Gorham case, for preliminary proceedings have been taken in the Court of the Archbishop of Canterbury, requiring the Archbishop to cite the Bishop of Lincoln before his Court for the following practices:—

> (1) The use of lighted candles when not required for the purpose of giving light; (2) adopting the eastward position during the ante-Communion office; (3) mixing water with the sacramental wine used in the Holy Communion; (4) administering water and wine so mixed to the communicants; (5) standing in such a position during the prayer of Consecration as to hide the manual acts; (6) permitting the singing of the Agnus Dei immediately after the prayer of consecration; (7) making the sign of the cross over the people; (8) rinsing the paten and chalice and drinking the ablutions.

This is a step in the right direction, and we are glad that the Church Association has moved in the matter. The practices have been condemned by the Privy Council, and it is quite time that it should be decided whether they can be followed with impunity.

Apparently the Russian Administration has one good quality. Of late years the adulteration of articles of food has assumed such serious dimensions that the Government took the matter up, with the result that a number of influential persons in Moscow, wealthy merchants, have been sent to Siberia, and others have been sentenced to two months' imprisonment. Some drastic measures of this kind would not be out of place in these islands, where the poor suffer so much at the hands of the adulterator.

A recently published official return shows that during last year 1220 licences were issued for experiments upon living animals. The majority of the experiments are said to have had a therapeutical object, and it is admitted that in seventy-one cases pain was "unavoidably inflicted." The Daily News, referring to this as done only in the "supposed" service of man, well remarks:—

> Not one of the men who inflict this pain on poor defenceless animals would condescend to acquire the most useful knowledge by an act of fraud, of meanness, or of dishonour. It is strange that they need to be reminded that knowledge which can only be got by the infliction of cruel pain is as much forbidden to merciful men as wealth which can only be acquired by dishonesty is forbidden to honest men.

In dropping the licensing clauses from the Local Government Bill, the Government have doubtless consulted the exigencies of the hour, but they can hardly be said to have given complete satisfaction to anybody. The national interest as much required the retention of the clauses establishing a new licensing authority, as it urgently demanded the abandonment of the provision whereby the discretionary refusal of a licence would involve the payment of compensation to the publican. While throwing over the proposal which the public so heartily disapproved, the Government certainly might have retained so much of their scheme as is consonant with the best sentiment of the country. They have not chosen to do so, however. We can only hope that the long-awaited interference with the drink traffic is deferred to an early day, and that when the matter comes to be dealt with, wise, practical, and thorough proposals will not be wanting.

A correspondent writes:—

> Sir Richard Temple, M.P. (ex-Governor of Bombay) has during his short parliamentery career acquired unenviable notoriety by his speeches in the House of Commons in defence of the opium traffic, in support of the liquor system in India, and in opposition to Mr. Walter McLaren's motion for the total repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts in India. Sir Richard Temple is member for the Evesham Division of Worcestershire, but I cannot believe that he represents the Christian sentiment of that locality. Strange to say, Sir Richard has occasionally figured on missionary platforms, and his works on India bear high testimony to the value of Christian missions in the East.

Mr. David McLaren has made a careful examination and analysis of the home contributions of four great Missionary Societies and of the British and Foreign Bible Society during the fifty years of the present reign. The annual average amount of the five societies for the last ten years was £556,631, shown as follows:—

Baptist Missionary Society	£57,229
Wesleyan Missionary Society	109,433
Church Missionary Society	193,670
London Missionary Society	80,742
British and Foreign Bible Society	109,557

The total contributions for the fifty years were £20,798,160, being much about the amount spent on drink in this country in sixty days. One feature brought out by the examination is that, when a large sum has been raised for a special object, the income of succeeding years has not suffered in consequence.

Continuing his excavations in the province of Fayûm, Mr. Flinders Petrie has penetrated the pyramid of Hawara, and actually found the sepulchral chamber of an Egyptian Pharaoh—an event unparalleled in the records of modern exploration. It is quite expected that, when opened next season, the tomb will be found to contain the mummy of Amenemhat III. Among recent "finds" is a fragment of the second book of the Iliad, written on papyrus in the finest Greek hand, and dating from the second or third century. The variety of the articles discovered recently in this very interesting part of Egypt is such as to raise hopes that substantial additions may yet be made to Biblical as well as pagan antiquities.

SOWING TARES IN NORWAY.

OF late years attempts have been made to circulate in Norway immoral and irreligious writings. The desire for reading is rapidly increasing, and it is very desirable to satisfy this by supplying the working classes with Christian and wholesome literature. Every year the number of Englishmen who visit our poor but beautiful country increases, and we think they will all agree in testifying that the Norwegian people, as yet, are thoroughly religious and moral.

The Norwegians have always looked upon the English as their best and nearest friends, and they look to them for help in spreading Christian and good literature among the people, and thus assist in protecting the working classes against immorality and unbelief. All communications should be addressed to A. Grondahl (Minister), 43, St. Donatt's-road, New-cross, S.E.; or, O. Möller (Chairman of the Church Committee), 8, Austinfriars, E.C.

HIGHLAND ORPHANAGE.—Mr. Campbell-White, of Overtoun, recently opened the Victoria Home, a new building which has been added to the Highland Orphanage at Inverness, in commemoration of the Queen's Jubilee. The new Home provides accommodation for fifty children, and has cost £1255. Mr. Campbell-White gave a donation of £100, besides promising an annual subscription.

THE LEYS SCHOOL, CAMBRIDGE.—The annual gathering of friends was held on Wednesday last week, by the kind invitation of Dr. Moulton. Although founded especially for the sons of Wesleyans, the borders of the School are being extended, and various Christian denominations are now represented. A Christian spirit and strong moral tone prevail, and never was the Institution in a more flourishing codnition than at present.

MR. JOHN T. DORLAND.—A very profitable incident in the meeting for worship at the Friends' Meeting House, Stoke Newington, on Sunday morning last, was the address of Mr. J. T. Dorland, from America. His exhortation was founded on the text "I will pay my vows unto the Lord, now, in the presence of all his people." Referring to the vows of Jacob and Paul, and deprecating rash vows, the occasions of vows such as times of danger, trouble, and bereavement, were powerfully depicted. The people of God were urged to remember that "The vows of the Lord were upon them," and they were solemnly urged to pay them immediately to the Lord in the presence of all his people. The time was one of deep solemnity and spiritual power.

"FAMILY RELIGION" is the subject this year of the pastoral letter issued by the English Presbyterian Synod. The letter, which was drawn up by Rev. W. S. Swanson, and bears the signatures of Dr. Oswald Dykes, moderator, and Dr. McCaw, clerk, declares that from Reformation days family religion has always been kept in the foreground by the great body of Presbyterian Churches, family religion and Church prosperity being indissolubly linked, and the stability of society in all its relations depending upon keeping up the fear of God in the family. Parental responsibility is strongly urged. The Church cannot relieve parents of their duty to their children. The Sunday-school and the Bible-class are valuable aids in "the godly upbringing of the young," but they are not to be substitutes for the training of home. This training is "the best safeguard against the temptations and difficulties of life."

CHRISTIANITY v. POVERTY.

That the problem of poverty should be brought to the light of Christian principles and Christian judgment is, certainly, not only a reasonable but also a fitting thing. In many minds there is a conviction that disciples of Christ have not, up to the present, done all they should by way of showing that they "consider the poor;" and in some circles, moreover, among professing and non-professing Christians alike, there is a desire that something should be done towards applying trite doctrine to definite practice. The questions which are asked are: Does the prevailing poverty result in any measure from bad laws? Can such poverty be reduced or obviated by enlightened legislation?

These important questions, among others, were discussed on Wednesday last week at Exeter Hall, at a Conference presided over by Mr. J. C. Durant. Several members of Parliament and many Gospel ministers wrote, regretting their inability to attend. Rev. Arthur Jephson, vicar of St. John's, Waterloo-road, in a letter of apology, said that nothing short of the complete adoption of the principles of Jesus Christ can solve the problem. In his opinion, Christian people have quite as much to learn in this respect as anti-Christians. The first thing to combat is the selfishness of man; the welfare of others is the proper concern of the real Christian.

Rev. C. Fleming Williams maintained that the English land laws are the cause of untold mischief, and should be altered. Having depicted the misery of the lives of many of the industrious poor—the people who in a large measure produce the wealth of the country—he argued that this state of things is not by God's adjustment but by man's injustice. The "root of the matter" is, in his opinion, to be found in bad laws. Taxation has been transferred from land values created by the public to industry and its products, thus repressing industry, and injuring the industrious while benefiting the idle. He unhesitatingly declared private ownership of land to be the cause of nine-tenths of the poverty at present existing, and made a great impression by citing cases of terrible hardship consequent upon the perfectly legal, though quite inequitable, action of certain rapacious landlords. Nationalisation of the land was the remedy proposed, and people were urged not to dismiss the proposal from their attention without first making themselves acquainted with the subject in all its bearings.

Mr. W. Saunders denounced the fashionable extravagance which is so common to-day, and was followed by Mr. Handel Cossham, M.P., who powerfully advocated the closing of public-houses, the enactment of just laws, and the reduction of national expenditure.

A short but excellent speech was made by Rev. J. F. B. Tinling. Any new anti-poverty association that may be formed must, he said, be different from all others, if it is to secure the confidence of the community. Broad in basis, it must take account of many things. It must fight the drink; it must be a thrift society; it must bring to the front the question of parental responsibility, demand severer laws against seduction, and deal with the homes of the people. Taxation and immigration and emigration, must also be included. Above all, society must be reminded that the only philanthropist who has fully taken account of the wants of man, was Jesus Christ; that, while bearing the name of Christ, nations have been anti-Christian in their actions; and that modern society has been, and is, nothing else than organised selfishness. We have yet to realise that it is not believing and theoretically acknowledging the principles of Jesus Christ that will do the work; but it is men who are not merely Christian, and not simply earnestly Christian, but rather men who are wholly and only Christian, that will do this thing. A league to grapple with this evil must both take hold of the consciences of the sinners and the hands of the helpless, and the secret of wielding such a power will be association with Jesus Christ. Such men will not be only working for Christ, but they will rather let Christ work in them. We do not believe in Christ simply as a historical character, and the embodiment of ideas, but as a living person wanting to save men, although hitherto we have not given Him the chance. Certain it is that men in whom Christ is working will do more to gain the conscience of this country—by the mighty influence of human character and the indwelling and inworking of the Spirit of God—than the strongest imaginable committee whose power and light are in names and brains.

Several "Socialists" and others having spoken, adding little or nothing to the discussion, a motion was made for the adjournment of the Conference. This was not adopted; and a resolution calling upon Christians to unite in demanding such legislation as will abolish the cause of poverty among the industrial classes, and of inordinate wealth among those who are traditionally idle, was lost through the adverse voting of a number of Socialists, who had put forward an amendment which was rejected by the meeting.

NEW HOME OF INDUSTRY.

Again we have to record the faithfulness of our heavenly Father. The Sardinian, conveying almost a hundred of our precious children, under Mr. and Mrs. Merry's care, lost her propeller, after seven days out on the ocean. The eleventh day after sailing came, and still there was no news of the ship. The shippers wrote that two steamers had gone out from Halifax in search of the Sardinian; but scarcely had the letter been received and read, when the joyful cablegram arrived, with the cheering words, "Safe; all well. Halifax." Since then, when the extra long railway journey was safely over, another cablegram has filled our hearts with praise, "Stratford. All well. Doctor's certificate satisfactory."

Having seen in the Canadian newspapers adverse remarks upon the children emigrated from England, we requested from the Government an examination and a public report thereof, knowing that we had no part in sending to Canada such as were described. Twenty years of experience enables us to know who are fitted for new colonies. The photographs which the girls and boys, now grown up, have sent home, and which may be seen by the hundred at the Home of Industry, speak louder than words, and fully contradict all these adverse statements. Through God's blessing we will go on seeking to bury the sad past caused by death or desertion; following the children in their future life, as those who have voluntarily taken the parents' place. We long for their spiritual, even more than their temporal welfare, and we are receiving gracious answers to these longings.

We are busily training and outfitting our fifty-fifth party, and look to sail by the Parisian, July 12, and to spend the months of August and September visiting among the children in Canada. Correspondence addressed to Mr. Merry here will have immediate attention.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—The annual meeting of the West-end Auxiliary was recently held at Stafford Rooms, Mr. Gurney Sheppard presiding. The report submitted by Mr. W. Davis, hon. secretary, showed that the work of the numerous bands of workers in the parks, streets, and mews had been attended with encouraging success. Amongst the speakers were: Revs. J. Gosset Tanner, Z. B. Woffendale, and J. Brigden, and Mr. Gawin Kirkham.

WORKING BOYS IN LONDON.

The eight Homes for Working Boys in London afford accommodation for 350 lads between the ages of thirteen and seventeen, who are able to work and earn wages, but, as they have no homes, are liable to the many temptations of residence in common lodging-houses.

From the report for 1887, just published, it appears that the premises are all held on short leases, and could not receive any endowment from the charity commissioners, even though on other grounds a title to such assistance might be made out. The absence of any endowment will, perhaps, leave the committee more free to continue to carry on what they consider to be the most important part of their work—viz., the religious teaching and training of the boys who are in the Homes.

On the balance sheet there appears a deficit of £413. This is not a very discouraging fact, for the Committee know that the cause of the Working Boys is one very near to the hearts of many Christian people. A cheering fact is that there are every year many evidences of great good resulting from the efforts which are put forth. The case of a youth named Charles Hunt illustrates this. He had left one of the Homes, and had been unwell for some months, when a married sister offered him a home; this he accepted, but only to waste away. On three occasions he was visited by the superintendent and matron of the Home, who had the pleasure of witnessing the dying boy's simple trust in the Lord Jesus, and also of hearing him say, "Don't suppose all that is said in the Home by yourselves or any of the gentlemen is lost, for we often think more of it than we would like to confess even to ourselves."

From Christian, philanthropic, social, and economical points of view these Homes deserve support. The secretary is Mr. H. Bristow Wallen, 8, Duke-street, Adelphi, W.C.

INDIANS IN CANADA.

A special appeal has been issued on behalf of the Church Missionary Society's Indian Mission, Upper Peace River, North-west Territory. The station is some six hundred miles from Calgary. During late years the Indians have been in a state of extreme distress, consequent upon the scarcity of game and the absence of any adequate supply of other food. Efforts are now being made to persuade the Indians to form settlements, and the Canadian Government fully recognise how desirable it is that such civilising efforts should be connected with religious work.

All friends and supporters of the Church Missionary Society will feel the strongest desire that exertions in this direction should be associated with the Society's Mission and the evangelically minded Bishop of Athabasca. It is accordingly proposed to purchase and convey up country a grist-mill and machinery necessary to establish and carry on a mission farm of 300 acres, for the purpose of instructing the Indians in agricultural pursuits, and educating their children. To accomplish this, the sum of £2000 will be required. Members of the Church of England in Canada have contributed half this amount, and the friends of missions in England are asked to supply the balance. Mr. F. A. Bevan, 54, Lombard-street, London, E.C., has kindly consented to act as treasurer.

BRIGHTON OPEN-AIR AND CHRISTIAN MISSION.—The twenty-eighth year of preaching on the beach at Brighton has just been entered upon under circumstances of a very encouraging character. There were several speakers at the opening meeting on the West Cliffs on May 27.

WORKING MEN'S MISSION, NEW CUT.—The eleventh anniversary meeting of the above Mission was celebrated on Tuesday, last week. Mr. F. A. Bevan occupied the chair. A report of the year's work was read by Mr. J. Ashton, and various addresses given. A copy of the report will be sent to any friend upon application to Messrs. T. and J. Young, 32, Nelson-square, Blackfriars-road, S.E.

GOSPEL LIGHT IN THE EAST.

IN a recent letter to Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, Miss Green-Armytage, of the Sailors' Rest, Constantinople, gives the following deeply interesting information:—

God seems to be using the Rests at Constantinople and Smyrna in a peculiar way for reaching the varied races around. Here in Constantinople, people from remote corners in the adjacent countries drop in; they hear the word, read it, buy a Bible, or get one given them; carry it away to their distant towns or mountain villages, and tell its good news. The neighbours gather together to hear again and again. Thus I have been hearing lately of whole villages turning to God, and many suffering persecution for the truth's sake thus brought to their homes and hearts, and this without any human teacher of any sort—only the written Word—the Light of Life applied by the Spirit of truth.

In one village where the Bible had entered in some unknown way, the people have begun Sunday and week-day meetings among themselves, and schools for their children; the preacher being a shepherd, and the schoolmaster a farmer. As the shepherds are watching their flocks at night they read together and talk over the way of salvation. Dr. Constantine, who has lately been visiting some of these out-of-the-way villages,* found in a sheepfold a large Bible and several portions, put there for the use of the shepherds; and one of these uses the word of God so powerfully that he goes by the name of David, some of these poor people who can only read with difficulty spending whole nights in its study.

In the Rest, also, the various natives of the city come and go continually, and find here the Bible in their own tongue—Greeks, Armenians, Jews, Russians, Bulgarians, and Turks, besides German, French, Italian, &c. Who can tell where and how the precious seed will take root and spring up, bearing fruit? Only the great day will reveal it.

With regard to sailors, for whose good this Rest was primarily started, many are the words and letters of thankfulness that are received from them, that "such a place was to be found in Constantinople where poor sailors could come and get good." How they bless God for the day that they first entered and heard the message of salvation just then. One man lately said, "You may be sure where I shall be found whenever I can get ashore. Bless the Lord for such a place!"

Another poor fellow, an American, slipping fast down to eternal ruin, who described himself afterwards as "too fearful a sinner for a human being to speak to him," was induced to come to the meeting one night, and heard, as he never had before, of the blood that cleanseth from all sin. Begging us there and then to pray for him, and crying also to the Lord Himself, he found mercy. After a few days' longer stay in Constantinople, he left us full of gratitude and praise for the blessing which he had found here.

The harvest is white and doors opening on all hands, but I am greatly exercised about the lack of helpers and of means to continue the work. Besides this pecuniary need (i.e., for the work, to which every contribution is scrupulously devoted), I want to hear of a lady who would be able and willing to share with me the labours and the joys of this work. I also need a whole-hearted Christian sailor as boatman to visit the ships and seek out those who are being dragged into the many snares laid for them in this port.

I would also re-echo an appeal which only this afternoon reaches me from Salonica from a missionary I have long known there, Rev. T. R. Sampson. He asks if I cannot get a lady to come out and open a Sailors' Rest in that port. It is visited by numbers of English ships all the year round. Such a Rest would also greatly aid the work among the natives, who do not come within the sphere of other missionary societies.

MR. VARLEY RETURNING.

DEAR SIR,—After a pleasant passage we are nearing home. This great steamer of the P. & O. Co. is like a town at sea. We number, I am informed, more than 700 souls, and this vessel attains a speed of seventeen knots, or nearly twenty miles, an hour. For scenes of exquisite tropical beauty and variety, Ceylon surpasses all that I have witnessed. From its peculiar position drought is almost unknown; seldom does a month pass without abundant rain, and this yields growths which are prodigious and a verdure almost unparalleled.

I had the pleasure of a lengthened interview with Mr. Ferguson, the proprietor of The Colombo Observer, who has resided for more than fifty years in the island, and was delighted to know how many of the friends identified with the China Inland and other missions had been welcomed by him. I also visited the Baptist Missionary School, where thirty-six young girls are being educated; the majority of whom, I believe, are really converted. Mr. and Mrs. Pigott, who are at the head of the Institution, are full of hope concerning this valuable missionary work. I greatly enjoyed the quaint singing in their native tongue, and I had the welcome opportunity of telling them "the old, old story."

The Baptist church is a substantial and admirable building, and the Lord is owning the work of our estimable brother Durban, who hails from the Pastors' College. I wish some of those who speak of the necessity for "changed conceptions," and modern apprehensions of the new Gospel could but see, as I have seen, the powerlessness of any other Gospel than that which "is the power of God unto salvation." A minister highly esteemed in the Australian colonies, and who has just spent several months in India, well says, "I have returned with deep conviction that nothing but the Gospel of Christ can meet the deep need which everywhere exists."

The meetings in Melbourne continued with increasing interest to their close. I am rejoiced again to aid the China Inland Mission, on behalf of which I received about £150 at Bible-readings and other services held in the city.

Our brother, Mr. Clark, arrived a few days before we left; I trust he may be used abundantly. The harvest is indeed great.

We leave this in the morning for Malta, where we coal, thence to Gibraltar, en route for London, which we expect (D.V.) to reach by the 12th inst. Many items of interest concerning the Australian colonies possess my mind; but the mail is closing. Rejoicing that I am so much better in health, and glad again to be home, yours faithfully, HENRY VARLEY.

S.s. Oceana, Brindisi, June 3.

THE VICTORIA INSTITUTE.—The annual meeting of this Institute was held last week. The chair was taken by the president, Professor G. G. Stokes, P.R.S., M.P., and an address on "Mystic Buddhism" was delivered by Sir Monier Monier-Williams, K.C.I.E., in which he gave a full description of its rise and nature, and concluded by stating the so-called spiritualism, neo-Buddhism, theosophy, animal magnetism, clairvoyance, &c., of the present day had their counterparts in India over 2000 years ago. The report for the year was read by the honorary secretary, Captain Frank Petrie, and showed that the Institute now numbered nearly 1300 home and foreign supporters of its objects—the investigation of questions of philosophy and science, especially any alleged to militate against Revelation. The report spoke in warm terms of the immense value of the labours of England's men of science.

AT WORK IN CORSICA.

DEAR SIR,—Since many of your readers are interested in Corsica, and may have heard of the fierce persecution which the priests lately raised against the McAll Mission, I am glad to state that the clerical papers have at last exhausted their hostile attempts of stopping the evangelical meetings at Ajaccio. Mr. Mabboux, the evangelist, perseveres in preaching that Jesus Christ is the only Mediator between God and man. In consequence, a spirit of inquiry is being manifested among men of all classes.

In many places, where five years ago, a colporteur could not sell a single copy, the people now show great eagerness to get the Scriptures. There are not a few, who begin to recognise the truth, but fear of man keeps them back from confessing their faith openly. Invitations for meetings to be held in the country reach Mr. Mabboux continually, so that it becomes now an absolute necessity to secure the help of one or two godly evangelists (unmarried men) ready to do rough work among the scattered people in the higher regions. As we have done the pioneer work for three years, and tried to cultivate the untrodden ground of "La Sauvage Corse," we most earnestly pray that some benevolent Christians will enable Mr. McAll to extend this mission, by sending him, for this special purpose. The expenses for the maintenance of an evangelist are about £150 a year.

In order to reach those who never come to meetings I generally take my meals in restaurants, where I enter into conversation with all sorts of educated men. It would surprise you to hear their questions about Protestants, as they are utterly ignorant of the fact that seven countries of Europe had shaken off the yoke of the Pope, acknowledging the Scriptures as their only standard.

A country schoolmaster, who for years had been wishing to know the truth, came up to me one day at luncheon time, and most cautiously approached the subject of salvation. The Lord used my testimony, and saved that hungry soul. "You have, indeed, opened heaven to me," he says, in one of his grateful letters, "and it is now my happy privilege to influence my pupils, in order to lead them to Jesus, that they may grow up, not only to be good citizens, but faithful Christians." This schoolmaster lives now in a village near Sartène, where vengeance and murder bring about great distress.

At the Government Training College I was asked last year to give courses of modern languages. As these normal schools are non-confessional, I take advantage of this liberty to introduce the Gospel.

Last summer, when spending my vacation at Sartène, I found an open door in many rich families, where prejudice had hitherto prevented all intercourse with evangelical Christians. Even soldiers came up to my room to get Gospels, and wanted to hear about the finished work of our Lord.

Yours truly, ELIZA STAPFER.

FOREIGN GIRLS IN LONDON.

DEAR SIR,—It is proposed to hold a meeting for Scandinavian girls on Monday, June 18, at half-past five o'clock, and we shall be glad if ladies knowing of any Swedish or Norwegian girls would either send us their names or personally invite them to the meeting.

We are exceedingly anxious also to obtain the names of the upper-class French employées in the large West-end establishments, and we shall be very glad if ladies will give us the names of any they meet with in their shopping, in order that we may invite them to the French meetings which are being held here.—Yours truly,

ANGLO-INDIAN EVANGELISATION.

Sir Rivers Thompson, ex-Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, once said in Calcutta: "Every Englishman in India should be a Christian missionary." It is an unhappy fact, however, that very many of the thousands of Englishmen in India are not even Christians, much less missionaries. The Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society works among this important though comparatively small section of the population of our great Empire in the east, and has strong claims upon the support both of Christians and patriots.

The directors of the Society are to be congratulated on the success of the reunion breakfast at Exeter Hall on Friday last. During last year operations were considerably extended, but the Society was not able to respond to many appeals to send evangelists to sadly destitute districts.

Lord Northbrook, formerly Viceroy of India, made a very acceptable chairman. He spoke in high terms of the Society, and emphasised the importance of Christian testimony among the English people in the Empire. The undenominational character of the Society met with his cordial approval. The noble lord said:—The object of this Society is one that must commend itself to us all. It is certainly very desirable that, while organising missions to the heathen, we should not forget our own countrymen. I believe the work of this Society to be most important; for not only is it for the benefit of Englishmen in India, but also for the welfare of the millions of population of that great empire. It is undoubtedly of great importance that all Englishmen engaged in India should set a Christian example to the natives of that country.

Rev. Filmer Sulivan, who last winter held mission services in India in connection with the C.M.S., spoke of the readiness of the natives to hear the Gospel, and also of the delight with which Christians of all sections of the Church worked in order to secure the success of his mission. With great pleasure he told of an officer of high character who spent his holidays by going from town to town and from village to village, proclaiming the Gospel with the help of magic-lantern views. Everywhere the people flocked to see and hear. How many might follow that good example?

Sir Charles Bernard remarked that there is hardly a family in the middle and professional classes of England but has a relative out in India. What a comfort it would be for such to know that their far-off friends were receiving spiritual ministrations, and being helped to exhibit in their lives the great principles of Christianity! The Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society lays itself out to do work of this very kind.

Rev. P. R. Mackay, just returned from India, having made a few remarks, Mr. S. Smith, M.P., delivered a brief address. He deplored that in many respects our countrymen in India do not set a good example to the heathen. Among the existing blots on our rule, he mentioned the drink traffic and the opium trade. He was convinced that there is little to be expected as the result of missionary effort, until we have Christianised our policy and government in India. The operations of the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society are such as tend to the establishment of a sounder policy and a wiser system of government. As our representatives rise in their sense of righteousness, we shall see an improvement in the government of the country. I believe, said the speaker, that India has been given us for high ends, and if we govern it well, on the principles which God has laid down, it will be a blessing to England; if, on the other hand, we do not maintain that standard of righteousness which is required of us, then we shall ultimately lose the great trust which has been committed to us.

Rev. Dr. Murray Mitchell remarked that the magnificence of the Indian Empire is more often spoken of than is the responsibility which its possession entails. He strongly urged that united effort should be made to influence Englishmen in India, as thereby much will be done towards influencing the entire population.

Rev. J. Hudson Taylor having made a few hearty observations, Rev. John Hewlett, of Benares, spoke. Some time ago he had before him the highest class of the college of which he is principal, and took occasion to urge the young men to embrace Christianity. One of them replied: "Sir, the natives of this country have heard the Gospel preached a great deal. It has been taught to them in their schools, and there is not so much a lack of knowledge of Christianity as there is a lack of examples of Christian life. India now needs to have Christianity exemplified in the conduct of its professors rather than taught by its missionaries." Mr. Hewlett proceeded to remark upon the great value of efforts such as those of the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society, which would tend to provide the examples of Christian life such as the natives of the country are now looking for.

Mr. R. A. Macfie and other gentlemen also spoke, and the proceedings were both cordial and hopeful.

Rev. Isaac P. Row, one of the evangelists of the Society, writing to The Indian Witness, describes a visit to the tea planters of the Brahmaputra Valley. He says:—"I have been everywhere most kindly treated, and the services that I have held have been generally very well attended. Many of the persons who have thus come together, from time to time, to hear the word of the Lord, have had to ride long distances to enjoy that privilege. I myself have met with scores and hundreds who have not had the opportunity of hearing a sermon for years, and I have been to many a place where a minister of the Gospel has not been seen before."

SPITALFIELDS GOSPEL MISSION.

The twenty-sixth annual meeting was held at the Gospel Hall, Osborn-place, Brick-lane, E., on Tuesday last week, Mr. R. C. Morgan presiding.

From the report, read by Mr. J. Sharpless, the superintendent, it was made abundantly clear that a good work was done last year. At the children's Gospel-meetings, over 7000 attendances were made. The Band of Hope and Sunday-school are also flourishing. Good prayer-meetings are held, and by several other agencies the Mission shows itself really earnest in evangelical effort. Speaking on home visitation, Mr. Sharpless said that the district greatly needs the services of a devoted Bible-woman. As it is not possible to engage one, it is hoped that God will lay it on the heart of some Christian to supply the want. Lady helpers are also required to take up work among the poor downtrodden women and girls of Spitalfields.

Mr. W. C. Miles referred to the enormous difficulties attending the evangelisation of dock labourers, and enlarged upon the blessed results of personal dealing with sinners. Mr. G. Holland added his testimony to the value of the Mission.

In the course of an address full of sympathy with the Mission, the Chairman indicated the great need of Christ being set forth in his priestly character. The truth of Christ's intercessory work should be continually kept to the front; while counteracting Romish influences, this will also meet the case of sinners, whose wants God has met by providing an all-sufficient Priest.

Dr. Cory rejoiced to hear of the success of the Mission, and wished it God-speed. Mr. W. J. Lewis, of Ryde, formerly superintendent of the Mission, urged his friends to implicitly trust in God for future blessing.

GENEVA RAILWAY MISSION.

Dear Sir,—The Geneva Railway Mission was begun some three years since by Mdlle. Rilliet and Mdlle. de Palezieux, who have been in this country seeking to make known the important work among the six hundred men who, with their wives and children, represent three thousand people hitherto uncared and unknown. They have now left London, and we wish to bring the great need of this interesting Mission before your readers, many of whom doubtless have passed through Geneva in visiting the beauties of Switzerland, and would like to show their sympathy with those who are labouring for the salvation of these precious souls.

God has blessed the work from the beginning, through many difficulties answering the prayer of his children, who, amid opposition and discouragement from Socialists and others, are carrying it on in simple dependence upon Him. It has grown immensely; there are Bible-classes, lectures, conferences, mothers' meetings, evening and sewing classes, Sunday-school, savings bank, medical mission, temperance coffee-room, libraries for adults and children, Y.W.C.A. and Y.M.C.A., all carried on, and about two hundred families are visited.—Yours faithfully, (Miss) M. F. Denham Smith.

OUR TOILING SISTERS.

Sir,—As the summer season again approaches, we think with pleasure of hundreds of poor children whose lives are being brightened by the much-prized and long-anticipated "day in the country.' But there are thousands of children of larger growth to whom such a refreshment rarely comes, though to them it would surely be an equal if not a greater benefit; we mean to our poorer sisters in shops, workrooms, and factories.

Over 300,000 of the latter in London alone, toiling in close workrooms from eight a.m. to seven p.m., at the same mechanical labour, year in, year out. Many are the sufferers in health from semi-starvation and overwork; yet, whilst supporting themselves and often indigent relatives on their meagre wages, they have seldom enough to spare for even one day's "outing." Most West-enders can enjoy annually as many months of mountain scenery and country delights as they can possibly desired. We entreat all thus favoured, specially those of your readers living in the suburbs or neighbourhood of London and other manufacturing towns, to consider these weary workers, and to give them at least a taste of their own overflowing cup of happiness. To bring such wholesome pleasure within the reach of thousands of city girls, multitudes of invitations are needed. Who will help us?

(1) By inviting large or small parties of these girls, in charge of a lady worker, to spend the day or afternoon on Saturdays and Bank Holidays in their parks and gardens; when possible, defraying all expenses. (Reduced railway fares are granted by railway companies for any number over thirty, or vans can be hired to drive them round.)

(2) By sending contributions to our "Holiday Fund," specifying they are for "Days in the Country," to enable us to avail ourselves of invitations where fares are not paid.

Our lady workers will gladly undertake to organise these parties to suit any invitations, or to select those most requiring the refreshment. An early response is urgently asked, that we may take advantage of the fine weather while it lasts.

All invitations and contributions will be gratefully acknowledged by the undersigned hon. sec. of the "Holiday Department" for the "Young Women's Christian Association" and "Factory Helpers' Union." (Miss) F. M. Fraser.

HOP PICKERS MISSION, ALTON.—Six tents were erected here last year for the preaching of the Gospel, and filled with the people we sought to teach. Applications are already made for the tents this season. Will friends help us that we may be able to make our arrangements? The need was never greater; by this means the lowest grades of society are brought to hear the Word of God.

Alton, Hants. Samuel Chinn.

THE CHRISTIAN LIFEBOAT CREW.

The fo'c's'le of the Ratcliff Sailors' "Welcome Home" was crowded on Tuesday last week for the monthly muster of the "Crew." Miss Child explained that it was a special wish of the Crew that their usual meeting this month should be followed by a season of prayer, and waiting on God for renewed consecration and outpouring of the Spirit.

Several testimonies were given by sailor members present. Mr. G. B. Studd, in addressing the Crew, stirred them up to live Christ at home, as well as publish Him abroad. Colonel Macgregor spoke on "Power." Miss Murray spoke of worries and other little things that take us away from Christ. Miss Macpherson dwelt upon the necessity of being loaded with ballast in order to sail safely towards the Heavenly Port.

At the conclusion of a short Gospel meeting, another was held for waiting upon God. Mr. Reginald Radcliffe gave an address, based on Psalm lxii. and James iv., showing the importance of pouring out our hearts before God, and having no compromise with the world and its friendships. Mr. Studd gave his experience, and a precious season of prayer followed. One after another sought for fresh consecration, and entreated God's blessing on the efforts of the various missions represented in the meeting as well as on all workers for God in heathen countries.

WORK AT BRUSSELS EXHIBITION.

Dear Sir,—The opening for the spread of the Gospel in Belgium which this Exhibition affords is being used by the Christians of Brussels; and the Belgian Missionary Church are cordially uniting with Pastor de Jonge in Gospel and tract work; the former organisation undertaking the French work, whilst M. de Jonge manages that which is carried on amongst the Flemings. Similar work at the Brussels Exhibition of 1880 has resulted in four preaching halls, four weekly schools, one day school, and one hospital, all at present conducted, with great zeal and much spiritual blessing, under the care of the excellent Pastor. Before 1880 the Flemish population of Belgium had been left, almost entirely untouched by any evangelistic effort, to choose between the grossest form of Papal superstition and infidelity; and there is still urgent need for Christian effort in the Catholic cities of Ghent, Bruges, Ostend, &c.

The tract kiosk, which is in course of erection close to the entrance to the Exhibition, is paid for by the Monthly Tract Society, and both that Society and the Religious Tract Society have contributed to the expense of printing and circulating suitable tracts. The tent work, of daily Gospel services in French and Flemish, is undertaken by M. de Jonge in faith, without any committee to back him up. The total expense of this branch of the work is estimated at from £60 to £70, of which only a small part has yet been subscribed. I shall be glad to forward any contributions for the work, or they may be sent direct to M. le Pasteur de Jonge, 38, Reu de Berlaimont, Brussels. Asking the prayers of your readers for a blessing on all these efforts.—I am, yours truly, Bridwold, Croydon. J. G. Alexander.

THE RECENT HYDE-PARK DEMONSTRATION.—Mr. F. N. Charrington, chairman of the Anti-Compensation Demonstration Committee, denies the report which has appeared in some of the newspapers, to the effect that he himself has paid the cost of the recent Hyde-park demonstration. On the contrary, temperance friends and others have subscribed towards the expenses. Although the cost of the demonstration was only one-fifth of the expenditure on any previous Hyde Park demonstration, there still remains the sum of over £100 to be cleared to enable the executive committee to close the accounts free from debt.

CARING FOR BODY AND SOUL.

A goodly number of Christian friends met together in a tent in the beautiful grounds of the Institution at The Green, Tottenham, on Saturday afternoon, to celebrate the twenty-first anniversary and the coming-of-age of the Evangelical Protestant Deaconesses' Institution and Hospital, founded in 1867 by our estimable friend Dr. Michael Lascron, who has been from the first the mainspring of the Institution, and who still directs its work.

In presenting his report, the venerable Doctor said it was with feelings of special thankfulness to God that he looked back upon the past year of the Institution's history, for the opening month of that year witnessed the completion and formal opening by H.R.H. the Princess of Wales of the last wing of the new and handsome building. The year itself, though not marked by any striking events, has been full of quiet usefulness, and of that blessing from above which gently steals down day by day like the dew of heaven. In connection with the hospital there are now sixty-six sisters, forty-one of whom are at the parent house at Tottenham, and who labour in the hospital and amongst the poor of the district; the others are engaged in infirmaries at Sunderland, Scarborough, South Dublin, and Cork. During the year they have attended to 11,673 separate cases, and have been the means of alleviating much pain and suffering, and of pointing many to Him who "went about preaching the Gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness and disease among the people."

Mr. Samuel Gurney Sheppard, who presided, in a hearty speech very warmly congratulated the doctor on the "arriving at man's estate" of his admirable Institution. He confessed that though he had often heard and read of the hospital, he had never before been privileged to visit it and to see the work carried on, but added that now he should take the warmest interest in its welfare, more particularly because its one object is the glory of God and the welfare of immortal souls. Subsequently it was announced he had handed to the treasurer (Mr. John Morley) a cheque for £100.

Mr. Theodore Howard, an old friend, said he had watched the progress of the Institution since its birth, and it gave him very great pleasure to be present to celebrate its majority. When not only people but institutions attain their majority, they expect coming-of-age presents, and he earnestly hoped that these would pour in upon Dr. Lascron, so that the debt of over £2000 might be cleared off, and that the large ward, containing 50 beds, which has been recently closed for want of funds, in spite of pressing claims upon its accommodation, may be speedily re-opened.

Rev. J. B. Figgis, of Brighton, as an Irishman, thanked this Institution for the beneficent work which its agents are doing in Dublin and in Cork, and for leading many of his countrymen to the Saviour, who only can allay their ills and give them peace. He drew attention to the urgent need for additional young lady labourers in this happy sphere of Christian usefulness, and earnestly hoped that some present might be led to devote themselves to this work of administering healing comfort, and of speaking the Gospel message to the Lord's sick, poor, and needy ones. There are souls to be saved, bodies to be eased from sickness and suffering, and everywhere there is needed more earnest work for Christ. We and all our possessions belong to Him; they all are the King's, and we can but yield to Him that which is his own.

Mr. Joseph Howard, M.P. for Tottenham, who, like his brother, has from the first taken a practical interest in the work, expressed his continued sympathy, heartily congratulating the director, and thanking God for the position it has attained. It is the only hospital in the suburbs, and the only one conducted on Christian lines—first consecrated to Christ and the healing of the soul. He sincerely trusted God would continue to prosper it, as He has done so very markedly in the past.

Revs. H. McSorley, R. Vaughan Price, Messrs. J. Goodman, and J. McCall also addressed the meeting, each pleading for increased monetary assistance that the work may be out of debt and out of danger.

RESCUING THE CHILDREN.

The work of the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children, which has now assumed such considerable proportions, was commenced as a simple ragged school in a hay-loft in St. Giles', in April, 1843, by the present indefatigable secretary, Mr. William Williams. Now there are six Homes for destitute boys and girls, besides the Arethusa and Chichester training-ships, on board which youths are fitted for life at sea. In these Homes and Ships 1000 boys and girls are wholly supported and trained to earn their own living. Since the work was started more than 11,000 have been admitted to the Refuges and Ships, and 10,100 have left for situations at home and abroad; all of these during their residence in the Homes have been brought up in the fear of the Lord, and not a few have been truly "born again."

The forty-fifth anniversary of these excellent Institutions was celebrated in Exeter Hall on Thursday evening of last week. Every part of the spacious hall was crowded; the singing, under Mr. Proudman's able direction, of the 600 children, evidently formed one of the chief attractions, and their performances greatly pleased the large assembly.

An abstract of the report was read by Mr. Williams. During the past year 232 boys, and 25 girls were received; situations were obtained for 95 boys, 113 went into the merchant service and Royal Navy, and 40 were sent to Canada; whilst 40 girls were placed out in service. During the winter months about 6000 dinners were given to the ragged-school children.

The Earl of Jersey, president, occupied the chair, and delivered a very sympathetic address. He expressed his great pleasure at seeing the children looking so happy, and was sure it added to their pleasure to know that there were so many kind friends interested in their welfare. He earnestly hoped that the debt of £4000 still remaining on Shaftesbury House would be speedily wiped off.

Rev. Dr. Oliver, vicar of Ealing, remarked that it was a grand thing that England possessed so many agencies, supported by so many friends, for raising the falling, and helping the destitute. To look after the children is to benefit the nation.

Rev. F. B. Meyer said he admired the Institution because it begins its work from the outside, and works to the inside, and by teaching the mind influences the heart. The way to lay the foundation of noble character in the children is to let them have plenty of the Bible; imprint the name of Jesus upon their hearts, and those characters will stand for ever.

Mr. W. E. Hubbard, treasurer, in moving a vote of thanks to the chairman, said they had found in Lord Jersey a worthy successor of the late Earl of Shaftesbury, their former president; and Lady Jersey also takes a warm interest in the work.

HOXTON HALL INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION.—Mr. W. I. Palmer, J.P., presided on Thursday week at the inauguration of an industrial exhibition in the Hoxton Hall. The exhibition includes specimens of almost every kind of industry engaged in by the men and women connected with the hall, with a loan collection of paintings, engravings, and curiosities contributed by Rev. E. Collett, Mr. Jonathan King, and other gentlemen. There was a large attendance to witness the inauguration, and brief addresses were delivered by Mr. Palmer, Mr. and Mrs. Noble, and Mr. Robert Rae. The exhibition remained open until Tuesday.

KING OSCAR OF SWEDEN.

On Sunday last, shortly after noon, King Oscar of Sweden visited the Scandinavian Sailors' Temperance Home, West India Docks, E. He was met by Mr. T. A. Denny, and went over the Institution. Like Saul of old, His Majesty may be described as from his shoulders and upwards higher than any of the people? In manner he admirably showed the royal grace of condescension.

Directly on entering, the King showed a lively interest in Miss Hedenström's work. He spoke to many of the men in the Home, and to the delight of all, seated himself at the head of the dinner-table and patronised the first course, while chatting pleasantly with those sailors who were nearest him. The kitchen having been visited, the party, which included Mr. Carnegie, a warm friend of the Institution, and a number of ladies and gentlemen, went upstairs, where His Majesty wrote his name in the visitors' book. On someone remarking that it was rather fatiguing to look over such a large building, the King said, "Oh, I'm never tired!" and his fine athletic build certainly seemed to justify a fairly literal interpretation of the remark.

Having stayed about three quarters of an hour, King Oscar expressed himself delighted with the Home, and was not slow to express his high appreciation of the work which Miss Hedenström so ably carries on, with the encouragement of many good friends. As the King left, the National Anthem was heartily sung by the men.

Letter to the Editor.

SALVATION ARMY AND BAPTISM.

Dear Sir,—I am sorry that my letter or my course of conduct with regard to Baptism should cause sorrow to any brother in the Lord. But really I can only be responsible as to the feelings and interests of those whom God may commit to my charge. With regard to them, I am thoroughly satisfied as to what God would have me do. I wrote not with any idea of convincing others, but merely to explain my position.

It would be easy, and, in some respects, pleasant to me to show why none of the reflections made by your correspondents in the least shake this conviction. But for me to do this would be to run into the very controversy which we are so determined to avoid, and which, I am certain, it cannot be the will of God that I should engage in.

The charge of Popery is not new to our ears. But it comes strangely from those who are so positive about their own views that they are prepared to charge all who differ from them with a serious departure from "the faith delivered to the saints," and, by implication, of being "ungodly men." It is against such, and such only, that we are advised to "contend."

For my part, I can only say that I purpose, with God's help, to contend to the death for the "one faith" and the "one baptism" according to the light God has given me.—Yours truly,

F. De L. Booth-Tucker.

MR. W. H. BENNET, who was mentioned in our last as speaking at the Meetings of Believers at Dublin, is not from Liverpool, as there stated, but from Yeovil.

SOLDIERS AT THE CAPE.—A very blessed work of revival has been going on among the soldiers in Natal. They are—at least many of them—living witnesses for Christ, and bright examples to the civil population.

J. Robinson, Regimental Surgeon.

Pietermaritzburg.

MONTHLY TRACT SOCIETY.—Our Continental work has brought appeals from various seaports in Europe for books for loan libraries for English ships. Can your readers kindly send us some of their spare volumes for this purpose? We are sending a box to Antwerp in a few days, and will gladly include any books that may reach us promptly. J. R. Mackenzie, Secretary.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. William Nobbs, evangelist, has concluded a month's mission at Malden Hall. He was cheered by seeing good fruits of his endeavours to point people to the Saviour. Earnest workers greatly encouraged him.

Malmesbury.—Under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., a special mission has been held in a tent by Mr. J. Elliott, of the Evangelisation Society. From the first the services were much blessed, and many professed faith in Christ.

Mr. Rogers, of the Scottish Y.M.C.A., held a six days' mission in Almondbank and Ruthven, from May 27 to June 1, with gratifying results. Souls have been saved and believers quickened, and the members of the local Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations have been stirred up to greater activity for their Divine Lord and Master.

The Bible and Gospel Van is now in Birmingam, where on the Bull Ring large meetings have been frequently held. The thousands of Bibles and Testaments sold are finding their way into dark homes, we trust to light up the future path of many. Police authorities are favourable, while the people are attentive and Christians willing to work. Wharton & Weaver.

21, Crellin-street, Barrow-in-Furness.

Ledbury.—Lady Henry Somerset has been giving a series of Gospel addresses in a large circular tent which she has had erected for holding evangelistic meetings. The seal of God's approval has fallen upon her work; some who were in darkness are now in the light, and many believers have been quickened; the home lives of many have been brightened by her large-hearted Christian activity. Beside her active work in and about Ledbury, she often invites large numbers of Christian and temperance workers to her castle at Eastnor for mutual encouragement and help.

Lower Tooting.—Special services for young people have been held in the Baptist Chapel (Longley-road), of which Rev. G. H. Rumsey is the pastor. Mr. T. Lewes Sayer was the Missioner, assisted by Mr. Pewtress. Invitations were sent to other Sunday-schools in the neighbourhood to join in the mission, and all have come in for a share of the blessing which has been given. Mr. Sayer was much cheered in meeting with Christian children who dated their conversion from a former mission conducted by him in the neighbouring "Union" church last March. The teachers in the various schools represented have much cause for thankfulness to God.

Mrs. Mary Grant Cramer, sister of the late General Grant, has been appointed as evangelist to the national department of soldiers and sailors, by the Women's Christian Temperance Union of America. Mrs. Cramer enters upon her duties with a love for souls, and an earnestness of purpose to proclaim the great salvation to the men of the army and navy who are bound with the chains of intemperance, and led captive by Satan at his will. She possesses that inflexible determination of purpose which made her brother so successful as commander-in-chief of the armies of the United States, and we may expect to realise by this acquisition to our forces a new element of strength and power, prophetic of glorious results.—Union Signal.

Saved in Nine Minutes.—A correspondent, writing of the revival work of Rev. Thomas Harrison, in New York, says:—Mr. Harrison is now in his sixteenth week. The number of conversions to date is over 1,300. On a recent Sunday evening the altar was crowded with anxious seekers, and among the rest there came a locomotive engineer, whose trip is from New York to Troy, in the passenger express. This man had come to the house of God, probably for the first time, and the Spirit had impressed the sermon on his soul. In holy earnestness of purpose he asked Mr. Harrison if he could be saved in nine minutes, as he had only that time to stay, and then run for his train. "Oh, yes, my brother," said the preacher, burning with love for souls, "He can save you in less time than that: come up to the altar." The poor fellow started, and, like a flash, the holy converting grace and love of God penetrated and interpenetrated his soul, and salvation and glory beamed from his heart through his countenance. The glory and the love so melted and filled him that it was with difficulty he withdrew from the spot, where he had been so signally saved, to run for his engine. He left, amid the prayers and blessings of that crowded assembly.

Victoria Docks.—An eight days' mission has been held at the Silvertown Union Mission Church by Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes. The meetings were well attended, and many professed to receive blessing. Meetings were held during the dinner-hour at two of the large factories in the neighbourhood, and a special meeting for men on Sunday afternoon at the chapel brought together a large number.

Mr. George Muller.—The last tidings received of this honoured servant of God were from Auckland, N.Z. On April 23, he had been twelve weeks in New Zealand, but the openings for service were so abundant that he thought it likely he might be detained three, four, or six weeks longer in Auckland, besides visiting other places in the North Island. After leaving New Zealand he will probably return to Melbourne, and then to Sydney, N.S.W.

South Norwood.—The opening meeting of the tent in connection with the branch of the London City Mission in this neighbourhood was held on Friday evening last, Mr. H. W. Maynard, in the chair. Addresses were given by Messrs. J. S. Gray, of India, R. C. Morgan, and C. M. Sawell, district secretary of the Mission. The local missionary is Mr. J. J. Browne. Evangelistic services will be held every Sunday, Tuesday, and Friday, till the end of September.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has held a six days' special mission in the Abbey Foregate Congregational Church, Shrewsbury (pastor, Rev. T. Townsend). The mission has resulted in great spiritual quickening to many members of the church, and some in the congregation have been deeply affected by it. The special feature has been the impression made upon senior scholars in the Sunday-school. Upwards of seventy of these profess conversion. Mr. Balgarnie's visit will long be remembered with gratitude.

Epping Forest.—On Sunday, June 3, very interesting services were held at Buckhurst-hill, in the Forest, near Princes Hall. It was a pleasant sight beneath the beautiful trees to see several hundred attentive hearers. For some years it has been the custom to gather in this lovely spot. Many down for a day's recreation have heard the word. Mr. Lord, who has had the oversight work for some fourteen years, has had many tokens by letter and personal testimony to blessing received in these meetings.

Major D. W. Whittle and Mr. Peter Bilhorn, of Chicago, lately held a three weeks' series of evangelistic meetings in Winona, Minn. The meetings have been successful beyond all expectation. During most of the time the Opera House, accommodating about fourteen hundred people, was filled to overflowing, eager to hear the earnest, thoughtful preaching of Major Whittle and the singing of Mr. Bilhorn. Mr. Bilhorn is a young blacksmith, who was converted eight years ago in Mr. Moody's tabernacle in Chicago. He is a very sweet solo singer, and a rousing and inspiring leader. The influence of the Bible-readings held every morning has been the most potent factor of all. The power of God's spirit came down upon the large company of Christian people gathered there from the city and neighbouring towns in marked demonstration of power. It is believed that the deep impressions made there never will be effaced.

LONDON FEMALE PENITENTIARY.—Lord Kinnaird presided over the eighty-first annual meeting of this Institution, held a few days ago at 191, High-street, Stoke Newington. During last year sixty-six women were educated, fed, clothed, trained in industrial work, and afforded a fresh start in life. The Guardian Society of Bethnal Green is in future to be carried on in conjunction with the Penitentiary.

AMONG SAILORS AT PLYMOUTH.—The many agencies of the Plymouth and Stonehouse Seamen and Soldiers' Friend Society and Bethel Union were last year worked with gratifying success. Benevolence is shown to the families of distressed fishermen and others; temperance is advocated for young and old, and club amusements are provided for those who, without some such attraction, might be enticed into courses of evil. Mr. J. P. Norrie, the missionary, also distributes to the crews of merchant and emigrant vessels bags of books, tracts, &c., supplied by the Ladies' Association. During last year 750 bags were thus given away, and they seemed to be highly appreciated by the sailors and others.

ZENANA MEDICAL COLLEGE.

The annual meeting of this Institution was held a few days ago, at Exeter Hall, Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe presiding. Dr. G. Griffith, hon. sec., read the annual report, from which it appeared that the object of the Society, which is distinctly unsectarian, is to train Christian women to be medical missionaries. During the year, fifteen new students entered, and four of the old students completed their course and passed the Board of Examiners with distinction.

Addresses full of sympathy were delivered by Revs. J. H. Hitchens, D.D., C. A. Fox, A. Mursell, E. E. Jenkins, and the Bishop of Rangoon. The last-named speaker said: I may tell you that in my own experience in India—although not a medical missionary—I have prescribed for some three hundred thousand cases, amongst these many women, who have, however, to be prescribed for under great and well-nigh insuperable difficulties. I remember just before leaving India an Indian prince came to seek my aid for his wife. Although against my rule, I consented, seeing the urgency of the case. Accompanying him to his house, I found I could only see the patient behind a curtain, ask certain questions, and have a hand put through a slit in the curtain for me to feel the pulse. I mention this to show you how impossible it is that male practitioners can meet the needs of women, and to emphasise the urgent need there is for medically trained ladies to go to the help of their Indian sisters. Christian women taking up such a work as this can do a great deal to help and alleviate the sufferings of women in India. Few in this land can form any adequate idea of the intense sufferings of women in the East through the want of skilled medical aid. I assure you that anything you can do to mitigate that suffering is a most Christ-like work.

Y.M.C.A. JOTTINGS.

Melbourne.—An effort is being made by the Melbourne Association to raise £15,000 for the erection of a new building. Much interest is expected to be awakened through the coming exhibition.

The Prince of Wales opened the new gymnasium, in Long Acre, of the Exeter Hall Y.M.C.A., last week. The King of Sweden was also present, and expressed his best wishes for the prosperity of the institution.

The Committee of the Nottingham Association propose to make a special effort at the Royal Show in that town next month to bring the Gospel before the people. They require a large assortment of tracts and books for distribution. Parcels will be welcomed by the secretary, Mr. Henry Johnson, South-parade, Nottingham.

Some eighty members of the Soldiers' Christian Association connected with the Bristol Y.M.C.A., regularly send copies of The Christian and other papers to soldiers. Mr. C. G. Smith, the secretary, writes telling of much blessing as the result. He asks those who write to him requiring reply to send stamped envelope or postcard.

A goodly number of young men recently arrived in Melbourne from the old country with letters from the Associations in London, Kingston (Surrey), Liverpool, Glasgow, Edinburgh, Belfast, Sheffield, Manchester, Portsmouth, Brighton, Aberdeen, besides others from private sources, and one from the Polytechnic Christian Institute, London. A hearty welcome is accorded to strangers, with such general counsel and advice as their circumstances require; and, in addition, a monthly visitor's ticket entitling them to the use of the rooms.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE has an article on "The Bright Side of Hospital Life in a Great City, as it appears to a Patient," by A. B. Ward. This article should do much toward diminishing the prejudice which still exists toward being taken to a hospital. The humane, kindly, and often humorous side of hospital life is described.

The History of Assyria.

Assyria from the Rise of the Empire to the Fall of Nineveh. By Z. A. Ragozin. 5s. T. F. Unwin. This is another volume of the useful "Story of the Nations" series, and a continuation of the author's history of Chaldea. Profusely illustrated, it cannot but prove an entertaining as well as instructive book. At the same time its carefully digested contents have such an important bearing upon Old Testament history and prophecy, that the work will be specially welcome to students. The style is essentially popular, but the best authorities have been consulted throughout.

Foreign Missions.

A Handbook of Foreign Missions. It gives us pleasure to call attention to this very valuable book, which will prove very useful at the present time. In upwards of 350 pages, there is here compressed information as to the rise and progress of the many movements that have been made towards evangelising the heathen. Reliance may be placed on the contents, as in most cases the details have been supplied directly from the offices of the several societies. The book is a grand reflection of Christian enterprise and pious adventure, and is furnished with a very suggestive introduction. (Religious Tract Society.)

A Century of Christian Progress and its Lessons. By Rev. James Johnston. 3s. Nisbet. This work, from the pen of the Secretary to the Committee of the Conference on Foreign Missions, now in session at Exeter Hall, is the result of much patient labour, and published at a time when it should prove of great practical value. Rich in statistics, facts, and arguments, marshalled and collected in order to impress upon Protestant Christians a due sense of their responsibility before God, in view of the failure of Gospel testimony to keep pace with the rapid march of the world's population, this book deserves careful study, and we commend it to the serious attention of those of our readers who desire to thoroughly take in the missionary situation.

The Bible and Science.

Modern Science in Bible Lands. By Sir J. W. Dawson. 9s. Hodder & Stoughton. In the winter of 1883-4 the distinguished author of this beautiful book travelled in Egypt and Syria, with the special aim of studying such points in the geology and physical features of those countries as might throw light on their ancient history, and especially on the history of the Sacred Scriptures. This book is one result of those fruitful travels, and as we read it we could not but rejoice that the Father of Lights had equipped the accomplished author with such wisdom, faith, and grace as these six hundred luminous pages display. Thoroughly up to date scientifically, this book commands unusual confidence at the hands of those who fear God, and love to think upon his Word. Old and New Testament alike have floods of archæological light thrown upon them. The early books of the Bible, and particularly the opening chapters, are specially dealt with.

The Efficacy of Prayer.

Dr. Dallinger Answered: The Consistency between the Efficacy of Prayer and the Uniformity of Nature. It will be remembered that Rev. Dr. Dallinger, not long ago, refused to offer public prayer for the removal of small-pox, then prevalent in Sheffield. In answer to the philosophical defence that was put forward for this painful attitude, Mr. B. Broomhall has, under the above title, republished a sermon which was preached by the celebrated Rev. Dr. Chalmers during the prevalence of cholera, many years ago. It were needless to say that the sermon is remarkable for forceful argument and fidelity to revealed truth. We rejoice in its republication, and trust that many will thereby be convinced that while permitting, as the scientists observe, a most rigid uniformity to the visible workings of nature's mechanism, yet, among her invisible and antecedent workings, God retains that station of pre-eminence and power whence He brings all things to pass, according to his pleasure. This sermon should prove very useful at the present time, and we hope it will be widely circulated. (2d. Hodder & Stoughton.)

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Inner Sanctuary. By Rev. Charles Ross, M.A. Macniven & Wallace. A series of expository addresses on chaps. xiii.—xvii. of John's Gospel. Their publication needs no apology, and they are likely to be much appreciated. The deep and tender meanings of our Lord's last communications with his disciples are unfolded with much insight, scholarship, judgment, and true spiritual sympathy.

The Story of the Life of the Emperor William of Germany. By Rev. W. W. Tulloch, B.A. Written "for boys and girls all over the world," this useful book, which is alike interesting as a biography and instructive as a history, may be cordially recommended. Having already written the lives of Queen Victoria and the Prince Consort for a precisely similar class of readers, the author has served a good apprenticeship to this very important class of work. CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

THE FISK SINGERS are still singing to full houses, giving their delightful entertainment in Australia.

RICHARD WEAVER.—Le Témoin de la Vérité is giving in its pages a free translation in French of the life of this evangelist.

THE INDIAN GOVERNMENT practically keeps the Bible out of the book stalls at railway stations, while French novels, reeking with moral filth, crowd these stalls from Calcutta to Peshawar. So says The Indian Witness.

CLERICAL ABUSES IN ITALY.—The Chamber of Deputies, after a very excited debate, rejected almost unanimously the petitions of the Bishops to strike out of the Penal Code Bill the articles providing penalties for abuses committed by the clergy in the exercise of their functions.

THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDS.—Pomare, Queen of Tahiti, lately died at seventy years of age. At her birth not one Christian convert had been made in the South Sea Islands. At her death more than three hundred islands were wholly evangelised. This has been largely the work of natives.

AFRICA.—The apprentices at the Industrial Schools, Leloaleng-Kuting, have completed a stone house, which is almost unique in Lessonto. This house, which the young builders have worked at with much interest and pleasure, is a triumph of civilisation over barbarism, of Christianity over paganism.

SIR CHARLES AITCHISON, says The Indian Witness, intends bidding farewell to India at the commencement of the next cold season. India has too few officials of Sir Charles's character. His devotion to his God has been as marked as his attention to his high official duties, and he leaves India loved and honoured by all classes.

VICTORIA.—Rev. Fred. C. B. Fairey, a member of the Congregational Union of Tasmania is about to undertake a mission voyage in the Evangelist canoe down the Darling and Murray rivers, from Bourke to Adelaide—2000 miles. It is his intention to visit the population of this vast district: to preach and hold meetings on the stations, visit the selectors' homes, the wood cutters' huts, and the river steamers, &c., and to distribute illustrated religious literature, among scattered homes, far from the "usual means of grace."

OUTRAGES ON LAKE NYASSA.—Rev. W. Percival Johnson, of the Universities Mission, and Mr. Buchanan, Acting British Consul, landed at Makanjilas (a town on the east side of the lake and near the south end) from the Universities Mission steamer, the Charles Janson, and their persons were seized and their property and the ship's boat stolen. The mob stripped Mr. Buchanan and killed one of his men, and robbed Mr. Johnson of part of his clothing. The Englishmen got away only by payment of blackmail and by leaving the ship's boat behind.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a mission at Foggin Tor, Dartmoor Hills, June 17 to 28, conducted by Mr. J. Lomas, of Falmouth. ——For much blessing on a special mission at Christ Church, Barnet, June 17 to July 1, conducted by Rev. W. Hay Aitken.

UPRIGHTNESS.—PROVERBS xi. 1—11.

THE word upright is a very suggestive one. It is used again and again in the Old Testament to express the idea of moral rectitude. It is so used of God, who is said to be "good and upright" (Ps. xxv. 8); of the Levites, who are said to have been "more upright in heart...than the priests" (2 Chron. xxix. 34); and of Job, who is said to have been "perfect and upright" (Job i. 1). The same word is used to describe the original condition of man, for it is said that "God made man upright" (Eccles. vii. 29); and it is used in another passage, which shows how far the human race has departed from this condition of innocence, for it is said there that "there is none upright among men" (Micah vii. 2). To be made upright, men need to be made anew (Eph. iv. 24), to be "born again" (John iii. 3), and to be "born of God" (1 John ii. 29). The cripple at Lystra was made upright by a miracle wrought by Paul (Acts xiv. 10), and the crippled soul of a sinner can only be made upright by a miracle of grace. The way of uprightness is the way of the Lord, and therein is strength. Physical weakness often produces a stooping gait; and moral weakness is the cause of that deformity which consists in stooping to what is evil and mean. In our lesson we see

(1) UPRIGHTNESS PORTRAYED.—Amongst the good things said of uprightness, we notice (a) Commercial integrity (ver. 1).—The "Lord" here is Jehovah, the faithful One (Mal. iii. 6). Because He is faithful, He hates what is false. Newberry renders the second clause of this verse, "A perfect weight is his delight." There is an inspection of weights and measures going on daily, of which few are cognisant. Hear what the law saith (Lev. xix. 35, 36). The God of heaven is a God of detail. Some say their religion is that of the Sermon on the Mount. Let such remember what is there said of good measure (Luke vi. 38). Samuel Budgett began his career as a business man by casting the barrels of P.D. (Pepper-dust) out of his stores. (b) Lowliness of spirit (ver. 2).—Uprightness is not uppishness. The Pharisee of the parable doubtless stood erect, but he had a crooked spirit. The only perfectly upright man was "meek and lowly in heart" (Matt. xi. 29). (c) Integrity of purpose (ver. 3).—Perfect integrity is allied with right intentions. The guiding principle of some lives is public favour (Acts. xii. 3), of others, personal gratification (Eph. ii. 3), but with the upright it is integrity. Integrity is associated with regard for the law of God (1 Kings ix. 11; Ps. xxvi. 1). (d) A right estimate of wealth.—There are limits to the value of money. Money gained in a way that will cause God to be angry will not profit the possessor (see "rich men," Rev. vii. 15, 17). The rich man in torments (Luke xvi. 2), and the rich fool (Luke xii. 20), are solemn warnings.

(2) UPRIGHTNESS REWARDED.—In this reward there is: (a) Favour (ver. 1).—The Lord is delighted with uprightness (see Matt. iii. 17). (b) Guidance (ver. 3).—He who seeks to do right will be certainly guided aright (John vii. 17; Ps. cxii. 4). (c) Deliverance (ver. 4).—God associates sin with death (Rom. vi. 23). Deliverance from death comes through the righteousness of Christ (John xi. 26). Deliverance from trouble comes as the result of right doing (ver. 8). (d) The respect of others (ver. 10), and (e) The good of others (ver. 11), "the city is exalted." A good man is a common good (Gen. xviii. 32).

SEA BREEZES FOR TIRED LITTLE ONES.—Mr. H. J. Allen, the manager of the Y.M.C.A., Pembroke House, Folkestone, is doing a good work in providing a seaside home for the tired and friendless children of the slums. Last year nearly 300 little visitors were received; and what a transformation was worked by sea breezes, good food, and cheerful company! Pale cheeks became ruddy, and laughter, merriment, and sturdy health took the place of weakness and melancholy. There are thirty beds ready for occupation when funds permit. Mr. Ruskin, who has been staying near Folkestone, has given Mr. Allen £1. Who will send a similar offering, and thus give four children a week by the seaside? These city bairns live hard, sad lives; let us, for Christ's sake, try to give them a little sunshine and enjoyment.

International S. S. Lesson.

Sunday Afternoon, June 24.

TEMPERANCE LESSON.

1 COR. viii.; GOLDEN TEXT, 1 COR. viii. 13.

EARLY Christians were greatly perplexed with the question of meat offered to idols. When a sacrifice was made to heathen gods, part was consumed on the altar, part was given to the priests, and part remained for the offerer. Priests often sold their portions in the market; and the offerers sometimes invited friends to consume theirs at feasts, which were commonly held in the temple. If, after the feast, anything remained, was usually carried away and given to friends. Thus it happened that both in the market or at the tables of their friends Christians were tempted to buy or to partake of meat that had been offered to idols. They might very often eat such meat, not knowing that it had been so offered. What was their duty in that case? "Ask no questions for conscience' sake" (1 Cor. x. 25, 27) is Paul's answer.

But, suppose a Christian man does know, and is told the truth directly by some friend, should he eat? "The idol is nothing at all." The meat has not been really defiled by being offered to a vain idol; may we not show our contempt for this nothing—this vanity, this idol—by so eating?" "No! that may do for you, but for the sake of others, who will see your act and not understand, you should not eat." Thus we are taught to think of others. There were true Christians, weak brethren, who did not see things so clearly. They did not see that the idol was nothing, and that the offering up of the meat did not affect it. Left to themselves, they would avoid touching such meat with all care. But when they saw other Christians, whom they greatly respected, eating, without question, meat that probably had been offered to idols, they thought they could do the same. They sat down with them; but they ate in doubt, and therefore, in sin. Thus, the stronger and better instructed Christian led his doubting brother astray, by doing what in itself was right, and concerning which he had no scruple.

Some people are proud of their clearer knowledge, larger liberty, and freedom from scruples that trouble others. Paul teaches (vv. 1—3) that such knowledge is nothing, unless it be held with loving regard for others. He knew that meat was neither made unholy nor was it defiled by being offered to idols. He knew, too, that he was not made more acceptable to God by refusing to eat. But love made him think of others. His example might lead them to eat, simply because he ate, to their spiritual harm. Rather than that, "I will eat no flesh," &c.

THIS IS THE GREAT LAW OF TOTAL ABSTINENCE.—Strong drink may be little or no temptation to us. We may say, as so many do, "I can take it, or leave it." Shall we, then, be proud of our liberty, our greater self-control? No! If strong drink make my brother to offend, I will take no strong drink while the world standeth, lest I make a brother to offend."

There are always people about us to whom drink is a temptation. We cannot tell the force of our example. When there are so many in danger we should abstain for love's sake.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(1) A professing Christian was visiting the city, and thought he would go to the theatre. He was curious to see it, and no one would know him. Years after a dying man sent for him, and charged him with the ruin of his soul. He had seen him go to the theatre that day, and had argued: "If a church member and Sunday-school superintendent can go, I may." So he went, again and again; grew more and more careless, and was now dying a hopeless death.

(2) The Rev. Thomas Scott was once very fond of cards. One day a parishioner asked liberty to tell him something. This being granted, she said, "You know A. B., he has lately been attentive to religion, and has spoken to me about taking the sacrament. Last night, he and C. D. and others met together to keep Christmas. They played cards, drank too much, and quarrelled. When I spoke to him, telling him such conduct was not consistent with religious concern, he said, 'There is no harm in cards: Mr. Scott plays cards.'" This affected Mr. Scott greatly. He saw that however soberly and quietly he played, others, in very different circumstances and far weaker than himself, might follow his example to their ruin. He thought of our text, and without delay he boldly renounced cards for ever, before a large company. After that he was never asked to play.

(3) The distress and deep disgrace which a poor little boy had to suffer on account of his father's drunkenness so affected his mind that he hanged himself. At the funeral, the father promised he would never again touch drink. He kept his promise for a long time. But one day he was in a shop when Deacon P—— entered and asked for a little brandy. The Deacon was a good man, who drank very little, and "never took too much." The reformed drunkard looked and looked, grew very uneasy, then walked to the door, and back again. Presently, he stepped to the counter and asked for a little brandy. "I may drink a little as well as Deacon P——," he said. From that day forward he drank heavily, and soon became a worse drunkard than ever.

"CRUELTY TO PRISONERS."

A LADY in Edinburgh writes to us with reference to the article on this subject which we recently transferred to our columns from those of The Pall Mall Gazette:—

I cannot answer for the prison arrangements in England, but as I, with a few other ladies, have permission to visit the prison here, and have done so for about ten years, I have had ample opportunity for judging of the treatment of female prisoners. As none of the officials are present when I talk to the prisoners they are under no constraint to conceal anything that goes on in their daily life. It is only justice to say that it is the testimony of all the prisoners who are conducting themselves with propriety and trying to do the work assigned them that their treatment is reasonable and kind. At present there are two Highland crofter women in prison, and they assure me that they are kindly treated and that if the other prisoners would do the duties assigned to them they would get on as well. A young woman who is finishing a term of fifteen months expresses herself "thankful to God for much of what she has experienced during these months."

Two things make it impossible that such a state of things could exist here as is indicated in the case to which you refer. One is the personal character of those in authority; and the other, the prison regulations which they must carry out. I have never visited our large convict prison in Perth, but I often meet women who have spent long terms of imprisonment there. None of them complain of the first year, which is solitary confinement, because they are visited regularly and at short intervals spoken with by officers, chaplain, and teacher. I sometimes correspond with prisoners who go from this, and shall enclose a letter from a young woman undergoing a five years' sentence, which it would have been impossible for her to write had her life been such as is described in The Pall Mall Gazette.

What requires alteration here with regard to criminals is that the punishment should bear some proportion to the offence. Crimes the most diabolical that can be conceived are punished with weeks or months of imprisonment, while injury to property, however valueless it may be, is punished with years of penal servitude.

A CALL FROM SINGAPORE.—DEAR SIR,—As your paper is read by thousands of young men, I venture to make an appeal through your columns. I am pastor of an English church, and have a growing school for English and Chinese lads. We greatly need two young assistants, men accustomed to teach large classes of young children up to standards IV. or V. in the English language. They would be supplied with teachers and books to learn the Malay or Chinese language; and all their leisure hours could be spent in direct evangelistic work among the heathens of this city of nearly 200,000. They would require to be godly and faithful young men of sound evangelical faith, of any of the orthodox denominations. They would be paid enough to meet all their wants, and if they will pay their own way here, I would engage to pay their way back, if need be, after three years.

Yours fraternally, W. F. OLDHAM,
American Methodist Mission.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. Dr. Cassel, missionary to the Jews in Berlin, writes: that he has had the privilege of baptizing four adult Jews during the past month.

On Wednesday morning, last week, four Nonconformist ministers waited upon the Bishop of Wakefield, as a deputation from Nonconformist ministers of the city, and presented him with an address of welcome.

The many friends of Rev. D. B. Hankin, of St. Jude's, Mildmay Park, will regret to hear that the state of his health compels his absence from duty. It is hoped that a couple of months' rest will enable him to resume his labours.

Rev. W. J. Adams, vicar of St. Augustine's Church, Liverpool, is about to commence an open-air summer mission. Sixteen districts in the parish have been opened up for visitation, and it is expected that much blessing will follow the undertaking.

It is purposed to hold a great Evangelical Conference in London in April next, the object being to demonstrate the right of evangelicals to a place in the Church of England, to define the doctrines upon which they hold that place, and also to determine what they believe about holiness. Revs. H. W. Webb-Peploe and H. C. G. Moule are active movers in the matter.

By the same mail which brought the letter from the late Bishop Parker, which we published last week, the Church Missionary Society also received letters written by the Bishop before his death and from the other missionaries. In the Bishop's letter the position of affairs in Uganda is referred to at length. He pleads very earnestly for "men in Christian England to come over and help us."

SALVATION ARMY.

A steam launch has been chartered for mission work on the Thames. Miss Lucy Booth and a detachment of lasses will form the crew, and will spread the message of salvation from Gravesend to Oxford.

After keeping the 38th Clause of the Torquay Harbour Act, prohibiting Sunday musical processions, in abeyance for a fortnight, the Torquay Local Board has ordered eighteen more prosecutions of Salvationists. This was done in the face of Mr. Fowler's Bill, now before Parliament, for the repeal of the clause, and in spite of a petition signed by the Torquay Nonconformist ministers presented to the Board at their meeting last night.

A Saratoga correspondent of the Boston Congregationalist says, with respect to the work of the Salvation Army in that locality, it is confessed they have done a great deal of good in the reformation of drunkards, and the conversion of persons whom the churches have never succeeded in reaching. The poor master says that he has this winter—and a very severe winter—been drawn upon a thousand dollars less than last winter, through the work done by the Salvation Army, and the saloon keepers confess that they have had but meagre patronage.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The Belfast Witness, in commenting on Mr. Aitken's recent mission in that city, urges the Presbyterian churches to find room and work in their system for regularly ordained evangelists.

Dr. Marshall Lang says that his visit to Australia has taught him that if Christianity is to maintain its hold "its leading men ought to be those who can command the respect of the community for intellectual and spiritual power."

The six Free Church Assembly deputies who will be ready to go forth this season are Revs. Dr. Black, of Inverness; G. Johnston, of Marnoch; J. J. Mackay, Trinity Church, Glasgow; R. Hill, St. Luke's, Glasgow; J. M'Neill, Edinburgh; and G. Wallace, Hamilton.

The Punjaub mission of the Church of Scotland has enjoyed a very prosperous year, no fewer than 680 having been added to the membership by baptism. The total membership is now close on 1400, and in the schools 1600 heathen boys and 200 girls are being taught the Scriptures.

Rev. W. H. Stevenson contributes a bird's-eye view of the women's mission in India to the June number of The Free Church Monthly. Miss Emily White, daughter of Rev. Dr. Verner M. White, of Kensington, goes out in the autumn to be mistress of the normal school, under Mrs. Macdonald.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

In Jamaica and Japan light is breaking forth and Christ is exalted. A marvellous case of healing a deaf youth, in answer to prayer, in the latter country, is fully authenticated.

Robert and Mary I. Davidson tell of difficulties and hopes in China, and S. A. Purdie of battles and triumphs in Mexico, where, both by pen and tongue, mission, meeting, and school, Romish superstition is yielding to light and truth.

The Christian Worker says that there were more Friends when Fox died at 66 years than Wesleyans when Wesley died at 88. The difference now is owing to the absence of evangelisation among Friends. The spirit of early days is happily coming back.

One evidence is the recent "First-day School" Conference in Philadelphia, and the "Women's Foreign Mission Association" is another. The discussion, in the same periodical, as to the best system for sustaining the evangelist and extending the work is further proof.

In Iowa Yearly Meeting they have evangelistic committees, and a superintendent who is constantly traveling and supplying the churches' needs. They have committees for—(1) Visiting the sick, (2) looking up absentees, (3) welcoming strangers at meetings, and (4) corresponding with absent members. No wonder we hear of scores added to their numbers, and public recognition of new members and hearty welcome given.

BAPTIST.

Mr. F. R. Oram, a member of the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A., has been accepted for missionary work on the Congo by the Baptist Missionary Society, and will leave Liverpool in company with Messrs. Butcher, Phillips, Silvey, and Witham, to-morrow.

Mr. C. H. Spurgeon was again unable to be present at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Sunday, owing to continued ill-health. A letter was read from him, saying he hoped to be able to conduct the services next Sunday and to take part in the orphanage festival on Tuesday.

Revs. T. H. and Mrs. Barnett, from Dacca, Eastern Bengal; J. and Mrs. Ewan, from Benares; J. J. Fuller, from the Cameroons; Percy Comber, from the Congo; Romanath Ray Chowdherry, from Allahabad; and Daniel and Mrs. Wilshere, from Bahamas, have arrived in this country.

METHODIST.

Rev. F. W. Macdonald is one of the latest victims of over-work. He is out of health, and has had to cancel his public engagements.

The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church of America has resolved to extend the possible term of a Methodist pastorate from three to five years.

In connection with the Primitive Methodist Home Mission, for the year ending March 31 last, the missionaries have conducted 3662 open-air services, made 112,548 visits to the houses of the people, and have witnessed many cases of conversion.

The work at the Manchester Mission continues to be much blessed. On Sunday evenings the inquiry-room is filled with seekers after salvation, and there are many cases of conversion. Open-air services form a prominent feature just now, and the mission workers are labouring with earnest zeal.

News has reached England of another raid on the Galla country, Eastern Africa, this time by the Somalis. Rev. W. H. During, Free Methodist missionary, successor to Rev. John Houghton, who with his wife was murdered two years ago by the Masai, was only saved by taking refuge in the stone mission-house, erected since the Houghton tragedy.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. Dr. Joseph Parker entered upon the twentieth year of his ministry at the City Temple on Sunday last.

Rev. F. J. Ecclestone has resigned the pastorate of the Vale Church, Broadstairs, "on the ground of grave changes in regard to certain religious doctrines and beliefs."

During the three years' pastorate of Rev. William C. Attwell at Milton-next-Sittingbourne, 116 members have been added to the church, making a total of 210 now on the church roll. The pastor's labours have been greatly blessed, and the church and Sunday-school are centres of great usefulness.

The church at Ray Lodge-road Woodford, has celebrated the second anniversary of the settlement of Rev. G. H. Giddins as pastor. The church has now a fellowship of 105, and the various agencies are in a healthy condition. As an outcome of a recent mission, a Young People's Guild of Christian Endeavour has been formed.

Rev. Stanley Rogers, preaching at Kirkdale, said, the reason why the masses to some extent absent themselves from churches and chapels is that the church and the chapel have too often shown themselves devoid of all sympathy with them. The churches are cursed by the spirit of pride and selfishness; they are not human enough; there is amongst them too much of the spirit of class distinction. They have failed to show the mind of Christ.

Rev. R. A. Betts has completed the second year of his ministry at Glenorchy Chapel, Exmouth. During his pastorate there much useful work has been done. A sailors' mission has been started in connection with the men's Bible-class, and a Christian band formed. The church membership has increased from fifty-two to one hundred and ten, a considerable number of the new members being scholars from the Sunday-school.

The question of social purity is not being overlooked by the National Council of Congregational Guilds. A special committee has been appointed to deal with the "White Cross" Movement, and, at its suggestion, correspondence is being entered upon with those ministers who conduct mission services in different parts of the country on the advisability of holding a special meeting on Social Purity in connection with their missions. Copies of the suggested rules can be had from Rev. Dr. Hannay, at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, London, E.C.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The Methodist Mission Tent is at present pitched at Pettigo, and is largely attended. Several have professed to have been already led to the Saviour.

The Belfast Sailors' Home seems to be well managed. During the past twelve months 41 boarders and 28 shipwrecked sailors were provided for. At the annual meeting Rev. M. Beattie, chaplain to the Seamen's Mission, and others, bore testimony to the manner in which it is conducted and the good it has been doing.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland was in session all last week in Belfast. The report on Irish missions stated that Roman Catholics never displayed greater willingness than at present to hear the Word. They declined to come into their churches on the Sabbath, but they gladly listened at funerals and in private intercourse. A most encouraging report on Foreign Missons was presented by Rev. Wm. Park.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. Alex. Macdonald, at one time pastor of the Congregational Church in Auckland, New Zealand, and formerly a pioneer missionary in Samoa.—Professor Ernest Bertheau, well known as a Biblical and Oriental scholar, at Göttingen, at the age of 75.—Rev. W. Rowe, of Chester, in his 72nd year, and after 49 years in the Primitive Methodist ministry. He was president of the Conference in 1874, and had also filled the office of General Missionary Secretary.—Dr. Keil, who worked with Dr. Delitsch on his Commentary of the Old Testament. He was twenty-five years Professor in the University of Dorpat, Russia.—Mr. Francis Graham, of Cornascrebe, near Tandragee.—Mr. Daniel Kyte, of Cashel, co. Tipperary, aged 90 years, a devoted member of the Methodist Church.

HOME.

Canon Wilberforce has been addressing temperance meetings in Dublin, meeting a most cordial reception.

The Mayor of Newcastle, Mr. W. D. Stephens, states that absinthe drinking in France was ruining the intelligence of the people.

The Free Church of Scotland organised a temperance campaign amongst the Gaelic-speaking communities, and has framed a total abstinence pledge in Gaelic.

Fears are expressed that the Westmoreland licensing appeal case, Sharp v. Wakefield, owing to the pressure of business in the Court of Appeal, may not be heard for some time.

It is pointed out that when the Forbes MacKenzie Act was passed for Scotland, though many traders had their incomes reduced through Sunday closing, compensation was not dreamt of.

Of the 71 students in Didsbury Wesleyan College, 67 are total abstainers; at Handsworth, out of 52, all save the two are of the same mind; while at Headingley and Richmond, which have 103 students, there is no division in the camp.

FOREIGN.

The Philadelphia Court, carrying out the High Liquor Licence Law, has reduced the number of liquor shops in the city from 5773 to 1257.

The New Jersey State Sunday Closing Act, which came recently into force, has given the people such quiet Sundays as they had never previously known.

The various temperance bodies of Tasmania have resolved on positive action against the liquor traffic. Encouraged by the success of local option in Victoria, Tasmania has decided to come to the front.

In France 3000 criminals have been examined by M. Marembet. He finds that of the vagrant class 79 per cent. were drunkards; of assassins, 50 per cent.; incendiaries, 57; and robbers, 71. Of 100 criminal youths 64 were already drunkards.

Writing of the American Mission at Gaboon, Mr. Good says that when once a native has tasted alcohol it is too late to stop. Many men who have bought the so-called eau de vie have proved that it was eau de mort by dying a few hours after drinking it.

Mayor Robinson, Gloucester, Mass., having recently refused to sign liquor licences granted by the Board of Aldermen, Judge Field, of the Supreme Court, decided that under the law the Mayor must sign. Mayor Robinson told a reporter that he would resign his office rather than sign "any instrument legalising the infamous business in Gloucester."

The National Convention convened by the Prohibition party have nominated Mr. Clinton B. Fisk, New Jersey, and Mr. John A. Brooks, Missouri, as candidates for the post of President and Vice-President of the United States. The platform of the Prohibition party declares that the manufacture, importation, exportation, transport, and sale of alcoholic beverages should be made public crimes, and punished as such; and that prohibition should and must be secured through amendments in the State constitutions.

Forthcoming Meetings.

The Evangelisation Society will send evangelists to any part of England, Scotland, and Wales on due notice. Hon. Sec., 21, Surrey-street, Strand, W.C.

Margate.—Christian families who wish for accommodation at this watering-place, and who have not made pre-arrangements, may obtain information by calling on Mr. Pamment, secretary of the Y.M.C.A., Gordon House. This, of course, does not apply to young men, members of Y.M.C.A.'s, for whom Shaftesbury House exists.

Home and Institute for Working Girls.—This place, which is in connection with the Christian Community, is situated at 84, Great Dover-street, Borough, S.E. Its object is to benefit girls employed in warehouses and factories, who have no parents, or whose occupation calls them away from their homes and friends. The work requires extension, and funds are urgently needed. Further particulars may be obtained from Mr. G. H. Breton, superintendent, who will gratefully acknowledge donations or subscriptions.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Monday, June 11, 1888.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

OFFICE: EXETER HALL. JOHN KIRK, Secretary.

To the Readers of "The Christian."

DAY by day the most pitiable applications for Free Admissions to our Sea-Side Convalescent Homes come from Doctors, on behalf of their very poor patients; also from Clergymen, Ministers, City Missionaries, and others who are brought in contact with the Poor in all parts of the country. Not a day passes without similar applications from men and women just recovering from a wearying sickness, often with their means entirely exhausted. Their only hope of perfect recovery is a few weeks' rest and quiet, with good food, at a Convalescent Home; but to the majority of such applicants we have to refuse the needed help, owing to the want of Funds. This, we feel sure, would not be the case if our friends could spend a day in our offices and read the letters of appeal, and listen to the earnest pleadings of those who require, and deserve, help in their time of need. We are no friends of indiscriminate Charity; but it is our earnest and prayerful desire, and our constant endeavour, to respond to such applications promptly, practically, and in such a manner as will best help the Poor to help themselves.

Our present urgent needs are many, and are set forth below. With all the earnestness at our command we appeal for aid in this good work for the Lord and His suffering people.

Kindly give us your sympathy, and, if possible, your practical aid.

Donations, either large or small, will be gratefully received, and can be sent to

Your faithful servant,
JOHN JAMES JONES,

REV. J. HUDSON TAYLOR,

Founder of the China Inland Mission.

SAID one of the speakers at Exeter Hall last week, referring to the foreign mission field, "We want leaders: what would the China Inland Mission have been without Mr. Hudson Taylor?" That would be an impossible question to answer; but we know what it has been with him, by the blessing of God. It has been an object-lesson for missionary societies everywhere, and its history has furnished one of the most remarkable chapters in the story of the world's evangelisation. Mr. Taylor would himself be the last man in the world to say that he has been the only human instrument in bringing about such blessed results. He has been most happy in his active coadjutors in the work at home and abroad; and equally happy in securing the practical partnership of many of the Lord's stewards for the provision of the needed funds. But, in the providence of God, he has been the chief worker, both in founding and extending the Mission; and it may be interesting to note, from the circumstances of his career, the way in which he has been thus honoured in helping forward the purposes of his great Master, with respect to the Christianising of one of the mightiest nations on the face of the earth.

Mr. TAYLOR is a native of Barnsley, Yorkshire, and is not much past the prime of life, being now in his fifty-sixth year. More important than the date of his birth is the suggestive fact that his father, who was himself an earnest evangelist (though a business man), had been deeply stirred as to the spiritual condition of the Chinese; and he prayed God that if ever a son were given him, that son might become an ambassador of the cross to China. Mr. Taylor was, therefore, so to speak, consecrated for mission service in China from his mother's womb. During his childhood his health was feeble, and his parents had to abandon, for a time at least, the fond hopes they cherished; but the answer to their prayers and longings only tarried. They were even then being heard, in the fact that the son was deeply interested in China, and regarded it as his sphere of life-work.

In the intensely interesting "Retrospect" contributed by Mr. Taylor during the last two years to China's Millions, he describes how in his youth he had a sceptical fit, and how he was brought out of the region of darkness and negation into the goodly land of faith, and peace, and assurance, as a clear answer to the prayers of his mother, and his sister (now Mrs. Broomhall). At the very time when his mother was agonising in prayer for him seventy or eighty miles away, he was stepping into the light of conscious acceptance with God, through reading a Gospel tract which had casually come into his possession. If this turning-point in his life was a clear answer to prayer, his whole Christian course may be said to be a series of equally clear proofs that there is a God who heareth and answereth the prayers of his believing children.

After a season of home study in his father's drug shop, Mr. Taylor became assistant to Dr. Robert Hardy, a highly esteemed medical man in Hull. He afterwards pursued his studies at the London Hospital. During this period of training he had many experiences calculated to strengthen his faith in the direct interposition of God for guidance or deliverance at critical moments. He had learned to commit his way, and all its daily difficulties, to his loving heavenly Father, and the unmistakable responses of God to this life of simple trust taught him many lessons that have proved invaluable in later years. The sense of the pressing spiritual needs of China that was borne in upon his heart at the time of his consecration, grew in weight and volume during his student years.

In September, 1853, at the age of twenty-one, having been accepted by the Chinese Evangelisation Society as a medical missionary, he sailed for the land of his heart's desire. On the voyage he narrowly escaped shipwreck on the Welsh coast, and later on was miraculously delivered from falling into the hands of cannibals on the coast of New Guinea. The voyage by sailing ship occupied more than six months. The same distance can now be covered with the aid of steam in about five weeks.

Matters in China were very different then from what they are now, in other respects than those of transit. Mr. Taylor landed at Shanghai only to find himself in the midst of a serious native rebellion. The path of the foreign missionary was beset by many dangers and difficulties; and Mr. Taylor some hair-breadth escapes from the bullet, and the fanatical soldiery. There were also difficulties relating to the work itself, but out of them all God provided a way of escape, though faith was often sorely tried. These early embarrassments and hindrances did not damp the zeal of the young missionary, but only caused him the more unreservedly to cast himself on his God. Probably Mr. Taylor now feels that the experiences thus gained were the best preparation for the enlarged sphere of service that awaited him. One very happy circumstance of his first stay in China, as a pioneer missionary, was his association with William C. Burns, of the Presbyterian Mission—a fellowship fraught with mutual blessing, and one that Mr. Taylor is never tired of referring to. He writes:—

> These happy months were an unspeakable joy and advantage to me. Mr. Burns' love of the Word of God was delightful, and his holy, reverential life and constant communings with God made fellowship with Him to meet the deep cravings of my heart. With true spiritual insight, he often pointed out God's purposes in trial in a way that made life assume quite a new aspect and value. His views, especially about evangelistic work as the great work of the Church, and of the order of lay evangelists as a lost order that Scripture required to be restored to its proper place, were seeds which bore abundant fruit in the China Inland Mission.

Mr. Taylor was busily engaged in itinerant work for about four years, meeting with many disappointments and trials that do not fall to the lot of the Chinese missionary of to-day, but finding through them all that God was indeed the refuge and the strength of his servants. In the end of 1856 he had been led to terminate his official connection with the Society (though continuing to work with it), and began the method of looking directly to God for the supply of his needs, and the needs of the work; to which method he has consistently adhered from that time to this. His faith was honoured in a way that was most instructive and encouraging, as a further preparation for the founding of the Inland Mission. Failing health compelled him sorrowfully to return to England in 1860. For a time he was engaged as a collaborateur of Rev. F. Gough, of the C.M.S., in the important work of revising a version of the New Testament, in the Romanised colloquial of Ningpo, to be published by the British and Foreign Bible Society. This also proved to be a providential circumstance in his life. He expresses it thus:—

> In the study of that Divine Word I learned that, to obtain successful labourers, not elaborate appeals for help were needed; but, first, earnest prayer to God to thrust forth labourers; and, second, the deepening of the spiritual life of the Churches, so that men should be unable to stay at home. I saw that the Apostolic plan was, not to raise ways and means, but to go and do the work, trusting in his sure word who has said: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

After months of earnest prayer, he reached the conviction "that a special agency was essential for the evangelisation of inland China; and that by simple trust in God, such an agency might be raised up and sustained without interfering injuriously with any existing work." A visit to Brighton, where he saw congregations well cared for spiritually, while the millions of China were perishing for lack of knowledge, brought his feelings and resolves to a crisis. He definitely surrendered himself to God for this service, and there and then asked Him for twenty-four fellow-workers, two for each of the eleven inland provinces of China, then without a Protestant missionary, and two for Mongolia. About this time he wrote the little book, "China's Spiritual Needs and Claims," a volume which, we may say, has been exceedingly helpful in imparting a true knowledge of that vast country, and in stirring up consecrated workers to go forth to help in its evangelisation. The mission was formed in 1865. In May of the following year a missionary party of seventeen sailed for China in the Lammermuir, and the China Inland Mission was fully inaugurated.

It would require a volume, instead of a few brief paragraphs, to tell the story of the Mission from that time to this. Suffice to say that the progress has been continuous and in an increasing ratio. It has seen no wholesale accessions to Christianity such as that related one day last week in Exeter Hall with respect to the Telegu Mission in India. The Chinese people are not naturally disposed like some races towards the reception of a new religious faith; pride of intellect and of country are strongly against it. England herself has done much to bar the door of China to the Gospel of Christ, by her unchristian action in the matter of the opium trade. Still the old Gospel has shown its ancient power, and when a Chinaman becomes a Christian, it is not in name only but in deed.

When the Lammermuir party sailed, eleven of the eighteen provinces were entirely without a Protestant witness for the truth. Now there are settled missionaries in ten out of the eleven, and the eleventh has been frequently visited by itinerant workers. Since the Mission began, over three thousand persons have professed Christ in baptism. A few figures as to the present condition of the Mission may be found interesting and full of blessed meaning for the future:—

> There are now in the field 294 European missionaries and their wives, many of whom were missionaries previous to marriage. There are 66 organised churches; 110 chapels and 65 out-stations; 12 native ordained pastors and 49 assistant native preachers; 12 school teachers; 42 colporteurs and chapel keepers; 17 Bible-women; 8 boarding schools, with 88 native pupils; 10 day schools, with 86 pupils; 3 hospitals, 5 dispensaries, and 16 opium refuges. The number of communicants at present on the roll is over 2000, and of these 550 were baptized last year.

These figures, we repeat, though they may seem small in view of the vastness of the population, are yet full of import as to the future of China. Surely they are enough to make Mr. Taylor thank God that he was led to surrender himself for the work that Sabbath day on the Brighton beach. As for himself, he has been incessant in toil and in plans for the furtherance of the work; spending his years between China and home, as the necessities of health or the claims of the work seemed to demand. The Mission has been sustained upon the simple principle of entire dependence upon God, on which it was founded. That principle, though thoroughly tested, has never broken down, for God has through his servants sent in the funds needed for the prosecution of the work and its growing demands. The income, which for the first ten years averaged about £5000, last year exceeded £33,000. In connection with the support of the Mission there have been many striking answers to the prayer of faith. The Mission is undenominational and catholic; members of every evangelical church are gladly welcomed to its ranks, if suitable, and are left entirely unfettered in developing the growth of the native churches. A goodly number of workers have gone out at their own charges, and some, besides sustaining themselves, are supporting others.

Mr. Taylor has been twice married, and each time has been singularly happy in his life partner. His first wife, to whom he was wedded during his first visit to China, was a daughter of the Rev. Samuel Dyer, a very devoted agent of the London Missionary Society. Mrs. Taylor did splendid service in connection with the founding of the work, and was greatly beloved by all the missionaries. Her death, in 1870, was the occasion of deep trial to Mr. Taylor, and a blow to the Mission. He afterwards married Miss Faulding; she was one of the party that sailed in the Lammermuir, and was greatly blessed of God as a worker among the Chinese. Of late years Mrs. Taylor has remained in this country, and is ever ready by voice and personal effort to further the important work of which her husband is the head. Early in the history of the Mission Mr. Taylor's brother-in-law, Mr. B. Broomhall, undertook the secretariat, and has long been as much an integral part of it as its founder; it seems difficult to imagine the existence and prosperity of the Society without the one or the other. Mr. Broomhall has done excellent service, not only to this particular Society but to Christian missions everywhere, by his attractive and stimulating book, "The Evangelisation of the World."

The remarkable increase of the working staff within the last few years will be fresh in the memory of every reader. The depar ture of the Stanley Smith and Studd party gave an unprecedented impetus to missionary zeal among educated young men both in this country and America. Last year, in answer to the faith and prayer of the heads of the work, a hundred new workers went out to China, and are now at their posts there either acquiring the language or busily engaged in evangelising. Whereunto the China Inland Mission may grow, no man can tell. It looks as though China were on the eve of some great advance that will bring he into step with the leading nations of the Western Hemisphere. Whatever may be in store for her as a potent factor in the life o the human race, it is certain that the pionee work of the China Inland Mission, extending over such a wide expanse of her vast territory has done much to break down the walls o exclusiveness and superstition that hav hitherto divided her from the rest of th world.

It has also unlocked the hearts of th people for the reception of the Gospe message, and prepared the way, as we trust for a great ingathering of the people o Sinim into the Redeemer's fold. In helping o such a glorious consummation we pray tha Mr. Hudson Taylor may long be preserve to advocate the claims of the perishin millions of that remarkable people to whos salvation he has devoted his life.

The Missionary Conference.

PROBABLY no event of greater import to the kingdom of God on earth has taken place during this generation than the great Missionary Conference which has just concluded its sessions at Exeter Hall. The ten days originally specified in the programme have been extended to thirteen; and so far from the proceedings being finished, their result has been to inaugurate a new departure, based on deepened convictions and enlarged purposes, to be carried out on indefinitely extended lines.

This Conference has gathered together children of God who were scattered abroad at the ends of the earth, and among all the sections into which evangelical Christians are divided. They have met as brethren, and they have not fallen out by the way. On the contrary, they have proved how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity, and God has commanded the promised blessing.

Again and again the conviction universally felt, that we have arrived at a great crisis, "the crisis of missions," found intense and eloquent expression. Not, indeed, the conversion, but the evangelisation of the world is in our power, and this has been proclaimed, not as a vision of the future, nor as a mere present possibility, but as the exalted privilege and bounden duty of this generation. The early Church soon forgot or neglected the Lord's command, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature," and for hundreds of years missions were unknown; but now the Church may learn how God restores the years that the locust hath eaten, and makes the wilderness of nations to rejoice and blossom as the rose, and fill the face of the world with fruit.

The possibility and privilege of immediately preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom in all the world for a witness unto all the nations, grew upon the minds and hearts of the assemblies, as the Missionary Enterprise was spoken of from day to day, until we were brought face to face with the ultimate material difficulty, the need of funds; and a new light was thrown upon the inspired assertion that "covetousness is idolatry" and "the love of money is a root of all evil." Hundreds of vessels are ready every day to sail to distant ports, but they cannot move until the tide comes in to bear them away. Hundreds of young men and women in England and America are ready to go forth to Popish, Mohammedan and heathen lands; they wait only for the tide; and if there were as great a readiness in those who tarry by the stuff to give the means, as there is in those who go to the battle to give themselves, the problem of missions would be solved at once.

On the other hand, Mr. Hudson Taylor has proved beyond dispute that God honours faith, and that if, in obedience to Christ's command, missionaries are sent out trusting the faithful Promiser, He will not fail to supply their needs.

Toward the close of the Conference a missionary said, "We have been most kindly and hospitably entertained; we have had luncheon provided daily; we have had a garden party; should we not have a day of prayer and fasting? We have consecrated ability; we have wealth; we have a Lord to whom all power is given in heaven and on earth, and He is with us alway. We need only the power from on high. This Conference is a great crisis in our lives, and in the Church's history. If we separate without a beginning of the outpouring of the Spirit upon us, we shall fail of the purpose which God has had in bringing us together."

These 1400 delegates cannot longer abide together; it now remains for the various societies and the friends of missions to give effect, under the leading of the Spirit of God, to the enlarged conceptions and the quickened enthusiasm evoked by this great occasion. For a new era has dawned upon them, and the missionary army which they direct has received an impetus which will necessitate a corresponding advance all along the line, both in counsel and in generalship.

NOTES ON THE CONFERENCE.

IT is not easy to understand what is meant by the objection to the Missionary Conference, in a religious contemporary, that there has been about it too much of the air of Mildmay. Three things were very obvious to a stranger: the admirable order which was preserved; the intense yet restrained earnestness of the audiences; and the marked theological oneness of opinion and sentiment. There were differences, but the Conference, representative as it was of distinguished men in Europe and America, was a grand demonstration of evangelical unity.

The proceedings, moreover, give large hope for the future of missions. Incontestible was the evidence afforded of the powerful impression made on the kingdom of darkness. In this connection we note what a civilian lately affirmed at Simla. According to a recent telegram, Sir Charles Aitcheson stated at a missionary meeting there, that Christianity is advancing in India five per cent. faster than the growth of the population, and is making greater progress than at any time since the Apostolic epoch.

It is surely inevitable that this Missionary Conference shall effect some changes in the methods of foreign missionary work; is it too much to hope that it will achieve the greatest result of all, in awakening the Church as a whole to its immediate duty in connection with the evangelisation of the world? Our churches are too satisfied with the one missionary Sunday in the year, and with the special annual missionary effort, instead of making our missionary work the special topic of prayer and gift and thought for 365 days in the year. The Church exists for this prime object: that she may spread the Gospel throughout the world. She can only flourish in so far as she fulfils this Divine purpose.

. . . .

And what is true of the whole is true of each part. If a Christian community hoards its gifts and workers for its own prestige and success it has already the sentence of death written on its heart. If, on the other hand, it is willing to give the flower of its youth, and the wealth of its gifts to the work of God, it will never want for workers or money at home. To give five barley loaves and two fish is to gather twelve baskets full of fragments. To scatter is to increase. To sow the precious seed is to reap a hundredfold.

Are Christians at home perfectly justified in living as they do, whilst many eager spirits are grudging the passing years, because there are no funds to pay for their outfit and maintenance? Would it not be wise sometimes to go over an inventory of property with the Master's eye scrutinising each item. Society has strangely altered since the days of the early Church. We do not for a moment affirm that it would be right for business men to surrender their capital. Capital, like rank and intellectual training, is a precious talent, not to be lightly parted with, but rather to be used for the glory of our Redeemer. The thrice-told injunction of 1 Cor. vii. bids us abide in the calling in which we were called. At the same time, it is undeniable that many Christians are spending much more on luxuries, ornaments, and ostentation, than they are giving to the Lord. The world is needing just now consecrated money almost more than consecrated souls.

. . . .

The great desideratum with a large majority of Christians is systematic giving, or giving on some fixed principle. If all who go to consecration meetings, and join in singing of the whole realm of nature as being too small an offering for Christ, would only give a certain portion of every pound that comes into their possession, to spread the knowledge of Christ's name, something would be done towards imparting a fresh interest and reality to such meetings, and to setting up a truer standard of Christian giving.

It is well to crystallise general principles into specific rules. He who would pray always must have special times for prayer. He who would benefit the race should begin with the next case of need that comes to hand. And he who would hold all his money for God should guard against vagueness and indefiniteness, by beginning with a specific dedication of a proportion of his income, as it comes to hand, to the cause and service of God. Surely the advent of the King cannot be far away. One of the signs which is most conspicuously identified with it is even now being fulfilled before our gaze: "The Gospel is being preached as a witness among all nations." And if this century is to witness the proclamation of the Gospel in every land, hitherto unreached; in every tongue, as yet unknown; what is to hinder the next century ushering in the golden dawn?

J. T. DORLAND AT HOXTON HALL.

THIS Canadian minister of the Society of Friends gave an address in Hoxton Hall on Sunday evening last. He is a young man, brawny and thick-set in physical build, with a wonderfully earnest manner. He has been much blessed to many young men in London belonging to the Society of which he is a member. His addresses are marked by spiritual power, and direct appeal to the heart and conscience.

His address on Sunday evening was from first to last a feeling presentation of "Christ and Him crucified." There was a remarkable stillness in the gathering as the words of faithfulness fell from the young speakers' lips. The illustrations were apt and forcible in the light of the text upon which the address was based—"The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." There was an after meeting, and many anxious ones came forward. Prayer had been offered for sometime past for a revival in the Sunday work at Hoxton, and the power in the meeting rejoiced the hearts of the workers.

Previously to the indoor meeting Mr. William Noble conducted the regular out-door service. Here an effort is made to reach those who will not enter the hall, and in this way many are gradually attracted to the mission.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. C. B. Sawday, recently of Vernon Chapel, King's Cross, but now of Melbourne Hall, Leicester.

We would direct the special attention of our readers to the farewell gatherings this day (Friday) at Harley House, Bow, announced on another page.

We have given to-day a tolerably full account of the important proceedings of the Missionary Conference at Exeter Hall, up to and including the meetings of Monday morning last. We will conclude our report next week in an Extra Number, price 1½d. We trust our readers will aid us in the circulation of these valuable reports, which, we believe, are more complete than those to be found in any other paper, as we have furnished accounts of the very practical discussions at the morning meetings for members only.

Early next month Mr. Moody's Students' Summer School opens at Northfield, and it is expected to be an unusually interesting occasion. Mr. L. D. Wishard has succeeded in forming a delegation to the Conference of eleven University students from this side the sea. Edinburgh sends three; Oxford, five; Cambridge, two; and Utrecht, in Germany, one. They were to sail by the ss. Britannic on Wednesday last. Mr. Hudson Taylor and Mr. Reginald Radcliffe follow some days later.

In a letter to The Times, Rev. R. P. Ashe, late of the C.M.S., writing from Usambiro, draws timely and forcible attention to the daily increasing scandal of the importation of arms into the interior of Africa. He states that an English trader is sending to Uganda a hundred rifles and twenty thousand rounds of ammunition, and that Arab traders are also supplying King Mwanga with hundreds of old English rifles, and gunpowder ad lib. It is pointed out that apart from the disastrous effect of placing such means of destruction in the hands of a young barbarian king, such action is calculated to prejudice the position of Emin Pasha and Stanley, and presents the deplorable spectacle of "Englishmen relieving Emin Pasha from the West, and an Englishman relieving King Mwanga from the East."

Mr. Ashe anticipates further immense consignments of these ruin-dealing goods, and appeals to England and Germany to unite heartily in stopping the importation at the coast—the only effectual place. We agree with him when he says, "Let them leave it alone, and sooner or later the whirlwind will be reaped from this sinful and senseless sowing of the wind." We must overcome by continual agitation the apathy hitherto displayed by European Governments in the matter of this inhuman and deadly traffic.

Preaching recently before the University of Cambridge, the Bishop of Manchester, who as Bishop of Melbourne had ample opportunities of forming an opinion, spoke highly of the newspaper press in the Colonies as compared with that of England. The colonial newspaper, he said, besides the usual social, political, and commercial news, and in addition to elaborate and well-written reviews (not mere "scrappy notices") of important books, gives full reports of lectures and meetings on religious and philosophical subjects. If the daily press of this country, which habitually devotes two or three columns to racing intelligence (four and a half columns out of six on one page of The Times being the other day devoted to this subject), and whittles down reports of religious and philanthropic meetings to a few lines, would take a leaf out of the colonial book, it would be great gain to public morality; for there is no doubt that the daily publication of racing news and police and divorce court garbage fosters the vice of gambling, and further panders to an already sufficiently depraved public taste.

The present period, being one of transition, is a critical one in the religious history of India. Many of the ancient religions are tottering; under the influence of Western ideas, Hinduism is being gradually undermined, and there is danger lest mere secularism and materialism, or what has been termed "a philosophical Unitarianism—a specious system of combined monotheism, morality, and philanthropy" should be allowed to fill their places. It is for the Church of Christ in this crisis to bestir herself, and see that nothing less than the unadulterated Gospel plan of salvation is presented to the hundreds of millions in India as they emerge from their long darkness.

Apropos of this subject, we may quote the following remarks of the Calcutta correspondent of The Times upon a recent case of parricide in that city, by a Bengalee youth of good position, which crime, being almost unknown among the Hindoos, is said to have caused a profound feeling of horror among the more conservative sections of them :—

> These men have been complaining bitterly for some time of the demoralising influences of the present system of education. While the ethical sanctions of the Hindoo religion are being loosened or destroyed by a purely secular and scientific education, no precepts, either religious or moral, are permitted to take their place. The urgency of social reform in this and other respects is becoming day by day a question of paramount interest to that portion of the Hindoo community which views with dread the growing immorality of the younger generation.

The copious evidence which is being given before the Select Committee on "Sweating" and on Emigration and Immigration, continues to be of the same painful character, which has been already made sufficiently familiar, and which we have from time to time commented upon. A philanthropic M.P. recently took at his own expense a party of pauper Germans back to Hamburg, their native town, but on arrival they were not allowed by the authorities to land, and had consequently to return to London, to add to the already congested condition of the East-end.

Further details with respect to the wretched pittances paid to the workers in particular branches of this grinding and heartless system, and with regard to the continuous influx of foreign paupers, are being almost daily supplied, and a sufficiently strong case has already been made out for prompt legislative action in both these matters. But it will be of no use to make fresh laws unless they are more strictly enforced than some of those already in existence. It appears, for instance, from some recent evidence given by Mr. Arnold White, that the machinery is to some extent already at hand for checking the immigration of homeless and helpless foreigners, inasmuch as a master of a ship is, under an Act of William IV., bound under penalties to make returns of all alien passengers; but this obligation is habitually disregarded, as many as five hundred foreigners of the lowest class having been lately landed with impunity in the course of a single fortnight

The latest news from the West Coast of Africa, dated April 25, will, it is feared, only intensify the anxiety which, despite the hopeful assurances recently given by some authorities, is being felt concerning the long-continued absence of reliable intelligence concerning the Stanley Expedition. Major Barttelot's party on the Aruwimi River have heard nothing from Mr. Stanley for some months, and the Major, anxious at the non-receipt of news, has, it is said, despatched one of his staff to the coast in order to send a cablegram to England asking for further instructions. The Arabs assert that Mr. Stanley has been wounded, and it is suspected that they know more about the fate of the expedition than they are willing to reveal. Still, none of the reports have been positively authenticated, and in the meantime the hope and prayer of all is that the intrepid explorer may be spared not only to join Emin Pasha, but also to be an instrument in God's hands for healing that open sore of Africa—the slave trade.

The gulf between the Italian people and the Papal party appears to be widening very deeply. The Penal Code Bill, which was passed some days ago by the Chamber of Deputies, contains a clause providing penalties for abuses committed by priests in the exercise of their functions, and a motion to omit that clause was rejected by 254 votes to 37. The Romanist organs say that the measure "restrains the free voice of the Church, and nullifies the freedom of Italian Ecclesiastics in their sacred mission." It is interesting to note that, whereas in these islands free course is being given to Rome, and, in fact, every assistance is being given her in her work, the necessity for restrictive measures is recognised in other parts of Europe.

Now that the summer is upon us, some of our readers who are familiar with the French language would find it a pleasant way of spending a holiday, to go out of the beaten track in France, and in some of the out-of-the-way districts take the opportunity of telling the old, old story. There are but few localities in which such a visit and such a visitor would not receive a hearty welcome, if everything like discussion were carefully avoided.

The painful question of the limited support afforded to the London hospitals is giving rise to much discussion, both with reference to the institutions themselves, and to the lack of generosity in regard to them on the part of the public. The town of Leeds appears to set a worthy example in such matters, for it is stated that while the annual subscription list to the Infirmary is about £4000, the workpeople in the town contribute an amount each year only about £100 less. We should like to see more of this practical charity, and, after all, to a very great extent, it only implies a little wholesome self-denial in the matter of those so-called luxuries both the working and the other classes are far better without. Last year the London hospitals and dispensaries relieved upwards of a million and a quarter persons, at a cost of £651,000; but the total income amounted to only £560,500, so that there was a deficiency of nearly £100,000.

Possibly influenced by the reception which the dignitaries afforded the revelations of the young girl at Lourdes, a woman named Mathilde Marchant, at Loigny, has been professing to have received Divine revelations directing the establishment of a religious community near Chartres, and to collect alms for its support. The Bishop appointed a commission to inquire into the matter, and unfortunately for readers of future editions of Alban Butler's Lives of the Saints, the report of the Commission refuses to admit the genuineness of the claims, and, in consequence, the Bishop has strictly forbidden the sale of any book or pamphlet containing the revelations, or any collection being made for a convent to be set on foot by Mathilde Marchant.

An Irish contemporary, alluding to the matter, professes to see in the Bishop's action in virtually excommunicating the woman, unless she withdraws her revelation from circulation and makes reparation for any trouble she may have caused, "another fresh instance of the zealous solicitude exercised by the Catholic Church in guarding against the circulation of pretended supernatural revelations and manifestations, and protecting the people from fraud and imposture." This may be so, but if such is the case, it is to be regretted that similar caution was not exercised in other cases of the kind, and the world saved from successful imposture.

No wonder that publicans become rich! It was stated the other day before the Select Committee of the House of Commons on Sunday Closing, that the assistants in the Dublin spirit-shops, and they number nearly 2000, are required to work no less than 101 hours per week. That many of their employers object to the proposed Sunday closing is not to be wondered at, for if they are thus without compassion or pity for their own servants, it is not likely they will have any consideration for the well-being of the working classes in general.

The English Churchman draws attention to what looks like a case of scandalous ministerial appointment and patronage. For thirty-seven years a much-respected evangelical clergyman has been vicar of the parish of Chesterfield. The people have been trained in simple Protestant usages, and are attached to them. The son of a peer has been appointed to succeed, who is professedly a sacerdotal priest of the confessional type. At the Oxford Mission, Bromley, East of London, the vicar designate has had a crucifix over the pulpit, "Altar Lights" in broad daylight, gives Popish wafers at the Communion, the "Stations of the Cross" are on the walls of the church, Popish banners and cross are carried in procession, the hymn-book used is full of idolatrous Mariolatry, and the "Manual" for Confession contains the repulsive Romanist suggestions.

How long will this be borne by patient Englishmen? It is the Bishop of Southwell who has thus handed over 9000 Protestants in Chesterfield to a Romanist. There was a time in England when the whole nation would have taken part with these outraged parishioners. Are not Bishops professedly shepherds, and is not the time come when the prophet's words should be repeated:—"My sheep were scattered; they wandered; they became a prey: Thus saith the Lord God, Behold I am against the shepherds, and I will require my flock at their hand."

Having allotted so much space to the report of the Missionary Conference, we are obliged to hold over many interesting articles.

If there is an indifference, as alarming as the disclosures in regard to the evidence taken before the Commission now inquiring into the charges against the Metropolitan Board of Works, there are, on the other hand, many who await anxiously the Board's own vindication. The love of money has rarely revealed such moral corruption, and at present the revelations have brought to light a system of bribery and fraud that must make good men concerned who send their sons into English public life. The municipal scandals of New York were not condoned here. So far it would appear the absence of honour and principle has been as bad in London, and men may well stand appalled at the outcome of modern scepticism and irreligion.

THE DEAD EMPEROR.

FOR the second time within four short months the great German nation is engulfed in sorrow; a sorrow shared by every civilised people throughout the world. An added interest has been lent, in this country at least, to the long illness and decease of the late Emperor by his close relation to our own Royal Family, his recent stay in England, and the fact of one of his chief physicians being a fellow-countryman.

The whole world indeed has been, so to speak, gathered in the death-chamber. We have scanned the scarcely legible messages; noticed the last farewells; admired the nerve that dared to consider State affairs while death was already grasping its victim at the throat; and, finally, we have gathered at the grave where one of the greatest characters among the public men of this day has been laid with unfeigned lamentation. All this has taken place not because he was the crowned Emperor, but a man of uncommonly noble make. That which can take hold of and touch the universal human heart can yet smooth out our differences, and make us one. And may we not prognosticate the near coming of a time when the whole human family, long divided, shall meet in one common circle, bound by a common tie, because animated by a common passion of devotion to the Son of Man, "God over all, blessed for ever."

There were numerous references in the London pulpits last Sunday morning to the departed monarch. In commencing the service at the Presbyterian Church, Belgrave-square, Dr. ADOLPH SAPHIR said:—

"I must refer to the event which has filled all Europe with sorrow and sympathy. Very rarely have sympathy and admiration been called forth to such an extent as in the case of this great, brave and suffering man. And very rarely has there been such an example given of fortitude, submission, utter self-forgetfulness, and devotion to the duty which God in his providence had imposed upon him in his exalted position. The event speaks very solemnly and very tenderly to all our hearts; showing us that this is not our abiding city, and that the highest position in this world, the affectionate loyalty and devotedness of a nation, and everything that is justly considered on earth as great and noble, must only be looked upon as a preparation for the everlasting blessedness unto which the Lord has called us. How great is man that God thinks him worthy to go through so much suffering and pain, and upholds him in the midst of all his suffering by his Holy Spirit, because he has prepared for us an exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

AUSTRALIAN NOTES.

has arrived in Melbourne, under an arrangement with the Victorian Evangelisation Society, and has begun his work amongst us. He has already made a favourable impression. His mission in Victoria ought to be attended by far-reaching results.

THE SCOTS CHURCH, MELBOURNE.

Rev. A. Marshall, the new minister of this church in Collins-street, recently preached his first sermon to a large and attentive congregation. He appears to be the right man in the right place, and though not so eloquent or cultivated as Dr. Cameron Lees, he seems quite as capable of pouring oil on the troubled waters. He intends to preach the Gospel of Christ, and to hold by its primal principles.

THE CENTENNIAL EXHIBITION, which will be opened in August, is already exciting much interest in the Australian colonies. All of them, and many of the European countries, are to be represented at this great world fair. Visitors from all lands are to visit us, amongst others, Mr. Henry Varley, during the Exhibition season. Pure-minded people, who have a healthy dislike to both the art and the literature of the dung-heap, are feeling, however, somewhat uncomfortable at the knowledge that we are to have a large display of modern French pictures.

A TENDENCY TO CONGREGATIONALISM

is a marked feature of the Anglican Church of Victoria. Bishop Goe, the head of the Victorian Church of England, has recently made some appointments in the diocese which displeased the congregations to which the ministers were appointed. Thereupon arose an angry discussion in the columns of our leading journals as to whether the congregation should not have the right of choosing its own pastor. The Bishop is acknowledged to have the legal right to interfere in these appointments, but he must be chary in using his power, or he will lose his influence in the colony.

CHINESE IN AUSTRALIA.

The question of how to keep Chinese workmen out of Australia has been a favourite one with our political agitators for some time past. These have imagined that a large poll-tax on Chinese workmen coming to Australia would be the best means of excluding them. China, however, feeling herself degraded by such a movement, has appealed to the British Government and the problem has become an international one. The Australians are anxious that a treaty should be concluded between England and China, the chief article of which should be that the Chinese should be rigidly excluded from the Australian colonies. "The Chinese are not desirable colonists," say the Australians, "the 'Chinese quarter of any Australian city is usually notorious.'" The Chinese, too, work for lower wages than Europeans, and various trades are said to have felt the pressure of Chinese competition. The question must be looked at and settled from a Christian, as well as an economic standpoint.

MR. W. J. ORSMAN, Costers' Hall, Hoxton, N., asks for the earnest prayers of our readers on behalf of the Midsummer early services on Sunday next, for young people. Hampers of flowers will be very acceptable.

AN INQUIRY.—DEAR SIR,—Can any of your readers recommend some able treatise against the doctrine of "the larger hope," as expounded in "Salvator Mundi," by Samuel Cox?

Yours faithfully, SYDNEY CROSS.
17, Vauxhall Bridge-road.

MR. DENHAM SMITH.—We are informed that Mr. Denham Smith's condition is one of gradual improvement. His strength was so far increased as to permit of his moving from his bed to a chair, and it is hoped that as the weather gets warmer his progress will be still more marked.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.—PRAISE for blessing accompanying evangelistic labours at Great Chesterford and neighbourhood and for prayer for continued work there and in villages around.——PRAYER for Miss Skinner's work among the soldiers in Guernsey, and also her rescue work in that island.

For the Young.

At one of the meetings of the Missionary Conference in Exeter Hall last week, a very interesting sketch was given by Dr. G. E. Post, of Syria, of the scene at a Christmas tree in connection with the German Hospital of the Knights of St. John, in Beyrout. Describing some of those present he said :—

The first one we notice in the gathering is a Jewish boy. We seldom get Jews into the hospital. They are so bent on external observances that they know little of the essence of religion. They are afraid that if they attend the hospital they may be defiled by coming in contact with flesh that has not been killed according to their law. But this little boy is very ill. He has not yet been initiated into the secrets of their religion, and they think he cannot get any harm. So he is going to hear about Jesus Christ for the first time in his life.

Behind him is an old man of venerable presence, with a long white beard, a turban, a girdle about his loins, and a loose flowing robe. Who is he? He is a lineal descendant of the great Saladin, whose ancestor drove the ancestor of your British kings from these Syrian shores. He knows it, and he is proud of it. They remember how they gained the victory when we marshalled against them all our military prowess—how they defeated us, and drove us from their shores. And we deserved to be driven, because we carried the Cross of Christ behind the sword. Here he is to-day, a Mohammedan, in the hospital. A month ago he would have driven me away, and called me a Christian dog. Now as he comes in he seizes my hand, covers it with kisses, and bows himself at my feet. What led him to do that? That "Christian dog" gave him his eyes. He came to the hospital blind, and now he sees. And here he sits at the feet of Jesus, his eyes open, his ears open, ready to listen to the message of the Gospel.

By his side is a woman with a long white veil over her face, and wearing a blue dress. She is a Druse woman. Look at her bandaged arms. She was sitting in her house in the mountains. In these houses there is often no chimney, and no window; the smoke goes out at the door. Some earth and stones fell through the roof of her house and she was thrown into the fire, so that her hands were burnt to a crisp. She came down to the hospital, and we had to amputate both hands. Poor woman, that is not the worst. Her husband has divorced her. The Druse husband has only to say to his wife "Go home," and, without any process of law, she has to leave him. But she has come down here with her poor babe; and we have been kind to her. The sisters have lulled her baby to sleep. They have read the Bible to her, and her heart has been touched. Now she sits in front of the Christmas-tree, which is the emblem of the love of Christ, and she is going to hear his blessed Gospel.

On one side is a man with a long beard and a green turban. He is a descendant of Mohammed. Where do you suppose he came from? From Hebron. He is the guardian of the sacred tomb of Machpelah. He has charge of the bones of Abraham and Isaac and Jacob; of Sarah, Rebecca, and Leah. He is a very bigoted Mohammedan, and would not allow you to enter the sacred precincts of the tomb—would not even allow you to look through the bars and see the place where those blessed ashes repose. No stranger has ever been permitted to enter that sacred place. The very boys of Hebron would stone you if you attempted to do so. This man, too, was blind. He came here, and the "Christian dog" he would have spat upon gave him back his eyesight. Now, in return, he will give his heart and his attention while the Gospel is being preached to him.

Away at one side of the room is a man clothed in a long blue robe, and wearing a peculiar hat on his head. He wears a turban of a peculiar kind, and has a long black veil hanging down his back. He is an Armenian priest. We talk about the Apostolic Church. This man puts his Church before the Apostolic Church. He says they got their title direct from Jesus Christ. Their king sent a messenger to Christ, and received a letter in reply, setting forth the principles of the Christian religion. He laughs to scorn all our pretensions to antiquity; he belongs to the true ancient Church of Christ. But here he is, and he will hear of the evangelical Church which Christ founded in deed and truth.

On the right hand is a Bedouin, from Palmyra. He had a blood-feud with some comrades, and they shot him in the side. The native doctor very rightly washed and kept the wound open, but very unskilfully he rolled up a piece of rag, and put it into the wound, without taking measures to prevent it from slipping in. It did slip in, and next day the doctor put in another piece. That slipped in too, and he kept putting them in day by day, until there was a mass of rag in the man's side as big as my fist. The man began to cough and to grow thin, and was like to die. They had heard of the great hospital at Beyrout, and of somebody there who dared to perform operations. So they brought the man all the way from Palmyra—four days to Damascus, and then three days to Beyrout. They brought him on a camel to Damascus, and on a mule from there to Beyrout. I laid open his side, saw the great ghastly wound, and took out the mass of accumulated rag. He got well, and the people looked upon it as a miracle. It was not a miracle of my working, but a miracle of science, and that is a miracle of Christianity. This Bedouin had never heard the Gospel before—he had hardly heard of Christ, except in terms of reproach. Now he sits down to hear all about it.

There is a poor woman lying on a bed brought in on a stretcher. She had a brute of a husband, who struck her on the chest, and shattered the bone. She was brought to the hospital, and I examined her; and for the first and only time in my life I looked inside a woman's heart. [This remark caused much laughter, though it could have been no laughing matter to the poor woman.] I laid four fingers of my hand over the pericardium, and felt every motion and mechanism of the heart-beat—a thing I never saw done before, and never heard of. She, too, got well. That was a miracle, not of mine, but of science, and therefore of Christianity, which underlies science. And now that woman is here to listen to the Gospel.

These are some of the patients; shall I describe them all? ("Yes! yes!") Time will not permit of that; but I may tell you that there were people there from the Great Sahara, from the head waters of the Euphrates, from the Tigris, from every part of Lebanon, from Palestine, from Cyprus, from Asia Minor — all gathered into the hospital, and receiving of the gifts of healing.

They gather around the Christmas-tree. Each of the adults gets a book, and the children get oranges. Gingerbread and other good things are not forgotten. There was the little orphan choir from the Deaconesses' School, who come on Sunday to help in the services. They sang to us about Jesus, and then the German pastor offered prayer. The English pastor makes some remarks to the audience, and then the Doctor, who has stood by their bedside; who has held the terrible knife over them and performed the operations (thanks be to God, they were under the influence of an anæsthetic); who has watched them through the crisis of the fever, and smiled on them as he saw returning health and strength—he stands before them to preach the Gospel of Christ. What shall he say? Shall he let down the Gospel of Christ? I would not stoop to let down the Gospel of Christ to anybody. The Lord Jesus Christ made his Gospel so simple and so elementary that every man can understand and accept it. If we present it as He gave it, it will come home to the heart. I am not afraid to stand up before the Mohammedan descendant of Saladin, and preach Christ crucified. In no circumstances would a missionary worthy of the name be induced to say anything that would wound the susceptibilities or grieve the heart of one of his heathen or Mohammedan auditors. It is not necessary. Without reference to Mohammed we can preach Jesus Christ, and know that his Gospel will be the power of God unto salvation.

LITTLE EMIGRANTS IN DANGER.

FROM A LETTER TO MISS MACPHERSON.

From Liverpool we had a quick run to Moville, and a pleasant time waiting for the mail. We were told to expect a blow off the Irish Sea, and next morning few wanted breakfast, for, as our ship was lightly laden, we rolled uncomfortably, which continued for six days. Some of the braver ones went on deck; but, as the sea was washing over, twenty of them were drenched.

On the sixth day we had special prayer for a lull in the storm, and it soon came calm and bright. But while we listened to the hum of voices, with the dear little ones playing around on the deck, and the music of the foreigners, suddenly, crack! crack! the whole ship quivered —every face paled—all crying, "What is the matter?" The confusion was terrible, until the captain explained, "The propeller is gone"; and we felt we were in the hands of God to do with us as He chose.

We had some prayer, and then gathered our children, and reassured them by telling of God's love and ability to keep us in "the hollow of his hand." From the time our screw was lost, we basked in the sunshine and glorious calm, rolling on the bosom of the broad Atlantic, as on a sea of glass.

During the next two days we floated five miles south, and got out of the course of our own company's boats. The captain seldom left the bridge. On the eighth day there was great excitement on seeing the smoke of a steamer twenty miles distant. We watched her all day, and at six o'clock the captain's boat was lowered, and he went off to negociate; but as we were victualled and not in danger, she had no power to take us in tow. Our disappointment was great to see the vessel steam off, leaving us to the mercy of wind and wave.

Our water supply began to fall low, and we expected to be put on "allowance" soon. On the eleventh day Mr. Merry had a good gathering on deck. At ten p.m. the moon was brilliant, and, every speck on the broad waters showing so plainly, we were sure that a steamer, whose smoke in the morning showed on the horizon, was coming nearer. All the 1300 passengers came on deck, and cheers and prayers arose as our captain once more set off to make arrangements to be towed in anywhere. Prayer was answered, and we were landed at Halifax the following morning.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sunday, June 24, Acts xix. 1—12; Monday, June 25, Acts xix. 13—27; Tuesday, June 26, Acts xxi. 28—41; Wednesday, June 27, Acts xx. 1—12; Thursday, June 28, Acts xx. 13—24; Friday, June 29, Acts xx. 25—38; Saturday, June 30, Acts xxi. 1—14.

A CALL TO PRAYER.—"The Union in Prayer for the Church of Christ and the State of the Country" has now a large list of members from all sections of the Church of Christ. Those who feel the need of prayer in reference to the increasing godlessness of the people, and lack of faith and devotedness on the part of a large proportion of professing Christians, are invited to join this Union, and aid in extending its objects. Particulars may be had on application to the Hon. Secretary, 70, Portland-place, W.

ABRAHAM: GOD'S FRIEND.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

XVI.—Pleading for Sodom.—Gen. xviii.

As the day wore on Abraham's mysterious guests went off across the hills towards Sodom, and Abraham went with them to bring them on their way. But all three did not reach the guilty city, over which the thunder-clouds had already commenced to gather. That evening two angels entered it alone. And where was their companion? Ah! He had stayed behind to talk still further with his friend. Tradition still points out the spot on the hills at the head of a long steep ravine leading down to the sullen waters of the Dead Sea where the Lord tarried behind to tell Abraham all that was in his heart.

Why did not the Lord accompany his angels down to Sodom? Was it because vengeance is his strange work, in which he can take no pleasure? It surely befits the dignity of the sovereign Judge to delegate to other hands the execution of his decrees. "The Son of Man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them that do iniquity."

But there was a deeper reason still. Abraham was the friend of God, and friendship constitutes a claim to be entrusted with secrets hidden from all beside. "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him." "I," said the Master to his disciples, "have not called you servants, for the servant knoweth not what his Lord doeth; but I have called you friends, for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you." If we live near God, we shall have many things revealed to us which are hidden from the wise and prudent. The Septuagint version has well brought out the spirit of the Divine reverie, when it puts the question thus: "Shall I hide from Abraham, my friend, the thing which I do?" The Lord does nothing which He does not first reveal to his holy servants and prophets.

But the words which follow point to a yet further reason for the full disclosures that were made: "For I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment." Was there a fear lest Abraham and his children might doubt the justice and judgment of God if the righteous were summarily cut off with the wicked; and if the cities of the plain were destroyed without a revelation of their sin on the one hand, and the display of the Divine mercy on the other? Certainly it has placed the Divine character in an altogether different light, in that we have been permitted, in such a case as this, to understand some of the motives which have actuated God in his goodness or severity. And though his judgments must ever be a great deep, yet such a wondrous colloquy as this shines above them, as the rainbow trembles in its matchless beauty over the steamy depths of Niagara's plunge.

I. The Burden of the Divine Announcement.—"The cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great." What a marvellous expression is this! There, far down the valley, bathed in the radiance of the westering sun, lay the guilty cities, still and peaceful. No sound travelled to the patriarch's ear, not even the roar which aëronauts detect in the dizzy heights of air, through which they travel on their adventurous way, passing mighty cities far beneath, which betray their existence by their voice. Quiet though Sodom seemed in the far distance, and in the hush of the closing day, yet to God there was a cry. The cry of the earth compelled to carry such a scar. The cry of inanimate creation, groaning and travailing in pain. The cry of the oppressed, the down trodden, the victims of human violence and lust. The cry of the maiden, the wife, and the child. These were the cries which had entered into the ears of the Lord God of Sabaoth. And each sin has a cry. "The voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto Me." And it will go on crying, unless it is silenced by the yet greater voice of the blood of Christ, "which speaketh better things." And, if each sin has a cry, what must not be the volume of sound for a life, and for a city? Must not God still have to say of our great cities, one by one, "Its cry is great, and its sin is very grievous."

"I will go down now, and see." God always investigates narrowly the true conditions of the case, before He awards or executes his sentences. He comes seeking fruit for three years, before He gives the order for the cutting down of the tree that cumbered the vineyard soil. He walks our streets day and night. He patrols our thoroughfares, marking everything, missing nothing. He glides unasked into our most sacred privacy, for all things are naked and open to Him with whom we have to do. He is prepared, nay, eager to give us the benefit of any excuse. But flagrant sin, like that which broke out in Sodom that very night, is enough to settle for ever the fate of a Godless community when standing at the bar of Him who is Judge and Witness both.

"And if not, I will know." There was something very ominous in all these words, which Abraham clearly understood to indicate the approaching destruction of the place; for in his prayer he again and again alludes to the imminence of its doom: "Wilt Thou, also, destroy the righteous with the wicked?" But, surely, the warning is needed in our own days, that refuse to consider the righteous judgments of God against sin, which are as certain as the stability of his throne.

II. The Impression which this Announcement made on Abraham's Mind.—So soon as the angels had gone on, leaving Abraham alone with the Lord, he was thoroughly aroused by the revelation which had broken upon him, and his mind was filled with a tumult of emotion. He hardly dared expostulate with God: What was he, but "dust and ashes?" And yet he was impelled to make some attempt to avert the doom that threatened the cities of the plain.

The motives that prompted him were twofold: (1) There was a natural anxiety about his kinsman Lot.—Twenty years had passed since Lot had left him, but he had never ceased to follow him with the most tender affection. He could not forget that he was the son of his dead brother Haran, or that he had been his ward, or that he had braved the hardships of the desert in his company. All this had been present to his mind, when, a few years before, he had made a heroic effort to extricate him from the hands of Chedorlaomer. And now the strong impulse of natural affection stirred him to make one strenuous effort to save Sodom, lest his nephew might be overwhelmed in its overthrow. Real religion tends not to destroy, but to fulfil all the impulses of true natural love.

(2) There was also a fear lest the total destruction of the cities of the plain might prejudice the character of God in the minds of the neighbouring peoples.—Abraham did not deny that the fate which was about to overtake them was deserved by many of the people of that enervating and luxuriant valley; but he could not bring his mind to suppose that the whole of the population was equally debased; and he feared that if all were summarily swept away, the surrounding nations would have a handle of reproach against the justice of his God, and would accuse Him of unrighteousness, inasmuch as He destroyed the righteous with the wicked.

The character of God has ever been dear to his true-hearted servants of every age. Moses was prepared to forego the honour of being the ancestor of the chosen people, rather than that the nations which had heard of the Divine fame should be able to say that God was not able to bring them into the Land of Promise. And when the men of Israel fled before Ai, Joshua and the elders appear to have thought less of the danger of an immediate rising to cut them off than of what God would do for his great name. Oh, for more of this chivalrous devotion to the interests and glory of our God. Would that we were so absorbed in all that touches the honour of the Divine name amongst men that this might be the supreme element in our anxiety, as we view the drift of human opinion concerning the enactments of Divine providence.

This passion for the glory of God burnt with a clear strong flame in Abraham's heart; and it was out of this that there arose his wondrous intercession. And when we become as closely identified with the interests of God, as he was, we shall come to feel as he did; and shall be eager that the Divine character should be vindicated amongst the children of men; content, if need be, to lie dying in the ditch, so long as we can hear the shouts of triumph amid which our King rides over us to victory.

III. The Elements in Abraham's Intercession.—It was lonely prayer.—He waited till on all that wide plateau, and beneath those arching skies, there was no living man to overhear this marvellous outpouring of a soul overcharged, as are the pools, when, after the rains of spring, they overflow their banks. "He stood before the Lord." It is fatal to all the intensest, strongest devotion to pray always in the presence of another, even the dearest. Every saint must have a closet, of which he can shut the door, and in which he can pray to the Father, which is in secret. The oratory may be the mountains, or the woods, or the sounding shore, but it must be somewhere. Pitiable is the man who cannot, miserable the man who dare not meet God face to face, and talk with Him of his ways, and plead for his fellows.

> For what are men better than sheep or goats,
> That nourish a blind life within the brain,
> If, knowing God, they lift not hands of prayer,
> Both for themselves, and those who call them friend.

It was prolonged prayer.—"Abraham stood yet before the Lord." The story takes but a few moments to read, but the scene may have lasted for the space of hours. We cannot climb the more elevated pinnacles of prayer in a hasty rush. They demand patience, toil, prolonged endeavour, ere the lower slopes can be left, and the brooding cloud-line passed, and the aspiring soul can reach that cleft in the mountain side, where Moses stood beneath the shadow of God's hand. Of course, our God is ever on the alert to hear and answer those prayers which, like minute-guns, we fire through the live-long day; but we cannot maintain this posture of ejaculatory prayer unless we cultivate the prolonged occasions. How much we miss because we do not wait before God. We do not give the sun a chance to thaw us. We do not linger long enough upon the quay to see the vessels return freighted with the answers we had been praying for. If only we had remained longer at the palace door, we might have seen the King come out with a benediction in his face and a largess in his hands.

It was very humble prayer.—"Behold, now, I have taken upon me to speak unto the Lord, which am but dust and ashes." "Oh let not the Lord be angry, and I will speak." "Behold, I have taken upon me to speak unto the Lord." "Oh let not the Lord be angry, and I will speak yet but this once." The nearer we get to God, the more conscious are we of our own unworthiness; just as the higher a bird flies in mid-heaven, the deeper will be the reflection of its snowy pinions in the placid mere beneath. Let the glow-worm vie with the meridian sun; let the dewdrop boast itself against the fulness of the ocean bed; let the babe vaunt its knowledge with the intelligence of a seraph, before the man who lives in touch with God shall think of taking any other position than that of lowliest humiliation and prostration in his presence. Before Him angels veil their faces, and the heavens are not clean. And is it not remarkable that our sense of weakness is one of our strongest claims and arguments with God? "He forgetteth not the cry of the humble." "To that man will I look who trembleth."

This prayer was based on a belief that God possessed the same moral intuitions as himself.—"Wilt Thou destroy the righteous with the wicked, that be far from Thee that the righteous should be as the wicked? Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" There is an infinite interest in this. It is as if the patriarch looked up from the clear depths of his own integrity into the azure heights of the Divine Being, and saw there enthroned a moral nature, at least as upright, fair, and true as his own; and to that he made his appeal, sure of a favourable response.

It was as if he said: "Almighty God, I could not think it right to destroy the righteous with the wicked; and I am sure that any number of righteous men would shrink from doing so. And if this is binding on man, of course it must be much more binding on Thee, because Thou art the Judge of all the earth," And God was not angry; indeed He assented to Abraham's plea. And we may not go further, and say, that though God may act in ways above our reason, yet He will not contradict those instincts of the moral sense which He has placed within our hearts. And if at times He seem to do so, it is because we have falsely conceived of his dealings, and put an erroneous interpretation upon them.

It was a cherished motto of bygone days that the king could do no wrong. Alas! it was a vain dream. But what was untrue of the Stuarts is literally true of the Eternal God. He cannot outrage the moral nature in man, which is made in the likeness of his own. Let us possess our souls in patience, sure that any appearances to the contrary are the mists generated by our own evil natures or limited intelligence, and will be swept away from obscuring that everlasting righteousness which is stedfast and changeless as the great mountains.

The maiden, whose lover has been absent from her for long years without sending her a word or a line to explain his strange behaviour and his long silence, is not disturbed with the imputations which her friends make upon his character. She knows that she can trust him. She is sure that he will vindicate himself to her and them. She is content to be still. So, amid the aspersions upon the character of God, we may be content to wait in sure confidence that all God's actions will be found to tally with the straightest plumb-line of the exactest rectitude.

This prayer was persevering.—Six times Abraham returned to the charge, and as each petition was granted, his faith and courage grew; and, finding he had struck a right vein, he worked it again, and yet again. It looks at first sight, as if he forced God back from point to point, and wrung his petitions from an unwilling hand. But this is a mistake. In point of fact, God was drawing him on; and if he had dared to ask at first, what he asked at the last, he would have got more than all that he asked or thought at the very commencement of his intercession. This was the time of his education. He did not learn the vast extent of God's righteousness and mercy all at once; he climbed the dizzy heights step by step, and, as he gained each step, he was inspired to dare another. What a pity that he stopped at ten! There is no knowing what he might have reached, had he gone on. As it was, the Almighty was obliged, by the demands of his own nature, to exceed the limits placed by Abraham, in bringing out of Sodom the only people that, by the fullest stretch of imagination, could be accounted righteous.

It is so that God educates us still. In ever-widening circles, He tempts his new-fledged eagles to try the sustaining elasticity of the air. He forces us to ask one thing, and then another, and yet another. And when we have asked our utmost, there are always unexplored remainders behind, and He does exceeding abundantly above all. There were not ten righteous men in Sodom, but Lot and his wife, and his two daughters, were saved, though three of them were deeply infected with the moral contagion of the place. And God's righteousness was clearly established and vindicated in the eyes of the surrounding peoples.

In closing, we remark one of the great principles in the Divine government of the world.—A whole city had been spared, if ten righteous men had been found within its walls. Ungodly men little realise how much they owe to the presence of the children of God in their midst. Long ere now had the floods of deserved wrath swept them all away, but they have been restrained, because God could not do anything while the righteous were found amongst them. The impatient servants have often asked if they should not gather out the tares. But the answer of the righteous Lord has ever been: "Nay, lest while ye gather up the tares, ye root up the wheat also with them." Ah, how little the world realises the debt it owes to its saints, its salt and light! We cannot but yearn over it, as it rolls on its way towards its sad dark doom. Let us plead for it from the heights above Mamre. And may we and our beloved ones be led out from it into safety, ere the last plagues break full upon it in inevitable destruction.

RISEN WITH CHRIST.

"But Lazarus was one of them that sat at the table with Him"—John xii. 2.
"And hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus."—Eph. ii. 6.
"To sit with Me in my throne."—Rev. iii. 21.

Raised from the dead,
  Seated with Christ,
O joyful meal!
  O blessèd tryst!
Lazarus, so late
  In death's dark cave,
Now with his Lord,
  New life who gave.

Raised from the dead,
  Seated with Thee,
O risen life!
  O mystery!
We, who were dead,
  Quickened to show
To richest grace
  How much we owe.

Raised from the dead,
  Throned at his side,
Behold the Church,
  The Lamb's own Bride.
Seated with Him,
  O wondrous joy!
Banquet of love
  That ne'er can cloy.

Wake! quickened hearts,
  Arise and sing!
Go forth to meet
  Your risen King.
Soon shall He meet
  You on your way;
Soon shall you dwell
  With Him for aye.

O risen world
  For risen men!
Better than Eden
  Raised again.
Tarry not, Lord,
  O quickly come.
Haste that blest hour,
  And take us home.

"ONE TUN" RAGGED SCHOOLS.

For thirty-one years this Mission, of which the late Earl of Shaftesbury and Sir Robert Carden were for many years warm friends, has been carried on by Mrs. Barker Harrison. The Ragged Schools for boys, girls, and infants, and the Working-men's and Lads' Institutes, are in Old Pye-street, near Victoria-street, in the very midst of the worst slums of Westminster—slums hardly equalled for their squalor and misery in any other part of the great Metropolis. Since our aged sister devoted her life to this labour of love, a vast improvement has taken place in the homes and lives of the people in the district, and it is evident that a most beneficent Christian work is being accomplished by the Mission, which should be more widely known and supported.

At the annual meeting, held last week—when addresses were delivered by the Baroness and Mr. Burdett-Coutts, Rev. Dr. Sinclair Paterson, Messrs. A. J. Woodhouse, John Kirk (Ragged-school Union), Mr. Walter Hill (Lord's Day Rest Association), Mr. Robert Rae (National Temperance League), and others—it was repeatedly mentioned that Mrs. Barker Harrison is constantly much exercised because of the lack of funds to prosecute the work, and contributions were invited, to be sent to her at 32, Eaton-terrace, Eaton-square, London, S.W.

RESCUE WORK IN DUBLIN.—The Mission Home, 3, Cowley-place, North Circular-road, Dublin, was established in 1874, being one outcome of the visit of Mr. Moody. Many young women have been rescued from a life of sin, and through the ministrations of the Home found peace with God. Owing to the death of some valued helpers, the institution finds itself embarrassed at the present time, and may have to close its doors. Communications should be addressed to the Matron at the Home.

Home Work for Foreign Missions.

BY REV. A. T. PIERSON, D.D.,

AUTHOR OF "THE CRISIS OF MISSIONS."

A PAPER READ at the MISSIONARY CONFERENCE ON MONDAY LAST.

WHAT the source is to the supply, the motor to the machine, the home church is to the foreign field. The vigour of the heart's beat determines the pulse beat at the extremities. It is of first importance that, at home, work for missions abroad be continuous and constant, healthy in tone and spiritual in type.

How shall the churches be raised to the degree of consecration required for the evangelisation of the world? Sheldon Dibble used to say that two conversions are needful: first, to Christ as a Saviour from sin; and then to missions as the corrective antidote to selfishness. A century ago William Carey felt the thrust of the keen lance of Sydney Smith, who, by his unsanctified will, proposed to rout out that nest of consecrated cobblers; and Carey had to fight for fifteen years the apathy even of his own Baptist brethren. Dr. Judson's hand was nearly shaken off, and his hair shorn off, by those who, in the crisis which can be met only by self-sacrifice would, to save themselves, willingly let missions die.

Foremost among the means by which deeper devotion to the work of evangelisation is to be secured, I would put the education of the Church in the very principle of missions. Where the hearty acceptance of this is lacking, the impulse and impetus of missions are wanting. The Church of God exists not only as a rallying, but as a radiating centre. It is indeed a home, but also a school; a place for worship, but not less for work. For a society of disciples to be engrossed even in self-culture is fatal to service, and even to true sanctity. The church is no gymnasium where exercise is the law and self-development the end. The field is the world, and the sower and reaper, while at work for a harvest, each gets the very exercise, in his exertion, which is needful to growth.

So important and so fundamental is this principle of missions, that any church which denies or practically neglects it, deserves to be served with a writ of quo warranto. This law of church life must be constantly kept before believers, enforced and emphasised by repetition, that upon every believer is laid the duty of personal labour for the lost. This conviction must be beaten in and burned in, till it becomes a part of the very consciousness of every disciple, until the goal is seen to be not salvation or even sanctification, but service to God and man in saving souls.

THE PASTOR'S FUNCTION.

In the education of a church in foreign missions, nothing is more essential than that the missionary spirit burn in the pastor. A stream rises no higher than its source; and ordinarily, the measure of the pastor's interest in the world-field determines the level of his people's earnestness and enthusiasm. He ought to be a student of missions, an authority on missions, and a leader in missions. He is not the driver of a herd, but the leader of a flock: he must therefore go before. His contagious enthusiasm and example must inspire in others the spirit of consecration. The personal character of the man gives tone to his preaching, and is perhaps itself the best kind of preaching. That must be a frozen church which a man, alive with intelligence and zeal for the work of God, could not warm into life and action, under such a pastor as the late W. F. Stevenson.

The rudiments of a true education being laid we must go on unto perfection: and among all the means of this higher training, we put, first and foremost, a knowledge of the facts of missionary history and biography. Information is a necessary part of all University training in missions; not a partial, superficial impression, but information—a knowledge of missions complete enough and thorough enough to crystallise into symmetrical form in the mind and heart. Facts are the fingers of God. To a devout student of his will they become signs of the times and signals of his march through the ages. Like the gnomon of a sun-dial, even their shadow may mark the hour in God's day. Prince Albert used to say to the young men of Britain: "Find out God's plan in your generation and never cross it, but fall into your own place in it." There is a pillar of Providence, the perpetual pillar of cloud and fire whereby we may be led. That pillar is built up of facts, oftentimes mysterious and dark, like a cloud, yet hiding the presence and power of Him who dwelt in the cloud and made it luminous.

To a true disciple missions need no argument, since the Church has what the Iron Duke called her "marching orders." But duty becomes delight, and responsibility is transfigured into privilege, when it is clearly seen that to move with the missionary band is to take up march with God. The apathy and lethargy prevailing among believers upon the subject of missions is to me unaccountable in view of the multitude and magnificence of the facts which demonstrate that in the movements of modern missions, more than in any other of the ages, there has been a demonstration and a revelation of God.

GOD'S HAND UNBARRING DOORS.

We are observing the centenary of modern missions. But the most amazing results of this century have been wrought during its last third, or the lifetime of the generation now living. This world's conference is simply the Church coming together at the Antioch of the Occident to hear those whom the Holy Ghost has chosen and the Church has separated unto this work, rehearse all that God has done with them, and how He has opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles. Who dares to say, in the light of modern missions, that the days of supernatural working are passed? So far as in primitive days the disciples have gone forth and preached everywhere, it has still been true that the Lord has wrought with and confirmed the word with signs following—signs unmistakable and unmistakably supernatural. Doors have been opened, within fifty years, that no human power could have unbarred. The mighty moving of God can be traced back through the centuries, long since giving Protestant England a foothold in the very critical centre, the pivotal centre of Oriental empires and religions. The necessity of protecting her Indian possessions, of keeping open the line of communication between London and Calcutta, determined the attitude of every nation along the water highway. Then from beyond the Pacific another mighty, puissant people, the offspring of Protestant Britain, moved forward thirty years ago to turn the extreme eastern wing of the enemy while Britain was piercing and holding the centre. Commodore Perry knocked at the sea gates of Japan, and in the name of a Christian republic demanded entrance. Rusty bolts that had not been drawn for more than two centuries were flung back and the two-leaved doors of brass were opened to the commerce of the world. Rapid has been the progress of the march of God. Japan unsealed her gates in 1854. From that time not a year has passed without some mighty onward movement or stupendous development. In 1856, the great breach was made in the Chinese wall, and by the Treaty of Tientsin one-third of the human race were made accessible to Christian nations, and, as Dr. Gracey says, that wide door was opened, not by the vermilion pencils of the Emperor, but by the decree of the Eternal. The next year the mutiny in India changed the whole attitude of the East India Company towards missions, and prepared the way for the surrender of its charter to the Crown of England. The year 1856, which had been signalised by the Treaty of Tientsin, also saw signed and sealed the Hatti Sherif in Turkey, by which the Sultan, at least in form, announced the era of toleration.

THE LAND OF LIVINGSTONE.

Let us leap the chasm of twenty years and note the progress of events on the dark Continent. In 1871 Stanley pierced the jungle to find the heroic Livingstone; in 1873 he died near Lake Bangweolo; in 1874 Stanley undertook to explore equatorial Africa; in 1877, after a thousand days, he emerged at the mouth of the Congo. At once England took up the work of following the steps of the explorer with the march of the missionary, and now, ten years later, the missions of the great lakes in the East and those of the Congo basin at the west are stretching hands to link east and west together; give us ten years more and Krapf's prophecy will be fulfilled: a chain of missions will cross the Continent. In 1884 fifteen nations, called together by King Leopold and presided over by Bismarck, met in Berlin to lay the basis of the Congo Free State; and in that council not only Protestant, but Greek, Papal, and Moslem powers joined!

Such are some of the great providential signs of a supernatural presence and power. What shall be said of the gracious transformations that have displaced cannibal ovens by a thousand Christian churches in Polynesia; that reared Metlakahtla in British Columbia; that made Madagascar the crown of the London Missionary Society; that turned Sierra Leone into a Christian state; that wrought mightily with Hans Egede in Greenland, Morrison and Burns in China, Perkins and Grant in Persia, Carey and Wilson and Duff in India, and McAll in Paris!

MISSIONARY FUEL.

If disciples are indifferent to missions it is because they are ignorant of missions. A fire needs first of all to be kindled, then to be fed, then to have vent. The only power that can kindle the flame of missionary zeal is the Holy Spirit. The coal must be a live coal from God's altar. But, having that coal and a breath from above, all that is needed is fuel to feed the flame, and that fuel is supplied by a knowledge of facts. Too much care cannot be taken to supply these facts in an attractive, available form, at the lowest cost. The women's boards and societies have done no greater service than in providing and distributing a cheap literature of missions. The printed facts that are to do this work of education must be put in the briefest and most pointed form. This is an age of steam and telegraph. While Methusaleh turned round we have gone around the globe. Men need now what they can catch at a glance. Ponderous volumes may do for ponderous men, who have leisure for prolonged study and research, but the bulk of people must get their knowledge of facts in a condensed form. Our bulletins must be bullet-ins. Some of us must skim the great pan and serve up the cream in a little pitcher, rich and sweet; we must boil down the great roots and give others the sweet liquorice in the stick so that a bite will give a taste and make the mouth water for more. Students of missions will read with avidity the Ely Volume, and the Middle Kingdom, and kindred books that are the authorities on missions; but students of missions are not made by this process. We must feed first with milk and not with strong meat—and by the spoonful, until both capacity and appetite are formed.

The value of simultaneous meetings, missionary conventions, and other special services consists perhaps mainly in the wide, rapid, and attractive and effective dissemination of intelligence. Truths and facts are brought before the mind with all the help of the enthusiasm of a public assembly. The eye helps the ear in producing and fastening impression. The hearer confronts the living men or women who have come from the field, perhaps with the very idols of the heathen in their hands, or the relics of their superstitious practices; sometimes the native convert, or preacher, himself pleads for his benighted fellow countrymen. And so the most apathetic soul, in whom grace has kindled the fire of love, finds the fire burning, spreading, consuming selfishness, and demanding a proper vent in Christian effort! This is the way that missionaries are made.

THE FIRE KINDLED ON MOUNT HERMON.

In 1885, there assembled at Mr. Moody's boys' school at Mount Hermon, in Massachusetts, about three hundred students from the various colleges for a few weeks of study of the Word of God. A few who had in view the foreign field greatly desired a missionary meeting, and all the students were invited. There was not even a missionary map to assist in impressing the facts; the speaker drew on the blackboard a rude outline of the continents, and then proceeded to trace the great facts of missions, and so deep was the interest awakened, that meeting after meeting followed; from about a score, the number who chose the mission field rose to a hundred; then certain chosen men resolved to go and visit the colleges and carry the sacred fire; they went, met their fellow-students, and brought out the leading facts of missions; and to-day, in America and in England, a band of probably not less than 3000 young men and women stand ready to go to the foreign field if the door shall open before them. "If disciples do not wish to flame with missionary zeal, they must avoid contact and converse with the facts and the heroic souls who are the living factors of missions. It is dangerous business to trifle with combustible material, unless you are quite sure there is not even a spark of life or love in your soul!"

WOMAN AND MISSIONS.

Among the means of education we mention last what in the order of time and of importance belongs first: the influence of Christian women in the home life. If God has shut out the ordinary woman from much participation in public life, and shut her in the home, it is because her sphere makes up in quality what it lacks in quantity. Here are life's Arcana, veiled from the common eye; the home is the matrix of character. The faith of the grandmother Lois and mother Eunice still descends to Timothy. Anthusa and Monica still give the Church her golden-mouthed Johns and her giant Augustines. To one woman may be traced the rise of the seven kingdoms of the Saxon Heptarchy. At every stream there is a point where a human hand might turn its current, and at that point in human lives the wife and mother presides. The heathen rhetorician Libanius, exclaimed, "What women these Christians have!" And, if the secret things were brought to light, it might be found that many, beside Morrison and Burns and Lindley and Patteson, have owed their saintly character and missionary career to the sanctity of a mother. Even before birth, maternal character leaves its impress upon the unborn, and at the mother's breast and knee, the earliest lessons are learned in piety and prayer and personal consecration.

The nursery may be the garden where the precious germs are first nourished from which develop pillars of cedar and olive for the temple of God. The Earl of Shaftesbury learned of humble Maria Mills the first lessons in living which made his influence capable of being measured only by parallels of latitude and meridians of longitude, and its results only to be computed by the æons of eternity! My sisters in Christ, do not hesitate to break on your Master's feet your alabaster flask; though it may seem but as waste to some, the house shall be filled with the odour of your consecration, and you shall at least create in the home a mighty mould of character from which shall go forth men and women whose words and deeds shall shake the world!

Here, in the home, if prevailing selfishness and extravagant self-indulgence are to be corrected, must be taught first lessons in giving, the Divine doctrine of stewardship, and the responsibilities both of wealth and poverty. Munificent legacies cannot atone for parsimonious gifts. It is not God or his poor who need our gifts, so much as we ourselves need to give. Giving is the sovereign secret of serving, but also of getting and growing. To deny self and help others is God's antidote to that monstrous sin of selfishness which is the root of all others; and so it is more blessed to give than to receive. And if there ever was an altar that sanctified, magnified, glorified the gift, it is the altar of missions. Let the ethics, the economics, the æsthetics of giving be taught at the mother's knee, and we shall have a new generation of givers.

CONSECRATED WOMANHOOD.

Too much emphasis cannot be laid on placing at the centre of the family a consecrated woman. She is like Göthe's mythical lamp, which, set in the humblest hut of the fisherman, changed all within it to silver. She pours on the root of the cocoanut-tree the water which comes back, by and by, sweetened and enriched, in the milk of the cocoanut which falls from the top. A selfish, sordid woman, presiding in the home, perverts child life; in such a household there is a malign influence, which, like the mirrors in the temples of Smyrna, represents the fairest images distorted and deformed, and makes even piety seem repellent. The more I see of woman's influence on the whole structure of society the more I feel the stress of the Apostolic injunction that the believer should marry only in the Lord.

The responsibilities of wealth are to be discussed by another in a separate paper. But I must add, to complete my own thought, that, among other necessary reforms in our Church life, we must cease to depend upon the donations of the rich. It is alike harmful to them and to the Church. God never meant that with such wealth of Divine promises we should appeal to the rich, and especially the worldly wealthy, for money for the kingdom. Such appeals discount our faith, dishonour our Lord, and humiliate the Church, while they inflate the rich with self-righteous conceit and complacence as patrons of the cause of God. Let there be a Bible type of systematic and proportionate giving by every disciple, and the treasuries of the Church would overflow with voluntary gifts of disciples.

Above all other spiritual agencies affecting missions from the home side, we place earnest and habitual prayer. This is a supernatural gospel, and demands a supernatural power, for conversion is a supernatural work. Not even a knowledge of facts can make a missionary, or inspire a missionary spirit. The coal must be there, and the breath of God, before even the best fuel will take fire. A thermometer may be held in the direct line of the sun's rays and show but little rise in temperature, because the radiant heat is reflected from the bright, glassy, bulb like light from a mirror. Heat rays from the sun may pass through a lens of ice, and concentrated to a sufficient degree to ignite, at the focus, combustible material, and yet those rays may not melt the ice of which the lens is formed. It is only when knowledge is sanctified by prayer that it becomes a power.

THE MONTHLY CONCERT.

For one, I regard the increased—or rather, the revived—observance of the monthly concert as a necessity to true home work for missions. It is now comparatively a thing of the past. Once it was a regular observance of the first Monday of each month; then merged into the first Sunday evening; then the first mid-week service; and in many cases, divided between home and foreign missions, it lost its original special character, and has now only a name to live, and is practically dead. I know a church member who thought the monthly concert meant a musical entertainment. To allow so valuable a help to the culture of intelligent interest in missions to be dropped from our church economy, and become an archæological curiosity, is a fundamental mistake. It may be made both interesting and stimulating. I have found the most successful way of conducting it to be to divide the world field among the church membership, so that every man an woman willing to help may have a spe field from which to report from time to tim changing the fields once a year, in order t broaden both intelligence and interest. The have maps, and, best of all, maps made by th church members themselves. A man or woma who draws a map of any mission field wi never lose the image of that field from th mind's eye. I have had a full set of fine ma made for me without a penny's cost by mem bers of my own congregation.

The lack of earnest, believing, united pray for missions is both lamentable and fatal t success. Prayer has always marked and turne the crises of the kingdom. No sooner do de vout souls begin to unite in definite supplica tion than stupendous results begin to develop Fifty years ago the burden of prayer was fo the opening of doors, and one after another th iron gates opened as of their own accord. The the plea went up for larger gifts of money; an at a critical period, when the whole onwar march of missions was threatened, God gave spirit of liberality: in 1878 that annus mirabili some twenty persons gave about four million of dollars. Woman came to the front, an showed how, by gathering the mites system atically, the aggregate of gifts may grow steadil year by year, and rapidly. Then devout dis ciples were led to pray for more labourers, an especially for the consecration of our foremos youth; and now from the universities of Britai and America a host of three thousand youn men and women are knocking at the doors o the church, saying, "Here we are; send us; and even the church that has been praying fo this very result can scarce believe that the stand before the gate.

Brethren, we shall have learned little at thi Conference if we shall not have learned ne lessons of the power of prayer. Themistocle delayed the naval engagement at Salamis unt the land-breeze blew which swept his vesse toward the foe, and left every oarsman free t use the bow and the spear. How much waste o time and strength might be saved, if the Churc of God but waited for the breath of the Hol Spirit to provide the impulse and momentu which we vainly seek to supply by our ow energy and endeavour! When He breathe and blows upon us, how they who have toiled i rowing are left free to wield the weapons of th Lord's warfare, to exchange secular anxietie for spiritual successes!

Zoroaster bade his followers let the fires g out periodically upon their hearthstones, tha they might be compelled to rekindle them a the sacred altars of the sun. What mean th smouldering embers on our hearths and altars but that we have forgotten whence come th live coals, and the breath which alone ca fan them into an undying flame!

CAMBRIDGE.—The correspondent of Th English Churchman, writing on Tuesday of las week, says:—The past three weeks at Cambridg have been of great missionary interest. Thre Sundays ago the University sermon was preache by the Bishop of Calcutta, and in the evening th Bishop of Japan gave an address. On Saturda week Revs. F. E. Wigram and J. Barton gav missionary addresses. On Sunday week the Bisho of Minnesota preached the University sermon fro John iii. 9, "How can these things be?" whic dealt chiefly with Christian evidences, and answere many objections put forth by infidels and sceptic In the evening, in the Henry Martyn Hall, Bisho Whipple, of Minnesota, gave a vivid account o work among the Red Indians. The address mainl consisted of a series of remarkable anecdote illustrating the history and scope of the wor which has now been carried on for thirty years, an has prospered in a marvellous way, amongst risk and dangers probably not exceeded in any othe pioneer missionary work. On the Tuesday follow ing, at Ridley Hall, Rev. H. E. Fox, who took par in the recent Winter Mission to India, gave a account of his experiences in an admirable addres showing the great need of more men and th unparalleled opportunities. The results of thi missionary campaign at Cambridge must be left t the Lord alone, who will manifest them in his ow time for his own glory.

The Centenary of Foreign Missions.

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE IN LONDON.

MONDAY, JUNE 11.

China and its Millions.

An important meeting was held in the Large Hall on the afternoon of Monday week, which we were unable to report in our last issue. Sir John Kennaway, Bart., M.P., chairman, said the Chinese retain their nationality wherever they go, thus resembling, in many respects, the Jews. They do not spend their money in other lands, but save it to spend when they return to their own country. It is little more than the beginning of missions in China; but there has been enough to show that the real work is begun, that the harvest is beginning to be reached.

REV. DR. JUDSON SMITH

said the evangelisation of China presents, perhaps, the most difficult task in connection with Christian missions. It is not simply the greatness of the population of China that makes its evangelisation difficult. It is the Chinese institutions, the Chinese character, Chinese history inwrought into these institutions, instinct in the life of the people, making them a nation by themselves; not caring for or heeding aught that goes on in the world outside of them; not desiring the arts that we are so ready to bring; not wishing the institutions we would gladly see thrive among them; scorning the faith that we deem their life and their salvation. The movement for the conversion of China began with the labours of the venerated Dr. Morrison eighty years ago. That self-denying man buried himself literally in China for Chinese redemption. He was like those who work at the foundations, content to do his work and finish his toil out of sight of men. We have scarcely got beyond the period of pioneer work. It is still true that the man who goes to China must be content to labour underground and out of sight. We have now thirty-three Missionary Societies, and we count up nearly 900 missionaries in China, with over 30,000 Protestant communicants. There has been growth in other respects. That the number of communicants has more than doubled itself in a decade is a proof that the task is not impossible. While this is encouraging, we cannot estimate the importance of the work by the results we can now display. The task of Christian missions in China is a hopeful one, because God has written the promise that the children of Sinim also shall come and share in the glories of his eternal kingdom.

REV. J. MACGOWAN, of the London Missionary Society, said the subject of Chinese missions was a large one, and would always remain so. One of the most hopeful signs of Christianity in China to-day is the fact that the Christian converts become preachers. He could testify to their great success in Amoy, and to the very large numbers gathered into the Church by the native Christians themselves. Those converts in turn become workers. Mr. Macgowan gave two interesting but lengthy anecdotes to illustrate this point.

REV. FRANCIS JAMES,

of the Baptist Society, referred to the mission facts of North China. In 1859, the Baptist Mission sent two men to labour in Shanghai. They experienced great difficulty, for that was the time of the great rebellion. Shortly after the five treaty ports were opened. In the north of Shantung two brethren went to labour for nine years. They had many discouragements during this period. Nearly all the missionaries either died or had to go away. In 1870, Mr. Richard went to labour in Chefoo, and laboured there for five years; but as there were missionaries there belonging to other societies, he went into the interior, 240 miles from the coast, to a place which had the reputation of being one of the wickedest cities in that part of China. He laboured there for about two years, and during that time there occurred a great famine. In addition to the evangelistic work, he was the means of organising the scheme of famine relief, in connection with other American missionaries, which was the means of saving thousands of Chinese people from starvation. I went to aid Mr. Richard after these two years, when Mr. Richard, on hearing of the great famine in Shansi, went over and undertook a similar scheme of relief, and saved the lives of thousands more of the people. A good impression was thus produced. Now, as the result of the united labours of the missionaries and native Christians, who have done a noble part, we have over 1200 Christians in our church. We have in the country nineteen schools, and in the city a school where some of the most promising lads are being trained for self-supporting pastors, evangelists, schoolmasters, and teachers, to use their powers for God and the salvation of their fellow-countrymen. These students are giving great satisfaction. There is a medical mission carried on by a missionary and his wife. When people get relief from pain, that helps them to believe in the missionaries. We have book shops for the sale of useful literature. Our work extends over five counties, and, although unable to overtake a tenth part of the work of the district, there has been sufficient success to give us the strongest hope for encouragement in the time to come.

REV. W. S. SWANSON said: China has in recent times sprung into the plane of public opinion, and forced itself upon public thought. It is the agony of the Colonial and American statesman, the ruling power in all central Eastern questions. I have been round the world, and I came to no country where I did not meet the ubiquitous and irrepressible Chinaman; and he was a power wherever he went. China existed as a united empire more than 2000 years ago, and it holds an unique position in history to-day of all the empires in antiquity. And China is heathen. Heathenism is not a dead power; it is a living factor.

To Christianise that great empire—that is the goal to which we are working. If we do not Christianise China, China may do something to heathenise the world—a great deal more than many think. As long as the Chinaman has not much power, he is one of the most docile animals under heaven. Give him power, and he is one of the most truculent, one of the most cruel, and one of the most deceitful upon the face of the earth; and yet I love him. When I think of this Chinaman, with his irrepressible industry and energy, I wonder that the Christian world has not been moved from the very depths of its heart to look at this problem as never before. We are playing with it. The best of our men, the best of our strength, should be given to it. A cause like this should fire the energies and rouse the sympathies of archbishops, bishops, and everybody else in the world. What ought we to do? We are to go to China to be away out of it as soon as we can. Individual conversions lie at the basis of this question. But the work goes beyond that—to raise up a native church, self-governing, self-supporting, and self-propagating. What have we done towards this? I don't care to speak of statistics in connection with this question. Some missionaries—and the best of missionaries—are afraid to write contemporaneous history by giving statistics. It is now twenty-nine years since I went as a missionary to China. I think of the condition of things then and what obtains now. I think of the time when I went to Amoy to be colleague successively to two of the best men who ever went to China—William Burns and Carstairs Douglas—who have both gone to their rest. The work of each station was ten miles apart. Now there are one hundred and six churches and stations; seven native pastors, entirely supported by their own people; over one hundred native agents, who have been trained and are working, and they can do the work far better than we can when God's Spirit is poured out upon them. They know the people better, and do the work at a cheaper rate.

That enters into the economics of the question. By these native agents (not all in connection with our own Church or our own Mission), the whole southern part of the island of Formosa has been evangelised. There are very nearly 4000 persons in the full communion of the Church, and a professing Christian community to-day of twice that number. They have taken a step in advance, and they are already united. We have passed the initial stages, and proved out there that the Church can be self-supporting, and self-propagating. They have started two native missions, entirely supported by native means and carried on by native agents—men thoroughly qualified to do the work. China will never be evangelised from this country and America. As to difficulties and dangers, I do not minimise them. Notwithstanding, I never felt more hopeful about the work than now, with all its difficulties and dangers. God has done something besides giving his promises. He has shown us a native Church rising in face of danger and persecution, in spite of a Government that has tried again and again to stamp it out; a native Church that has its martyrs' blood already shed; a native Church with its own apostolate; a native Church doing its own work. I thank God and take courage. That is the harbinger of what is to come.

of the China Inland Mission, said he had had the privilege to travel and live in thirteen out of the eighteen provinces, and to experience the inexpressible joy of coming into close contact with men in different parts of the Empire. Some years ago there was a great famine in one of the provinces, and millions of people were swept away. He was engaged in famine work, and David Hill joined him in that work. In God's providence, in that province we now see 11 stations, 34 missionaries, and between 200 and 300 converts, not only brought out from death to life, but inspired with the Spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ, carrying the Gospel to others, branching out into other provinces. He had the privilege to go with Stanley Smith and others of his fellow-labourers from Cambridge, and to endeavour to initiate them in their work; and God has wonderfully blessed their labours. He had seen men who bore in their own bodies the marks of the Lord Jesus Christ; who had suffered the loss of property, the loss of all things for the sake of Christ, and were patient under all their sufferings and losses. This shows that not only on the coast, but in the interior, we may believe that the same results will follow the preaching of the Gospel. Hence the duty of the Christian Church to send workers into the interior, and flood the whole of the eighteen provinces.

We hear much about the wickedness of China. The Chinaman is not half so bad as the Londoner; you cannot match London in any part of the eighteen provinces for sin and uncleaness. The Chinaman is not so depraved as the white man. What is being done for the millions in the north-west corner of China? Itinerant work is carried on there; a small church has been founded; there are a few hundred members, but the rest are in the darkness of heathenism and night. Take the north of China, where there are also three millions of people. What has been done? There are only three workers there—two nearly broken down with ill-health and over-work; so there is practically one man to these three millions of heathen. He crossed over into one of the provinces, in 1880, and found there a ready people, but not one single missionary for Christ in any one of the cities. Why is it that there should be magnificent provinces and not one missionary? Over the border in another province you find four or five missionaries labouring in the midst of much opposition and difficulty—about one to the million. The time has come that something more should be done for China. The Chinese are coming to the front. If we would bless the world we must save China. There is a people waiting for the Gospel. It is not that they want to know the truth, or that they have a keen appreciation of the beauties of Christianity. A large number came from curiosity. But be the motive what it may, this people are waiting for the Gospel, and our duty is to take it to them. Mr. Baller concluded by referring to Dr. Schofield and Stanley Smith, and other men such as these, who had gone forth in obedience to God's call; but there might be others called from farm and plough, from behind the counter and other places. Why should we limit God? Give us men and women with common sense, filled with the grace of Christ, and the Spirit of God, and we will move the whole eighteen provinces. Give us such workers, and your prayers and sympathy; and ere another Conference meets we shall have a very different story to tell.

Missions to the Jews.

In the Lower Hall, the subject on Monday evening was "Missions to the Jews." The chairman was Mr. JAMES E. MATHIESON, who remarked that the blessing of the world will come through the blessing to the Jew. Dr. Schwartz used to say, "You Gentile Christians take all the promises to yourselves, but leave all the curses to the poor Jew." This is seen in the great ecclesiastical gatherings of Scotland, for they close them by standing and singing the three last verses of the 122nd Psalm, "Pray that Jerusalem may have peace and felicity," &c. They do not mean Jerusalem and the Jews, but the Established Church, or the United Presbyterian Church, or the Free Church of Scotland. It may console all the true-hearted who love Israel to know that God will never reverse one of his promises to his ancient people.

REV. W. FLEMING, LL.B.,

read a paper on Missions to the Jews in the past. In carrying the Gospel to the Jews the Moravian Church takes a foremost, if not the foremost place. Turning more definitely to the London Society, he remarked that during the eighty years of its existence it has studied the best way of working among the Jews. We have striven to remove their prejudices by winning their confidence. How are their deep-rooted prejudices to be replaced by confidence? By proving that the Spirit of Christ is the Spirit of love, that the teaching of Christ denounces persecution in every shape and form. In a word, we seek to present to the Jew, Christianity in its true heavenly character. In aiming at this we never speak against Jews, or injure them in deed; on the contrary, we seek to show gentleness and kindness in dealing with them, and particularly by patience in argument, especially where reproach, insult, injury may be manifested on their part towards the missionary. The most successful missionaries have been the men whose hearts have been moved, when they have read of the past persecutions of the Jews, and when they have witnessed the present sufferings of this down-trodden people. Medical missions prove to them that the Christian thinks of the body while his paramount object is to reach the soul. The prejudices of the Jew are often overcome by the loving-kindness of the doctor.

We endeavour further to preach the Gospel as the Apostles preached it, proving from their own Scriptures that Jesus is the Christ, the Saviour of sinners. Then we enter on a patient investigation of Holy Scripture. Here Jewish missions stand in contrast with those to the Gentiles. To the heathen God's Word must be imparted as something new. With the Jew we appeal to something that is essentially his by right and inheritance.

Another means is the education of Jewish children in Christianity. Daily schools have their advantage, since parents will learn from their children. Boarding schools have their peculiar province, in removing the child from the baneful influence of the ungodly home. Both schools serve to bring the Christian agent into friendly intercourse with the Jew. And the road to a parent's heart usually lies through the heart of his child. We seek also to provide young Jews with some practical mode of earning an honest livelihood. To confess Jesus Christ of Nazareth, as in the Apostolic days, is to be cast out of the synagogue, to be repudiated by the family, to be dismissed from occupation. In London this branch of service is undertaken by a distinct society. There are societies in Amsterdam, Berlin, and Strasburg. A large, well-organised society in England, exclusively devoted to provide temporal aid, and helping inquirers and converts judiciously, would prove an untold blessing, and valuable to spiritual missionary work, to which the London Missionary Society feels compelled to reserve its funds.

The training of promising young men as missionaries is carefully dealt with. The difficulties in Jewish missions are considerable. There is needed an acquaintance with the spirit of Rabbinism, familiarity with Jewish modes of thought, capability to meet objections, to quote Scripture, and deal with the skilled learning and pertinacity of the Jew. I long to see young men of higher education enter our missionary fields, determined to equip themselves for faithful work. On behalf of the society I represent, I ask your friendly advice, plead for your earnest prayer, and I assure you of cordial Christian co-operation, with every effort made throughout the world to exalt the name of Jesus before God's ancient people.

REV. JOHN DUNLOP

gave some statistics as to Jewish missions. The total number of societies at present in the world is 47; certified workers, 457; stations, 132; total annual income about £90,000. For further details he referred them to the various reports of societies and journals of missionaries. From personal observation of the mission fields, he saw that Gospel truth was spreading among Jews as well as Gentiles. He gave some incidents illustrative of this, and concluded by the hope that each individual member of the Church would be fired with enthusiasm, that the whole world of Jews and Gentiles would soon be filled with the knowledge of the Lord.

REV. THEODORE MEYER,

a representative of the Presbyterian Church, said the Presbyterian Churches of Scotland had not been unmindful of the Jews. We are here a small church in England, but we have, notwithstanding, extended our operations to Morocco. The Free Church of Scotland has most important missions in Palestine, in Syria, in Constantinople, in Adrianople, and in Pesth. Our Pesth mission has given us the Saphir family, and a highly-honoured son of that family is still among us. Up to the establishment of the London Society in the year 1809, there was not one church, or one agency, that took care of the Jews; at the present moment there are very few evangelical churches that do not in some way or other take part in this glorious work of bringing the Gospel to them. Since the beginning of this century more than a hundred thousand Jews have been by baptism received into the visible Church of Christ. A great many of those Jewish converts have been absorbed of necessity into the Christian churches; and for all practical purposes they have ceased to be Jews. If, in our present mode of carrying on our work among the Jews, we were successful in getting the eight or ten millions of Jews who are said to exist, absorbed into the churches, not only would Judaism become extinct (that would be of little consequence), but also the glorious history of Israel would be finished not in agreement with the promises of God. Against this absorption of the Jews the Jewish mind protests and rebels, and rightly protests and rebels! It is the national conversion of Israel we must aim at; and, we may surely assert, as a natural sequence, the national restoration. That the prophets announce the apostasy, fall, and scattering of literal Israel is generally admitted; I suppose because it is impossible to explain it away. That they predict the conversion and restoration of Israel and the blessings which Israel shall enjoy, and the great part which Israel is to perform in the establishment of the kingdom of God upon the earth, is also admitted; but in this case the Israel is not God's ancient people, but the Church. Is it compatible with the principle of a sound and rational exegesis, to claim for the same word in the same text two different meanings—to assign judgment to literal Israel, but all the blessings and good to the Church?

The believer may well watch the signs of the times, whether there are not indications of the coming dawn; and thank God there are. The old rigid Judaism, with its narrow prejudices and lifeless forms and ceremonies, had a unity of faith in the God of Israel; a unity of life and worship in the rigid rabbinical revelations; and a unity of hope in the coming of the Messiah, the Founder and Restorer of Israel. Owing to this unity, it was difficult for the missionary to approach Israel; but in this unity the poor despised, down-trodden Jew found a certain consolation and compensation. Under such circumstances, the Mission to the Jews had to be content with seeking individuals, trying to find out the remnant according to the election of grace. But all that is changed, since the Jews have come out of the isolation into which they have brought themselves, or into which they have been banished. In Southern Palestine especially, and in America, it is difficult to say what Judaism is. The Jews there are lapsing into infidelity, more or less thinly veiled. The unwillingness to give up the Jewish name, the feeling that they are and must remain a distinct race, and that as such they have a high mission in the world still, is the only thing which unites them; but along with this there is also an aching of hearts, and the feeling of a void which nothing human can satisfy. There is now more readiness to listen, more of the spirit of inquiry, and there are more frequent conversions from among the Jews of the better class. In this way, too, Rabbinism is losing its power and vitality; wherever there is contact with the outer world, or with western civilisation, old orthodox Rabbinism begins to wither and decay, and its death seems merely a question of time. Thus it is that the associations and societies, expressly got up to counteract the operations of the missionary, are virtually schools that are tending to establish and prepare the way for the preaching of the Gospel.

REV. JOHN WILKINSON

dealt with the question, What can be and ought to be done in Jewish missions? That can be done which God has said is to be done, and that ought to be done which the Lord has said ought to be done. The Lord has commanded us to preach the Gospel to every creature, Jew and Gentile included, for there is no difference between Jew and Gentile. If I make any difference in my prayerful and practical sympathy in favour of the Gentile and against the Jew, I am responsible to God for the result of that difference that I make. Remember our Lord's last words, "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judæa, and in Samaria, and unto all the uttermost parts of the earth." These were altered instructions, given by our Lord after having risen again. Previously our Lord had called his disciples, and told them not to go to the Gentiles, neither to any city of the Samaritans, but rather go to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. That is no longer in force. Everything depends upon obedience. The line of obedience is the line of power; the line of obedience is the line of blessing. Mr. Wilkinson went over the Scripture arguments for missions to the Jews, and brought his address to a close by saying, "Put the Jew outside for ages and what is the result—dark ages. I do not know whether we shall ever get the Christian Church out of its grooves before the Lord's return. It is as clear as day to me, that the Christian Church should turn right about and put herself on Apostolic lines and go to every land. But what though she went to every land, to-day—if she alters the whole attitude of the Apostolic order. If you find Jews in any land, you are to go to them first; if they are in all lands, you are to find access to all lands where they are scattered."

TUESDAY, JUNE 12.

Heathen Customs & Mission Methods.

On Tuesday morning missionary methods, as dealing with social customs, were discussed in a meeting for members only. The chair was occupied by Mr. Albert Spicer, who opened the proceedings with an address, in which he made allusion to his recent travels in India and the South Seas. While fully recognising that much work has been done to justify sincere thankfulness to God, he could not overlook the fact that many difficulties have yet to be confronted—difficulties of which little or nothing is said in annual reports. He maintained that if these difficulties were plainly put before the Christian public, the interest in mission work would increase, rather than decrease, and, as a consequence, perplexed labourers in the foreign field would command a more lively sympathy than they do, on the part of friends at home.

Dr. Underhill read a paper written by Rev. D. J. East, of Kingston, Jamaica, on the African population of the West Indies, with special reference to the results of the emancipation of the slaves. Though the moral tone of the people leaves much to be desired, there are many grounds for encouragement and hope. Utilising all the facilities that have been provided for education, the people do much in the direction of effecting social improvements. There are 120,000 native Christians in the islands, who have built chapels and schools in all parts. Who shall say, as the race continues to multiply, how grand a future is before it? Receiving Christianity at our hands, the Africans may powerfully reflect it, associated with the gentleness, meekness, and long-suffering patience which were their distinguishing characteristics in the days of their bondage.

Rev. W. Holm, of the Danish Missionary Society, read a paper dealing with the question of polygamy among heathen races. Men who in the days of their ignorance have taken more than one wife ask at times for admission into Church fellowship, and occasionally the circumstances are very embarrassing. Putting away all but his first wife, the reformed man may involve the poor women, and their children also, in misery and shame. One sin cannot be absolved by committing new ones. The Danish Missionary Society has resolved that a man thus circumstanced may not be admitted into Church fellowship, but he may nevertheless be reckoned as a catechumen or adherent. In God's providence, release may come either by the death of the second wife or by her coming to the faith and agreeing to a dissolution of the bond which was entered into before the light of the Gospel crossed their path. As catechumens, such persons must command heartfelt sympathy, for their cases are altogether in a different category than would be those in which persons knowing and professing the Christian faith might commit breaches of the moral law.

A paper by Rev. Dr. M. E. Strieby, of New York, on the African races, was read by Rev. Dr. Beard, of the American Missionary Association. An account was therein given of educational work among the American freedmen, who were indicated as the future evangelists of their African fatherland. With racial and other decided advantages over white missionaries, these people stand out as in every way highly suited to take the Gospel to Africa. Steadily increasing in numbers, with faith, hope, and love, as leading traits in their character, the freedmen are willing to go with the Gospel where Englishmen find it hardly possible to live. And certainly the guilt of man-stealing can have no better atonement than the sending back of the people enlightened by the Gospel of Christ. A high mission may therefore be in store for the Africans of America.

Considerable discussion followed, mainly on the subject of polygamy. Mr. R. N. Cust, Herr Merensky, Revs. Dr. J. A. Lefevre, J. Thomas, J. Ross, W. Macgregor, Dr. Judson Smith, J. Calvert, G. Smith, B. La Trobe, J. Scott, Dr. Lindsay, and W. W. Clark took part. Some dealt with the subject simply on the ground of moral principles; others discussed it also in the light of what they had seen and heard in South Africa, China, and India. There were many opinions, and the difficulties which sometimes present themselves were shown to require much wisdom in dealing with them.

Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton spoke a word of warning against the tendency to teach, without sufficient reason, European customs to the people of India. Rev. J. Hesse urged the importance of all Christian workers doing their utmost to break down caste in India. Rev. E. E. Jenkins attacked the Hindu child marriage custom, observing that if Her Majesty the Queen would, by a stroke of her pen, sign a measure for the liberation of the widowhood of the Empire, she would add great lustre to her name and reign.

The Prospects of Foreign Missions.

At the meeting for open Conference, held in the Lower Hall, on Tuesday, the subject was the State of the World a hundred years ago and now, as regards the Prospects of Foreign Missions.

The meeting was presided over by Mr. J. A. Campbell, M.P., who said: God, in his providence, has opened the door for foreign work, and has brought it home to Christians that they have a duty to enter in by that door and do the work. Our lot is cast in a time when the missionary duty of the Church is brought home to us. May I venture upon the liberty of saying that I do not think we hear enough about foreign missions from the pulpit? No doubt we have missionary sermons, but is it not the case that they are too often connected with collections? It would be a great matter if the subject of foreign missionary sermons were entirely separated from the idea of giving money. It is a subject large enough to stand by itself, and it is full enough with lessons to every congregation, independently altogether of the assistance that a congregation may give toward missions. We should pursue missions with increasing eagerness, as a work which our Lord is pleased to call his followers to undertake, to make known to every creature the Gospel of the grace of God.

DEVELOPMENT OF MISSIONS.

Rev. Dr. Sutherland, from Canada, read a paper prepared by Hon. A. H. Colquit, the subject being "The development and results of the missionary idea." The Reformation revived the true missionary idea in part, yet only in part. It did not show the duty of the Church to preach the Gospel to every creature. The Gospel was once again proclaimed, but the world-wide significance of the missionary idea was not understood. The missionary idea was in the Church, but remained 300 years in mortmain. The revival of the eighteenth century sent the Church forth in her heaven-born work of evangelising the world. At the beginning of the century the missionary idea had to confront the ridicule of the world, also of the Church and the uncompromising opposition of heathendom. It was, apparently, the feeblest force of the age. To-day it stands foremost of the schemes of Christian beneficence. Let those who say that missions are a failure point to a single people where the Gospel of Christ has been fairly tried, that has not been made better thereby. In the further development of the missionary idea there are three things for the Church to do:—(1) To conquer apathy and worldliness at home; (2) to check the schemes of the Jesuits; and (3) to advance all along the line on the huge ranks of heathenism. Hitherto the Church has been employed in skirmishing abroad, fortifying at home. The forces have been scattered. The advanced guard has been too distant from the main army. The conviction grows that we have been acting too much on the defensive. There must be concentration of forces, giving up internal conflicts in presence of the aggressive foe. The crisis is at hand. To turn our swords against each other would be the rankest folly. Shoulder to shoulder let us stand for the Captain to give the command, "Let the whole line advance!"

BIBLE CIRCULATION.

Rev. Dr. Wright read a paper on the circulation of the Bible a hundred years ago as contrasted with its circulation now. Taking as a starting voint 1804, the year memorable for the founding of the British and Foreign Bible Society, he said that in that year there was considerably less than fifty versions of the Word of God. That was the sum total accomplished by the Christian Church during the first eighteen centuries. Now, during the eighty years for which we have complete statistics, the Bible Society has been engaged in the translation and revision of versions in 160 languages. Scotland during the last ten years has produced twice as many versions as were produced during the first eighteen centuries of the Christian era. We live in an age of progress, and no department of human activity has shown more startling progress than the work of translation carried on by the Bible Society; and it is not more striking in quantity than in quality. The multiplication of missionaries and an organised army of colporteurs is the work of these one hundred years. In addition to these agencies the Bible Society has enlisted Zenana missionaries.

A STRIKING CONTRAST.

Dr. George Smith, of Edinburgh, read a paper on missions a hundred years ago. He indicated nine points of contrast. (1) A hundred years ago the missions of Christian churches were isolated; now the foreign missionary seeks to be used to do good work in co-operation with others of different societies. (2) A hundred years ago there was a great want of toleration on the part of the governments of the world, in regard to the liberties of missionaries, and the circulation of the Bible; now every Christian power, even Russia, allows the Bible free course, and, except Russia, practices toleration. (3) A hundred years ago literature made the very missions their butt, and did not abstain from scoffing at them; now the Sydney Smith school of scoffers has taken revenge in sarcasm against missions as not producing reforms in life and character. But missions have come to be recognised as the pioneer, not only of scientific and commercial advance, but as essentially elevating social life, and effecting intellectual, moral, and spiritual reformation, and tending to raise to self-government, which is the idea of the English-speaking peoples, even for the savage races temporarily entrusted to them. (4) A hundred years ago the human race numbered 731 millions, of whom 174 millions were Christians of some type, and 44 millions were of the Reformed Churches; now the race is doubled, and the Christians number 450 millions, of whom 165 belong to the Reformed Churches. An analysis by impartial statisticians shows that the Christians, and the dark races entrusted to them, under the good influences of Christianity, are increasing at a rate far before the growth of those outside these influences, many of whom have died, and are dying out. The churches since 1858 do far more than keep pace with the growth of the human race. (5) A hundred years ago Christendom had not one representative among Red Indians and negroes; now there are upwards of one hundred organisations, representing 2¼ millions of Indians and other foreign people. (6). A hundred years ago educated Christian men and women could not be induced to become missionaries; till 1813 the only missionaries were peasants and artisans, chiefly from Germany, paid by English money; now the Church sends its best to the forlorn hope and vanguard of the Christian host, and receives back those who do not fall in the field to be new sources of inspiration. (7) Foreign missions a hundred years ago followed one method, therefore left great portions of the heathen and Mohammedan world untouched that are now reached. Then it was thought a chimerical project. It was declared that the conversion of a Hindu was a miracle as stupendous as the raising of the dead. (8) A hundred years ago, in all the non-Christian world of 570 millions, there were not three hundred evangelical converts; now three millions are numbered. In Brahminical India, since Henry Martyn's despairing cry, the native Christians increase at the rate of 81 per cent. each decade. (9) A hundred years ago the supporters of missions showed a painful contrast with the supporters now. The supporters of missions prayed more regularly and earnestly; gave more earnestly and lovingly and liberally than a large number of the mere nominal supporters do now. The lesson of the century should be, pray and labour. Pray and organise, till every member of the Church is working as a missionary in one form or another.

SOME LESSONS OF THE CENTURY.

Dr. Cust was the next speaker. He said: Great political changes have taken place during the last century; great intellectual and scientific advancement has been made. Still more wonderful changes have taken place in the moral world; men's hearts have been softened, the coarseness of their habits refined, their sympathies enlarged. We have learned many lessons of the present century: (1) That civil freedom always accompanies the Gospel, and that the State, as a State, has nothing to do with evangelisation. We have learned not to look for the human fancies of rival churches and denominations, but in the work of missions to see only the awful face of Christ. We as Churches, and members of Churches, have learned to love one another, and thus teach the law of love to the heathen. The missionary is no longer the object of ridicule, but of wonderful admiration and reverence. Many a layman looks fondly to the missionary, and wishes that the grace of God had been given him to be like him. We have called upon the other sex to help, and women are no longer buried in the tents guarding the stuff, but are forward in fighting the Lord's battle. The Lord has given us such opportunities, such openings, such helps, such supplies, such new possibilities of human life. What shall his poor creatures render in return? More self-consecration, more entire abnegation of self, more sacrifice of pride, prejudice, and domestic comforts, more casting down of cherished idols, more laying of ourselves down on his altar, and submitting to his will. We have failed by rendering only half-service and lukewarm love.

I cannot for myself, as an examiner and recorder of missionary work, ignore the fact that, with the softening of the present century, there has come a relaxation of the fibre of our missionaries. Some missionaries forget their first love, and while still in full health turn their back from the plough. Some missionaries appear too often in our midst away from their proper work. Early marriages rob the Lord's treasury, and many weigh down the missionary societies with charges; and money collected for the heathen is devoted to homes for missionaries' children.

The meeting having been thrown open, four missionaries spoke for a few minutes, giving incidents connected with their work.

China and Japan.

Mr. George Williams presided over a public meeting in the afternoon in the Large Hall, when addresses were delivered on the needs of Japan, and Imperial China and dependencies.

Rev. John Ross, from Manchuria, gave an account of the progress of Christianity in that province of China. There is hardly a town without a number of believers, who include many men of letters. Not a few mandarins are friendly, too, and baptisms are frequent among the middle and artisan classes. Christianity is not dead, nor stationary, but decidedly progressive in China. The Gospel of Christ meets the case of the Chinaman just as it does that of the white man in the West.

Work in Japan was described by Rev. Chas. F. Warren. There is an open door, and a very strong current of opinion in favour of Christianity among the thirty-seven millions of people. Drifting away from the old religions, the Japanese are looking for something in their place. The secular press of the Empire is exercised with the matter, and it is acknowledged by unbelievers that Christianity is the only religion that can hold its own to-day, and which can produce the change of heart which raises man in the highest sense. The fields are whitening to the harvest, and already there is reaping. This has caused much encouragement to the workers in the field. In 1883 there was a Conference of missionary workers in Japan, and from that very great good resulted. During the four years ending last December, the church increased threefold. Last year the church members numbered 19,829. In the Christianity of the kingdom of Japan there is a vigour which tells of real strength, and among the Christians there is a unity which is most gratifying. All these blessings are in answer to prayer, but at the same time they constitute a plain call to consecration. Who will respond to the call?

A third address was by Rev. John T. Gulick, who pressed the claims of Japan upon the Christian public. The natives are enthusiastic in their endeavours to sustain religious and social institutions. He grieved to say that infidel literature has found its way from the West, and has been widely disseminated. So there are cross currents. There is, at the present time, a strong call for teachers of English in the country, and while thus earning fair salaries, Christians may do much for the glory of God.

Rev. A. D. Gring also spoke on Japan. He considered that country the most promising field before the Christian Church to-day. Throughout the island one language is spoken, with no dialect distinctions of any consequence. There has never been such a "chance" as Japan offers, where Christianity is now "on exhibition." Open-minded, the Japanese are not prejudiced; honest, they are quite willing to be taught. Chinese literature no longer satisfies the people of Japan; England, America, and the Continent of Europe are being looked to for instruction. The language has been largely reduced to expression in the Roman alphabet, the Chinese written characters having been discarded. The native Christian Church is self-supporting, for in the days of heathenism the Japanese never thought of entering the temple for worship without putting something into the alms-box. The Japanese character is nothing short of a beautiful one, and there is much to expect from the people and country.

Rev. Dr. A. J. Gordon, of the American Baptist Missionary Union, spoke on the relation of Africa, China, and Japan, to America and England. He said: It seems to me that we have been so slow in sending the Gospel to these peoples that God is sending the peoples themselves to us. He has sent us inhabitants of Africa by the million, inhabitants of China by the thousand, and inhabitants of Japan by the hundred; and they are with us to-day.

Our relation with Africa dates from 1565, when a slave ship appeared upon our horizon, bearing the name of "The Jesus," and having on board 400 slaves—men stolen from the coast of Africa. Three hundred years afterwards, in 1865, Abraham Lincoln set free millions of men in our country, who were descendents of the slaves brought in centuries before. Robert Moffat used to look across the sea, and say respecting the preaching of the Gospel in Africa: "We cannot do this work; the Africans in Africa must be evangelised by the Africans in America." And now we have freedmen's schools all over our country, educating these people, who are, in fact, beginning to go back to the land of their fathers, and to take the Gospel there.

Now as to Japan. Some 250 years ago Christianity of the Roman Catholic sort was established in Japan, and apparently firmly established. The Jesuits, however, began their intriguing, and finally the authorities assailed them, and drove them out of the country. In 1622 that fearful massacre occurred which is said to have stamped out the last trace of the Roman Catholic religion in Japan. That was a very memorable year. There was in that year a little group of pilgrims nestling under Plymouth Rock, with a Bible open before them. Spread over a large part of the country, that seed has produced as fine a population as the world has ever seen. In 1853 a young man who was born in sight of Plymouth Rock, and who was a lineal descendant of one of the pilgrims, went into the harbour of Jeddo, in Japan—I mean Commodore Parry—and one Sunday morning opened his Bible, and read aloud the hundredth Psalm. In the name of Jesus he took the country: without the thunder of cannon or the use of sword, he formally "took" the place. The first attempt to plant Christianity was made by the help of pagan rites and ceremonies, and that attempt failed. The second attempt was made with an open Bible in the hands of a man who believed in salvation by faith through the grace of God. Now the Japanese people are coming among us to see the Gospel illustrated in human life.

With regard to China, we know that Christianity was presented there long ago in the same form as it was introduced into Japan. God forbid that we should not to-day recognise the consuming zeal and eminent missionary consecration of Francis Xavier, who carried Christianity to China. But one of his own colabourers said that one year afterwards every vestige of that Christianity was swept away. Xavier lifted up the crucifix, and in many very extraordinary ways made up aggregates of adherents and converts, but in every high sense of the word his work was absolutely fruitless, and did not abide. One of our Americans went there about the same time, and Chinamen came to our coast in return. They came, and they have been with us ever since. I am sorry to see that an attempt is now being made to keep them out. It is a political move, which would perhaps not have been made if the Chinese would conform to Roman Catholicism. I would that those who are identified with that political action had their Home Rule, rather than that they should come among us and interfere with the Chinese in America. We have found the Chinese to be good citizens. They are a peaceable people. I cannot speak as a missionary, but I can speak from intimate experience of Chinese in America. In connection with my own church, there is a Sunday-school of upwards of 100 Chinamen. They come Sunday after Sunday to be taught the Scriptures, and during the past year I have baptized three as members of the church. And I may also say that it was from a Chinaman that we received a written statement of his conversion and of Christian doctrine, which for completeness and explicitness has never been equalled during a period of fifty years. The Chinese people can comprehend the truth.

Now what do we see? We see Africans, Chinamen, and Japanese coming among us, and returning to their own country with the Gospel. From these facts we learn at least two things—first, to be patient, in view of slow results; and secondly, to make haste to obey the call of God, for the work before us certainly seems appalling in its greatness.

A short period was devoted to discussion, in which Dr. Summerbell, of America, and Rev. W. W. Shaw, Irish Presbyterian Missionary from Manchuria, took part. Both urged that fervent prayer should be offered to God for renewed and increased blessing in Japan and China.

Medical Missions.

There is every sign that medical missions will be the missions of the future. If Christianity is to meet the wants of fallen humanity it will have to care as much for the body as for its inhabitant, the soul. This was the transcendent topic that fell to be discussed in the Large Hall on Tuesday evening, before a goodly audience. There was quite an array of doctors of medicine or of divinity on the platform, supporting the chairman, Professor Macalister, of Cambridge. Among those in the front rank were Rev. Dr. W. M. Taylor, of New York, Rev. Dr. Cairns, Dr. Post, of Syria, Dr. Gladstone, Dr. G. Saunders, Rev. Dr. Swanson, and Dr. Maxwell.

In his presidential words the Chairman said it seemed strange that medical missions have not long ago attracted the attention of the churches, since they were the original form of effort practised and enjoined by the founder of Christianity. When the Church was young, and had to commend itself to the nations, there was need of supernatural aid in the shape of miraculous powers of healing. Very early, however, dogmatic theology overshadowed the practical philanthropy of the Christian system. But Christianity has its mission to the body as well as to the soul. The Chairman's talk was mainly an historical review of efforts in this line by religious practitioners in different lands, and belonging to various churches. To the Roman Catholic doctor, said the Professor, we owe the discovery of cinchona, which has been such a blessing in fever-stricken countries. A reference to the late Mr. Keith-Falconer and his strong desire to qualify himself as far as he could for medical service, evoked a hearty cheer. The Chairman proceeded to urge the importance of securing able and well-qualified men to take up this branch of work, instancing some cases where incompetent men have wrought much evil by their blunders and mistakes. One very important remark was to this effect: that every medical man ought to be a missionary; as the connection between body and soul is so close, the one cannot be properly treated without the other. Would that this were a truism instead of a thing of extremely rare occurrence. There may have been hospitals and other curative efforts before the growth of Christianity in the world, but they were very limited in scope. It was reserved for Christianity to take up the seed and develop it into an active and far-reaching charity. It is only from the banks of the stream where grows the tree of life that there go forth leaves for the healing the nations.

DR. G. E. POST, OF BEYROUT, presented a series of living pictures of medical work in the mission field. The first picture was in connection with the German Hospital in Beyrout. It was a very graphic and touching account, and we have given it at some length in our page for the young. Dr. Post went on to tell how in preaching to these afflicted ones, the speaker refers to their forefathers, Abraham, David, and others, and down to Jesus Christ, whose constraining love has led his disciples to come and care for their bodies and for their souls. He also spoke of the value of medical work in Syria during the cholera, twenty-three years ago.

DR. JOHN LOWE, EDINBURGH,

said that afternoon he had overheard a conversation in his hotel. Two young men talked about missions and the Conference, and spoke disparagingly. One said his sister had been at the Conference and had brought away a pamphlet by Dr. Dowkontt. At night he took up the pamphlet and read it, and said, "There is one kind of mission work I would go in for heart and soul, and if the societies would do work like that they would be better supported than they are." Not long since, in Inverness, at a medical missionary meeting he addressed, a medical man in the town, who was present, said he would read the New Testament with a deeper interest than ever, now that he saw his profession could be made to subserve Christian work. He took some pamphlets and gave them to one of his lady patients who, some time after, left the Edinburgh Society a legacy of £2000. Dr. Lowe spoke of his early experiences as a medical missionary in Neyoor in Travancore, and the deep interest he still felt in it, especially as a daughter is married to the medical missionary there. Some particulars were given of the work of the Medical Missionary Training College in Edinburgh. It is to our American brethren that we are indebted for the inception of medical missions, though they have not followed up the idea so largely as they might have done. Since 1853 missionaries have been trained in Edinburgh, and there are at present twenty-nine young men preparing for the work. In the Universities, especially among medical students, a great work is doing, and many are ready to go forth at the call of the churches. A great responsibility rests on the churches and societies in this matter. Recurring to India, Dr. Lowe referred to the blessed work being done by Dr. Valentine at Jeypoor, a great stronghold of idolatry in Northern India. Through God's blessing on his medical attendance on the Maharanah of Jeypoor, a door of entrance was gained to that province, and Dr. Valentine got permission to preach the Gospel from end to end of it. Some interesting details were also given of the founding of medical missions in Cashmere by Dr. Elmslie, and other early earnest workers in the same work in India. Many interesting reminiscences were given by Dr. Lowe of personal experiences in this work in India. He declared that it would be a native agency only that would win India for Christ. A good work has been, and is being, done among natives in medical training all through Travancore. They have many inducements to take up remunerative medical work of a general kind, but they have given themselves to Christian work, and they abide faithful. Dr. Lowe closed with a strong appeal to young men to devote themselves to this, the most glorious work on earth.

The next speaker who claimed the attention of the audience was

DR. W. WILSON, CHINA.

He described the leave-taking of himself and his wife when they came away on furlough. The last words spoken to him were by his assistant, who said, "When you come back may there be many doctors with you who will heal the sick and preach the Gospel." That is one of many loud voices that are calling on volunteers to go out on this blessed mission. Dr. Wilson gave an interesting description of hospital and other medical work in different parts of China. In that vast country there is room for a great many new centres of effort, and if the prayers of one veteran missionary were answered, that twenty-five qualified workers should go out, they might soon be stationed in centres of great influence and usefulness. Pioneer hospital and dispensary work at Han-chung-fu, where he had laboured for some years, was described, as also the methods of reaching the various classes of the population. This work is specially valuable in disarming the suspicions of the Chinese people towards foreigners. It also brings unrivalled opportunities of presenting the Gospel to the people who flock to the waiting-room of the dispensary day after day. The confidence of the ruling authorities is gained through this medium, and thus the way of the Gospel is prepared. Dr. Wilson spoke with tremendous rapidity, and entered a little too much, perhaps, into detail; nevertheless, his story was one of intense interest, as showing the supreme importance of this method of Christian and evangelising effort. He, like Dr. Lowe, closed with an appeal for more workers.

DR. J. L. MAXWELL

brought the audience back from these far-off lands to the home field, where there is great scope for such work in the dark places of London and other great cities. There are some bright oases in the desert of sin, and sickness, and sorrow—St. Giles, Bethnal Green, Marylebone, and elsewhere. God is greatly owning this work; we are only at the beginning of it, and we must not stop till there is a ring of medical missions in all the slums of London. A year or two of work in such places would be the best possible preparation for work abroad.

Turkey and Central Asia.

In the evening, in the Lower Hall, this was the subject brought under consideration. The chair was taken by Mr. Paton, in absence of Bishop W. F. Mallalieu, of New Orleans.

REV. DR. BRUCE, OF PERSIA, said no society, not even a British society, took the initiative of sending the Gospel to Arabia and Persia. Mission work was begun there by two young Cambridge men, who had taken the highest honours at their colleges. It was a mysterious providence that both died within a year of going there. The one was Henry Martyn and the other Ion Keith-Falconer. It is wonderful how the Christians and Jews scattered through Persia and Turkey have endured persecution for 1200 years, and how many of them have remained faithful to their religion. There were many ways tried to get them to become Mohammedans. Now there has come a change over the aspect of things. No longer are Christians oppressed by the Government. God has a gracious purpose with regard to these ancient churches. The time is come when we can see the purpose of mercy that God has had in allowing these Christians to be spread through these dark Mohammedan lands.

In Persia there are eighty Armenian villages. In the villages the priests are simply tillers of the soil; they have no education or even instruction. A chorister boy, before becoming a priest, learns to repeat the ritual in an unknown language, just as the Roman Catholic Church uses the Latin. Eight or ten pounds bribes the bishop to make a priest of him. A bishop was turned out because he was making so many priests at £8 or £10 a head; a bishop that never put his foot in the eighty villages. Such has been the state of Christian churches in the midst of Mohammedans. But much light has arisen. We have been disseminating instruction. There is a school in Jotham with 200 Armenian boys and 100 girls. We have got an orphanage, where there are the influences of Christian training. From among the natives we get Christian labourers, and never were there more faithful labourers than the Armenians are.

BIBLE WORK.

Dr. Gilman, one of the secretaries of the American Bible Society, said a few words as to the Bible work of the British and Foreign, and American, Societies in the Turkish Empire. It is a strange fact that to the lands where the Scriptures were written by inspired men, and where the first translations of them were made, the Bible became a sealed book. The call now comes to restore the light to these churches, and to revive the Bible in the mother tongue. In the Turkish Empire there is a great variety of languages and dialects, some of them cultivated, some of them rude and barbarous. A difficulty connected with the distribution of the Bible in these lands arises out of the variety of alphabets used for conveying to men the same language. The Turkish Bible, if for all classes of people, must be prepared in three different types. The Armenian begins to read at one end of the book, the Turkish at the other; the Greek is accustomed to read as we read. In regard to Bible work in these Oriental lands, there are three different departments—the translation, the printing, and the circulation. We fail to realise the immense difficulty, as well as importance, of this work. Another work of immense importance, designed to exercise a great influence upon foreign missions, is the translation of the Scriptures into the Arabic language. Wherever the Koran is read there is an entrance for the study of the Arabic Bible. Money and executive ability are required to carry on this great work.

Rev. Alexander Thomson, the British and Foreign Bible Society's agent in Constantinople said the last forty-two years of his life had been spent in Constantinople—the first fifteen as a missionary to the Spanish Jews, and the remaining in the service of the British and Foreign Society. In the meeting the previous night nothing was said of the Spanish Jews in Turkey. These Jewish refugees are the descendants of those who were expelled from Spain by Ferdinand and Isabella, in the very year, 1492, when America was discovered. After their expulsion they went to the Sultan, who, during some years, received with open arms in Constantinople 50,000 Jews. Salonica is almost a Jewish town; in Smyrna there is a large proportion of Jews. In all the principal towns, both of European Turkey, and partly also of Asiatic Turkey, there are Jewish colonies. Through the operations of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and of the Religious Tract Society, good work has been done among those people.

Mr. Thomson related the interesting story of the Turkish Bible. As long as about 160 years ago a man by the name of Ali, a master of a number of languages, produced a translation that has done him infinite credit. In the Crimean War the door was opened for the circulation of his work in Turkish. The British and Foreign Society printed a considerable number of portions of the Bible; and during the two years of that war, Christian officers, both in the army and navy, distributed these copies of the Bible, or parts of the Bible, right and left among their Turkish neighbours. The Turkish people, as a mark of civility, could not refuse these books from the hands of men who had come to shed their blood in their defence, and at immense expense to the British nation. In this way a large number, probably 20,000 copies, were circulated during each of the two years of that war. The Turks find it hard to see how Christians have got a better book than they have. They are groping in the dark, unable to find any rest for the soul. What an infinite privilege for them to read the New Testament! One of the most touching things it is to see the Turks defending the Scriptures against the Christians who trample upon them.

Dr. Kalapothakes, a representative of the Bible Society in Athens, having made a few remarks, Dr. Post spoke of Syria in its relation to Central Asia. Two religions contend for the mastery of the world. Two books alone will contend finally for the suffrages of mankind. These are the Koran and the Bible. Why, it may be asked, expend our resources on missions to the Arabian races? We are fighting for life: we have got to conquer them, or they will conquer us. There are unknown possibilities in these nations. Who knows what forces in Central Asia may yet be stored up for the future? We must go into Arabia, into the Soudan, into Central Asia; we must Christianise these people, or, like swarms of locusts, they will emerge from their deserts and come down like a devouring fire upon Christianity. If you were about to attempt a commercial enterprise in that country, you would seize some strategical point; you would draw your lines of operation all over that country, and establish branch houses through native agency engaging native talent, and intructing it. That is the theory of missions. We must get men selected, and inculcate the principles of Christianity, and get them implanted in the the native mind, support them by prayer and money, and trust the natives of those countries to carry the Gospel to their fellow-countrymen.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 13.

Women's Work in the Mission Field.

General Sir Robert Phayre presided over a meeting held on Wednesday morning. He paid a warm tribute to the energy and patient endurance of the many good women who have entered upon missionary work. Recalling his own experience in India, he spoke of the great needs of the female population of that country. He also rejoiced that much good has already been done in the miserable zenanas, where now "the women who tell the glad tidings are a great host."

Miss Rainy, of the Free Church of Scotland Ladies' Society for Female Education, delivered an address on the place of female agency in mission work, and its relation to the departments of general missionary societies both in home arrangements and foreign work. Her answer to the question, "Why should women's societies take up this work?" was that it is on many grounds evident that the Lord will have it so. The scheme is of the Lord, and the way to carry it out has been made clear by Him. There are between thirty and forty societies organising female agency, with an annual income of about £250,000. These societies are represented in the field by over 1000 American and European missionary women, with several thousands of Christian women from the races among whom they labour. To this number must be added missionary ladies from Basle, and the deaconesses' institutions in Germany, and those pressing into China and Africa under the auspices of the Inland and Itinerant Missions, as well as labourers connected with some other agencies. Among the duties to which the women give their attention are: teaching in Sunday, week-day, and industrial schools, taking charge of orphanages and seminaries, zenana mission work or house-to-house visitation, evangelistic work in villages and country districts, holding Bible-classes and mothers' meetings for converts, training and superintending native agents, the preparation of vernacular literature for women, and last but not least, labouring as medical missionaries among women and children. At first these workers were occupied as unattached missionaries, but during recent years they have fallen into line, and are connected with various church communities and religious societies.

Miss A. Marston, M.D., of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, read a paper on the training of agents at home and on their arrival in the foreign field. The dispensary was said to be a sphere of special promise. In fact, the entire work is very hopeful, and, if there were a similar agency to meet the needs of the male members of Indian families, great good would certainly result. The hospital is an institution of increasing value, and both there and in the dispensary the people are pleased rather than otherwise to listen to the message of the Gospel. The difficulties of zenana medical work were enlarged upon, and, in conclusion, several suggestions were given. Specialists being, as a rule, inaccessible, and consultations being out of the question, medical women in India must either be able to undertake all and sundry cases, or have the pain of occasionally rejecting them. Experience led to the recommendation that, in addition to the usual curriculum, there should be a year's study of special subjects. In any case, no one should go out who cannot bring to bear on the work at least as much knowledge as is required by the ordinary English practitioner, although more knowledge will certainly be required. There is great need for a missionary college, where native young women can be trained for medical work. Miss Marston rejoiced to know that, of the sixty female practitioners on the English medical register, ten have given themselves to the work of foreign missions.

Pastor A. Haegert, who has been twenty years in India, remarked upon the want there is of teachers of the young. Miss Cross, for five years resident in India, spoke of the shocking condition of the women in the prisons and hospitals. She gave an account of a visit she paid to one of the prisons, where she saw a large number of women, condemned for the crime of murdering their female children. The poor women hardly intended doing wrong, for they fully knew what a miserable life their female children had before them.

The discussion was continued by Miss Mott, of Chicago; Mrs. Emerson, of the Women's Union Missionary Society; Rev. B. T. Roberts, of North Chili, New York; Dr. Robert Pringle, of Her Majesty's Bengal Army. Miss L. R. Meister, of Dayton, Ohio, asked how women who remain at home can be influenced in favour of the work abroad. She urged those women who have the matter at heart to remember it at the family altar, where the children may be impressed with the true character of the undertaking. Remarks were also made by Mrs. Mary C. Nind, of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church; Rev. J. I. Pickford, of the Church Missionary Society, Colombo; Rev. H. Williams, of the Church Missionary Society, Bengal; and Rev. L. Dahle, of the Norwegian Missionary Society.

Rev. William Stevenson, Secretary of the Ladies' Society of the Free Church of Scotland, urged the wisdom of simultaneous efforts at evangelisation among men and women in India by persons of each sex. Speaking generally he said that, in his judgment, work among the women in India is a generation behind as compared with that among the men. If the results of what has been done among men are to be reaped, it will be consequent upon special efforts to bring the women of the country under the influence of the Gospel, and thus to lift them to a level alongside the men. Mrs. Moses Smith, of Chicago, maintained that, if the interest of the women at home is to be secured, it must be by means of a "thus saith the Lord" as to missionary work. It is easy to show from the Bible that this movement is of the Lord, and that it is in compliance with Christ's command, "Go, disciple all the nations." Therefore, the women who cannot go abroad should realise their obvious duty in the light of God's will and purpose.

Mrs. G. Stott, of the China Inland Mission, held that the love of Christ, and the greatness of God's provision for repentant sinners, is a message which the people of the great Empire of the East know how to appreciate. She spoke from experience, and with her remarks the discussion closed. Others wanted to speak, but time failed.

Heathen Systems and Christianity.

In the afternoon there was an open conference on "Buddhism and other heathen systems; their character and influence compared with those of Christianity." Sir Monier Monier-Williams presided, and also read the first paper. Buddhism was Sir Monier's subject, and it need hardly be said that he handled it with consummate skill, and presented with great power the contrast between its essential doctrines and those of the religion of Christ.

At the outset he remarked that it is one of the strange phenomena of the present day that even educated persons are apt to fall into raptures over the doctrines of Buddhism, attracted by some bright gems culled from its moral code by those who not only keep altogether out of sight certain dark spots, but also omit to mention precepts which no Christian would soil his lips by uttering.

What claim has Gautama Buddha to the title, "The Light of Asia"? Those who give him this name forget that his doctrines are only spread over Eastern Asia, and that Mohammed, whose doctrines are also prevalent over large areas, has an equal right to be called "The Light of Asia." Before all things Buddhism means enlightenment of mind. It was only after a course of meditation that the so-called light and knowledge burst upon Gautama, and then he became Buddha, the enlightener. Of what nature was the so-called light and knowledge which radiated from the Buddha? Did it recognise the depravity of the heart of man, the knowledge of sin? No! In this respect the Buddha's light was a profound darkness. He confessed himself a downright agnostic. Was it a knowledge of the goodness, justice, and holiness of an Omnipotent Creator, and of the Fatherhood of God? No. In this respect also the Buddha's light was utter darkness, and he acknowledged himself an utter agnostic. He knew nothing of any being higher than himself.

What, after all, was this enlightenment which has been so much spoken and written about? All that the Buddha claimed to have discovered was the origin of suffering, and the remedy for suffering. All the light of knowledge came to this: suffering arises from the indulging of desires; suffering is inseparable from life; all life is suffering, and suffering is to be got rid of by the suppression of desire and the extinction of personal existence. Buddha told his disciples to stamp out suffering by stamping out desire. The Christ, on the contrary, told his disciples to glory in their sufferings, to rejoice in them, and to expect the perfection of their characters through suffering. Christianity and Buddhism agree in asserting that all creation travaileth in pain, in bodily suffering, in tribulation. But while the One taught man to aim at the glorification of the suffering body, the other asked him to look forward to its utter annihilation.

We Christians are members of Christ's body, of his flesh, and of his bones—members of that Divine body which was a suffering body, a cross-bearing body, and is now a glorified body, an ever-living and life-giving body. The Buddhist repudiates as simply impossible all idea of being a member of the Buddha's body. How could it be that they should be members of a body that was burnt and has become extinct, with his personal being also dead?

At least, some will say, Buddha taught his disciples to aim at getting rid of sin and to attain purity of life. He had no such idea. He said, "Get rid of demerit and evil actions, and store up merit and good actions." That is one of the propensities of human nature from which Christianity has delivered men. Buddha never claimed to be a deliverer from sin, never pretended to set anybody free from the bondage of sinful acts or habits, and never professed to provide any medicine for the dying sinner. He even told his disciples that he was powerless to set them free from the things they would have to endure through countless ages of changeful existence. Christ, however, proclaims liberty to the captive, and, cancelling past sins, He enables the pardoned criminal to start on a new and holy life.

We find, say some, that Buddha taught that we must not love the world, nor money, nor unrighteousness, that we must overcome evil with good, and do to others as we would that they should do unto us. I admit that, and more besides. But the great contrast between the moral precepts of Buddhism and Christianity is not in the letter, but in the motive power brought to bear in their application. Buddhism says: Be righteous in yourselves. Christianity says: Be righteous through a power implanted in you from heaven—freely given to you, and always abiding in you. Buddha says: Take nothing from me. Christ says: Take all from Me. If anyone, however, insists on placing the Buddhist and the Christian moral codes on the same level, let him ask himself the one question, Who would be more likely to lead a godly, righteous, and sober life, the man who has learned his morality from the extinct Buddha, or he who knows that his life and power come from the living, eternal, and life-giving Christ?

Having admitted that Buddhism promoted progress to some extent in India, Sir Monier maintained that in no sense, however, is Christianity to be regarded as a development of Buddhism, nor can Buddhism be regarded as a kind of introduction to Christianity. Between the two systems there is an impassable gulf. Christ was God-sent; Buddha was self-sent. Christ was with the Father from everlasting, and in the fulness of time born of a virgin; Buddha is said to have passed through a series of bodies, demigods and demons, and to have, by his own will, entered the side of his mother in the form of a white elephant. Christ was born in a poor and humble station; Buddha was rich and came of a princely family.

Having followed up the contrast, even to showing that, while Buddha is regarded as now having no existence whatever, apart from his doctrine, Christ lives for ever in a glorified body, the speaker pointed out the difference between the Buddhist doctrine of merit and the Christian doctrine of justification. The most essential distinction of all is: Christianity regards personal life as the most precious and most sacred of all possessions, and God Himself as the highest example of intense personality—the Great I AM THAT I AM—and teaches us that we are to thirst for a continuance of personal life as a gift from Him. Nay, more, it teaches us that we are to thirst for the living God, and for conformity to his likeness. Buddhism, on the other hand, sets forth as the highest of all aims utter extinction of personal identity, utter annihilation of the Ego, utter annihilation of all existence in every form. It proclaims as the only true creed the ultimate resolution of everything into nothing—the ultimate resolution of every entity into nonentity. Christ tells us what we must do to inherit eternal life; Buddha tells us what we must do to inherit eternal extinction of life.

Whom shall we choose as our guide, as our hope, as our saviour? The "light of Asia," or the Light of the world? The Buddha or the Christ? It seems a mere mockery to put these final questions to rational and thoughtful men and women in the nineteenth century. Which book shall we clasp to our hearts in the hour of death—the book which tells us of the extinct man Buddha, or the Bible, which reveals to us the living Christ, the Redeemer of the world?

JAINISM.

Rev. W. Shoolbred, D.D., of the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland Missions, read a paper on Jainism. This Indian religion is said to be older than Buddhism. Its adherents number a little less than half a million, the majority of whom live in Rajpootana, where the speaker had been labouring for nearly thirty years. More philosophical than practical, Jainism holds a purely negative position. Its founder seems to have taken no account of the existence of God, and therefore the creed is to all intents and purposes atheistic. Consequently the religion offers to the people no salvation from sin. Having described the system in detail, Dr. Shoolbred pointed out that Christianity fully meets the needs of the poor Jains, whose moral code is one altogether without power.

HINDUISM.

The third address was on Hinduism, and it was delivered by Rev. F. F. Ellinwood, D.D., of the American Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions. As a philosophy, a religion, and a social force, the system was explained at length and with much ability. More or less monotheistic at first, Hinduism borrowed and absorbed from other religions until it became a very jungle of superstitions. It saw, however, one thing that was needed in religion—the coming down of Divine power to the help of man; and Krishna, a bright, sympathising god, was represented as undertaking this work of human elevation. By the ninth century Buddhism had been swept entirely out of India, and although it spread over many portions of Asia, it had not in it the tenacity and life of Brahminism which succeeded it.

If a missionary speaks to a Brahmin on the Fall of man, the ready reply will be, "Yes, we have that." On the Flood, the Incarnation, the Trinity, and other facts and doctrines, there will be a like answer. When, however, the missionary comes to reason with him, the Brahmin has to admit that in every case the likeness between his religion and Christianity is not such as his reply at first suggests. In fact, there is an amazing abyss between the two religions. What a difference between the cold, unconscious Brahma, age after age without a single moral attribute, and the infinite Jehovah, who is omnipotent, and whose glory is everywhere! What a difference between him and the Father who numbers the very hairs of our head, and hath so loved the world as to give his only begotten Son as a sacrifice for transgression! The doctrine of Hinduism is the sum of all pessimism. There is no Saviour, no salvation. It is in no high sense a religion, but rather a philosophy, or an ethical system. The struggle with Brahminism will be severe, but there is a Divine element in the matter, and the forces of God must be victorious.

PARSEEISM.

Rev. J. Murray Mitchell, LL.D., read a very interesting paper on Parseeism, or Zoroastrianism. Becoming the dominant creed in Persia, centuries before the present era, it extended over a very wide area, and its influence penetrated even into Britain with the Roman legions. The sacred book of this religion is called the Avesta, or the Zendavesta, and it is about the size of the Bible. It has been called the purest and best of all Pagan systems, and no doubt rightly so, but then it is immeasurably inferior to the true religion.

It stands distinguished among heathen religions as not associating any immoral attributes with the object of worship; there are no immoral acts connected with worship; no cruelty enters into the worship, and images have no place. Further, it is held that in the contest between good and evil the Parsee must not be passive, but must take his place. Marriage is honoured, and woman's claims recognised. Standing distinctly at the head of all heathen religions. Parseeism seems to have had its origin in very early times, its prophet apparently falling back on the relics of the great patriarchal sages of the country in which he lived. Still the creed is singularly defective.

As a composition the Avesta is dull and dry, and terribly wanting: secondly, it is a shallow book, containing much that is essentially puerile. These points were admirably advanced, and it was shown that the writer of the book had no conception of the Fatherhood of God, neither of the brotherhood of man. These defects involve others, many of them very important. Let Zoroaster have his modicum of praise, however, as a reformer who lived in an idolatrous generation; but to compare him to Christ is to compare a little rush light, doing its feeble best to scatter the gloom, to the unclouded sun of glory throned in the light of heaven.

DISCUSSION.

Dr. R. Pringle having made a few remarks on Hinduism, Rev. George Smith, of South China, said that he had found Buddhism to be a system of gross idolatry and without any moral power. The priests are immoral, and the nunneries are places of ill-fame.

Rev. James Kennedy, of Benares, pointed out that the resemblances between the false religion and the true are but superficial, while the differences are essential. Rev. Wilfrid Shaw, of the Irish Presbyterian Mission, held that Buddhism in practice is very different from the literary picture. The system does nothing whatever for the men and women who profess it.

Mr. L. Leisching, late of the Ceylon Civil Service, declared Buddhism to be a completely hopeless system. He had been told that there are eight countesses in England who are Buddhists. The reason for that is that they know nothing of Christianity, and nothing of what Buddhism is at home. Pastor A. Haegert, of India, and Rev. S. R. Wilkin, of Ceylon, also spoke. The latter said that in Ceylon 90 per cent. of the Buddhists, people and priests, are demon worshippers. Rev. W. Stevenson described Buddhism as the daughter of Brahminism, having arisen as a reform of the fundamental principle. Both agree in being thoroughly pessimistic systems, and their adherents are "without God and without hope in the world."

In bringing the discussion to a close, the Chairman observed that England holds India and Ceylon, and has lately annexed Burmah. Do we hold these countries merely that the imperial prestige of Great Britain may be increased? Do we not, in God's providence, hold them in order that every man, woman, and child may hear from us the glad tidings of the Gospel? I trust, he said, that we shall not rest until we have sent the Gospel to all parts of these countries.

North and West Africa.

In the Large Hall, in the afternoon, the subject of conference was, "Africa: North and West, the Nile and the Niger." The chair was filled by Rev. Dr. Boardman (in the absence of General Clinton B. Fisk). The first selected speaker was of the Church Missionary Society. He said there was no need to boast of the work in West Africa, because it is a conspicuous proof that hitherto the Church has only been trifling with the subject. West Africa is still almost wholly enveloped in heathen and Mohammedan darkness. Several bodies have a few scattered stations up and down the coast; but is it reasonable to expect in a single generation, or even in the second or third generations of converts from heathenism, a representation of that high moral and spiritual tone which, even in our own privileged and enlightened land, animates only a very small proportion of those who profess to be Christians? Considering all these things, and the gigantic difficulties which intercourse with ungodly white men has occasioned, he did not hesitate to affirm that in spite of drawbacks he saw cause for gratitude. In comparatively few years a Christian community had been developed in Sierra Leone, whose respect for all the externals of religion—such as attendance at church, and quiet observance of Sunday—would put London to shame. The proportion of communicants was great, and the gifts of the people marvellous. The teaching was free from the doctrinal errors that had honeycombed the congregations of this country. Elsewhere polygamy was less than in Sierra Leone, but domestic slavery had to be coped with. At the Niger Mission, at Brass and Bonney—where native agency had principally been at work, but where the Crowthers had done much good—infanticide and cannibalism and idolatry had been superseded by Christian worship. The chiefs contributed liberally for the construction of churches, one of them having given £450. Therefore they should have confidence and be hopeful.

REV. J. J. FULLER,

a coloured Baptist missionary from the Cameroons, said that when he landed in Africa in 1844, there was not a spark of Gospel light westward of Lagos. A striking incident took place on landing at Fernando Po. When the missionaries landed a ball was being held, a ball that had been introduced by Europeans. The missionaries went straight to the house where the dancing was going on, and knelt to pray, and their action resulted in the work commencing, for there were two persons in the assembly who were touched that night. The missionaries had had great obstacles in striving to overcome the ignorance and prejudice of the natives. A great change had come over the people, the tongue had been reduced to a written language, and the written message had penetrated into the dark corners. He closed with an eloquent appeal to those present to remember Africa: as the English had helped to drag her down, he prayed that they might help to restore her.

DR. COLENSO'S EXPERIMENT.

Rev. Dr. Chambers, of the United States, said that where Christianity had penetrated it had abolished cannibalism, idolatry, and slavery in Africa, and it was in this last respect that it proved its superiority over Islam, as it came to all, and made no distinction between white and black. Christianity came with the best gifts, and offered that which brought all other blessings in its train. Bishop Colenso's experiment of civilising before converting, as tried on some Zulu boys, had proved a failure. The boys had been educated secularly for years, but when, at the end of the time, they were asked to stop for religious instruction, every one of them went off, leaving his clothes behind for the Bishop, who the next day went to the American Mission Station, and gave them £50, saying, "You were right, and I was wrong."

MR. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS

sought to impress on the meeting the enormous extent of the African continent. He urged that the converted negroes of America should be used for the evangelising of Africa. At the same time they are not adapted to undertake work in the north or extreme south. The Liberia negro settlement of the West Coast has not been a conspicuous success. But Christian negroes might be sent to do a noble and great work. With respect to North Africa, Mr. Guinness traced the history of the Kabyle Mission. Within the last seven or eight years it has sent bands of missionaries, and ultimately it has succeeded in establishing a chain of stations extending over no less than a thousand miles in length, worked by devout men and women, all self-sustaining and all suited to the work. They have grappled with the Arabic, the Berber tongue, and other languages; and God has already blessed the work to the conversion of souls both in Morocco and Algiers. North Africa lies within three and a half days of London. The climate is delightful; to a large extent there is a civilised Government and the people are accessible. What a field of missionary work! Here is room for Christian men and women, but especially the latter.

Beyond the Sahara, and extending right across the whole of that continent, is another region, wide and wonderfully populous. It is the Soudan, the true home of the negro. It is divided into three parts—Western, Central, and Eastern. Central Soudan is the home of the blacks; Western Soudan is the Niger region; Eastern Soudan is the region of the Upper Nile. Nation after nation in the vast interior has no missionary at all. There are one hundred nations, with probably one hundred millions, whose languages have, for the most part, never been acquired. There are six hundred languages spoken in Africa, and comparatively few of these reduced to writing. What is wanted is whole-heartedness. What an illustration in the young son of Colonel Wilmot Brooke, who has gone to the Soudan, accompanied only by a native. Let us seek to evangelise North Africa, so near and so needy; that great Soudan, so dark, so long neglected; and to heal, in all its extent, this open sore.

THE VENERABLE BISHOP CROWTHER

said the best way of working on the West Coast of Africa is to educate, as much as circumstances will admit, many of the native race. One of the great obstacles in working among the negro race is the difficulty of learning their languages. He was born in the interior of Africa, and was carried away into slavery. He met missionaries and interpreted for them; and when he was appointed by the Church Missionary Society to go into his own country as missionary, he commenced at once to translate in his own language. The pastors are now carrying the translations not only into his own language, but five or six others. Converts go into the markets and into the interior 100 miles beyond where any ordained missionary had ever reached. They begin to read, and country people from the interior surround them.

Surgeon-General Gunn, of Dublin, as a soldier, bore testimony to the work of the missionaries on the West Coast of Africa. They live most self-devoted lives, endure with patience much suffering from the climate, from natives, and otherwise. The African is intelligent to a degree. He had been twice in the hands of Africans as a prisoner, yet he had a great respect for them. He had four boys, and he would rather see them missionaries than rising to the position of Prime Minister. He hoped many would devote their lives to that glorious work.

Oceania and Australia.

The evening meeting in the Large Hall was presided over by Mr. Alexander McArthur M.P.

BISHOP STUART, OF WAIAPU,

spoke of the work of the Church Missionary Society among the Maoris of New Zealand. Up to a certain period in New Zealand this mission was a complete success. When the illustrious Bishop Selwyn came out to New Zealand, he found the country, which a few years before had been the home of savage cannibals, changed, the people ready for instruction, meeting for daily prayer, keeping the Sabbath, carefully reading the portions of God's Word translated into their language—in short he saw a nation born in a day. The profession of Christianity was universal throughout the island.

REV. JAMES CALVERT, FIJI,

after describing the position and size of the groups of islands, said that the people, having been left to themselves, became degraded, and cannibalism became a recognised institution. Cruelty of all kinds abounded; persons were buried alive; polygamy was established throughout the group. The claims of Fiji were brought before the Christian public of England. It has been a great help to our progress that we had the whole field to ourselves, and our labours were not interfered with by others. The Romanists happily came too late for success; they have never succeeded, and are now losing ground. Great numbers of the people have been thoroughly awakened by the truth, and have with godly sorrow turned from sin unto God. On several occasions in many of the islands there has been a special outpouring of the Spirit; many were saved, and all were quickened. The spirit with which they endured loss, persecution, and martyrdom proved the reality of the change. The work spread from village to village, from island to island, and none could gainsay the testimony. There are now 3500 native preachers, 1260 chapels, and other preaching stations, about 28,000 accredited church members, and very many on trial for church membership. More than 40,000 scholars are in the 1735 week-day and Sunday-schools. Fifty years ago there was not a Christian in Fiji; now there is not an avowed heathen left. Customs of horrid cruelty and barbarism are wholly extinct. What has not God wrought?

REV. S. McFARLANE, LL.D.,

late of New Guinea, said that since the London Missionary Society sent out its first band of missionaries a great transformation has come over the South Sea Islands. A glorious work has been accomplished. The Gospel has gone from island to island, and from group to group, and mainly by native agents. In Tahiti the missionaries had to wait some twenty long years before hearing of one convert. But now, through native agency, not many months elapse without hearing of some good result. The races in New Guinea are linked together, and are not like miserable hordes hanging about the skirts of our civilisation. If there is to be civilisation without Christianity, better not to have the civilisation. In New Guinea the natives have been benefited by Christianity alone. There are difficulties peculiar to New Guinea. The languages spoken within a distance of fifty miles are so distinct that natives cannot understand each other. One of the greatest difficulties is the climate. There have been over 100 deaths since 1871 in that New Guinea Mission. The missionaries take fever and ague; a strong constitution is required. Notwithstanding there are hundreds of volunteers ready to take up the vacant places at any moment. There are now nearly 770 stations; six languages are reduced to writing; and there are many church members.

REV. DR. TINMAN,

of the American Bible Society, followed with a personal testimony as to work in the islands of the Pacific. One of the earliest missions of the American Board was to the Sandwich Islands. The people were ready for them to come before they appeared. A generation has passed away, and there are now forty-six stations, more than 5000 church members, 10,000 adherents, besides 3000 pupils receiving instruction in mission schools.

Rev. Dr. Schreiber spoke a few words about the German Mission in New Guinea. For seven years he had been in Sumatra. Ten years ago there were over two thousand converts; now there are 12,000, constituted into self-supporting churches. Most of them are conducted by native clergymen and teachers.

Commerce and Christian Missions.

In the evening of Wednesday a public meeting was held to consider the subject of the relation of commerce to Christian missions. Mr. J. Herbert Tritton presided, and opened the proceedings with an earnest address, in which he deplored the necessity for apprehension as to the commercial obstacles which are in some countries preventing the spread of the Gospel. He had blushed when standing on foreign ports to see and hear English and American sailors disgracing the Christian and national name. He rejoiced that there are noble exceptions, and that in some cases commerce helps rather than retards Christian missions. He suggested that special efforts should be made to commend the Gospel to sailors, who are, for the most part, our representatives in the eyes of foreign nations.

RIGHTEOUSNESS IN BUSINESS.

Rev. Principal Cairns, of Edinburgh, delivered a powerful and eloquent address on the general principles which should regulate commercial life. The sum and substance of the whole was the enforcement of the injunction, "Whatsoever ye do, in word or in deed, do all to the glory of God." He directed attention, first to the end of commerce, and then to the means. Having secured the right end, we shall, by using the right means, be doing whatever we do "to the glory of God."

The end of commerce was defined to be, to minister to a true and real human want. To see what the true wants of men are, and to supply them, is the true purpose and end of commerce, according to the Divine idea. What is it that meets a Divine end, and becomes true commerce? Is it enough that that which we produce and exchange shall be simply innocent, and shall have nothing inconsistent with the Divine end? Is it lawful simply to say it is innocent? Is it enough for a Christian man to spend his life in business or in commerce which is merely required by caprice and fashion, so that it is only innocent—useless it may be, but innocent? We dare not put it lower, but we ought to go this length, that there should be nothing that does not meet a real want, and is not good and profitable unto man. Apply that rule to the slave trade. What good and profitable end did that meet?

With this criterion, we have that which is to determine us. Every man has to settle the question as in the sight of God. Are these wants of mine such as I ought to have in the sight of God? Can I meet those wants which even a Christian brother may have and think he ought to gratify? We have a duty, and have to bring our conscience to bear upon the matter of supply, as others have to do upon that of demand. What is legitimate commerce? The Christian conscience has to decide the question, and the general principle is, whether ye eat or drink, buy or sell, produce or distribute, do all to the glory of God.

How, again, are we to settle what is right in regard to the means of commerce? We bring in the virtue of benevolence, the meeting of a real want; also the virtues of purity and sobriety, living soberly and godly in the world. Now, under the head of means we likewise bring in a third thing, and that is righteousness. In addition to being godly and meeting a Divine idea, and sober, so as not to minister to lust or any impure desire, there must be the element of righteousness, and this, the dominant idea of commerce, should be steadily enforced by the Christian Church. Commerce is not benevolence; rather it is the instrument and handmaid of benevolence. As to its means, I am satisfied that, if it be righteous, it is not donation but equivalence—not working in the field of charity, but the making and concluding of a bargain; and the thing required is that it should be righteous—given in the genuine form, according to the purpose and profession of the buyer and the seller. We must return to the Bible idea of righteousness: to the equal weight and the just balance. Throughout the Old Testament, the great law of righteousness is set forth, and unrighteousness is denounced. In the New Testament, too, there are similar statements on commercial righteousness; and in the book of Revelation we read: "He that is filthy, let him be filthy still; he that is unrighteous, let him be unrighteous still." Throughout the decalogue this righteousness is obviously and distinctly enforced in several of the commandments.

We have not only a grand theology, but a grand morality. Send it to the very humblest tribe on the face of the earth, and there is that in it which will go down to the hearts and consciences of the people. Oh that the Christian Church had as glorious a practice as it has a glorious creed! In their dealings with us inferior nations have been scattered and peeled, beggared for a few beads or trinkets, plundered of their lands and spoiled of their health. We have not only failed to do our duty to them, but we have, in too many instances, made them incapable of having a bright and true Christian future at all.

We have this great advantage in our mission work: in the consciences of the nations to whom we send the Gospel, there is something that will respond. In some parts of the world lawful trades of various kinds have twined themselves round the Christian sanctuaries which have superseded the temples of idolatry. Even the lowest savage can appreciate commercial fairness and righteousness, but those tribes that have been sophisticated by a false civilisation have to an extent lost the sense of truth and kindness which by a benevolent commerce we may hope to restore. In conclusion the speaker beautifully eulogised life and conduct such as are consonant with the words "Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, good will towards men."

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC ON THE CONGO.

Rev. Dr. Ellinwood spoke on the rum and gin traffic on the Congo. He made at the outset a strong appeal for kindly treatment of what are known as the inferior races. The vast liquor traffic on the Congo has raised serious apprehensions as to Christian work in a field which was not long ago regarded with unmixed feelings of lively hope. However, the valley of the Congo is a common ground, and the evil raises international questions.

It is not a matter of temperance alone, but it is an enormity equal to cruelty to children—a conspiracy entered into by representatives of civilised nations against simple tribes who know not what they do. The speaker maintained that humane and pitiful persons of all classes—Protestant or Romanist, Christian or not—should unite their efforts to stop the iniquity, as the tendency and result of the introduction of strong drink is certainly to destroy every other development of trade. Incapacitated for thrift and commerce, the people will be ruined body and soul, if something is not done to restrain the evil-doers.

A second paper on the same subject was read by Rev. W. Allan, who gave a terrible account of the ravages of strong drink in the Niger region. He regarded this work as of the devil, to whom the dealers are really missionaries engaged in opposing the servants of Christ. Large quantities of ardent spirits are shipped to the West of Africa from several ports of Europe, and even persons engaged in the shameful trade acknowledge the many sad results.

Mr. Allan said that he saw whole streets and districts in some parts covered with bottles and jars which had contained gin and rum; indeed the very soil seemed to have been strewn with bottles. In one place again the church seats were empty gin boxes. In conclusion, the speaker asked his hearers not to be content with indignation, but to assist the Committee for the Prevention of the Demoralisation of Native Races by the Liquor Traffic, in its important and earnest endeavours to put down a crying evil.

THE OPIUM TRADE.

The last address was on the Opium Trade. It was delivered by Rev. Silvester Whitehead, with much feeling and force. He spoke what he knew, and emphasised the fact that there is absolute unanimity among missionaries as to the evil which opium works in the Chinese Empire. The whole six hundred missionaries in the country declare opium to be a curse, and say that the trade in the past was a monstrous wrong, and is still a gigantic evil. This is also the testimony and view of other men who are equally entitled to confidence, and many influential Chinamen support it.

Having explained the political considerations involved, the speaker pointed out that three great facts now claim attention. First, the consequences of the trade in the past remain and multiply to-day; secondly, notwithstanding recent international modifications, the trade is still going on with scarcely any perceptible diminution; and thirdly, the Indian Government is still manufacturing the opium which curses China.

It is our duty, said the speaker, both to stamp out the cause, and to undo the consequences of the evil. We have forced the opium into the country, and demoralised and besotted large masses of the people, so that now whole provinces are well nigh covered with it. About 80,000,000 of Chinese are said to be poisoned with the drug. We no longer force the opium into China, but we carry on the business, and pocket the money. In conclusion, Mr. Whitehead reminded the meeting that the people having spoken out on the subject of Indian army regulations, and on the licensing clauses of the Local Government Bill, Parliament had heard the demand, and conceded the public wish. Let a similar assault be now made upon the production of opium in India for the ruin of China, and then will be wiped from the escutcheon of England one of the biggest blots that ever defaced it.

DISCUSSION.

Dr. Robert Cust opened the discussion. He said that those who have helped to govern the great provinces of British India must not be regarded as Philistines. We are, he said, Christian men, loving missionaries, and helping missionaries, and from our midst have arisen men whose praise is in all the churches. I do do not justify the opium traffic. That is the matter of the British merchants. But remember that we hold India as a man holds a wolf—by the ears. (No, no.) I say we do. We wish China to be free, and China is free; if China lays a tax to include Indian opium, Great Britain will not fight to prevent it. Nor will Britain fight, if China, with a free hand, excludes opium. The Bengal monopoly is a hateful thing, but the handful of rich Scotchmen, Englishmen, and Americans interested would at once take the matter up, and the last state would be worse than the first. You say, Do away with the export duty! That would flood China with opium, and what would China gain by that? Stop the export from India! I should like to see any Government in the nineteenth century which would dare to forbid any nation to export the produce of the soil. What is more, this would be impossible. There are two thousand miles of sea-coast, and the combined fleets of England and the world could not prevent export. Forbid the cultivation, you say. That is a real radical policy! What civilised Government would forbid that? "The earth is the Lord's, and the produce thereof." Who dares forbid? I have lived twenty-five years among the Indian people. They cultivate other kinds of produce, and they pay their taxes and submit to the Government. But there is a limit to interference beyond which it is impossible to go. I say that you are seeking to solve a problem which you cannot solve.

Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, replying, said there are few missionaries who do not revere Dr. Cust. He continued: I am profoundly convinced that the opium traffic is doing more evil in China in a week than missions are doing good in a year. Consequently, one feels that this is an important question, which must be dealt with as in the sight of God. The common argument is that England cannot afford to do that which is right in this matter. I would say, however, that England cannot afford to do wrong. I question whether any of you have ever listened for an hour to the tortures of poor women, the wives of opium-smokers, and compelled on that account to live a life of shame. I have heard their cries, and I say that the opium traffic in China creates more slaves than the slave trade. We have there fifteen hundred walled cities, and in many of them not a week passes in which suicides do not take place through this traffic, which is responsible for sons being sold into slavery, and daughters to shame. It is never right to do wrong. What is to be done to remedy this evil? What we ask is that the Queen and Government of England shall not be the producers of opium. The Indian Government has taken this ground: that it has the right to prevent the production of opium except by the Government. Let it now say that it shall not be responsible for the production of opium at all. We ask no more.

Rev. F. W. Baller, of the China Inland Mission, stated that the cultivation of the poppy in China was entered upon in order that the Chinese might get the matter into their own hands, and ultimately deal with it in the way they might wish. The opium that gave the craving was certainly imported from India. Forty-six years ago Lord Ashley, afterwards Earl of Shaftesbury, brought the question before Parliament, and returning home, wrote in his diary, "I have hardly any support. Most people seem to think me a fanatic or a fool." A second attempt having also failed, Lord Shaftesbury led a third agitation, which has now been carried on for sixteen years. The late Treaty was certainly negotiated on different principles from former ones, but nevertheless the trade continues with all its evil and iniquity. The Christian nation of England is immediately concerned in the production, and the sale, and the profit, derived from that trade which is ruining the bodies and souls of innumerable Chinese.

Mr. B. Broomhall believed that never in the history of the world has one nation ruined another as England has ruined China. He did not wonder that throughout China there is a widespread prejudice against people from England. It is desirable that an organisation should be developed which will stir the mind and heart of England in a direction which shall gather effective strength. Then the Government will take the matter up, and deal with the evil. Personally he did not believe that England is sixpence the richer for the revenue accruing from this source. A famine comes, or a war takes place, and the money goes by millions, so that it is quite clear that the bag into which the revenue goes is one with holes in it. The Righteous Ruler of the world will never permit a nation to profit by such wrong-doing as lies at the door of Britain in the matter of the opium trade.

Rev. J. Fordyce remarked that all the missionaries in India, as well as those in China, are opposed to the traffic, which must, they declare, be abolished, because it is wrong. Not long ago a Vicerory said "We cannot" abolish. But which is to carry the day, the "cannot" of Indian officials, or the "must" of the Christian public? He held that the Government of Great Britian is more to blame than is that of India in the matter.

Mr. W. E. Blackstone, of Chicago, said that in the United States there is a sentiment prevailing that England is responsible for the condition of things. Colonel George Williams, a coloured gentleman from the United States, advised the strengthening of the popular sentiment of righteousness, so that Parliament may be compelled to take such steps as are desired. Dr. William Gauld, late of Swatow, maintained that we could do nothing as a nation that would bring the Chinese people more to our side, than by rising up, and saying, "This opium traffic on the part of the Indian Government shall stop." He once saw a crowd of people in China looking at something, and on examination he found that it was a figurative representation of an Englishman, with an umbrella in one hand and a ball of opium in another. Rev. Goodeve Mabbs, who was the last speaker, urged persistent agitation, and declared that the traffic "must go."

THURSDAY, JUNE 14.

Temperance Breakfast.

On Thursday morning a large number of delegates and members accepted the invitation of the National Temperance League to breakfast, in Exeter Hall. The Bishop of London presided, and, in welcoming the company on behalf of the League, spoke of the intimate relation between missions and temperance. The drink curse was terrible enough at home, but still more so among the tribes of Africa, and invited from the guests information from their own experience in heathen lands.

Canon Ellison, who represented the United Committee for dealing with Demoralisation from the Liquor Traffic, said the revelations brought before them showed that, bad as slavery was, this was worse—it affected body and soul. It would be useless to bring pressure upon our own legislature unless the Governments of America and Germany also acted. We must not allow the matter to rest. We have a right to ask the whole of Christendom to abolish this traffic.

Principal Cairns said the churches in Scotland were united in seeking the abolition of this traffic, and rejoiced that the Church of England was taking up this subject. He would co-operate, not only with all Christians, but with all men, in putting down this iniquity.

Pastor Rappard, representing the temperance societies of Switzerland, especially of Basle, said that saved drunkards become evangelists and go after their former comrades in public-houses, and lead them to the Lord Jesus Christ.

Rev. Dr. Post, Beyrout, had been distressed by seeing drunkenness added to Eastern vices in Cairo, and this by English people. Christians must begin the reformation at home, and at their own tables.

Rev. J. A. Taylor, representing coloured Baptist Church of Canada, earnestly appealed to England to stop the traffic, which was destroying his nation.

Pastor G. Appia showed that when King Moshesh was making a treaty with England in 1868, a French missionary urged that the introduction of drink should be prohibited. And, twenty years later, when English, Dutch, and French spirits were introduced, his brother told his people, "Stop; don't drink; our nation goes to the bottom."

Rev. Frank Ellis, Baltimore, said the question was whether we should keep the man from the drink or the drink from the man? He represented the Radical wing of the Temperance Army. We can't stop this thing moderately any more than you can fire a gun moderately. It goes off with a bang. We must cut off the tail of the animal close between the ears, like the shepherd boy dealt with the dog that killed his sheep. The speaker closed with an old but very touching story, and the meeting was summarily concluded, as the hall was required for another meeting.

Higher Education and Missions.

A very important discussion on this subject was held in the Lower Hall this morning. As will be seen from our report there was some divergence of view as to the relative value of college education as a factor in missionary effort. The discussion might well have been adjourned to a further meeting, as many experienced missionaries were ready to speak on this matter of vital import.

The chair was filled by Dr. Oswald Dykes, who said he could not speak from the standpoint of personal experience, but he believed the experience of others justified the wisdom of those branches of the Christian Church and those societies which have undertaken this description of work. Anyone who understands what the missionary enterprise really is, and has an adequate acquaintance with the past history of missions, will be able to feel its importance. We should carry with us the conception that while the methods vary the aim is the same. We are free, as Christians, to adapt ourselves to the varying necessities and conditions of human life and society. We must follow the example of Christ and his Apostles, and make ourselves all things to all men, and work through all the channels which may seem the most suitable and effective for christianising the mind and heart of the world. Therefore, one department of work need not entrench upon another. There has been in some quarters a jealousy of educational methods based on the idea that the simple proclamation of salvation through the Cross of Jesus, and the teaching of the most elementary truths of the Christian verities are the prescribed method by which the world is to be evangelised and brought to Christ. But there is no desire on the part of those who are most anxious for the higher education that it should supersede the preaching of the Gospel. Such an agency only supplements, and cannot supersede the Gospel. Its function is to take difficulties out of the way, and prepare the minds of the people to give to the Gospel a more favourable and intelligent reception. Is it not the case that with certain of the more barbarous races we must first civilise in order to pave the way for the Gospel? Then, why not with the more cultured people bring to bear on them the power of education with the same object? We must disabuse ourselves of all narrow and sectional views of the work that is committed to us in meeting all the needs of men, intellectual as well as spiritual. Therefore the intellectual study of Christianity in the case of those able to receive it must be as legitimate as to preach the simple Gospel message to the less cultured races. Such methods were adopted, we believe, in the earlier ages of the Church, in dealing with the culture of Greece and Rome, and in connection with the great catechetical schools at Alexandria and elsewhere, and without these efforts the progress of Christian truth would not have been so marked as it was. In the East to-day we have very much the same state of things to face, and we must adapt ourselves to the conditions. False conceptions, based on ignorance of scientific truth, have mingled themselves with the theology and the cosmogony of the Eastern systems of religion, and there is no means by which we can demolish these systems more rapidly than by scientific instruction.

REV. PRINCIPAL MILLER,

of Madras, read a paper on the subject. The exact function of higher education depends on the principles of Christianity, which seeks to adapt itself to all the needs of man. Speaking specially of India he confined himself to one class of the population, the Hindus. Each class of the Indian community has its own importance, but it is among the Hindus that the effects of higher education must be considered. Hinduism is pantheistic to the core. God is everything as well as everywhere. The system has impressed certain features of character on the people, and these must determine our action. Many of them accept what we say of Christ, but do not believe they should openly confess Him as a Saviour. He is to them only one of the Divine emanations. As to personal responsibility, they are not much exercised. The great thing with them is to be true to the social unity. It is to them what an adherence to the will of God is to us. There are few accessions to Islam from the Hindu people. The same is largely true as to Christianity. Very few have been won from Hinduism, and these mostly through education. What should the Christian Church do with respect to such a people? Among the non-Aryan races there have been great successes, such as that at Tinnevelly and elsewhere. Nevertheless, it appeared to some that the central Hindu mass of the Indian population ought not to be left out. They were craving for education, and that want had to be met. The effect of a non-religious education, if it stood alone, could not be doubtful. But it was felt that good teaching would work on the line of the benefits which Christianity confers. If the knowledge of a Saviour was made known, the need of a Saviour would be created. Personal responsibility would be awakened, and, as Hindu society is so much of a unit, that oneness would be influenced towards Christianity. Whether years or centuries might elapse before the full results could come, it seemed the imperative thing to do. But if Christian education is to work, it must be of an advanced kind. Thus it would prove the great factor in thought and feeling. One hindrance came from the prevailing mania for "examinations." The Madras College met with difficulties of this kind. Yet from small beginnings the College acquired power. Its object was to form character, and to inform their students as to the Divine purposes and workings. The progress was slow; but now the College is admitted to be the most influential institution in South India. Three Christian bodies have united in its support, and there has been no practical difficulty. The enemies of the work have exaggerated the scope of its tendency, but this is only a temporary check, and the results in the main are good. The spiritual power of the Word of God will assert itself, notwithstanding difficulties present or future. There may even be failure and temporary defeat, but the work of the past alone will show what is possible, and, if higher Christian education can thus open the great Hindu mind, we have every encouragement to go on.

REV. E. S. SUMMERS

spoke as to the position of the question in Bengal. To him it was enough if this agency seemed useful and necessary, though it might not be strictly Apostolic. Every age has its special gifts and needs. India may not be the hardest field in the world, but caste influence of itself makes it peculiarly difficult. As to the practical results there has been much discussion, and it may not be easy to estimate them correctly. We may long and look for results too quickly. The fact remains that, from the mission schools and colleges of Bengal there has come a body of Christian students that other agencies might not have produced. The work is silent, and the effects will appear. We have been accused of simply manufacturing heathen M.A.'s and B.A.'s; but that is not a correct account of what really takes place. The teachers are not mere crammers for examinations. In the most impressionable years of his life the Hindu youth is studying English authors, who are influenced and permeated with the spirit of Christianity. As surely as the literatures of Greece and Rome have exercised a heathen influence in Europe, so surely will English Christian literature do a work in India. The Government Colleges of India are doing a work for Christianity that their promoters did not anticipate, and their enemies do not suspect. If some of the people are now sceptics, God may lead them through that to a reasonable faith. But the teachers are not merely Christians; they are missionaries, and use every opportunity to enforce Christian truths. Is it nothing that the higher education of the country should be directed to that end? Surely we do not want to tax Hindus, in order to teach Christianity in Government Colleges. No missionary educator has failed in making his teaching Christian. There is also the great personal influence of the teachers, which is thrown into the scale. The students get to know about sin and their relation to God. If they get no further than this outside knowledge, of course, as regards themselves, it has failed in accomplishing its highest ends; but the influence of that knowledge goes outward and downward, and may be instrumental in leading others into fuller light. The students go where missionaries cannot go, and so, whether in pretence or in truth Christ is made known, and the way of the Gospel is prepared. The nature of sin is better understood, and this new light, producing among the people a craving after God, may pave the way for a great outpouring of the Spirit, where millions on millions may turn to God. This work is a most valuable auxiliary to the Gospel.

REV. J. P. ASHTON

read the third paper. He contended that the avowed object of all higher education is to lead the students to a knowledge of the Christian faith. The superiority of missionary education is recognised by the natives generally. All ranks and castes of the people are admissible to these colleges, but they are mostly of the middle classes. This is the very material from which Christians are likely to come. Perseverance in the work is sure to meet with its reward. The forces are silently working, and greater results may soon appear. The education produces manliness of character and independence of thought, and there are many grand openings for the Gospel afforded. The influence spreads far beyond the school and college. One of its results is the opening of the zenanas to the visits of Christian women. Some of the most hopeful pupils there are the wives or sisters of students in the mission schools. This education also enhances the position and power of the native Christians and the native pastors. The fact of the natives mixing freely at the schools breaks the power of caste, and personal character receives its true place. Lower caste people have thus an influence on those of higher castes, and a great hindrance is being broken down. The marvellous spread of the English language in India is revolutionising missionary methods and prospects, and is bringing the many diverse nationalities together in a most remarkable way. Young India is being welded into one through these studies, and the idolatrous systems must surely decay. The important Sunday work done in connection with these schools and colleges must be added to the purely educational efforts. The boys who are attached to their teachers will attend these Sunday-schools as well as the evening services, and in that way much direct Gospel and converting work goes on. Looking at it as a whole, this higher education is undoubtedly a very valued auxiliary, and, if carried on by high-minded men, its results must be great.

FREE CONFERENCE.

Rev. J. E. Padfield, for twenty years a missionary of the C.M.S. at Masulipatam, said he had been at the head of the high school there. Fully knowing the needs and dangers of the work, he thought these should evoke sympathy and help rather than criticism. There have been some splendid converts as the result of the upper mission schools. The lower castes, from whom most of the converts are drawn, are not Hindus. The school converts may be comparatively few as yet, but the masses of the people are being permeated with the truth, and in God's good time there will be a vast upheaving, when we shall see the results of this educative work. The large body of missionaries of different churches in South India all look with great respect on our friend, Principal Miller, of Madras.

Dr. Pringle, late of the Bengal Army, said he had a large knowledge of Hindus and Mohammedans, and he believed there was not such a thing as a strict Hindu who had been educated in one of these colleges. They are searchers after truth, and they willingly listen to the old, old story. Let the college teachers go on in their work; but let them remember that the character of the teacher is well known by the natives. If all the nominal Christians were as true to their faith as are the Mohammedans, very different results would be produced.

Rev. J. Ireland Jones, of the C.M.S., Ceylon, said that for thirty years he had been a preaching missionary, but he went to Ceylon to start the Missionary College at Kandy. He thanked God its Principal could now report that he is assisted by men who have the love of Christ in their hearts. We have been told truly that we should send out none but God-made missionaries. The educational missionary must necessarily be engrossed in secular matters, and there is need that he should be a man of the very highest spiritual qualifications. It is an absolute necessity that all the teachers should be earnest Christians and full of the Holy Ghost. If we employ non-Christian teachers, we may fill gaps in the teaching staff, but we are going beyond our commission, and the results will not be what we desire.

Mr. J. E. Mathieson, of Mildmay, said he had not been in India, but he had studied the Christian religion, and the story of its victories. He thought there was abroad a very insidious form of unbelief as to the power of the Holy Ghost to work in the minds of the heathen. If you cast out a false belief without getting in a true belief, there is a danger of men getting away from God altogether. This college system does not honour God sufficiently, and He will not honour it. The results have been comparatively meagre. A very large sum is spent on educational missionary institutions by the Free Church of Scotland, and we find from their last report they have only 5835 church members in their missions all over the world. If one quarter of the money given to education were expended on medical missions, there would be tenfold results.

Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson thought that if higher education was bad for India it was bad for England. Let us be consistent, and carry the principle of objection right through. As the result of personal observation, he was becoming more and more convinced that the educational work is doing for the future of India far more than we have ever anticipated. The best, most intelligent, and most sympathetic hearers of the Gospel are the young men from the mission schools. We ought to use every form of work that will bring Christ to the people. If the teachers are Christian men, they must do Christian work. India is a very important field; but what about China? In visiting China his first impression was the deplorable absence of higher education among the people. In North China he was told that only three per cent. of the people could read. The literati of China, crammed with their ancient learning, are the great enemies of Christian missions. Our Chinese missionaries ought to look at this aspect of the subject.

Mr. Shillidy said history proved that there must be much preparatory work in all lands, and the past will repeat itself. This preparatory work is going on in the East in the levelling process, even in the Government schools. The question is: Should we expend mission money on educational work? Higher schools, he thought, should be mostly self-supporting. At the same time, Scripture ought to have a foremost place. With respect to results, we have not much to say in many places about the results of bazaar preaching or of Bible distribution. Yet these agencies are among the best we have.

Mr. R. Paton said he had an experience of forty years in India, and had studied the educational systems in that country. Having come in contact with those educated in the colleges, he maintained that the results were most inadequate. The urgent Gospel message is covered up by the large attention given to purely educational work. Paul had to speak to a highly educated set of people at Rome, but he declared that it was the Gospel alone that could reveal to them the righteousness of God. There are many Hindus who know the plan of salvation, but they do not repent and become converted. We must revert to God's plan, and then we shall have success.

Dr. Post, of Syria, speaking of educational work in Turkey, said four leading men in Christian work there were Druses who had been converted in the Protestant College. This college includes representatives of all the societies at work in the East. It is therefore a missionary college. The students come from all parts of the field. Picked out by the missionaries, they are sent there for training; if they are not converted, the concentrated power of the college is brought to bear on them with this object. It has trained 800 young men, who are now scattered throughout the Arabic-speaking world. Would you blot out this lighthouse from the Mohammedan lands of the East? A great revival in the college four years ago was the means of a still greater work of grace throughout the land.

Rev. S. Whitehead, of China, referring to what Mr. Wardlaw Thompson had said, remarked that missionary work in China began with higher educational work, and it was considered largely a failure. The students at the Anglo-Chinese College did not turn their studies to the best account. The real question surely is: What is the due proportion to be observed between educational and preaching work? In South China, at any rate, 50 per cent. of the people are educated. China is a great book-reading country, and we need educated natives to write these books.

Rev. W. Gray, of the C.M.S., said the Government of India had admitted that the purely secular system is deteriorating the people. We cannot expect Government to give greater support to Christian schools, and, therefore, we must do more than ever in furthering this kind of work. The C.M.S. make a grant of £300 a year to Dr. Miller's College in Madras, because they believe the Gospel is being preached to the students. Let there be more co-operation in this work; then it will cost less, and there will be better results.

Women's Work in the Mission Field.

Professor MacLaren, of Montreal, Canada, presided over a large meeting on this subject this morning. Rev. John Murdock, secretary of the American Baptist Missionary Union, read portions of a paper devoted to an examination of the powers which women exercise in the mission field, and the avenues through which they could best influence their sisters in heathendom. It urged that all female missionaries receive a thorough medical training, and particularly so as they were best given to the training and moulding of child life. Women were the born teachers of the race. During all the earlier years of life a child was under the forming hands of woman. Their quick apprehension, their power of nice discrimination, their gentleness of spirit, and winsomeness of manner, their plodding and reiterative patience —combine to make them the wisest and most effective teachers of the young. They were fitted to work in mission schools, hospitals, and in visiting Hindu homes. Houses and schools should be established for the enlightenment of caste women, training and direction should be given to those best suited for Bible-women, and woman should be given to private effort or instigation rather than public work. The paper also especially recommended that women missionaries should recognise the headship of man in ordering the affairs of the Church of God.

Miss Child, of America, read the second paper, which also dealt with the work of women in India. It mainly endorsed the sentiments of the previous paper, its originality being an important reference to the temperance cause in India. Miss Child stated that the blue ribbon could be seen on mission stations all over India.

The Chairman spoke briefly on foreign missionary work, although it had been somewhat neglected by very reason of the vast home missionary effort. But still something had been done. He (the speaker) had been connected with the organisation of foreign mission work in Canada for twenty years. There were twenty-three missionaries in foreign lands, sent by the Wesleyan Foreign Missionary Society of the Western Section of Canada. They used to find it difficult to secure missionaries; now they were not prepared to accept one-third of those who offered themselves. In connection with the Graduating College of which he was a professor, one-half the students offered for foreign service.

A somewhat emphatic protest was offered by some lady missionaries to the sentiments embodied in the first paper, having reference to the headship of man in ordering the affairs of the Church.

Miss Jessie Phillips, of China, bore testimony to the good work Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt has been doing in connection with the temperance cause. In Peking she worked amongst the women with much acceptance, and the results were solid, likely to stand the test of time.

Mrs. Clarke, of the China Inland Mission, spoke against the deprecation of slight medical knowledge, and strongly opposed the idea that even the merest knowledge was of no use. It was advisable that a missionary have a little rather than none at all, and she had found what little knowledge she possessed of incalculable benefit. This was especially so when travelling long distances. Then she packed in the pannier, on the back of her donkey, amongst the Gospel literature, a few simple medicines, The ministry of healing, or relieving the sick, opened up a way for the ministry of the Gospel.

One or two other ladies recounted similar experiences in India and China.

Government of Native Churches.

At a meeting this afternoon in the Annex this important subject was considered. Bishop Stuart, of Waiapu, who presided, said the question was most difficult and delicate. He quoted from a paper he had received from a friend, a high authority abroad, in which it was stated that to make one ideal Church for India is neither Scriptural nor practicable. All the longing after a great ideal Church is contrary to God's dealings with the world at large, and to the New Testament idea of the Church of Christ. Difference in language is God's way of dividing nations. We cannot improve on God's plan. Let us not trust to outward organisation, but rather to the inward, for the kingdom of God cometh not with observation.

REV. MR. McGREGOR

gave his experience of church organisation in Amoy. With regard to creeds, he said, I am a Presbyterian, and our creeds are pretty definite. We, in China, had for our creed, the Westminster Confession, Shorter Catechism, and alongside of these we had the Confession of the Reformed Church of North America, and the Heidelberg Catechism and the Dutch Confession. Laying all these as a burden on our native Presbytery, it could not but be heavy. With the assistance of the native Presbytery we have prepared a brief Confession, which all the children in our native schools can commit to memory. The same Confessions have been brought into Japan. But the Japanese have declined to adopt them. They have virtually decided to adopt the Articles of the Evangelical Alliance as their Confession.

REV. C. WARREN, of the Church Missionary Society in Japan, said the question as to when the native converts are to be left to manage their own ecclesiastical affairs is a question of development among the churches themselves. We are not to plant churches dependent on the mother churches, but to establish independent churches. When the native Christian churches get to that point of development that they are prepared to support their own institutions, no power outside of their own country, civil or ecclesiastical, should interfere with the development of God's work among the natives.

MR. HENRY E. CLARKE,

from Madagascar, a member of the Society of Friends, said he had laboured there for fifteen years, shoulder to shoulder with those of other societies. We do whatever we can, he said, to let the native Church have that form of worship they feel and we feel most adapted to them. Ours is not an English, or Scotch, or a Quaker Presbytery; it partakes of all of them. I am a kind of bishop; I have forty churches under my care. People are continually coming to me. I lead them to help themselves. What are we striving to do with this native Church? They have raised during the last few years nearly £2000 for the extension of the Gospel for the outlying tribes. When they hear the Gospel, their hearts are changed and they rush forth, and we lead them, so far as we are able, in carrying the Gospel to others. This is church organisation in Madagascar. We must not transplant our English notions to other lands. We must lead, not drive, otherwise they will not have anything to do with us. They will not be driven, but they will be led, and may be coaxed, and that is what we want to do.

PROFESSOR THOMAS SMITH,

of Edinburgh, said that, as a Presbyterian, he wanted the people of India, when he worked among them, to be Scotch Presbyterians. He wished them to be Christians in respect of life, doctrine, government, discipline, everything else. But it cannot be, and it should not be, that they should be Scotch Presbyterians, or even Scotch Christians. Hindus and Malagasys who are Christians, are not the less native because they are Christians, and not the less Christian because they are natives. The Government of India and the churches of India should conduct their operations with a view to cutting their own throats: that is to say, the Government should govern in such a way as to prepare the natives as early as possible to govern themselves. So our missions should be conducted, so that the native churches should be self-supporting and self-governing. The Government of India has been too rapidly pushing forward the natives when not prepared. The same is true in regard to church organisation. The development of church organisation must rise naturally, it must not be patched on to European systems and methods, but must grow into a true Christianity. The question is one upon which a great deal depends, and there is need of the exercise of heavenly wisdom on the part of those who have the regulation of it.

REV. J. HEWLETT

confined himself to the point: How soon can we venture to throw large responsibility upon the native churches? It is evident, he said, that the period of preparatory training will vary in different countries according to the intellectual capacity and development of the people. The work in the Sandwich Islands is very largely developed, and a large number were gathered early in the history of the mission. It may reasonably be asked whether the management of those churches by the natives is not delayed too long. The whole responsibility could not have been thrown upon the Sandwich Islands as early as in the case of the churches in Japan, where the natural resources of the people are greater, and their culture of a much higher grade. As the readiness to give to and sustain the work develops, so you may begin to throw upon the natives the responsibility of managing their own ecclesiastical affairs. If you don't throw upon them some responsibility, you cannot expect them to give, and labour, and consecrate themselves.

A missionary from Holland said he had heard some brethren, who have a right to speak with authority, say that a church must not be considered independent unless it can support itself. In the New Testament he did not find that.

Rev. Robert Craig, a director of the London Missionary Society, asked when the foreign element in the management of native churches should be withdrawn. It has sometimes been found that with the withdrawing of European influence the moral character of the members of those churches has degenerated.

Rev. Dr. Green, of the American Mission, and forty years a missionary, said he had been thirty-two years a missionary, chiefly in Jamaica. We do not find there, after more than 165 years of work, that the advance made is so great that we can trust the churches to the natives yet. We need the supervision of the Europeans still; and none of the societies feel they can give up the supervision.

Rev. Daniel Gray said, everyone must feel the difficulty about the native churches. We try to make them self-supporting all through India. Our principle is to give grants to those native churches; but we have introduced the system of reducing every year the annual grant, so that ultimately it expires. We avoid anything that would stereotype and bring out into sharp relief points of difference between the denominations. Therefore we encourage the natives to look Christians of other denominations in the face. We say, as to the drawing up of systems, Do not be in a hurry; let God guide us as to further developments.

Missions to Roman Catholics.

Lord Radstock presided over a meeting on this subject in the Lower Hall. In introducing the first speaker, he briefly urged a due toleration in considering it.

Rev. D. H. McVicars, of Montreal, read the first paper, in which he disclaimed the idea that Roman Catholic foreign missions have made any great headway. They claimed in India, Indo-China, China, regions adjacent to China, Oceania, America, and its islands, 2,742,961 adherents, but this did not represent a third of the headway made by Protestant missions. The paper then traced out the reasons for the manifest success there was in the Roman Catholic mission fields. The workers were so far successful, because the work was distinguished by unity and comprehensiveness of plan; aggressive and persistent zeal in gathering all into the fold; use of coercive measures; dominancy of ecclesiastical authorities; unworthy and unjustifiable methods of support, and the suppression of the Word of God.

JAPAN.

Rev. Emanuel Vanorden, of Brazil, read a paper which clearly emphasised the statements of the previous speaker, and showed the effect made on localities by the pernicious modes of procedure.

Rev. Mr. Stott, a missionary from Japan, said that three centuries ago the Roman Catholics commenced their mission propaganda in Japan and they boasted a million converts. Then came a time of horrible persecution when all who named the name of Christ came beneath the ban of Government oppression. Their spies entered the valleys, the name of every Christian was taken, and they were afterwards captured, stowed like slaves on overladen vessels until international interference compelled the Government to return the natives to their homes. The effect of the persecution remained, as he could state by personal experience. He had been into the villages, and there he saw the native surrounded by idols, but when they found the missionary praising Jesus they admitted that they were Christians. He had sent native teachers to seek out these men, and teach them Gospel truth; but the men he sent could not find a single man ready to own himself a Christian—they were afraid to trust one another. When these men, however, turned from one idol worship they embraced another; they worshipped of the Virgin Mary. But now he rejoiced in the fact that there are 30,000 openly professing Christians in Japan; the Government no longer mistrusted the Protestant missions—indeed, it challenged them to come. He rejoiced that there is now an open Bible, and that the Lord Jesus Christ is openly and fearlessly preached.

BIBLE LANDS.

Rev. Dr. Post gave testimony to the effect of Roman Catholic propaganda in Bible lands, and showed that in all matters touching missionary effort, the Protestant missions took the lead, and the Roman Catholics copied them. The Protestants started medical colleges, and the Jesuits did the same; the former founded girls' schools, and the latter founded female colleges. The Protestants printed the Scriptures, and this actually forced the Jesuits to do the same, and no matter what mode of translation they used, they could not stamp out God's Book. The speaker closed by citing an instance of the ultimate conversion of a whole family to Protestant Christianity, by reading the Bible. The work began with the eldest son, and, although disinherited and thrust out for a time by his father, his Christian life and prayers afterward resulted in his parents reading the Bible, and being converted, together with the younger son.

INDIA.

Rev. H. Williams described the stealthy attacks made by Roman Catholics on Protestants in India. They usually gained entrance to a village by the aid of a member of a Protestant mission, who had been expelled for some gross sin. The priest would get hold of the man, and tell him to call himself a Roman Catholic, and he would be forgiven. Another way of impressing the Mohammedans and heathen was to prime some witness in court to ask the judge if the Bible were a Protestant one, and then to declaim before those assembled, "It is not the true Bible, I cannot kiss it."

Dr. Murray Mitchell especially pointed out that the Roman Catholics were better able to impress the natives by their missions than the Protestants, because the processions they organised were similar to heathen rites, and therefore acceptable to those whom the Roman Catholics sought to win.

Rev. E. E. Jenkins drew a contrast between former visits to India, and one which he lately made. He was surprised to find that the Roman Catholics were holding out most enticing inducements to the natives. They had built hospitals, charities, and such-like institutions of the most inviting kind, and thus used every possible means to add to their converts. They never took a backward step, they were always moving; they believed in victory, and therefore they were successful.

Rev. John Hesse said that the priests primed the natives to come and ask the Protestant missionaries all manner of questions. They came to him and asked him if Luther was a good man; but he always answered them that he did not preach Luther, but Christ Jesus. The priests disseminated literature in India, and one of the most injurious booklets now being circulated was one called "The History of the Fold," in which it was pretended that Luther was everything that was bad. The success of the Roman Catholic missionaries lay in the fact that they were more self-denying than the Protestants; and they were less fettered by family ties (a doubtful advantage). We imitated them too much in their outward forms and ceremonies by baptisms, communions, leaning on the fleshly arm of State power, pictures, and even the use of the magic lantern. He found that the native thought it all magic, and no lantern. And, lastly, they had to fight against the overwhelming belief which was instilled into the people that the whole world would ultimately be subjected to the Romish Church.

East and Central Africa.

This part of the Dark Continent was the subject set down for consideration at the meeting in the Large Hall on Thursday afternoon. The chairman, Mr. Edward Rawlings, briefly emphasised the importance of the field under survey. Africa has been styled the Dark Continent, and so it is, not only by the prevalence of superstition, but from the cruelties practised by the slave traders. May it not also be called the martyr land? It has for us, therefore, a sad and deep interest from the fact that so many of our loved ones have laid down their lives on its behalf.

MR. EUGENE STOCK,

Editorial Secretary of the C.M.S., said he had seen in the hall that day three godly, honoured widows of men who had died in Africa, one of them being Mrs. Hannington. The mention of her name was received with cheers. Going back to 1837, Mr. Stock described the departure for Africa of Herr Krapf, of the Basle Mission, who, after many vicissitudes in Abyssinia, was expelled from that country. He was told at Mombasa, by traders, of the great lakes in the interior. Having lost his wife and child, he wrote home that now there was a Christian grave in Africa, and he summoned the churches to step into the land and found their mission work on it. Twelve years later, in the rooms of the Geographical Society in London, there was exhibited the first attempt at a map of Central Africa, very different from what it is now; it showed one vast interior lake. Travellers went out—Burton, Speke, Grant, and others. In 1858, Speke discovered the Victoria Nyanza. Livingstone had rediscovered Nyassa in the far South, and sent home the news. In 1863, a telegram came to London that the sources of the Nile had been settled. In 1874, there came the news of Livingstone's death, and that was the real starting-point of modern missions in Central Africa. We all know about Stanley's travels, and the outcome in the taking up of missions by Scotch and English Churches, and the Universities' Mission. There were failures and deaths, but the work went on. In 1876 eight men from the Church Missionary Society went, viâ Zanzibar, to the shores of the Nyanza to plant a mission; the only survivor in Africa to-day is Alex. Mackay. In June, 1877, King Mtesa received them at Uganda, and gave liberty to preach the Gospel. By November two of the brethren were killed and others had died. In March, 1882, there was the baptism of the first five converts, and at that very time James Hannington was preparing to go forth. He went; was obliged to return after a time; but he again set out for the land of his adoption. King Mtesa had died—considering all the circumstances a man to be honoured. His successor began to persecute. As Bishop Hannington was starting from the coast there were 173 converts worshipping in Uganda. Hannington had only reached the borders of the kingdom of Uganda, when he had to lay down his life, leaving his name as an inspiration to us all. There followed great and bitter persecution, but the converts stood faithful. Later on, Henry Parker, another young bishop, went out. He was the fruit of a Mohammedan convert at Cambridge, who was himself the fruit of high school work in India. Only last week there came the accounts of Parker's death. He and his companions considering how they could relieve young Gordon, who is a hostage with the king. Bishop Parker and Mr. Blackburn took fever, and both died within a brief space. Mr. Stock stated, in closing, that Mr. Barton, of Cambridge, had suggested the formation of a Prayer Union for Africa; any friends of that Continent who wished to join could communicate with Mr. Victor Buxton, at the Church Missionary House, Salisbury-square, E.C. A great work, added Mr. Stock, is also going on among the rescued slaves at the coast. In February, last year, as a thankoffering to God, the congregation at St. Paul's, Onslow-square, gave £3000 to be devoted to the support of lady missionaries in East Africa, and this effort has been commenced.

PROF. DRUMMOND'S TESTIMONY.

The Earl of Aberdeen, who entered the meeting, accompanied by the Countess and Prof. Drummond, before Mr. Stock's address, took the chair as President of the Conference. He said that as the Professor had been asked to address the Conference, he thought this would be a convenient time for him to tell something of his experiences in East Central Africa. Professor Drummond said that, though not a missionary, he very gladly responded to the invitation to offer a traveller's testimony to the importance, value, and success of the work going on in the heart of Africa. He wished his friend Mr. Bain had been present himself, but he is one of the men referred to by Mr. Stock as being at their posts. He had actually put his foot on the little steamer on Lake Nyassa with the intention of coming to England. He was shattered with fever; his holiday was overdue; his widowed mother was waiting for him in Scotland. As the ship was leaving the shore, he turned to the band of natives who had come to see him off. He knew that the slaver had been busy in his district during the past month or two, and these poor natives were being left like a flock of sheep in the wilderness without their shepherd. He ordered his luggage to be put on shore again, and the boat came away without him; and he is there now. That is the kind of stuff that African missionaries are made of, and it takes such stuff to do mission work in Africa.

For what is the problem? Suppose one day a small boat of strange build, propelled by a force unknown to civilisation, came up the river Thames containing half a dozen Esquimaux. Suppose they pitched their skin tent in Battersea Park, and gave out that they had come to regenerate London society. Suppose they took England generally in hand, trying to reform its abuses, and above all trying to convert every subject of this kingdom to the god of the Esquimaux. That is very much the problem which our missionaries have to face in Africa. A few years ago a small band sailed up the Zambesi and up the Shiré into Lake Nyassa, and settled at Livingstonia, where they set to work to leaven the native tribes along the 350 miles of lake coast with the spirit of Christ. Several years ago I went and saw the station. I found the houses in perfect order, reminding one of a sweet English village. But as I went from house to house I found they had no inhabitant. Then a native came out from the forest, beckoned to me, and drew me in a few yards among the mimosa trees. There, under a huge granite mountain, I saw four or five mounds; there lay the missionaries. Not one of them was left in Livingstonia. One by one they had sickened and died of fever, and the small remnant had gone on and planted a new station 200 miles further up the lake. There, against fearful odds, they are carrying on their work.

You ask me what kind of work it is. You can understand it from the illustration I have used of the Esquimaux. They cannot preach much to these people. They simply have to go and live among them—that is to say, they have to live as best they can; because life in many of the districts is almost impossible. I shall venture to leave a question with these missionaries. I should like to ask whether they are unanimous in the opinion that it is right to go on in the face of what is plainly a barrier of God, in some of these regions, against white men living there at all. I do not answer it, but many a night in Africa I lay looking at the stars, and asking myself whether it was right or wrong. That question has haunted me every day since I came from Africa, and I cannot allow this opportunity to pass without taking the liberty of putting it to you who know so much more about it than I do. I do not think so much of saving the lives of a few men (that is of no relative importance), but on the grounds of political and missionary economy. We have a thousand guns, say, and a dense enemy on the other side. Is it right to sacrifice these guns in places where the risks are one to one, in some places two to one, and in others three to one? Until we have evangelised the safer portions of the globe, are we quite sure that we are right in sending our noblest men to fight the fever—a fever which no man has yet got to the bottom of, or been able to find a cure for, and a fever which no man who has been there has ever escaped?

The Professor proceeded to say that, in the presence of African missionaries, he could not go into any details of missionary work there; but, as an illustration of the value of missions that had come under his own observation, he told the story of the Bandawé lad, Moolu, who had accompanied him on his African travels, and who proved to be honest and trustworthy. He described the incident told in his recent book on "Tropical Africa" about Moolu gathering together the other natives in the evening for prayer, and said that Moolu's character never broke down once. This lad was one of the converts from Dr. Laws mission.

One word, not so much about the work as the workers. I was taught to believe that the essential thing for a missionary was strong faith; I have learned that it is more essential to have great love. I was taught that he needed to have great knowledge; I have learned that more than knowledge even is personal character. I have known of men who could make zealous addresses at meetings at home, who left for their fields of labour laden with testimonials from churches and Sunday-schools, who became utterly demoralised within a year's time, because they had not love nor stability of character. This cultivation of the spirit of love is a neglected part of a missionary's education, but it seems to me a most essential one. And I would say that character is the thing to be certain of in choosing a man for such a field as Africa. The strain on a man's character there is tremendous, owing to the climate; upon his spiritual life it is more tremendous, owing to the isolation. We must be very sure, therefore, that we are sending out men of character and of heart; men who are sound to the core, in a large and brotherly sympathy for the natives. It will be centuries yet before these people about Lake Nyassa can learn much of our theology. Meantime, they watch the lives of the men we send. Everything they say and do, every gesticulation and every action, is making its mark, and it is mainly by the silent influence of their lives that the spirit of Christ can at present be conveyed to these people.

THE CONGO.

Rev. David Charters, of the Congo Mission, said most of the European nations were to-day deeply interested in Africa, and were anxious to secure a foothold on that Continent. As a reminiscence of Livingstone, he said that, sitting one night on the steamer Peace, last year, with Mr. Stanley, they spoke of Livingstone. Stanley said, "If Dr. Livingstone were alive to-day, I would take all the praise and all the honours that men have showered on me, and lay them at his feet, and say, 'Here they are, old man, they are all yours.'" One of the most promising features of the work on the Congo is the simplicity of the people. Wherever the Gospel is preached in sincerity, souls are converted, and their lives bear out their profession. Contrast the natives of the interior with those at the coast, and we find that the latter are made ten times as bad by their intercourse with the white man. Surely we are not going to wait till the same contaminating influences penetrate the interior. At Stanley Pool and beyond we begin to realise the magnitude of the Congo. There are a thousand miles of clear waterway from the cataract island. Though there are four missions at work, there is room for many more. The work is worth living for and dying for; surely many will give themselves to it.

METHODIST MISSIONS.

Rev. Thomas Wakefield, of the Methodist Free Church Mission, said that East Equatorial missions began with the thought and purpose of Dr. Krapf, of whom Mr. Stock had spoken. In 1861 four young missionaries of the Methodist Free Church sailed for Africa with Dr. Krapf as the leader. A work was begun among the Wa-Nyika tribe, and it has been characterised by many vicissitudes. Churches and chapels have been built, schools established, and literature provided, while educational and evangelistic agencies are quietly working for the elevation of the people. A good work has also been done among the Gallas. It was in the Galla region that Mr. and Mrs. Houghton laid down their lives for the cause of Christ. Some of the people prove responsive to the care bestowed on them, though it is found that the contact with the corrupting influence of the coast hinders the work. Something has been attempted for the elavation of the freed slaves, but they are sometimes set adrift uncared for, and their condition is then as bad as when they were in bondage.

BLANTYRE.

Rev. A. Hetherwick spoke of the work of the Church of Scotland Blantyre Mission on Lake Nyassa and in the Shiré Highlands. This work sprang out of the grave of Livingstone, and was started as a monument to his memory. Mr. Hetherwick made an urgent plea, in the same terms as those of Prof. Drummond, in his recent book, that the great waterways should be kept open for Africa, and that Portugal should not be allowed to bar the way to the interior. He gave some details of the Free Church Mission at Lake Tanganyika, the Universities Mission, and the Blantyre Mission among the Shiré hills. Up on the heights there Europeans can live and work. It is a soldier's duty to die, if needful; but it is the duty of the general to spare as many lives as possible. In the hills, a native Christian community is being gathered, and the missionaries are looking out for the best people who may go down to the valleys and evangelise their fellows. For the future missionary of Africa must be the African himself; it will not even be the American freedman, who goes to Africa as ignorant of the people as the Englishman. The African Lakes Company is a trading community, but its work is telling splendidly in favour of freedom to the black, and of righteous dealing throughout the land. Letters have recently come from the Lakes telling of attacks by the slave traders, and the people appeal to us to interpose so that the trade may be stopped at its source on the coast. Will not our Government put its foot down on this infamous commerce in human life. Two Scotch brothers Buchanan have settled near Blantyre, and are planting coffee and cinchona. They, too, are doing a good work by their Christian example. The missionaries cannot as yet say much about results, but they ask their fellow Christians at home to help them to meet the real needs of Africa, and for that purpose to send out their very best.

South Africa and Madagascar.

In continuation of the afternoon meeting, this subject was taken up in the evening in the Lower Hall. There was a good attendance and the proceedings began with some earnest words from the Chairman, Mr. E. Crossley, M.P.

EDUCATION IN MADAGASCAR.

An excellent representative of Madagascar was found in Rev. W. E. Cousins. The story of the martyred church of that country, he said, would never die; and in more recent times the history of Madagascar has brought it prominently before the public. On arriving in the island in 1862 the missionaries of the London Missionary Society found 700 or 800 declared Christians. Now there are in connection with that Mission alone 1200 Christian congregations, and nearly 1000 schools—the latter carried on by the London Mission and the Friends' Foreign Mission combined. There is therefore much ground for enthusiasm and hope, if we only look at the present state of the country. Confining himself mainly to the educational work, Mr. Cousins spoke of the sudden expansion of all branches of Christian effort on the conversion of the Queen in 1869, From twenty or thirty, the number of schools rose to 350. Every child is obliged to go to school, though the Government provides no teaching or payment for teachers. There are therefore no other than mission schools, and the missionaries are the very life and soul of the education of the people. Two men are continually engaged in examining these common schools. There are also higher schools; of these there are four in the capital. The crowning educational institution is the London Missionary Society College. Three hundred young men have passed through it. It provides secular education, and many of the students go into Government offices. The founders of the College have left their mark on the Institution, and it is well that the Government, who claim the services of every subject, should get men who have been trained in such a place. The men who are coming to the front to-day in Church and State have passed through the College, and they are in many instances living useful Christian lives. The work is not merely educational, but religious; there is a constant endeavour to raise the Christian tone of the College. The Scriptures are largely circulated among the children of the island, many of whom are members of the Bible-readers' Union. As they grow up, and become Christian men and women, they will hand on the Gospel to the coming generations. If we cannot in every case point to individual conversion, we see a great change coming over the face of society.

THE STATE OF MADAGASGAR CHURCHES.

Mr. H. E. Clarke, a member of the Friends' Foreign Missionary Association, spoke on the harmony that had long existed between that Society and the London Missionary Society, and how they worked hand in hand in furthering the good of the people. The churches were at flood-height in 1871, because of the influence of the Christian Queen. The chapels were filled with people, though many of them seemed to be still in heathenism. Now, the numbers are smaller, but those who go are personally influenced by the Gospel. Still there are many dark points in the lives of the people, just as there are in the lives of many in this highly favoured Christian land. Testing times have come to the churches of late, but they are stronger now than before the war with France. Mr. Clark strongly animadverted on the conduct of the French during the war, and said he regarded the termination of that struggle as a direct interposition of God in answer to prayer. It was when the trials of the people were at the highest during the French bombardment that the Sunday-schools took deep root in the country. The people are very liberal in their contributions to the work of the Home Missionary Society, and young men go to all parts of the country to labour in connection with it. Every subject in Madagascar is virtually a slave of the Queen. This enforced service is a universal custom, and if it disappears, as it very likely will, slavery will go with it. As things are, the freemen are often in a worse case than the slaves, though, of course, that can be no excuse for slavery.

BASUTOLAND.

Rev. A. Boegner spoke of the work of the Paris Mission in Africa, referring especially to the results of the mission in Basutoland. The missionaries, he said, had more than once, by their wise counsel and information, saved the Basuto tribe from destruction. The people are very grateful for this. There are eighty voluntary schools, besides many other educational agencies. The liquor traffic had recently begun to creep into the country, but by prayer and effort this has for the time been averted. Recently a revival has spread over a part of the country, and there has been many converts. The people are very poor, through wars and bad harvests, and help is needed to sustain the work of the mission.

Rev. G. Appia also put in a plea for Basutoland For sixty years the Paris Mission has been working among the Basutos, not seeking to propagate political influence, but to preach Christ. As the country is under English protectorate a special claim rests on England to support missions in that country. The pastor made a strong appeal for English help. The fruits of missions among the Barotsé, he said, are appearing, and on every hand there are encouraging signs.

THE AUTHOR OF "AUSTRAL AFRICA."

Rev. John Mackenzie said he had been delighted with the freshness and ability of some of the American friends. After all, this is a time not merely for rejoicing, but for humiliation. It is to our disgrace as Protestants that our propaganda is only 100 years old, seeing that 1900 years have gone since the Lord's command was given. The tendency in the Church from the first has been to give too much attention to self-improvement, to the forgetting of the other duty of making the conquest of the world for Christ. In speaking of South Africa, Mr. Mackenzie said the Moravian brethren were first in the field. Wesleyan missions dated from 1821, and the Scotch Presbyterians began in the following year. The Presbyterians are united in South Africa, though so much split up at home. In 1828 the Paris Mission began, and later on several others entered into the field. A long roll of names of earnest workers in the South African fields was recited by the speaker, most of them being men who died full of years, and of fruitful toil. Many others, however, laid down their lives prematurely, through the deadly climate of the northern swamps. The presence of David Livingstone's bones in Westminster Abbey, Mr. Mackenzie regarded as a pledge and inspiration for the continuance of the work he began. Speaking of the Hottentot population of Cape Colony, he said, many of them are now members of the village churches. At the beginning of the century they were the most degraded of people. It had been doubted whether Christianity could rouse such degraded people, but facts speak louder than words. Those Hottentots in South Africa who were once so low in the scale are now good subjects and good Christians. Missionaries in South Africa at first met with opposition from the colonists, who objected to their chattels being turned into men. Now the Dutch colonists have come, not only to approve of missions, but are themselves engaged in the work.

THE TRANSVAAL.

Herr Merensky, of the Berlin Mission, said there was much silent work going on over the world, and specially in the Dark Continent. In connection with the Berlin Mission there are twenty thousand baptized people, contributing £5000 a year. The Boers, before 1860, refused to allow any missionaries to settle. On reaching the land of Soecokoni, the speaker said he found several devout souls, who had been praying for some time for a blessing on the country. At one time he preached to eight thousand of the king's warriors, but the king himself was a weak, deluded man, and persecuted the converts. They took joyfully the spoiling of their goods, and at last they were driven out of the country. None of the Christians, however, renounced their faith. When the king commanded them to relinquish their Christian books, they replied, he might kill them, but they would not forsake their Saviour. The king, after being deposed and afterwards restored, was ultimately killed, and where he lived there is now a Christian village. The Berlin Mission has many flourishing stations and converts. Polygamy is not tolerated among them; it disappears before the power of the Gospel.

AMATONGALAND.

A Swiss missionary, working among the Amatonga tribe, in the Transvaal, said the Boers would not admit the French, but being Swiss they were allowed to settle. Since 1875, the New Testament has been translated, 700 converts brought into fellowship, and a line of stations formed from the Transvaal to the sea. Work is also being done at Delagoa Bay. The native evangelists are most faithful workers, and around the Bay a good work is going on, though it is not much known. American missionaries are also labouring, and all the tribes from Zululand to the Transvaal are having the Gospel preached to them.

ZULULAND.

Rev. Jas. Scott, of the Presbyterian Mission in Zululand, said that during the last year the number of converts has been very many. He had himself baptized 160 Zulus within the last six months. Even the Boers, who formerly opposed the French missions, are now themselves carrying the Gospel to the people, whom a few years ago they would have looked upon as on a level with the Baboons in the hills.

HELP FOR THE WEAK.

Mr. Macfie, of Liverpool, said we had heard of those who are strong in faith but weak in numbers. Shall we not take advantage of the presence of so many earnest workers from different parts of the Christian world to bring pressure to bear on the nations, so that oppressed peoples may be relieved. We ought to do our utmost that the influence of Protestant nations may be used on behalf of those who are struggling against heavy odds in defence of religious freedom and the rights of conscience.

Women's Mission to Women.

In the evening Rev. Dr. Baldwin, Bishop of Huron, presided over a large public meeting, at which the subject of discussion was "Women's Mission to Women." In some opening remarks, the Chairman referred with pleasure to recent developments in Christian work. As the time of the coming again of the Lord draws near, fresh energies are being drawn out, new means are being used, and powers are being put into activity which have long lain dormant, and amongst others is this great feature of modern Christianity—the noble mission of women to women. He eulogised the work, and suggested that, out of gratitude for what Christ has done for them, English women should deny themselves the gratification of transient pleasures and fancies, and devote what they would cost to the sending of labourers to India and other dark countries, to tell of the love of God, and of the blessed provision which Christ made for women as well as the world at large.

CHINA AS A SPHERE.

Rev. W. S. Swanson, from China, was the first speaker. He referred to women's work of modern times as a development, as he had never known a time when there had not been such labourers in China, to say nothing of the exertions, which had been put forth by the wives of missionaries. He said that if the mothers, the wives, and the daughters of a country are secured for Christ, the men are sure to follow; and in no country has a woman more influence than in China. So long as woman's mission is kept in its proper place, it can certainly accomplish what men cannot do.

There are difficulties to face. Those who go have to go into a new civilisation, and to tread on ground more dangerous than they sometimes are aware of, but in the work of education an immense service is being done, not only among the young themselves, but indirectly among their parents also. Therefore the speaker maintained that China, of all other countries, is the field for the mission of women. The Empire is awakening, and now is the opportunity. She must either start into life or be buried out of sight; but she is not going to be buried. Here is the chance for pious women, and the female population is constantly sending forth a wail which calls loudly for the light and liberty of the Gospel as well as education.

OPENINGS IN JAPAN.

The second address was by Rev. C. F. Warren, of Japan, who spoke of the many auguries of successful Christian work in that interesting country. The women have not been in the degraded position they have in other countries, but have long been a great power both in society and politics. The children are under regular instruction, and the way is gradually being prepared for the reception of the Gospel. Higher education is well to the front also, and the openings for missionary ladies at the present time are many and important. What is wanted is that this educational work should be accompanied by Christian teaching. Many things combine to accentuate this call to service for Christ, and already much blessing has attended the efforts of women in the country.

There is a great opening just now for work in mission schools. The Americans have done a great deal in this and in other respects. First in the country by some ten years, the Americans have ever since kept to the front. Especially are they ahead in women's work. The labourers do not go over in ones and twos, but in sixes and dozens, and their schools have been remarkably successful. In evangelisation, also, the women have been greatly blessed. In conclusion, the speaker earnestly begged for more female labourers for Japan.

WOMEN AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Rev. Dr. Langford, of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church, U.S.A., was sure that, more than the men, more than church pastors even, the women of America are now alive to the great opportunity which is before the Church of Christ. There is no Board of Missions connected with any of the American churches which has not its women's auxiliaries in some stage of advancement, and in certain instances these auxiliaries are doing the major part of the work.

Looking back upon the past, with its record of glorious enterprise and results, and looking to the future, with its blessed possibilities and opportunities, the speaker thoroughly believed that woman is to take a larger part than in the past in the evangelisation of the world—not only by going out into the field, but by looking to things at home. In the work of organisation, and in getting together and putting into shape the facts which may kindle the fire of enthusiasm for missions, the women have a sphere of great influence.

The pastor cannot find time, and has not the aptitude to do many things that are expected of him. In America the women have realised this, and they are taking the missionary interest quite into their own hands—editing papers, distributing tracts, sending out reports and circulars, and, having faith to believe that it is by the Spirit of the living God that great works will be accomplished, they have organised prayer unions, to present the matter continually at the Throne of Grace. In conclusion, the speaker prayed that God would own woman's work by making it a blessing to the entire human family.

INDIA'S NEEDS.

Rev. G. S. Karney, of India, pointed to the condition of that country consequent upon the influence of the present education system. The sanctions and usages of the old religions have been discarded, and nothing is put in their place. The thoughtful men of the Hindu and Mohammedan community have taken alarm, and hence an urgent need for Christian workers. The demand is for education based upon the pure morality of the New Testament. India is waiting for English women; from Ceylon, also, the cry is, in effect, send us more women to teach us on the basis of Christian truth. Not mere educationists, not mere orthodox Christians are wanted, but consecrated workers for Christ, going in the power of the Holy Ghost, to tell and show the Gospel and its power.

A great desideratum is to have native women raised up in India as well as other countries to carry on the work. Some such have been raised up already, and much is to be expected from them. Moreover, all mission stations should be strong, so that when labourers come home for rest there may be others to take their places. Entered upon in faith and prayer, the great work in India is sure to produce ere long results which shall make the hearts of all friends of missions leap for joy.

IN PRAISE OF MISSIONARIES' WIVES.

Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, Secretary of the London Missionary Society, was the next speaker. He remarked that again and again the missionary's home has been the first object-lesson of love in heathen countries, and the wife has generally been the great helpmeet, carrying on work which her husband could not undertake. Therefore in all that is said about women's work, the wives of the missionaries should not be forgotten. They have worked hard, and often without any recognition. They long ago realised the importance and magnitude of the field open to women, and, as a consequence, societies have been formed specially to provide women missionaries to help in the evangelisation of the world.

IN WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Crowther, in a brief address, referred to the educational work of women on the West Coast of Africa. Long ago, among the freed slave children at Sierra Leone, invaluable services were rendered by ladies. Men were helpless with their threats and scoldings, but by kindness the ladies enticed the children to school, and taught them with great success. To-day also, ladies are filling very important posts in the Niger territory.

OPEN DISCUSSION.

Mrs. F. J. Coppin, of the African Women's Methodist Episcopal Missionary Society, spoke in eloquent justification of feminine activity in many spheres. Mrs. Edge, from China, asked Christian mothers to put no obstacles in the way of their daughters, should the Lord call them to go abroad, and point benighted women to Christ. Mrs. W. S. Blackstock, of the Women's Missionary Society of the Methodist Church in Canada, spoke of labour in Japan. The door is open, but labourers are still few and encouragement small. Entering upon the missionary enterprise with a simple desire to do work for Christ, the church which she represented has received in itself much spiritual profit. There is to-day much more prayer to God for blessing upon Christian missions in general than there was before the Society was formed. Mrs. Thomson, who for some time lived in Matebeleland, South Africa, was the last speaker. She related some veritable miracles of Divine grace. Savages have been transformed to Christians. Even in their ignorance these people have hearts like ours; and their countenances speedily light up when the story of God's love is told. The Gospel has done much in many parts of the coast, and women have done their part.

FRIDAY, JUNE 15.

Training of Native Workers.

The Lower Hall was well filled in the morning for the consideration of this subject. The Hon. Eustace C. Fitz was chairman.

REV. R. STEPHENSON,

Wesleyan Missionary Society, read a paper, in which he said: Missionaries abroad, like missionaries at home, find that churches which God has richly blessed are the homes in which He is most accustomed to raise up devoted and effective Christian workers. Admirably conducted theological institutes had been established at Allahabad and Lahore. The question of training, in the vernacular only, or by means of the English language, hardly admitted of a brief reply. In the higher schools for boys, and the normal schools for girls, the question is settled in favour of English for both these classes. It would be wise that some pastors, at least, should be trained in English to minister to these. There can be no doubt as to the wisdom of encouraging an American or European education for a fair number of natives, whose Christian character seems sufficiently strong to resist the temptation to be spoiled by the advantages, and who will return to their native land to become wise and able leaders of the native churches. We should Christianise India by the methods which have been best proved successful in other lands.

REV. JOHN HEWLETT, of the London Missionary Society, said the evangelisation of a great heathen land like India must be accomplished through the agency of her sons, men to whom the language of the country is their mother tongue; who from childhood have been familiar with the feelings, the modes of thought, and habits of the people, and to whom the climate is native and genial. Among such men, when converted, we look for those who shall leaven native society with Gospel truth. In Ceylon, where the Wesleyan Missionary Society began its work in the East, it may claim to have done not a little in the raising up of a native ministry. By the side of sixteen English missionaries, it has now forty-nine native ministers and forty-six catechists and evangelists. There can be no antagonism between the two methods. To secure efficiency they must be combined. To secure good native workers, it is necessary to give increased attention to the training of the children of Christian parents. Bible teaching should be made a prominent study in Theological Seminaries. The chief difficulty an experienced missionary has found with his native missionaries is their habit of getting into debt.

Rev. J. N. Murdoch, D.D., said the great hope of the future is that native missionaries shall be raised, educated, and trained on the field. He deprecated the notion of bringing them to England; an English education brought a hot-house growth. In England many have lost the spirit, the power, and the piety they formerly possessed. There ought to be schools for them on all the mission fields.

Rev. Dr. Charles Aiken, of America, said the native workers would come to America and England, and if they submitted to the rules of the institutions, they must be received. It had been stated that the college training killed spiritual life and piety, but that was denied; they strove to foster it. Jealousies might crop up on their return, but these were likely to occur in any case.

Rev. W. S. Swanson said a training in Western colleges was most disastrous to native Chinese teachers. They had no wish to return to the native church. The native teachers ought to be trained in the face of the circumstances in which they will have to work.

Rev. G. Owen, of Peking, China, pointed out that if native workers are to receive an English education it must be good and thorough. This would take a long time, and it would probably be wasted time, because when they returned to their native country they would inevitably be drawn into mercantile or Government life; and then the only way to keep them would be to offer salaries far beyond the power of the Mission. It would create a caste feeling amongst the missionaries; and whilst a man with a purely native education might be a better missionary than the man with an English education, the former would be looked down upon by the latter. Such a system could not fail to cause dissatisfaction. The education should be particularly in the Bible and in spiritual work.

Rev. C. F. Warren, of Japan, remarked that in the country he represented the Government is teaching English in the primary schools. He thoroughly endorsed the idea that a native training is necessary, but at the same time there might be cases where the English training would do good. Rev. Thomas Smith thought that if the natives meant to come to England and America they would. He had used his influence against it, and the results had not been good when the men had come. The work in India had been accomplished by the native Church, and not by the English missionaries. Natives who are Anglicised are tempted by Government inducements which spoil them for mission work.

Rev. Dr. Post, of Beyrout, observed that benevolent American people gave their money with the idea that they were furthering missionary effort in the East, by supporting the education of the natives in America. They spent enough to keep the six native colleges going, and then the men whom they returned were of no use. It cost them one hundred dollars to educate a native at Beyrout, but if he went to Princeton it cost six hundred dollars, and then the men did not come back in any evangelistic capacity.

Prof. S. B. Welch, New York, thought that the natives, if they came, should be made well aware that they should go back to precisely the same position they left. They cannot be stopped from coming, and they should be allowed, if they are willing, to go back to the position they left. There were cases where God's will was evidently moving these men, and they went back with the intensest desire to work, and not with the missionary spirit gone. If seminaries at home or abroad are so miserable as to chill the missionary spirit, then they ought to disband. If theological seminaries dishearten, chill, weaken, and tend to infidelise, let them be prayed for.

Rev. L. Dhale, of the Norwegian Missionary Society, having spoken, Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson drew attention to other and smaller fields of labour where these same difficulties are likely to arise. The people in Africa and the South Seas are a people separate from all others, and they are now coming into closer contact with Europeans. The labour of giving to these small communities books in their own languages raises the question whether it would not be advisable to instruct the native missionaries in English. The question looked small when compared with the two great mission fields, but it was an important one.

The consensus among the missionaries present was that training on the field was the only wise course, and the Conference seemed duly impressed with the fact.

The Missionary and Literature.

At a meeting in the morning, presided over by Dean Vahl, of the Danish Evangelical Mission Society, "The Missionary in relation to Literature" was the subject of an interesting discussion. The importance of the press was duly recognised, and its vigorous maintenance and use was urged by all who spoke. Free distribution of literature was not, in a general way, recommended; though it was admitted that in exceptional circumstances books as well as tracts may very properly be given away.

INDIA.

A paper by Rev. Dr. Weitbrecht, of the Church Missionary Society in the Punjaub, was read by Rev. Dr. Dyson, formerly of Calcutta. It opened with a statement of the needs of the illiterate masses of India, and gave a description of the condition of the educated youth of the country. The reading community is rapidly increasing, and the Christian churches are becoming larger, so that there is more than ever a demand for missionary literature. Much that is morally pernicious is put forward to supply that demand. The reading habit of those who are educated cannot be said to be strong, but very few who pretend to education neglect the newspapers. All schools and congregations should have a lending library, carefully replenished with good books and tracts. Each language area should also have a Christian vernacular newspaper, and the wide desire to use the English language should be taken advantage of, by English works of a religious character being constantly kept under the public notice. Books should be got up in an attractive and suitable manner. The Church must enlarge her ideas of missionary labour, and recognise the importance of the services that may be rendered by Christian publishers and booksellers in the country. Literary missionaries, men of experience, not neophites, should also be provided, and efforts should be made to train natives for taking up and carrying on the work in course of time.

CHINA.

Mr. David Maclaren, of Putney, read a paper which had been prepared by Rev. A. W. Williamson, LL.D., of Shanghai. It dealt with the subject from a Chinese point of view. Wenli is a means of communication among Chinese in all parts of the world, and there is a predilection for literature among the people. There is scarcely a family in China but has one member capable of reading, so that books written in Wenli have a remarkably large number of readers. Picture-books are a great attraction; a chromo-illustrated book becomes a family book, and once it gets into a household, no time is lost before someone has been found to read and explain the letterpress. What a powerful instrument such books must be! The people of China have a great enthusiasm for learning. In no other non-Christian country is there such an esteem for scholarship, and to-day many departures are being made in the appropriation of Western science, and in the study of the English language. Light is welcomed from all directions, and a forward feeling is spreading throughout the entire country. The youths are all ears and eyes, and asking, "What next;" and, as the years pass, they become more and more curious as to science. Hence the need for a Christian literature, for not only Western knowledge, but, sad to say, Western vice has been introduced. It is with the Church of God that the elevation and salvation of China rests—even speaking in a worldly sense. How shall the case be met? First by more missionaries, then by the Press. With good books and periodicals, the entire people may be touched, and the whole empire permeated. At present we have no Christian religious periodical worthy of the name in China.

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS.

The Earl of Northbrook, who is president of the Christian Vernacular Education Society, expressed himself deeply interested in the subject. He acknowledged the valuable services of Dr. Murdoch, of Madras, and spoke in detail of the excellent school and other books which that devoted friend of India has had translated into various languages, and published in many parts of the Empire. His lordship referred with regret to the weakness of Christian effort in the direction of influencing India by means of the press, and emphasised the great importance of the Gospel being placed before the youth of India at the present time, when, by force of education, they are discarding the religions in which they have been brought up. He expressed a warm desire that the Conference would signalise the beginning of real practical work in the provision of vernacular literature for non-Christian countries. Another way in which good might come out of the Conference was by the eliciting of information as to the truth, or otherwise, of the statement that literature of the most degrading kind is exposed for sale on the bookstalls of Indian railway stations. Authentic information on this subject would make it possible for steps to be taken in the direction of coping with the evil. If possible, also, a committee should be formed, with a view to ascertaining how far, by combined effort or otherwise, the work of providing vernacular literature may be promoted.

DISCUSSION.

Mr. R. A. Macfie pleaded for cheap books, and contended that Christian authors should be less strict in regard to copyright. Mr.

Henry Morris, of India, spoke in favour of combined action by missionary societies, for the provision of Christian literature in India. As the country was conquered, and is ruled, under European superintendence, so the work of evangelism should be conducted by the natives under missionary guidance.

Mrs. M. C. Nind, of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, gave an account of the starting and "running" of newspapers on behalf of the women of India, alike in America, Germany, and several parts of India, in various languages.

Rev. Dr. Young Allan, of the Board of Missions, Methodist Episcopal Church (South), spoke of what has been done to meet the demand for religious books in China. Books in Wenli can be read not only in the Chinese Empire, but in countries beyond which get their light from China, the communities comprehending five hundred millions of people. Personally he had translated ninety volumes for the Chinese Government, works of history, geography, and applied science. He was acquainted with the work of other men who had been engaged in this, and it gave him joy to say that not one character, not one syllable, had been written in opposition to the spirit of Christianity. Mr. Henry Clarke, of the Friends' Foreign Mission Association, Madagascar, told of the useful service of the printing press in that island.

Dr. Murray Mitchell maintained that the literary missionary is no novelty. Poisonous literature is now being so widely circulated in the East that it is high time that the Christian Church rose to the importance of the printing enterprise.

The discussion was carried on by Mr. J. Archibald, of the National Bible Society of Scotland, in China; Rev. W. J. Wilkins, of the London Missionary Society, in Bengal; Rev. T. G. Selby, of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society, in Canton; and Dr. Robert Pringle, late of Bengal. The last-named urged that as the bookstall is an attractive feature of the Indian fair, it is desirable that the Gospel should be on sale there. The last speaker was Rev. W. Stevenson, of the Free Church of Scotland Ladies' Society for Female Education, who suggested organisation. A really undenominational society, a Christian Literature Society for the Foreign Feld, is what is wanted, to take the place which is at home occupied by the Religious Tract Society, and the British and Foreign Bible Society. The suggestion seemed to command hearty approval.

Relations between Home and Foreign Missions.

In the Lower Hall on Friday afternoon this very important topic fell to be considered, under the presidency of Dr. Brown, of Paisley (in the unavoidable absence of Mr. Campbell-White). The chairman announced the death of the Emperor of Germany; and this mournful circumstance coloured the touching prayer of Dr. W. M. Taylor, of New York, who sent up earnest petition for the bereaved ones. He specially prayed for our widowed Queen, and her now widowed daughter, thus united more than ever by the royal bond of a common sorrow. The Chairman made further reference to "the heavy tidings," and expressed deep sympathy with the German people in the unspeakable loss that has befallen them. A resolution of sympathy submitted to all the meetings of the afternoon was read and adopted. Let us look, said the chairman, at the bright example which the late Emperor has left to us, and, instead of unduly mourning, let us give thanks to God for his servant, departed this life in his faith and fear. Dr. A. T. Pierson, in seconding the adoption of the resolution, referred pathetically to the wide sympathy expressed among the nations when President Garfield lay dying. Sorrow cements the nations as no commercial treaties can do. The resolution was adopted by a silent rising vote.

Coming to the immediate object of the session, the Chairman said that interest in foreign missions does not by any means diminish interest in home missions. All experience shows that those who give most for the work abroad are the most willing to work at home. An enlarged interest opens our minds and our pockets too. What is the great hindrance that our missionaries meet with abroad? Too often it comes from the selfish and un-Christian policy of our home commerce that sends its deleterious drugs to the heathen peoples; and from the inconsistent lives of nominal Christians abroad. So we are forced back on the home field, to consider what we can do to bring all classes of our people within the scope of the Gospel. Experience proves that generosity for the foreign field, by the expansion of sympathy and the habits of liberality, react on support of the work at home.

of Edinburgh, read a paper on the reaction of foreign missions on the life of the Church at home. There can be no doubt, he said, that the Churches at home have nothing to lose and all to gain by the furtherance of work abroad. It is an elementary revealed truth that the redeemed Church of Christ holds all her endowments of grace and privileges for the salvation of the whole world, and nothing less. Therefore, the Church that is non-missionary is to that extent non-Christian. Such a Church directly sins against her own self-interest. Disobedience to Christ's commands means spiritual poverty. The Church, therefore, must be missionary, if she would be pure, and strong, and prosperous. There is no provision by which she can be so, if she ignores her primal duty. History yields ample proof of the principle laid down. If a Church has not the power of self-propagation, she has not the resource of self-support. Every time of blessing abroad has reacted on the Church at home. Self-centred movements in the Church have done two things. They have given us a terminology largely unpreachable to the world at large, and they have also introduced a party spirit that has borne sad fruit. In view of all the facts, we must conclude that missions abroad must be the strength of the Church at home.

How can all this be brought home to the Church? She needs to learn what her true self interest is, and to take the same lookout on the world as her Master took. When she does this, the whole landscape will appear in its true perspective. Let the Church abandon her occasional missionary sermon, and make missions the main object of her life and work. If there were more simplicity in the methods of the home Church, there would be more to expend on the world. . We should send the flower of our sons and daughters to the foreign field, and keep in touch with them and their work. The reflex influence of a good, true, and noble missionary tells marvellously on the Church that sends him out. We need money, sanctified by the motive that gives it.

PROFESSOR AIKEN, OF PRINCETON,

said the first point to be emphasised is the Lordship of Jesus Christ. When as a Church or an individual we are brought to this point, we break out at once with Paul, and say, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" If Christ is Lord, we are to serve Him, and our orders are to come from Himself, both as to place and method. If there are any reservations, we have to take the place of the penitent, ere we can become a servant. To some minds there is a romance about the foreign field, but, if romance is all, that will soon vanish. Self-regarding considerations may tend to keep us at home, but we must beware how far these are allowed to go. Consecration to work abroad will give us a grander idea of the universal lordship of Christ over the world's wealth, and science, and art. Now we can go to a foreign field rapidly, and telegraph ahead the message of our coming, so that all the great strides in modern discovery are but handmaids of the Gospel. We learn, too, that we are put in trust with the Gospel for the whole world. We are not trustees to keep to ourselves, but to give out what has been so generously provided by our common Lord and Head. Faithfulness to this trust will teach us where the stress is to be laid in matters of doctrine that relate to the great vital truths, and how small in the presence of heathen systems are our petty differences in questions of Church order and method. We shall also be taught the oneness and the true unity of the Church.

PROFESSOR LINDSAY, OF GLASGOW,

did not like to speak of "the relations" existing between home and foreign work, as they are one and the same thing. Revivals at home are the great parents of foreign missions. The Pietist revival in Germany, and the Wesleyan revival in England, are proofs of this. The Free Church of Scotland was really born of the home mission work of Dr. Chalmers, and the foreign work of Dr. Duff. A Church which neglects the one, cannot do the other. Foreign work, like mercy, is twice blessed. It is a limitation of our Christianity that we can scarcely feel how big a thing it is. Purely congregational work is well enough in its way, but how it belittles our Christianity if we confine ourselves to it. The visit of a real live missionary brings home to our minds that we belong to the great catholic Church of Christ, the wide world over. Then, as a practical matter, have not foreign missionaries and their wives taught the home Churches the value of women's work. Foreign work also has impressed on us the need of caring for bodies as well as souls. Another thing which we at home have not yet learned is to get the converts to become missionaries among those of their own class. The sectarian differences that we cherish here disappear abroad, and in this we will find the secret of true Christian unity at home.

DR. F. A. NOBLE, CHICAGO,

submitted some propositions on the reflex influence of home and foreign work, which may tersely be stated as follow: (1) We are taught that the salvation of Jesus Christ is for all souls everywhere. (2) Interest in foreign missions advances the sense of unity among Christians at home. (3) The value of individual souls is enhanced. (4) Liberality in the home Church is educated. Ten years ago he went to his present church in Chicago, $60,000 in debt. After years of struggle, they had decided they could not give anything to foreign missions, and little to home missions. He asked for a collection for foreign missions, and they woke up to the fact that they had something to give, and they swept off the debt. (5) Interest in foreign missions helps to hold the Church to the simple evangelical truths of the Gospel. What is the use of going to Japan or China with a philosophy or a godless science? Only the Gospel of Jesus Christ has in it the power of God unto salvation.

In the after discussion, Principal McVicar, of Montreal, said that foreign missionaries have taught the home Churches how to do work among the masses of the highways and byways. Then, are not foreign missions the most convincing proof of the power of Christianity? Downright meanness and downright extravagance are too often the double characteristics of the Churches at home, and foreign missions teach us liberality.

Rev. Dr. Taylor, New York, spoke of the loss it would be if there were no literature of missionary biography. It has lifted our personal and pastoral life. Then the success of our foreign missions furnishes us with an answer to infidelity and scepticism at home. As the quinine grows by the side of the quagmire, so this success comes as an antidote to the objections raised. For these missionary conversions are no question of development or evolution, they are a special creation of God. Dr. Schauffler, and Dr. Judson, both now labouring in the slums of New York, are the sons of foreign missionaries.

Rev. John Hewlett, of Benares, as a missionary, emphasised some of the points previous speakers had made. As to doctrine, he said he had found that only the presentation of the great vital truths of the Christian faith is powerful to change men's hearts.

Among the other speakers was the venerable Dr. Kennedy, late of Benares, who protested, as an old missionary, against the idea that there should be one standard of consecration for Christian workers at home and another for those abroad. He recalled a conversation he had with Dr. Duff in India, in which that illustrious missionary spoke of meeting Christians in the old country who had their gigs and carriages and what not, but who laid down the law to him as to the self-denial he ought to practise. Rev. J. La Trobe, of the Moravian Mission, pointed to the history of that Society as one of the most indefeasible proofs of the important connection between a revived spiritual life at home, and the prosperity of missions abroad.

India: Northern and Central.

A public meeting was held in the Large Hall in the afternoon. The Earl of Northbrook presided, and the subject was, "India: Northern and Central." His lordship delivered an introductory address, full of Christian solicitude for the people of India. English possession of India has, he remarked, been blessed to the millions of its population; but, he added, how little has been done to benefit the country spiritually! He rejoiced that such a Conference had been convened, and fervently hoped that much good would result from the deliberations. When he was in India, he saw how cordially missionaries of various denominations could agree to forward true Christian work, and he was convinced that this attitude of loving forbearance was highly desirable in heathen lands. The Mohammedans are now going in, with the Hindus, for a Western education, and the movement is likely to have very important results. As for zenana work, he thought it destined to become the most powerful engine of Christianity in India. Only the religion of Christ puts woman on a level with man, and when the poor women in India realise what Christianity can do for them, they will certainly exert themselves to the utmost of their power in furtherance of those great social reforms which accompany the religion of Christ.

Rev. E. S. Summers, of the Baptist Missionary Society, delivered a forcible address. He declared the Roman Catholic communities of India to be very nearly lifeless. The Protestants are increasing in a much greater percentage than the Catholics, who are without the Christian Scriptures, and also without spiritual knowledge or experience. There is much said about the scepticism of the youth of India; but the grounds for many of these statements are somewhat slender. There is much indifference, no doubt, but there is but little scepticism such as is known in England, where it designates men who resolutely refuse to entertain or investigate Christian truth. As a fact, the scepticism of India is to a large extent of an honourable character. Having given up the old religion, young men of education are looking round in doubt and perplexity for something better.

There is religious movement in the country, and the so-called "scepticism" is very different from what goes under that name in this country. The speaker told a story plainly showing the drift of the movement. A Brahmin of high caste on his death-bed called his son to his side, and said: "If ever you forsake the religion of your fathers, you had better become a Christian. I know not whether any religion is true, but if any is, it is Christianity." Doubtless that poor man had intellectual difficulties in accepting Christianity himself, but it is remarkable that he should have regarded his son's change of religion as almost certain. On the whole, Mr. Summers saw many things to encourage him in his work in India.

CHEERING RESULTS OF LABOUR.

Rev. T. R. Wade, of the Church Missionary Society in the Punjaub, was able to tell of a large number of conversions from Mohammedanism, and from high and low castes of Brahminism. Among native princes and among social outcasts hearts have been touched, and lives devoted to God. Among the labourers for Christ are some devoted voluntary missionaries —retired gentlemen and their wives—and of the ladies at work a considerable proportion are honorary. In conclusion, the speaker acknowledged the hearty and earnest work of the American missionaries in India.

The third speaker was Rev. John Traill, of the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland Missions in Rajpootana, who spoke of some of the indirect results of missionary work. He held that baptisms and communions by no means represent the results, but that the indirect consequences of evangelistic labour are greater than are those which are direct. In the schools there are five thousand scholars, who, after five years' instruction, go out to take their places in the community.

Visiting from house to house, from temple to temple, and from grove to grove, the speaker had for a quarter of a century come into contact with all classes of men, whose religious thought is in course of being modified, slowly but surely. The missionaries are now welcomed into the villages, and are confided in to a remarkable extent; secrets that have been withheld from brothers have been committed to the missionaries. So the influence is working, and greatly affecting those who are not Christians. Again, there are secret disciples everywhere.

There is throughout the country, in all stations and spheres, a wide conviction that Christianity must prevail. The idols are distrusted and abandoned; the priests are in many places less respected than the missionaries; and, more than that, the priests are complaining of poverty, as, instead of silver and gold, only brass is being given by the dissatisfied people. Reforms as to child marriage and the re-marriage of widows are now being advocated by the people themselves, and with this popular movement there is a multiplication of debating societies in the country.

There are two singular prophecies current among the people—one that in twelve short years the river Ganges is to lose its sin-cleansing power; and, another, that the sinless incarnation has yet to appear in the world. Verily the day of light is dawning in dark India!

Rev. Dr. Phraner, of the Reformed Church of America, the last speaker, gave some details of recent visits to mission stations in India. In giving the country a good system of education, England is doing a grand thing; but in giving that education without a knowledge of the Gospel, she is doing a very perilous thing. He maintained that India has been given to Britain for instruction in light and truth.

South India, Ceylon, and Burmah.

With the exception of an adjourned discussion on social customs, there was only one meeting on Friday evening in the Large Hall. The weather proved very unfavourable, but a goodly number of friends, nevertheless, assembled to hear reports concerning the southern portions of India and Burmah. Sir Robert Fowler, M.P., took the chair. After a sympathetic reference to the death of the Emperor of Germany, he proposed a resolution of condolence with Her Majesty the Queen, to be sent by telegram. It was seconded by Mr. Hugh Matheson, and cordially passed. As to the question of Indian missions, Sir Robert said he believed Providence had given that great country to England that she might give it the Gospel. If we do not do so, we shall have failed in our real mission to India. Other nations have sent their missionary agents there, and we wish them God-speed, but Great Britain is peculiarly responsible for the evangelisation of her great dependency.

REV. WILLIAM BURGESS

said there was a kind of success in missions which no report can tabulate. Upwards of two millions of Indian youth are receiving a liberal education, and except in missionary colleges it is purely secular. This secular training, devoid as it is of moral restraint, is leading to the disintegration of all faith, leaving the people not only creedless but godless. There are professors in Indian universities who do not scruple to call Christianity a well-worn, time-eaten superstition. Far-sighted Hindoos look with misgiving on the existing state of things, and statesmen must take account of it. Each missionary school is a standing protest against this tendency. It is a mistake to suppose that these schools are not popular because the Bible is taught there. No other institution in South India is half so popular as the Christian College in Madras. Hindoo students are attracted by the story of the Cross, and education has done much to break down heathen prejudices and overthrow idolatrous sentiment. But we must give them something more substantial and abiding. The India of the past is dead, and it cannot be resurrected. The prevalent unrest shows that the old moorings are slipping away, as we see in the Broma Somaj movement. These movements do not go so far as we would like, but we ought to help them so far as they go. These men must advance, and their position calls for a sympathy which they do not get from orthodox Hindooism. There are very strong forces quietly at work. Young men had come to him and said they were Christians at heart, though they could not avow themselves openly on the side of Christ. There are thousands to-day who may never enter the Christian Church, but he had stood by the deathbed of some of them, and they died in the faith and hope of Jesus Christ.

REV. DR. W. M. TAYLOR, U.S.,

said he was neither a West nor an East Indian, and certainly not an American Indian, but he had to do with a church (Reformed Church of America) that had been much associated with Christian work among Indians. The name of Dr. John Scudder is a household word in America because of his devotion, and that of his wife, to the cause of missions in India. Seven sons and a daughter were all of them consecrated to the missionary service, and after being educated in America, all returned (with one exception) to work in India. From that family has sprung the Arcot Mission, which has been carried on side by side and in full harmony with the work of the Church Missionary Society. Beginning as it did with a medical mission, such an agency has always been carried out, and the work has greatly developed. By and by it is hoped that the churches connected with it will be self-supporting and self-governing. For twenty-five years Dr. Chamberlain stood alone the sole white missionary among about three millions of people. He came home to America in poor health some two years ago, but he has now returned to the field with his wife and a son, the counterpart of himself, leaving other sons to follow on. Such men are true Christian heroes. Before Dr. Chamberlain returned he appealed for 50,000 dollars to establish a Christian seminary in Southern India. He went back with 65,000 dollars pledged for the object he has at heart. As soon as a native church can be established Dr. Chamberlain purposes to amalgamate his mission with it, so as to promote the unity of the Body of Christ. The forward movements on the mission field always come from the missionaries, and the hindrances and obstructions come from the Church at home. Like the negro standard-bearer in the civil war who, when ordered to come back with the colours, shouted, "Dese colours never go back; bring de men up to de colours," so let the Church send forward her forces to the help of the solitary standard-bearers in the high places of the field.

REV. A. H. ARDEN

said we ought to feel that we are only as yet on the threshold of missionary work. The London School Board in 1886 spent twice as much on the education of less than half a million children as all the churches devoted to the work of missions to the 250 millions in India. Speaking of the numbers who are Christians at heart, referred to by Mr. Burgess. Mr. Arden said that was encouraging, but it was not real Christianity, if there was no bold, open confession of Christ. As one goes to to village after village which has never been evangelised we feel that little is being done to reach the masses of the people. Though many of the Indian officers and civilians may be "black sheep," there are some of them who are among the heartiest and most liberal supporters of mission work. Some details were given by Mr. Arden, of the Tinnevelly Mission, in connection with which there are 100,000 converts, many of them of high caste. This is the result of concentration, and now the whole of the European missionaries are withdrawn, the work being altogether carried on by the natives themselves. The native Church may not yet be able to stand alone, but that is the point to be aimed at. Many of these villages in South India are longing for a native teacher, and it is for us to make such arrangements as will enable the Church to respond to these calls.

REV. F. ARMSTRONG,

of the Telegu Mission, in connection with the American Baptists, said he had been sent to the Conference as the delegate of the Telegus, Karens, and others in Burmah, even one Mohammedan contributing £10 to the fund. The Telegu Mission was begun fifty years ago, and for thirty years there was little result. It was even proposed to remove the missionary to Burmah. It was called the "Lone Star" Mission, and an American poet, the author of the American National Anthem, wrote a historic poem looking forward to the time when there would be a galaxy of stars there. That prophecy has been gloriously fulfilled. A veteran missionary, Dr. Jewett, would not relinquish the mission, and he went back with Mr. Clough, being stationed at Ongole. Ten years more, and scarcely any fruit appeared, but at the end of that time a wonderful work broke out. A famine came, but the preaching went on, and thousands sought baptism. They were not encouraged to come in that wholesale way, but ultimately there were baptized in one year 10,000 converts, 2222 being immersed in one day. The work has gone on since then—nine years ago—and there are now 30,000 church members, besides many ministers, who are doing noble service for God.

MRS. ARMSTRONG

said she was the only Karen missionary at the Conference. Thousands of these people were at that moment praying for its success. The Karens were once the hill tribes of Burmah. They did not worship idols, but offered sacrifices to propitiate the gods. They were a wonderfully moral people when heathens. Without any literature they had a tradition about some old book that had been taken away from them, but that some day the white man would bring back to them. They were therefore ready to receive the Gospel, and when it reached them they yielded willingly to its power. Now there are over 450 Karen parishes, with their own pastors and schools. They also send out missionaries to the regions beyond. There are 30,000 church communicants, and about 100,000 nominal Christians. Many of the young men have gone with their wives across the hills far north among strange peoples, and are there preaching the Gospel. When Mrs. Armstrong left the Karen country and went to the Telegus with her husband, a Karen girl went with her, and she proved in all respects a genuine foreign missionary among these Telegu people. She is now married in Rangoon, and is working among Telegus and Karens there. She also acts as secretary to the Women's Karen Missionary Society. The Karens are the most remarkable of all heathen tribes, and another Missionary Conference may see some of them present at it to speak for themselves. This good lady missionary excited much enthusiastic interest by her story, as also did her husband, in telling the remarkable tale of revival among the Telegu race.

Social Customs.

In the evening, in the Lower Hall, a deeply interesting and important adjourned discussion took place on the subject of Polygamy, and how converts who had more wives than one were to be dealt with. The brethren who took part in the conversation were chiefly missionaries from India, China, and Africa. With one exception, those from India and China advocated the admission to fellowship, but not to office in the church, of those who were believed to be really converted to God, without insisting on their putting away their secondary wives. The brethren from Africa, with one exception, affirmed the principle that God had intended one husband for one wife, and they decidedly, even vehemently, entreated that whatever might be done in India and China, no compromise should be made in Africa with polygamy. The first wife was the wife, and the stringent condition of fellowship should be the putting away of all besides.

It was urged on the one hand that the woman has to be considered as well as the man, and that to cast out the second wife with her children would be to inflict a great wrong upon them. They were wives by law and custom, and God could not intend that the conversion of the husband should lead to a grievous and cruel injury to the unconverted wife.

On the other hand, it was contended that the people's conscience told them that polygamy was wrong, and that the wife who was put away would soon find another husband. It was said that in China the general custom was to have one wife, and that it was the rich who took a second or more; and the people regarded it as wrong.

Both sides agreed perfectly as to the unnaturalness and evil of polygamy; the only difference arose as to the principle of dealing with those who, having more wives than one, became converted and sought the fellowship of the church. Both sides appealed to Scripture, experience, and common sense; but no agreement was arrived at. The interchange of view, however, was of great valve, and it would certainly be desirable that further and more private conference should take place. In this, as in all other questions, circumstances alter cases, and the conditions in different countries may make it difficult or impossible to lay down one rule for all.

SATURDAY, JUNE 16.

With the exception of a largely-attended devotional meeting in the morning, no gatherings were held in Exeter Hall on Saturday. But the day, as will be seen, was by no means a vacant one, as far as the Conference went, though the meetings were mainly of a social description.

Tract Society Breakfast.

A breakfast given by invitation of the Committee of this Society was held in the Hotel Metropole. Mr. Edward Rawlings, treasurer, who presided, in giving a warm welcome to those present, pointed out that the Society was founded on the same basis which forms this great Conference, viz., the uniting in work of various sections of the Christian Church. Rev. Dr. L. Borrett White followed on similar lines, and gave a brief outline of the origin, object, and work of the Society. He showed the intimate relation which its operations bear to missionaries by supplying them with literature in 180 languages, which do their silent work and penetrate beyond the limits of the missionary's labour. Other ways of aiding the work are by giving grants of money for publications, of paper for the production of tracts, and of electrotypes of illustrations to make them more attractive to the native eye. The words of the angel who released the Apostles from prison, "Speak to the people all the words of this life," are fulfilled by these tracts as much as by the living voice, and the development of resources for their cheap production is removing their shackles, and aiding them in their useful work.

Rev. Dr. S. G. Green laid emphasis on the testimony which the Society bore to the value of true Christian unity. If the Conference deserved the title which some had bestowed upon it of "An Œcumenical Council," it was because it consisted of an assembly of Christian workers united in practical service. The English Commentary on the Scriptures which they had issued had been received by all sections of the Christian Church, and the New Testament portion of it was now translated into ten Oriental languages, while Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress may now be read in eighty-two different tongues.

Rev. Dr. Post, of Beyrout, testified to the work of the Society in Turkey, and expressed his thanks for its co-operation. In Arabic "Bunyan" is pronounced Būn-yahn, and that word translated means "edification," which truly expresses the results of the circulation of that writer's works.

Mr. John Archibald, Hankow, said that the missionary was powerless without his book, and the aid which he had received from the Society in China had been exceedingly valuable. He urged that, if the proposition made at one of the meetings to circulate more literature were adopted, it should be done through the existing societies, and not by the formation of fresh ones.

Dean Vahl, of Denmark, rejoiced that these publications conducted the readers to the lonely regions of Mongolia, to the South Sea Islands, to South India, and indeed over the entire mission field.

Mrs. Moses Smith pointed out that women are a great factor—if she were not a woman, she would have said an essential factor—of Christian work, by reaching the mothers and homes, which are the fountain head of all such effort.

Rev. Dr. Schreiber, of Berlin, speaking in his native tongue, expressed the great joy he had experienced in finding that the Conference did not lay stress upon dogma so much as upon union in the Master's work.

Mons. Berguer, of the Paris Missionary Society, spoke to the value of the hymn-book which the Tract Society had furnished in Basutoland, a great many of the 500 hymns being from Mr. Sankey's collection, translated by M. Coillard on his voyage up the Zambesi.

Rev. Dr. W. M. Taylor, New York, alluded to the great value of colportage work in America, especially amongst the emigrants. Colporteurs follow them westward, and assist in forming Sunday-schools and cottage meetings, which are the forerunners of churches.

Rev. Canon Fleming made a touching reference to the bereaved royal family at Berlin, which elicited a hearty expression of sympathy and the Bishop of Nelson (New Zealand) concluded with prayer.

Reception by the American Delegates.

The friends from Greater Britain across the sea appear to have been impressed with the hospitality shown to them day by day; and, as a kind of quid pro quo, we suppose, they invited the members of the Conference to luncheon, in Freemasons' Hall, on Saturday, at one o'clock. It was understood that the Hon. Eustace C. Fitz, of Boston, U.S., who presided on the occasion, bore a very considerable share of the cost. The gathering was a large and singularly representative one. Glancing over the great company that filled the spacious hall, it seemed as though all the élite of London's most earnest Christian workers were there, in addition to the many eminent visitors from foreign lands. Probably no more striking assemblage has ever been seen within the walls of a building that has witnessed many notable occasions in connection with religious effort.

The speaking after luncheon was largely of a complimentary character, well calculated, however, to cement the bonds of Christian brotherhood among the various peoples represented. The Chairman, in the course of his excellent remarks, read a telegraphic message received from Her Majesty the Queen, from Balmoral, in reply to resolution of condolence sent from the Conference the previous day. The reply ran thus: "The Queen sincerely thanks the members of the Conference for their kind telegram of sympathy." The Chairman said that the Conference had not only been great as to numbers, but great in its character, and its purpose. He had attended many political and commercial Conventions, but this would stand out as the great Convention of his life. The American friends had heard of an English welcome, but now they knew what it was.

Dr. Noble, of Chicago, heartily seconded the words of cheer spoken by the chairman. He had enjoyed the gatherings so much that he was prepared to move they should have a Centennial Conference every ten years! If every member of the Conference would go home, as he hoped to do, with a deepened consecration and impulse in his heart for the evangelisation of the world, great things would result. Dr. Parsons, of Toronto, remarked that the company present was ten times the size of the little gathering in the upper room on whom the Spirit fell at Pentecost. If all were to go forth endued with power from on high, seeking to conquer the world for Christ, the Lord Himself might in ten years' time return and take his Bride.

Mr. H. M. Matheson and Mr. George Williams, on behalf of the English friends, spoke of the joy they felt in connection with the gatherings. Rev. Dr. Murdoch, of Boston, reciprocated these fraternal expressions, and urged all to unite in lifting high the royal standard of the Cross, till the kingdoms of this world have become the kingdom of our God and of his Christ. Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson, of Philadelphia, said that more than all the grand cathedrals and public buildings, the American members of the Conference had been interested in the structures in which the Bible Society, Tract Society, Church Missionary Society, and other similar organisations find a home. Dr. W. M. Taylor, New York, after a humorous reference to his dual rôle of an American here and a Britisher on the other side of the Atlantic, said that they were not there as Americans or Englishmen, but as Christians, intensely interested in the furthering of the Gospel of Christ, which is bigger and better than nationalities. He, too, regarded this as the grandest Conference he had ever seen.

Mr. T. A. Denny, having toned down the general jubilation somewhat by reminding the friends how much yet remained to be done, the very interesting proceedings were concluded with prayer by Dr. Oswald Dykes.

Garden Party at Dollis Hill.

Lord and Lady Aberdeen, as our report has shown, have taken a very lively interest in the Conference. They gave a practical proof of this by generously extending a general invitation to the members of Conference to a social reception at their suburban residence, Dollis Hill, Hendon. The death of the German Emperor intervened; but it was felt that as the gathering was more for the interchange of views on the subject of the Conference than for social festivity, it would not be well to alter the arrangement.

The special train from St. Pancras to Dudding Hill Station was crowded with a great company of friends, all eager to share in the hospitality of the noble Earl and Countess; and not less so that it was rumoured Mr. W. E. Gladstone would probably be present. Dollis Hill is charmingly situated in the midst of a finely wooded stretch of country, and the foliage of early summer was in its prime. The recent rains had settled the dust and freshened the verdure, and everybody seemed delighted with the sylvan beauties of the place. The Earl and Countess cordially welcomed the visitors, who were announced on arrival by Mr. Robert Paton. Sumptuous refreshments were served in two tents.

After an interval, Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone arrived, and there was much expectation, especially on the part of the American friends, that the illustrious statesman would briefly address the assembly. It was deemed best, however, both by Mr. Gladstone himself and by the noble host, that he should abstain from doing so, not only in view of the death of the Emperor, but to prevent any sort of political colour being attached to the occasion. The friends having assembled in front of the drawing-room, Lord Aberdeen in a very neat and appropriate little address extended to the members of the Conference the heartiest of welcomes, on behalf of the Countess and himself. He referred in very pathetic terms to the death of the German Emperor, and also bespoke the forbearance of the company in their disappointment at not hearing any words from Mr. Gladstone.

Professor H. Drummond (who was also the guest of the Earl and Countess), having been asked to speak, remarked that nothing made a man feel so small as a missionary meeting. He felt lost in wonder and admiration at the work being done by the missionaries represented in the Conference. He wanted to tell them that many young men at the Universities in Scotland were taking the subject of foreign missions deeply to heart, and were preparing to go forth themselves. A few words of similar import, as to the importance of mission work, were spoken by Dr. Joseph Parker. Then Dr. W. M. Taylor, of New York, on behalf of the Americans present, warmly thanked the kind host and hostess for the treat afforded them, making specially cordial reference to the presence of Mr. Gladstone. Dr. Lyon Playfair, M.P., on behalf of the British visitors seconded the expression of thanks; Lord Aberdeen replied, and the formal speeches were over. The crowd, being deprived of the pleasure of hearing the aged statesman, thronged the precincts of the French window opening out on the lawn, where Mr. Gladstone stood, and he had to undergo a long process of handshaking, which, with Mrs. Gladstone, he bore very good humouredly. Professor Drummond was also compelled to pay the penalty of popularity, and to hold an informal kind of levée, shaking hands and heaing complimentary remarks from many friends on both sides of the sea who had read his famous book.

A little later on two large photographic groups were taken on the lawn, and the visitors departed in due course, highly pleased with the pleasant outing, and its accompaniments.

SUNDAY, JUNE 17.

Meeting for Women.

The Countess of Aberdeen presided over a large meeting of young women on Sunday afternoon, at Exeter Hall. She referred in appropriate terms to the death of the Emperor of Germany. This event, her ladyship observed, has aroused us out of our wonted self-centredness. The Missionary Conference, also, with its many testimonies of the world's need and of God's gracious work among the heathen, should awaken all Christian people from selfish slumbers. She regarded the sight of so many missionaries and their active friends as a grand one, and when she thought of the great number of British and American nationality, she could not but realise that God has committed to the English-speaking race a very high duty in the evangelisation of the world. Last year, with Lord Aberdeen, she had the privilege of seeing some of the missionaries at work in India, and also of attending such conferences as workers can there hold for prayer and mutual encouragement and help. The experience was one never to be forgotten. While now thanking the American delegates for coming to this great Conference, she cordially acknowledged the vigorous work of their agents in the mission field, and also that America had greatly inspired and quickened England in missionary effort. The missionaries have all told us one thing—of the power of love, the power of Christ's love when it takes hold of the soul.

Mrs. Moses Smith, of Detroit, delivered an earnest address, speaking mainly to the young women present. Having shown the great need of Christian light in many lands, she asked her hearers to realise the sphere of their duty to God. Mission work is the Lord's work, and, in all humility, each woman should endeavour to discharge her own responsibility, whether at home or abroad, according as God may call.

Mrs. Quintain, of Philadelphia, spoke of the sweetness of spirit and intelligence of many women of the Indian tribes of North America After a few years' instruction, these women take a good place among civilised people. They are hungering for spiritual instruction, and almost as soon as they hear the message of the Gospel they give their hearts to God. Their desire for religious knowledge was illustrated by the story of a poor woman who, on hearing grace said at meal, remarked, "Me so glad, me cry." Another, on hearing of Christ, said, "Now me not hungry to think." With loving words the speaker commended the cause of pagan women to the solicitude of the young women of England.

Miss Carter, of New York, told pathetic stories of light dawning upon Africans, Japanese, and Chinese. The poor heathen, coming out of darkness, want to hear more of "the good God," as the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ is called by many of them. Their humanity responds to the Gospel, as was beautifully shown in a story which was told. A kindly Chinese woman presented a Christian worker with a baby-girl, which she had found in a ditch, where it had been left by its father, as thousands of others have been thrown, because it was "only a girl." In begging the Christian lady to take and care for the naked child, covered with mud, the poor woman said, "Please do take little baby; your God is the only God that teaches to be good to little children."

Mrs. Gordon, of Boston, dwelt on the importance of the work now in the hands of Christian women. In the contest between Emmanuel and the forces of evil, the reserves have been called into action; they are the women who form two-thirds of the members of the Christian Church. Commending to her hearers words in 2 Sam. xv. 15, "Ready to do whatsoever my lord the king shall appoint," Mrs. Gordon urged a loyal attention to duty and devotion in its performance.

In bringing the proceedings to a close, Lady Aberdeen justly described the speeches as helpful and inspiring.

MONDAY, JUNE 18.

Home Work for Missions.

At a meeting for members in the morning, addresses were given on agencies in connection with Home Work for Missions. The chair was occupied by Rev. Dr. Cavaliere Prochet, of the Waldensian Church. In some introductory remarks, the Chairman gave expression to the great pleasure he had experienced in attending the Conference. As an evangelist among Roman Catholics, he had, on listening to the many discussions, been struck by the great similarity between that work and the taking of the Gospel to heathen nations.

The first paper was read by Dr. A. T. Pierson, of Philadelphia, and will be found at length on preceding pages.

THE RESPONSIBILITIES OF WEALTH.

Rev. F. F. Emerson, from Newport, Rhode Island, read a paper on "The Responsibilities of Wealth." The essence of evil is selfishness: the essence of Christianity is self-sacrifice; and therefore it is not surprising to find Christ applying the precepts of the new life directly to the duties involved in the ownership of property. The speaker referred in detail to counsels, parables, and other teachings of Christ, with reference to wealth in one phase or another. The Sermon on the Mount, the parable of the wicked rich man, the instance of the young man whom, in loving terms, Jesus told to "sell all he had and give to the poor," and many others, were singled out for special comment, as showing that with consecration of heart there must go consecration of substance. Mary Magdalene and her box of nard, the widow and her two mites, were brought in as illustrating acceptable generosity, and it was pointed out for the instruction of rich and poor alike that riches are relative, and not absolute, in the sight of God. He is rich who has anything that he can impart to his fellow-men. It is required of man "according to what he hath, and not according to what he hath not." The gift of a cup of cold water in the name of a disciple is one that shall never go unrewarded.

Having referred to the judgment scene depicted in Matt. xxv., the speaker mentioned the interesting fact that the only saying of Jesus in the Epistles not recorded in the Gospels is that preserved by the Apostle Paul, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." Proceeding to give statistics as to contributions towards missionary work, he maintained that more ought to be put into the Lord's treasury, and more would be, if Christians only realised what is involved in consecration to God. Comparing 1870 with 1880, and both with the present time, it was shown that Christian giving had not kept pace with the increase of wealth, on the one hand, or increased missionary advance on the other. This was an excellent paper.

Rev. Dr. Noble, of Chicago, asked how the results of the Conference might best be utilised. He suggested that some method should be contrived for putting them before the church at large. Next year the ministers and others might say, "We will make the volume the basis of our study." He sincerely trusted that this would be done. Speaking from a pretty long experience, he said that the "monthly concerts" might be made the most interesting and profitable events of the year. In connection with his church the monthly concert is the largest and one of the most enthusiastic.

"Simultaneous meetings" formed the subject of some remarks by Rev. W. H. Belden, of New Jersey. The needed work is to bring world-wide evangelisation well before the people, and by means of these meetings that end had been well attained. A special literature is prepared for such meetings, and this brings the whole church before the world in Christian testimony. He suggested that a week of simultaneous meetings should be arranged for America and England, if not throughout the world.

Rev. Geo. Wilson, of Edinburgh, spoke on raising the churches to the degree of consecration required. The special need is that the condition of the heathen world should be brought home to the people by accurate photographs rather than statistics and general statements. This must very largely be done by the realistic descriptions of the missionaries. Coming from them as calls from the Lord, such pictures would be eminently useful. There should be more visits paid to the mission field by those who can take holidays in such a way, and after having seen and heard, such travellers should come home and tell the story. In conclusion, the speaker suggested a missionary panorama, and the greater use of the artist's pencil, as calculated to do much in educating the churches at home.

Rev. Dr. Welch, of New York, urged communion with God for power and wisdom to equip for work such as may be indicated by the Holy Spirit. Christians must have impressed upon them the fact that great riches are in trust from God, and should be dispensed cheerfully, and not by way of patronage. The facts of missions should be popularised by tracts and other literary productions.

Rev. Dr. Taylor, of New York, maintained that emergencies, financial and otherwise, are always met when the work is of God. Rev. W. F. Armstrong, of Burmah, observed that many of the discussions had been conducted as if ages were at our disposal for the doing of the work. The Lord had said, "Behold, I come quickly," and there is no time to lose. A missionary crusade should be preached.

Rev. J. McLaurin, of Canada, said he thought a crisis had arrived in missionary work. All the regenerated hearts are needed to evangelise the world within the generation. The one thing needed is that all should be together with one accord in one place, and before going out they must wait for the enduement of the Holy Ghost. Rev. Dr. Summerbell, of New Jersey, spoke of the greatness of the work, and deplored the spirit which had prevailed in the Church, of taking care of itself.

"Method in giving" was spoken of by Rev. Thomas Smith, who advocated proportionate giving. The magnitude of a gift depends upon proportion, as the widow's mite showed. If people would bind themselves to a certain proportion, it would better for them and for the work of the Church. He regarded a tenth as a minimum proportion, as he thought that the injunction concerning a tithe had not been repealed.

Rev. J. A. Taylor, Richmond, Virginia, a coloured pastor, said his people in America are preparing to evangelise Africa, their fatherland. With that view, churches have been organised into districts for the better instruction of the members as to the needs of the foreign field.

Rev. F. E. Wigram, secretary of the Church Missionary Society, grieved to say that he had several times had to plead with fathers and mothers not to hold back their best sons and daughters who felt the Divine call to work abroad. He begged Christians to realise the blessedness of giving up their best to the Lord's service.

Rev. C. G. Moore, of the China Inland Mission, suggested a weekly concert for prayer. At the family altar, too, the world should be remembered in prayer. He also suggested that all possible effort be made to secure spiritual power at missionary meetings. Rev. Dr. Parsons, of Toronto, spoke in a similar strain, and urged a greater attention to prophetical study. Men and money should also be offered at the monthly concert.

Rev. G. Appia, of Paris, maintained that information as to missionary work is secondary to the endowment of the Holy Spirit. In connectio with his church there is considerable missionary enthusiasm, but if Christian workers would call at the mission-hall, when passing through Paris, they would greatly increase the interest.

Rev. J. McMurtrie, of the Church of Scotland Foreign Missions, called upon Christians to go to the front. Why should not more of them go to the mission field without asking the Church for anything at all? The speaker told the story of a young woman who recently went to Africa, being maintained by her two sisters who remain at home and work.

Rev. J. S. Balmer, of the United Methodist Free Churches Home and Foreign Missions maintained that with personal consecration there need be no fear about the money. Power to give is a talent, and those who have that power must use it.

The Bishop of Nelson pointed out that a penny willingly given will be more blessed of God than a pound from unconsecrated hands. Spiritual work must not be reckoned on the lines of commercial statistics. He called attention to the words of Christ, "Greater works than these shall ye do, because I go unto the Father."

Tract and Book Societies.

A meeting, rather sparsely attended, was held in the Annex this morning to consider the working of this auxiliary agency. Hon. Col. G. W. Williams (chairman), urged that the Bible should not be made subordinated to scientific literature, but that a pure press should be used for God's glory by giving the Bible a first place.

Mr. Henry Morris read a paper prepared by Dr. John Murdoch, the writer himself being in India. We note a few of the most interesting points. It is advisable that missionaries should be appointed who should devote their whole time to the preparation of vernacular literature. Only a few men are qualified to write effective tracts and books. Competent native writers should be set apart, as well as foreigners. One great object should be to raise up such men, as they can best supply the literature that will touch the native heart. Should missions maintain presses? These were at first a necessity, and they are still desirable at a few central stations. Cheap and accurate printing is needed, especially in the case of the Scriptures. The opinion is now almost universally held in India, that, except in a few special cases, gratuitous distribution should be confined to leaflets and very small tracts. Sale has three advantages: (1) It tests the suitability of publications; (2) It tends to secure the use and preservation of books; (3) It is the only way by which Christian literature can be provided on the requisite scale. What a Hindu buys he reads. In addition to depôt distribution living agencies may be found in missionaries, catechists, colporteurs, and native book hawkers. It would be best if the missionary could leave this work entirely to others, and devote himself simply to the diffusion of Christian truth. Although God's Word should have the highest place, illustrations of his wisdom in creation are also fitting topics. Friendly feeling is promoted by a missionary taking part in whatever contributes to the well-being of the people, such as sanitation, &c.

The paper urged a need for present effort, and closed with the following recommendations:—(1) Missionary societies should set apart men for literature as they do for education; (2) mission presses should print Christian literature at cost price, charging market rates in other cases; (3) the Religious Tract Society should have at least one agent in India, and the number should be gradually increased; (4) provision should be made in mission estimates for preaching halls and book-shops; (5) every well-equipped mission should have a staff of colporteurs.

A number of missionaries and others spoke vourably of the recommendations in the paper, d gave personal experiences in connection th the distribution of literature. Mr. Henry orris spoke feelingly of Japan, and said it med one of the most interesting fields of bour. They were actually in search of a igion, and agnostics and infidels were not w to spread their pernicious literature. In ferring to India, he impressed upon the nference the fact that, in order to reach the tives, they must have books written in true omatic native language.

Rev. F. Zeiggler said that many transtions were made which the natives posively could not understand, and it would be cessary to rewrite portions of Testament story to fit in with idoms of the language. dia is covered with a pernicious and immoral erature, which the female portion of the pulation devour. Novels of the worst Zolaque and agnostic schools find many readers.

Dr. Robert Pringle said that in India the retched books referred to were sold on Government railways. He urged that this matter should agitated in Parliament. The British nation really aiding the circulation of these publicaons, and they should have a voice in the rculation of a pure literature.

Rev. Henry Rice said that Christian people hould be up and doing in reference to this uestion. The latest infidel literature and bjections to Christian truth are as current in ombay and Madras as in London. The atives think that the missionaries are preachg and propagating an antiquated Christianity hich educated and enlightened men in England have dropped. The tract societies should ncourage the native Christian talent, offer rizes for the best books, give good Oriental lustrations, and issue at a cheap rate.

The meeting closed with a manifest desire or further opportunity to consider the subject f discussion.

[We are obliged to hold over till next week our eport of the remaining meetings of Monday, and hose of the two succeeding days.]

MR. SPENCER WALTON.

Dear Sir,—In leaving England for five months' ission work in South Africa, I feel sure many f your readers will follow me with their prayers or an abundant blessing. I hope to return to England in time for the Wakefield and Eastbourne Conferences, and will be glad to hear from friends who would like me to hold one or two United Misions at the beginning of next year. My address will be, Care of Mrs. M. S. Osborn, Soldiers' Home, Cape Town.—Yours in our Master's service,

W. Spencer Walton.

THE REPRESSION OF IMMORALITY.—At London-house, St. James's-square, on Monday week, the fifth annual meeting of the Central Vigilance Society for the Repression of Immorality was held under the presidency of Rev. H. Webb-Peploe, and subsequently of Lord Kinnaird. The report stated that the Society had watched forty-six suspected houses and had prosecuted ten. Several girls, it was stated, had been rescued. Means had been taken to prevent unwary emigrants from being entrapped on their way to join ships. Mr. S. Smith, M.P., spoke of the necessity of suppressing immoral literature. He called particular attention to the large sale of translatious of immoral French literature in this country, and pointed out that such translations were not permitted in Germany. Major Grunton stated that Sir Charles Warren was giving assistance in watching houses. He gave details of men who lived upon the immorality of women, some of these women being the wives and daughters of the men, and urged that the law should be altered to meet the prosecution of such men, who, he said, should be arrested on warrant. A resolution was carried to the effect that the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, needed amendment in regard to effectual enforcement and for the suppression of disorderly houses and of the open display of immorality in the streets.

NOTES FROM NORTHFIELD.

The sixth General Conference for Bible study and the presentation of working methods in the various fields of Christian service, will be held at Northfield from August 1 to 10. There has been no falling off in the interest and value of these meetings from year to year. The meetings of last year were second to none of those which had preceded them. It is believed that, by the power of God, the Conference of next August will also be richly fraught with blessing.

Besides the extended accommodation offered in the buildings of the Northfield Seminary, ample room may be also found in the new hotel, to be first opened this season, and admirably located about half a mile from the school.

The price of board and room in the Seminary will be $1.50 a day. Meals only, 75 cents a day.

A correspondent writes:—

This fair town, under the impetus given by the tireless evangelist, is becoming too strait for strangers who desire to come under his influence and to catch his spirit. Hence a few large-hearted friends of Mr. Moody have built an elegant hotel in a new street, where, away from the dust and din of the outer world, one can find for himself and family a most charming home. Its environments of glorious mountains and its outlook upon the fair valley at its feet are extremely restful.

Its opening a few days ago was made the occasion of one of those blessed gatherings which Mr. Moody seizes upon to bring his friends to Northfield. The opening of the new library building, costing $25,000, the gift of James Falcott, of New York, and the laying of the corner-stone of the new church for the village occurred at the same time. This gave his guests an opportunity to see the two schools in session. If you would see Mr. Moody at his best go to his early home, where, among his 600 boys and girls, and with his own townsmen, he moves about, a veritable Greatheart, the incarnation of love and energy.

A most impressive sight, and one which reveals the underlying secret of Mr. Moody's power, was the laying of the corner-stone of the new church edifice. It was at the sunset hour before the Sabbath. On the wall stood the deacons, the old and loved pastor, Mr. Moody, and Mr. Sankey. Loving words were spoken. The Scriptures were read, and a tender appeal for consecration of the living temple was made. Finally, Mr. Sankey, standing upon the corner-stone duly laid under the triangle of the derrick, with the glowing clouds of the evening for a background, with the green wooded hills before him, sang that old song, with unabated power, "The Ninety and Nine." In this quiet evening hour, his voice rang out with all his old-time tenderness; and as the echo came from the mountains, "Rejoice, for the Lord brings back his own," it seemed prophetic of the return of many a lost sheep to the Good Shepherd. The Sabbath services following, the sermons by Mr. Moody on the danger of "Unholy Alliances," and on the "Peace of God," were, of course, such as only he could preach.

RAGGED CHURCH AND CHAPEL UNION.—There are upwards of one hundred preaching stations under the control of the parent committee. Fifty of these are looking for grants in aid. On the evening of Wednesday, 13th inst., the annual meeting was held in the Society's room, 4, Trafalgar-square, Charing-cross, under the presidency of Rev. Dr. Tyler, one of the few survivors of the original committee. The report was read by the hon. secretary, Rev. Burman Cassin, M.A., rector of St. George's, Southwark, and the financial statement by Mr. W. A. Blake, secretary. Speeches from the chairman, Major Evered Poole, Rev. W. Frith, Major John Smith, Mr. W. Bramston, Colonel J. W. F. Sandwith, Mr. John Kirk, and Mr. R. J. Curtis enlivened the proceedings.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

The thirty-first anniversary of this institution, on Saturday last, in the Jubilee Home, at Parson's Grove, Fulham, brought a goodly number of friends from town to express their sympathy with their old friend, Mr. E. W. Thomas, and to hear particulars of the work for another year.

Mr. John Deacon presided. The Secretary presented the annual report, which bore witness to the Lord's goodness, not only in sustaining all the agencies, but in indicating to the committee that they must take yet another step in advance. It was good to receive the assurance that during the past year no poor, friendless applicant or outcast wanderer, whether in the first stage of a downward course, or even the last, had been refused the help she sought. The table of statistics showed that 572 preventive and 431 reformatory cases had been admitted into the Homes, and with 283 readmissions, the total amounted to 1308. As in former years many had been directed to apply at 200 Euston-road by ministers of the Gospel, magistrates, policemen, and missionaries, and it was encouraging to find that 37 had been recommended by former inmates. The committe have concluded terms for the purchase of a house in the Holloway-road, well adapted for the reception of the friendless.

The Chairman, in speaking of the work of the Society, said that it had a wide field for its operations, both preventive and reformatory, in London and the country. Such a Home as that in which they were meeting to-day, in which young friendless girls could be received, was an incomparable benefit.

Rev. S. L. Dixon remarked upon four particulars: the immense increase in the size of London during the last few years; the need of creating a sound public opinion on the subject which the Society has made its own; the necessity, too, of earnestly supporting the Temperance movement. He could well believe what Mr. Thomas had told him, that in all his experience—and it would be very difficult to match his experience—he had never known a total abstainer among the fallen girls of the streets of London. The fourth point was that the true motive power of all their efforts should be the same as that which formed the basis of all the Apostle Paul's, "the love of Christ constraineth us." Rev. F. B. Meyer did not know one institution that more commended itself to him than that on behalf of which they had met. The remaining speakers were Rev. R. McDonald, Rev. F. W. A. Wilkinson, and Mr. Burton. This year arrangements were made, of which several availed themselves, to inspect the various Homes before the annual meeting. On Wednesday the Homes in Euston-road and Manchester-street were open for inspection, on Thursday the Home in Eden-grove, and on the evening of that day Mr. Francis Nicholls distributed reward books to former inmates.

MISS LEIGH'S PARIS MISSION.—Her Majesty has graciously given the use of the Ranger's Lodge and grounds, Greenwich Park, S.E., to the Blackheath Association and friends of Miss Leigh's work and Homes in Paris for a garden fête and sale of work, on July 5, 6, and 7. Gifts of flowers, fruit, and saleable goods may be sent addressed to Mrs. Morten, hon. sec. to the Blackheath Association, The Ranger's Lodge, Greenwich Park, S.E., from whom tickets of admission may also be obtained.

A HOME FOR DESTITUTE CHILDREN was established last year at No. 25, Nelson-street, Dublin. The Home is unsectarian, and its teaching evangelical. Its object is to rescue deserted and destitute children, and to lead them to Christ. There are twenty-two children in the Home, which number fills it. As there are numerous applications for admission, some very distressing ones, which have to be refused, it is desired to take a larger house; but for this help is needed. Miss Carr is Lady Superintendent.

Leaves from my Note-Book.

By Rev. WILLIAM HASLAM, M.A.

Author of "From Death into Life. An Autobiography."

XII.—"I HAVE GIVEN UP RELIGION."

ONE evening I was speaking of the risen Christ, as the great Physician of the soul. In the course of my address I said, "The great Physician, the risen Christ, is present now to heal all manner of diseases. Many persons, however sincere they may be, are not aware that they have a sin-sick soul to be healed, as well as many sins to be pardoned.

"Suppose the case of a criminal under sentence of death (this is a picture of every unsaved soul), such a man needs but one thing while execution is deferred. What is it? It is his pardon, and with it, of course, his life. There is such a pardon provided for every sinner and new life, too, through believing in Jesus Christ."

Let us suppose, further, that the condemned criminal is not only guilty, but sick. It is easy to understand that pardon and release could not cure his sickness. He might be very happy for a time, and perhaps forget his malady; but eventually he will need a physician.

So it is with all pardoned sinners; they may rejoice greatly for a time, but in proportion as they are in earnest, they will find out the sickness of their souls. Such as these usually do their best to cure themselves, or else they use crutches, and every available help; or otherwise give up in disappointment, if not despair.

The fact is they need a Physician to heal, as surely as they needed a Saviour to pardon; but they do not know that there is "balm in Gilead, or a Physician there!"

After the address, a number of persons stayed behind for an after-meeting, and I went down to speak with them. The first person I fell in with was a gentleman who appeared to be thoughtful, and seemed somewhat depressed. I asked him whether he was saved?

Looking up into my face, he said, "I cannot say I am not; I have been listening attentively this evening to your address, and I think I may say that I was saved fourteen years ago; but I have had a wretched time of it since that; I have had more temptations than ever I had before, and more trials of every kind. I thought I had found peace, but it has been a sword! My soul has been sick indeed, and full of discouragement, so much so that I have given up religion altogether."

I was not sorry to hear this confession, though I felt for the poor man. I said to him, "Have you taken up anything else in the place of religion?"

"Yes," he answered, "I have occupied myself with the temperance cause; I took up that, and do all the good I can; I never say a word about religion! But I tell you what," he continued, "I have heard something to-night which I never knew before."

"What is that," I asked.

"It is about Christ as the Physician of the sick soul. I see plainly how He died to save, and now I understand also, how, as a living Saviour, He can minister to sin-sick believers. That is good news to me, I can tell you."

"Thank God for that," I replied, "but what is the good of knowing about this?"

"Why," he answered, "did I not kneel down then and there, when I heard what you said, pointing to a seat in the gallery, and give myself up to the great Physician. I am sure He will heal me."

"You dear man, if you believe He will, it is done! What more do you want? Many people believe He can heal them, and there they stop; but when you come to Him believing that He will, it is done."

"I do not understand you," said the gentleman, looking perplexed.

I said, "Those ten men we read of in St. Luke's Gospel who were lepers, believed that Jesus Christ could heal them, and they showed their faith, when they had the opportunity, by calling upon the Master to have mercy upon them. The Lord seemed to say to them, Do you believe that I can cleanse such a hopeless disease as leprosy? Yea, Lord, was the reply. What would you do if I did heal you? We would go and show ourselves to the priest. Then, said the Lord, go and show yourselves to the priest. In the reality of their faith they set off to go, while the leprosy was still upon them. They did not wait until they were better, or wait to feel that they were healed first; but went forward, and we read, that as they went they were cleansed, every one of them" (see Luke xvii.).

"Do you comprehend the teaching of this?"

"Yes," he said, "I think I understand your meaning."

"Then, if you really believe Christ is here, and is able and willing to heal you, do not wait; but do as you would if you were healed. Thank Him for it, say,

> Hallelujah, 'tis done,
> I believe in the Son,
> I am cleansed through the life
> Of the crucified One."

"Oh, it is wonderful," he said, "I am sure it is done. Praise the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me, praise his holy name. He forgiveth all my iniquities, and healeth all my diseases. I never saw this before!"

The dear man's joy was unbounded.

The next morning he came to me, and said, "Fourteen years ago, I heard you preach at L——, I wished to go again, but was hindered, and then you went away. I was very unhappy about it; but, turning to my notes of your address, I saw the way of salvation, and readily embraced it. I was happy, very happy for a time; but, as I have already told you, it was not long before temptations and trials beset me very sorely. I began to think that I had made a mistake in supposing I was saved. Not finding help, in my discouragement, I at length gave up religion, and would not think or speak about it."

"Were you content," I asked, "in thus throwing aside your privileges and responsibilities?"

"Oh, dear no," he answered, "far from that, I have been anything but content. Sometimes I have been most miserable, and at others, as cold and dead as a stone. When I heard you were coming here, I determined I would hear you again.

"Strange to say, on Sunday I was hindered, the next day I could not come; and the day following, that is yesterday, it snowed and rained so hard that my friends said I must not go. Very reluctantly I took off my boots, but felt so wretched that I put them on again, and said, I must go, even if I got up to my neck in snow. Thank God, I did! My soul is happy again, and set free from a long captivity."

"Now friend," I said, remember that there were ten lepers who were cleansed, but only one of the ten came back and fell upon his face at Jesus' feet, giving Him thanks. The Lord said, Where are the nine? Do not be like them, but come you at once, and cast yourself at his feet. Give yourself to Him for his work, and may He bless you greatly."

This gentleman was most grateful, and became a helper to me during that mission, and after I left he went on with work for the Lord as he had opportunity, praising God, not only with his lips, but in his life.

MUNIFICENT BEQUESTS.—Among the bequests of the late Mr. George Sturge, of Sydenham, a member of the Society of Friends, were gifts of £3000 each to the Baptist, London, and Wesleyan Missionary Societies; a like sum to the National Reformatory and Refuge Union; £2000 to the Home and Foreign Missions, under the guidance of Mr. Grattan Guinness; £4500 to the Friends' Foreign Missions; and £500 each to the Agra Medical Mission, the North Africa Mission, the Moravian Missions, and the Primitive Methodist Missions.

BRITISH CONVENT PRISONS.

WE have been asked to republish the follo letter, which was addressed to a London mor paper in 1870. It is as true now as then; no has been done to place the religious prisons inspection.

SIR,—In the debate on the nunnery questi 1853, it was stated in the House of Commons, not contradicted, that the buildings in which were confined "were uniformly bolted, barred, grated, like prisons, and all the architectural rangements were made apparently with one ob viz., that of safe custody. Internally there not only cells, refectories and chapels, but geons. Nothing would make the public beli therefore, that these buildings were erected contented and happy inmates, but rather for ke ing them there when entrapped." This is undou edly true, and it is a matter of surprise, not Government inspection should now be loudly manded, but that such an indispensable meas should ever have been neglected.

There are subterranean cells in the convent Colwich, in Staffordshire. In the evidence ta before a commission of the Court of Queen's B in 1857, a girl who attended the Colwich Conv School declared upon oath: "I have seen in said nunnery, whilst I was attending the school, a sort of cage or hencoop made of woo palings, about six or seven feet high, and cove over, which I at first thought was for the purp of keeping fowls, but I say that on several c sions, during the period I attended the said sch I have seen a nun fastened in the said cage penance; and on such occasions the nun put i the said cage generally cried very much, but n no resistance. And I further say that in the s tuary of the said nunnery there was a large sor box, like a sentry-box, covered on one side with dark green curtain. I was required to go to c fession, and went to the said box to confess. I often seen it, and wondered what it was, and one occasion, soon after I went to the said nunne when passing by the said box before even prayers, on my way to the chapel (where I employed to blow the organ), I had the curiosity lift up the curtain and look into the box, and I that I saw within it a nun, kneeling or sitting, that as I lifted the curtain she raised her arm little, and I then perceived that a chain was tened round her arm, which made a noise as moved it. I was dreadfully frightened, and away home without going into the chapel, and the next day I was punished for going away bef prayers, but I said nothing about what I had se

It was proved that coffins were made on premises of the nunnery, and persons buried wit the grounds unknown to any registrar.

In 1829 the great foundries of Crawshay & at Cenharton-sur-Marne, were erected, and in ging out the foundations for the workshops, hammers, steam boilers, smelting furnaces, &c., the site of a suppressed or abandoned nunnery, workmen turned up literally hundreds of skelet of infants. The maire was apprised of the f and he came to the scene and made a procès ve of the occurrence, and had the remains all colle and buried privately in a cemetery. Whose chi ren were those infants?

Let the priests of Rome practise every kind pious folly and sanctified absurdity; let them scribe imaginary lines upon their breasts foreheads; let them genuflect, flagellate, aye, w themselves to death, if they please. But, as E land loves liberty, and will use her power to pro it, they will not long be permitted to decoy yo girls into nunneries, and to imprison them in s places for their own bad satisfaction under the tence of making them the "brides of heaven," the children of the "sacred heart."

LAWYERS' PRAYER UNION.—The half-yea prayer-meeting of barristers, solicitors, and l clerks was held at the Mission Hall, St. Geor Bloomsbury, on the 14th inst. Mr. Archibald the chair. Mr. H. C. Nisbet, Mr. Collis, Mr. Ba and two law-clerks were the speakers. The ch man dealt with "God's covenant with his peop In travelling through France, he found the l dotted with the crucifix, showing that more thought of a dead rather than a living Savi Mr. Nisbet, in a very stirring and interes address, on a "Man of God," referred to sev Old and New Testament heroes who were "me God," and said that men of God were often with in the most unlikely places.

HE NEW TALBOT TABERNACLE.

s building was opened last week amid many ouraging circumstances. The first meeting ; one of praise and prayer, and was presided r by Mr. H. F. Bowker, to whom the stor, Mr. Frank White, made touching and ctionate allusion, as having been the ine instrument, thirty-seven years ago, of akening him to a sense of his need of a iour. Addresses were given by Revs. James uglas, of Brixton, F. B. Meyer, and Mr. nry Varley, who but two hours before had ived from Australia, looking, we are glad to , the picture of health and strength.

Ir. C. H. Spurgeon, but for his sore illness, uld have preached the opening sermon on dnesday afternoon. His place was filled by . Adolph Saphir, who took for the subject of course the "Acts of the Apostles," which he scribed as the last historic book of the Bible, d the Holy Spirit's record of true church rk. It was a noble sermon, and was evi- ntly greatly enjoyed by the large audience, ny of whom seemed delighted at the oppor- nity of once again hearing their old friend.

The public meeting in the evening was pre- ed over by Mr. George Williams, who, with . F. A. Bevan and Mr. T. A. Denny (both of om were present as speakers), have shown deepest interest in the undertaking. Mr. ginald Radcliffe, who spoke of the pastor as "old fellow-worker and beloved friend of enty-five years standing," gave a heart-stirring dress, and was followed by Mr. C. Spurgeon, Greenwich, and Dr. Barnardo. The latter pressed the hope that, as an adjunct to the iritual work, an orphanage for boys and ls would be established, and supported by e church meeting in the Talbot Tabernacle. ords of hearty encouragement were also oken by Mr. J. H. Lydal and Mr. H. Robson. uring the evening the pastor made an teresting statement of the way in which e building effort has been carried forward. answer to prayer the sum of £5000 has been ceived, leaving about £800 due. We are formed that about £350 of this sum have ovided already. Mr. White and his friends emed full of faith and hope that before the ening services are concluded the whole will realised.

There were a large number of sympathising hristian workers present. Among others who ad written letters of sympathy and regret for sence, were the Earl of Lichfield, Lord innaird, Lord Polwarth, Mr. R. C. L. Bevan, Ir. R. Paton; Mr. White's former tutor, Rev. eo. Rogers, now in his ninetieth year; Revs. Iarcus Rainsford, Nevile Sherbrooke, H. harpe, Dr. Monro Gibson, Professor Gracey, c.

Friday's meeting was for Bible Protestant estimony. Four addresses were given, the rst by Dr. Sinclair Paterson, on the supremacy f the Word of God; the second by Rev. H. E. Brooke, on the doctrine of justification by aith; the third by Rev. H. Dening, on the ompleteness of Christ's one offering for sin; nd the third by Rev. H. D. Brown, of Dublin, n the priesthood of all believers. The speeches ere calm, clear, courageous, and convincing, nd called forth many hearty responses from a ruly sympathetic audience.

On Sunday morning the Tabernacle was ell filled, when the pastor preached, taking or his text Ps. cxv. 1. Rev. Dr. A. J. Gordon, f Boston, U.S.A., preached in the afternoon nd evening to crowded audiences.

As to the Tabernacle itself, we must say it is model structure. It seats about 1000 persons, nd will contain more. We are sure we echo he desire of all our readers, when we say we rust the New Talbot Tabernacle will long ontinue to be a centre of Gospel teaching, nd a training school for earnest Christian orkers, both in the home and foreign fields.

Letters to the Editor.

ROMANISTS IN DISGUISE.

Dear Sir,—Apropos of your paragraph in The Christian of June 8, referring to English clergymen taking part in the service of the Roman Catholic Church when travelling on the Continent, I believe that is a thing far more usual than may be generally thought.

I was for some little time in a boarding-house here, when there were several Roman Catholic boarders, amongst them an Irish Roman Catholic lady, living generally in the neighbourhood of Glasgow. She told me that she was amazed on one occasion, when, in a Roman Catholic Church, I think, in Italy, to see a bishop of the Scotch Church kneeling close beside her, and following with perfect ease the whole service with a well-used prayer book, which he produced from his pocket.

If the leaders of the so-called Protestant Church do these things, can we wonder that the rank and file follow their example?—Yours truly,

W. Soltau.

THE GOSPEL IN FRANCE.

Dear Sir,—I have now had the privilege of working for Christ in France for no less than four years; first, in Lyons, then in Cannes. I have seen much blessing, and many souls converted. But I have also come to know why it is that, with such a variety of workers in the field, the success of the Gospel is so small.

We have been accustomed to hear on all sides that the best is being done, and the "good seed" sown in France. If that were even generally true, the seed sown fifteen, ten, five years ago, would be bearing its "good fruit." Too much of it has no vitality, and can produce nothing but shame and sorrow. The condition of the French Protestant churches is, as a whole, woeful to contemplate. They are in a state of lethargy, next to death (Heb. vi. 8), and habitually resist every effort to arouse them. Their very best men—they who have some participation in the great evangelistic movements of Great Britain and America, know better things and long after them—lack résolution; they are trammelled by social relationships; bound by ecclesiastical ties. Christian visitors to France are generally but imperfectly acquainted with the language, and too short a time in the country to get at a plain perception of the truth. Existing effort is, generally speaking, too indefinite, too halting to be blessed of God.

As a Scotchman converted through Moody's influence in 1874, and privileged thereafter to work with him, and who, in 1882 and 1883, took the initiative in laying the foundation of that work in the Cowcaddens of Glasgow which has since, by the blessing of God, grown to a noble edifice in the hands of his friend, Rev. William Ross, as noticed in an article of The Christian, I know what may be accomplished on the basis of the undenominational union for work of living Christians. Perfectly acquainted with the French language and people, through four years' uninterrupted residence among them, I affirm that anywhere in France souls may be immediately, truly won for God by taking the right, the only way—the simple preaching of the Cross, and of the acceptance of Christ for pardon, peace, and power.

But those who, from a low platform, delude themselves in the hope of seeing the fruit of the Spirit grow upon a tree whose roots are not deep planted by the river of life, were never called to evangelise France, and cannot do it. Three or four men, filled with the Spirit and working for souls, exempt from ecclesiastical pressure, untrammelled by the qu'en dira t'on? and with the needful support from without, might, as a band, go over the length and breadth of the land, and everywhere see the fruit of their labour in souls won for Christ. Such a work is done in Geneva. It is blessed because it is free! There are centres in France where the light of the preached Gospel is going out in darkness, because "men loved darkness rather than the light." Those chiefly responsible for this are not the Roman Catholic priesthood, who scarcely interfere, but many of the Protestant pastors, and those subject to their influence.

Sad indeed, after patient and lengthened experience, and joy in the knowledge of many souls in France won for Christ, and now walking with Him, I should have only to repeat the note of alarm which has been sounded often and long (Ezek. iii. 17). God grant the awakening may not come at last for France in blood and fire!

By the good hand of the Lord upon me, I am now in Rome, and in the coming months hope to help in the same glorious work of winning souls for Christ in Italy.—Yours, A. S. D. Colquhoun.

THE S.A. AND BAPTISM.

Dear Sir,—Whilst Mr. Booth-Tucker's letter in reference to baptism has given pain to some, it has been a cause of great satisfaction to others. The Salvationists wisely drop a custom which now has no standing, and wisely avoid a custom the observance of which is so varied, and which is in a fair way to become an idol to many minds.

Baptism had its place in the old dispensation. A figure of the true and only saving baptism; the being baptized into Christ—i.e., to believe in Him and to become followers of Him, as our fathers were "baptized into Moses," and believed in and followed him.

The word baptism, as used in Scripture, has often no connection with water at all. For example, our Saviour's words (Luke xii. 50), "I have a baptism to be baptized with," &c. A baptism implying mental suffering and deep agony of spirit.

We, members of the Society of Friends, who do not submit to the shadow of the true, have, I trust, experienced that baptism into Christ which bringeth peace.

As regards obedience to the commands of Christ, why not carry out the very explicit command recorded in John xiii. 15, "I have given you an example that ye should do as I have done unto you."

A GREETING TO DR. H. BONAR.*

BY PASTOR THEODORE MONOD.

He that belongs to God belongs to all:
And shall there not be heard a voice to-day
From Calvin's land, to join the land of Knox
In calling benedictions on thy head,
Thou honoured brother, pastor, patriarch,
Who, through the changing years, with faith unchanged,
Hast done the Master's work—hast glorified
His holy name by deeds of righteousness,
By words of power, of wisdom, and of love;
By the clear witness of a fruitful pen,
By the sweet strains of that far-sounding lute,
Attuned to David's harp, and breathing forth
The soul of thousands through the lips of one.

Nay, swift to hear the Macedonian cry
Across the stretch of the dividing sea,
Thy heart went out, and other hearts with thine,
To those "white fields of France," where God's own han
Did cast abroad the everlasting Word,
Did water it with grace, with toil, with prayer,
With tears, with blood . . . And can the harvest fail?

O ripening fields! O costly, costly seed
Of lives poured out for the Redeemer's sake!
Of noble lives, not all in times of yore,
But close to us . . . Ah! close to thee and thine . . .
Our gay, tumultuous Paris, as it sees
God's acre sleeping 'neath the city wall,
Can read, upon one fair young grave, a name
Enshrined in grateful hearts for evermore.

His God, our God, shall all your need supply,
And all your love requite a hundred-fold,
And bless your children's children. He shall show
His favour unto thee from day to day;
And, as the shadows lengthen on thy path,
The cloudy pillar through the gathering night
Shall more and more disclose its heart of fire
Until the whisper comes "Friend, go up higher."

THE PIECE OF MONEY.—IN THE DUST BUT PRIZED.—LUKE xv. 8—10.

We probably have in this parable a setting forth of the work of the Holy Spirit in seeking after the lost through the agency of the Church of Christ. We shall note what is said of

(1) THE OWNER (ver. 8).—Here we have (a) A woman.—The Church is the Bride of Christ, and delights to engage with Him in the blessed work of seeking for the lost (Acts iii. 10; 1 Thess. i. 8). Seekers for souls need the patience, sympathy, tenderness, and tact so often characteristic of womanhood. (b) A poor person.—Had she been rich, she would not have sought so earnestly for so small a coin. Poverty deplores the loss of the smallest mite, and the Church, quickened by the Holy Ghost, will care much for the most worthless men. (c) One who lamented her loss.—This is implied in the joy which followed the finding of the piece. Sorrow for lost souls is Christ-like (Luke xix. 41), and Apostolic (Acts xx. 31). (d) A woman in earnest.—It was her resolve to find the piece, and she set about the business with all her heart. The Christian worker needs such a passion for saving souls (Gal. iv. 19). (e) A woman of common sense.—Used the best means to find her piece. Right appliances brought the lost Atlantic cable from the bottom of the sea, and by such means lost men are often brought out of the deepest depths of iniquity. Wisdom is needed (Prov. xi. 30). (f) A hard worker.—Swept and sought diligently. The world wants workers, not shirkers. John Marks are numerous (Acts xv. 38). (g) One who made a stir.—She raised the dust, but what of that if she could find her piece? (Acts xvii. 6; 2 Pet. iii. 1). (h) A very thorough person—"the house," not a part of it (Mark xvi. 15; Rom. xv. 19). (i) A personal worker.—Many are very earnest in telling others what they ought to do, but do nothing themselves (comp. Isa. vi. 8; John ix. 4). (j) A persevering worker.—Never rested till she found her piece.

(2) THE COIN.—This was (a) Not of much value.—About eightpence (R.V., margin). Fifty represents the publicans, &c. (ver. 1, comp. Isa. xl. 17). (b) Much prized.—It has been said that it was part of the woman's wedding necklace, and that if she had lost it, she would have been disgraced. For this reason she prized it. God prizes souls (Luke ix. 25; 1 Pet. i. 18). (c) Lost.—No blame is attached to the woman. It would fall from its place by the force of gravitation. The sinful heart of man has an affinity for the earth (1 Cor. xv. 47). To sin is to sink (Hosea xiv. 1). (d) Insensible.—There was in the coin no sense of its lost condition (comp. "past feeling," Eph. iv. 19). (e) Recoverable.—Lost, but lost in the house. "Sins forgiven," says Dr. Guthrie, "are lost in the sea, but souls under condemnation are lost in the house." The sheep, the coin, and the prodigal son of this chapter were all recoverable, and all recovered.

(3) THE DISCOVERY.—The piece was found by the owner, and its discovery was a sufficient reward for her pains (Isa. liii. 11; Phil. iv. 1). Comp. the sneer of ver. 2 with the joy of ver. 9. Note that the recovery of a soul is associated with the thought of repentance (ver. 10).

EMPLOYEES AT THE EXHIBITIONS.

We are glad to hear from Miss C. M. Gough, who is doing such excellent work amongst the young women, especially those employed at restaurants, &c., that a house has been secured near the Exhibition for those desiring accommodation when they cease their work. This will be a great boon to many, and may prove the salvation of not a few. Some have to live alone in apartments in the neighbourhood; others reside in the East and North of London, and do not arrive home until long after midnight in some instances. When the Exhibitions close later than usual they lose the last train or omnibus, and must either walk or seek some common lodging near; both of which are most dangerous in this great city.

The Home will be opened to-morrow (Saturday) at noon, when Christian friends will be welcomed to join in prayer for the work. The outlay has been met, with the exception of £40, which it is desired to clear off speedily.

The Home is appropriately called "Exhibition House," and is at 58, Eardley-crescent, Kensington (near Earl's Court Station), where Miss Gough may be addressed.

International S. S. Lesson.

GOD'S COVENANT WITH ISRAEL.

EX. xxiv. 1—12; GOLDEN TEXT, EX. viii. 10.

Our lesson tells of the making of a covenant between God and the Israelites, of its announcement, acceptance, and ratification. Also of the near and blessed access to God permitted to the leaders of Israel, because of the covenant recently ratified.

It is important to remember that such terms as "covenant," "acceptance of the covenant," and "ratification," &c., are probably strange to the children. Yet they contain the keys of the lesson; so we must make sure that they are understood.

A Covenant is a freewill agreement made by two or more parties. We generally use the word only for the most binding and sacred engagements. To enter a covenant—as the word is used in the Bible—was to bind oneself in the most solemn manner conceivable. Ordinary promises to keep the covenant were not enough: a covenant must be confirmed by an oath (Heb. vi. 13—20). Even this was not enough: it must also be sealed with blood—the blood of the slain victim. When the scholars understand the exceeding sacredness of a covenant engagement, they will begin to see how wonderful it is that God should condescend to enter into such a covenant with his people, and, through Christ, with everyone who trusts in Him.

The Acceptance of the Covenant.—A covenant must be accepted by all the parties concerned, before it can be established. It is not enough that God should offer a covenant of peace; the people to whom it is offered must heartily accept it. God offers his covenant of peace and love to everyone who will sincerely repent of sin, and trust and obey Jesus Christ; but that covenant is of none effect, though God is all in earnest in offering it, unless each one for himself yields himself to God, and so "takes hold of his covenant." Again, God will not force anyone into his covenant. He would have us act freely, and with full knowledge. Observe how careful Moses was to make the people understand. He first "told the people all the words of the Lord" (ver. 3). Then, when they had formally accepted them, he seems to have retired, and written them out fully. Next morning, amid circumstances of great solemnity, he "read in the audience of the people" (ver. 7) the book of the covenant; and they said, "All that the Lord hath said will we do, and be obedient." Let the question be asked, "Have I accepted God's covenant?"

We read (ver. 3) with what universal enthusiasm the people accepted it; and yet how few of them kept it! No doubt they meant to do so. Why, then, did they fail? Many of them were not really sorry for their sins; many, too, were only afraid of God; they did not really trust and love Him. Perhaps, too, they did not know how weak they were. They thought they were able of themselves to love, trust, and obey God.

(3) The Ratification of the Covenant.—The Ratification was the public, formal, and most solemn acceptance of the agreement. It was the sealing of the covenant by oath, and blood, and sacred ceremonies (ver. 4—8). In New Testament times the rites of baptism and the Lord's Supper are established as the appointed means of testifying to our entrance into God's covenant.

How the Covenant was ratified:—

The covenant had been really made the day before; but it was now made more binding and sacred by the following rites:—MOSES BUILDED AN ALTAR UNDER THE HILL.—The altar represented the first and principal party to the covenant. AND TWELVE PILLARS.—Each standing for one of the twelve tribes, and together represented the whole nation. Note that each tribe was separately represented; there was not one pillar for the whole people. This reminds us of our individual responsibility; each must answer for himself before God, and for himself alone. OFFERED BURNT OFFERINGS.—Burnt offerings were originally symbols of complete self-surrender, "the unconditional surrender of the offerer with all that he was and had to God." See Rom. xii. 1. But it also symbolised as well an offering for sin, an atoning sacrifice. All burnt offerings point to Jesus Christ: (1) to his life of perfect self-surrender and loving obedience, and (2) to his suffering life and death as the sin-bearer, the atonement for the sins of the world. The burnt offering, then, told of sin; but also of sin righteously pardoned, because punished in the sin-bearer. Apart from this offering, God could not have entered into a covenant of peace with sinful men.

PEACE OFFERINGS.—These were eaten and drunken in the presence of God by the priests, who represented both God and the people. They spoke of peace and blessed intercourse between God and his pardoned people. Partaking of the peace offering has been well spoken of as "a kind of Old Testament Lord's Supper."

HALF OF THE BLOOD HE SPRINKLED ON THE ALTAR.—Thereby signifying that God engaged Himself to fulfil his part of the agreement. HE TOOK THE BOOK...READ IN THE AUDIENCE OF THE PEOPLE: AND THEY SAID, ALL...WILL WE DO, &c. This was equal to a public oath of allegiance to God. MOSES TOOK THE BLOOD, AND SPRINKLED IT ON THE PEOPLE—i.e., through their representatives, the seventy, probably; for the people counted 2,000,000. "The import of the act was solemn and awful in the extreme, and the form of adjuration is supposed to have been substantially the following:—"As the body of this victim is cloven asunder, as the blood of this animal is poured out, so let my body be divided, and my blood shed, if I prove unfaithful and perfidious."

The Vision of God.—THEN WENT UP MOSES AND AARON, NADAB AND ABIHU, AND THE SEVENTY, &c.—Nadab and Abihu. See Leviticus x. 1, 2. How great their privileges, position, and even experience, for they see the visible symbol of God, and eat before Him. Yet they died in presumptuous sin. "They went up" to some spot midway between the summit and the foot. THEY SAW THE GOD OF ISRAEL. Not the actual form, which no man can see, but some glorious symbol. This manifestation of God must have been utterly different to that made at the giving of the law. He was now their God, with whom they had made a covenant by sacrifice. So He appears in beauty and beneficence, and they are not afraid. AND UPON THE NOBLES HE LAID NOT HIS HAND.—What a contrast to the giving of the law, when none but Moses (who, as mediator of this "first covenant," is throughout a type of Jesus Christ) dared draw near or touch the mount (Exod. xix. and xx.). THEY SAW GOD, AND DID EAT AND DRINK.—I.e., in his immediate presence. "We joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have now received the atonement" (Rom. v. 11). The same men who even at a distance could not bear so much as to hear God's voice, now meet Him, as it were, face to face, rejoice in the glorious symbols of his visible presence, and eat and drink before Him. How this change? Simply that they have entered into a covenant by sacrifice.

A FAMILY HOLIDAY HOME.

A LARGE roomy house, built for a gentleman's seat in the midst of rural scenery a few miles out on the Mid-Kent line, has been acquired by the North-East London Gospel Mission for a second Holiday Home, with the assistance of a City merchant well acquainted with the East-end work of the Mission.

In settling details, several of the largest and brightest rooms have been apportioned for poor weakly mothers with infants or young children who cannot enjoy a change by other means. A whole family will be taken when need arises.

The higher interests are kept steadily in view, for the motto is, "Christ is all, and in all." The housekeeper selected is the active sister of our friend Mr. W. R. Lane, herself an earnest worker in the Master's vineyard.

Articles of furniture, bedsteads, bedding, linen, china and glass, carpets, an harmonium, or other effects, would be gratefully accepted by Mr. Chorley, 2, Marquess-grove, Canonbury, N. The Home will be opened with all despatch as soon as the necessaries are forthcoming.

Coombe, near Woodstock.—Mrs. ADELA BROOKE appeals for aid to build and establish a reading-room and coffee-house. £400 are in hand, but £200 more are wanted before the work is begun. It will be established on non-political and non-sectarian principles, and will be managed, when started, by a committee of working men.

RIGHTEOUSNESS HAS TRIUMPHED in the unanimous passage, through both houses of the Canadian Parliament, of the Bill for the suppression of "bucket shops." But this Bill will only cut off the decayed part of the gambling sore. To find a remedy which will abolish all gambling in grain and stocks is, we fear, beyond the reach of law, though whatever law can do, law ought to do, and further legislation will perhaps follow. But the medicine which reaches such a deadly and withering disease will need to be a moral one. So long as our law permits gambling in churches, and lotteries conducted by clergymen, for so-called patriotic purposes, the outlawing of Satan's acknowledged bucket shops will have about it some slight odour of hypocrisy. It is time that judgment should begin at the house of God.—Montreal Witness.

THE BROWN INSTITUTION.

By the terms of the will of the late Mr. Thomas Brown, an Institution was to be founded "for investigating, studying, and endeavouring to cure," the maladies of sick animals. A superintendent or professor was to be appointed, the testator expressing his desire that "kindness to the animals committed to his charge shall be a general principle of the Institution." The trustees under the will have put on its terms a very curious construction. They have virtually sanctioned the building of two Institutions—a hospital for the cure of sick animals, which they have placed under a veterinary surgeon; and a laboratory for vivisecting healthy animals, which is under the immediate direction of the professor-superintendent. The report of Mr. V. Horsley, the present professor-superintendent, for the year 1887 is now issued. The vivisectional part occupies twice as much space in his report as that accorded to the treatment of the sick animals. Further, whilst there is but one veterinary surgeon told off to attend to the patients, no less than sixteen vivisectors wěre busily at work during the year. It seems that the hospital is badly in want of a clinical clerk to assist Mr. Batt in his labours, but the funds will not admit of a luxury of this kind whilst there is so much vivisection to be done.

Dr. Wooldridge has carried out a series of experiments in plugging the blood vessels of the liver, by injecting into the blood-current substances that could not pass through the smallest vessels. In some of these experiments instant death was the result; in others, where the injected matter was less abundant, disease followed. Among the accounts of the experiments recorded are those by Dr. Mott on the spinal cords of monkeys. The animals had their spinal canal opened in its lower part, the operation being performed under anæsthetics. Whilst the spinal cord was exposed in its canal, certain parts of it were destroyed. The animals were then allowed to recover and the wound to heal. They recovered from the operation to find themselves paralysed, and after lingering on in this miserable state for two months they died.

This is the kind of thing that goes on in an Institution founded for the benefit of suffering animals. We venture to say that no sane person, not a vivisector, will ever suppose that Mr. Thomas Brown contemplated any such use being made of his money when he bequeathed it as he did.—The Zoophilist.

OBITUARY.

MISS ELIZABETH BARR.

At the early age of twenty-eight, this very devoted labourer, well known in Christian circles in Glasgow, recently entered into rest. During several years, with some friends, Miss Barr conducted a Sunday afternoon meeting for young women, and devoted all her leisure and an abounding zeal to evangelistic work. In the inquiry-room and at open-air meetings, she did her utmost to cheer the broken-hearted and to point sinners to Christ. It is more than probable she would have enrolled herself as an officer in the Salvation Army, had she possessed the necessary physical strength. When Mr. Moody last visited Glasgow she threw herself heartily into the movement, spending many nights in the circus seeking to point sinners to Christ. Not a few have cause to thank God for her earnest pleading with them.

THE MONUMENT erected by public subscription to the late Dr. McAuslane will be unveiled by Dr. McEwan, at Abney Park Cemetery, to-morrow (Saturday), at 4 p.m. Revs. James Ellis and Samuel Hester will also take part in the service.

MEETINGS FOR THE DEEPENING OF THE SPIRITUAL LIFE, arranged for by Rev. G. O. Brownrigg, have been held at Harrogate. Mr. H. F. Bowker presided, and led the proceedings in a simple and directly spiritual manner. Addresses, all most helpful and impressive, were given by Revs. Evan Hopkins, W. Haslam, J. B. Figgis, and Mr. Robert Wilson. Large audiences assembled at the meetings.

Royal Naval Scripture Readers' Society.—A bazaar in aid of this Society will be held on June 28 in Queen's Gate Hall, South Kensington. The Society is a national one, and in need of funds.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. Prebendary R. C. Billing, for ten years Rector of Spitalfields, has been appointed to to succeed Dr. Walsham How as Bishop Suffragan of Bedford.

The late Bishop Fraser, of Manchester, once declared that Dr. Horatius Bonar's hymn, "I heard the voice of Jesus say," was the greatest and most remarkable hymn which had been written in the whole history of Christendom.

The Bishopric of Eastern Equatorial Africa, vacant by the lamented death of Bishop Parker, has been offered to Rev. H. G. Grey, Church Missionory Society's Missionary at Quetta, Punjaub. Mr. Grey has declined the nomination.

Rev. F. W. Keene, curate of St. Paul's, Morton, says The Yorkshire Post, has for several days been doing the housework, and washing and minding the three little children of a poor man and woman who had been removed to the Gainsborough Smallpox Hospital. The woman has died. Not one of the cottage neighbours could be prevailed upon to enter the house.

The vicar of St. John's, Newport, Isle of Wight, has has had a baptistery constructed in his church for the administration of the ordinance by immersion. This step has been taken to meet the desire of some who are anxious for baptism according to their view of the teaching of the New Testament. Canon Wilberforce, we believe, has a similar baptismal font in his church at Southampton.

This being the jubilee year of St. James's Church, Holloway, Rev. E. A. Stuart, has issued a district report, in which he takes a survey of the fifty years. For fifty years, he says, we believe, by the blessing of God, St. James's, Holloway, has been a power in the North of London. The plain simple Gospel which has been preached within its walls; the happy unity which has prevaded its congregation; the self-denying liberality of its members, and manifold labours of love, have all combined to make it a city set upon a hill.

METHODIST.

Rev. Thomas Waugh has held a special mission at Bradford in connection with which there have been a large number of remarkable and interesting cases of conversion.

The Methodist New Connexion Conference, which has been in session at Hanley, represents a slowly growing church of about 30,000 members. This year the increase reported is 444, somewhat less than the average gain in any of the last twelve years.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes is in favour of women preachers. In The Methodist Times he asks: "Are sinners converted under the ministry of women?" That being so, he declares the case settled. "In the Frome Circuit," he adds, "village Methodism is being saved from extinction by the ministry of women."

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has conducted a six days' special mission in the Abbey Foregate Church, Shrewsbury. A special feature of the services has been the impression made upon the senior scholars in the Sunday-school, many of whom have found peace in Christ.

Rev. Dr. Macfadyen has completed twenty-five years' ministry at Chorlton-road Church, Manchester. Twenty-five years ago the congregation consisted of ninety members. Every year since there had been an increase in numbers, and the membership is now 1209.

Dr. Parker completed nineteen years of his ministry in London on Sunday week, and in the course of his morning sermon, reviewed the work of his pastorate. What has astounded him, perhaps, most of all, is the possibility of getting a hearing for expository and continuous preaching.

At a meeting to celebrate the first anniversary of Rev. Herbert Arnold's settlement at Lavender-hill, it was reported that seventy-three members were received into fellowship during the year, the congregations almost doubled in numbers, and there has been a large increase in the Sunday-schools.

BAPTIST.

Mr. Spurgeon's Stockwell Orphanage annual festival took place on Tuesday. We reserve our report until next week.

Mr. Spurgeon preached on Sunday morning last at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. He was obviously in a weak state of health. The early part of the service was taken by Rev. Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston. U.S.A. The congregation included a large number of the delegates to the Missionary Conference.

To the church at King's-road, Reading, eighty-four members were added last year. During the sixteen months of the ministry of the present pastor, Rev. C. A. Davis, 136 members have been added. The amount raised for all purposes last year was £2152, which included £403 for foreign missions, and £306 for home missions. The church supports ten village stations.

The reports of the various departments of work in connection with Abbey-street Chapel, Bermondsey, are very encouraging. The net increase of members during the past year was fourteen. Ten young men were baptized from Messrs. Peek and Frean's Bible-class. More than 17,000 free dinners have been given to the unemployed. The Christian Association formed this year has a membership of forty-seven young men and maidens.

The first anniversary of Rev. G. H. Kilby's settlement at Bishop's Stortford has been celebrated. Mr. Kilby entered upon the work when the church was low and weak; the congregation have now increased to fourfold, the weekly offering has increased to seven times the amount formerly given, and nineteen have been received into church fellowship. There has not been such a successful year during the sixty-nine years of the church's history.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Dr. Ross, of Reading, has accepted a call to Trinity Church, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

Rev. Dr. William M. Taylor, of New York, occupied the pulpit of Regent-square Church, on Sunday. Rev. Principal Miller, of the Free Church College, Madras, will be the preacher on Sunday next.

The Canada Presbyterian says that Mr. J. T. Morton, of Caterham, has made an offer to the Presbyterian Church in Canada to pay the salary of a medical missionary and two native assistants for three years in the foreign field, the Church to select the man and the field of labour.

SALVATION ARMY.

During the past five months 2000 persons are said to have sought salvation at Army meetings in Christiania (Norway).

In the United States and Canada two lines of corps stretch right across both countries, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, comprising 781 stations, under the command of 1586 officers.

The Food and Shelter Home at Limehouse has already been the means of providing a meal to 102,800 persons who were hungry and shelterless, whilst 9200 have been accommodated with a night's lodging, who otherwise would have slept out of doors.

A petition requesting all Members of Parliament to support Mr. H. H. Fowler's "Torquay Harbour Amendment Act" has been already signed by the President of the Wesleyan Conference, the Chairmen of the Baptist and Congregational Unions, Revs. Dr. Parker, Newman Hall, Mark Guy Pearse, Hugh Price Hughes, Dr. Maclaren, and a large number of ministers and clergymen, as well as by prominent representatives of the military and naval services, the legal and medical professions, &c. The petition is open for further signatures.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Wister and Mary Morris, of Philadelphia, have just entertained the delegates of the Presbyterian General Assembly, 500 in number. President Cleveland addressed the company.

We regret to hear of the delicate health of Gulielma Purdie, of Mexico, whose labours have so helped to enlighten the priest-ridden Republic. Her toil has been arduous, and she and her husband need our sympathy.

The Friends' Review says:—"It required four years of war to make 4,000,000 chattels into freedmen in this country, whereas in 1861 Russia freed 48,000,000, and now Brazil adds 2,000,000 to the ranks of freedmen. In less than thirty years war has freed 4,000,000 slaves, and peace 50,000,000." What is the teaching of history?

At the seventh annual Conference of Indiana Yearly Meeting Bible School Workers just held, Thomas Newlin says:—"Among the evils to be overcome or avoided are illiteracy, socialism, Catholicism, and intemperance, and only a knowledge of Gospel precepts, which open the heart and reach the life, will meet the case." At the same Conference Josie Ridgway stated that "since the Sabbath lies at the foundation of all true morality and shields our Christian civilisation from the encroachments of anarchy," we should make it what God intended it to be.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A most successful series of evangelistic meetings have been held in a mission tent at Pettigo, co. Fermanagh.

During the past month Gospel services have been held in the Methodist Church, Skibbereen, co. Cork. Believers had their spiritual life quickened, and many were led to the Saviour.

During the summer a great many open-air Gospel meetings are usually held in various parts of Ireland, and these are attended by many Roman Catholics and others. A meeting of this kind was held on a recent Sunday at Drimoleague, co. Cork, and was very largely attended.

Rev. Thomas Cook has had a very successful work in Dublin. The services only extended over a few days, but much good was done in a short time. Wesley College, in particular, received a large blessing; nearly all the students thankfully accepted the glad tidings. Mr. Cook has received nearly twenty letters from as many scholars, thanking him for the work God has enabled him to do.

The Methodist Conference has been in session in Dublin during a part of the past week. Ten young men were accepted as candidates for the ministry, one of these being recently converted from Romanism. A most interesting conversation on the work of God in Ireland took place; among other encouraging statements, it was reported that nearly all the boarders in Wesley College, Dublin, had recently professed conversion.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. Horrocks Cocks, Congregational minister, who has filled pastorates at Stanford Rivers, Clitheroe, Tockholes, Boston Spa, Putney, and Egham, and rendered some services in connection with the Palestine Exploration Fund.—Rev. Francis Tait, formerly a Wesleyan missionary in the Fiji Islands.—Rev. Charles John Townsend, rector of Tomhaggard, Kilturk, and Kilmore.—Mrs. Mary Carson, of Dublin, an earnest and devoted member of the Methodist Church.

COULD ANYTHING BE MORE CUTTING, says The Montreal Witness, than the quiet sarcasm of the Pundita Ramabai in speaking of the work of missionaries in India and its relation to the "Christian government" for which Great Britain is responsible: "Yes, I think the missionaries are doing good. In the first place, they are showing by precept and example that Christianity does not mean going into other countries and taking possession of them, and putting taxes upon the people, and introducing the liquor traffic, and gaining a great deal of revenue from the infamous trades in rum and opium."

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The British Medical Temperance Association reports a considerable accession of members during the year.

Rev. Peter Thompson, speaking at the Southport Holiness Convention, melted the large audience by his account of the ruin wrought in the East-end of London by drink, not only to adults but to little children.

The United Committee for the Prevention of the Demoralisation of Native Races by the Liquor Traffic have convened an afternoon conference of the Anglican bishops, to be held in Grosvenor House, Park-lane, on Wednesday, the 27th inst., at 4 p.m.

At the Glasgow as at the Manchester Exhibition a large sum has been paid for the privilege of selling intoxicants, and the results are disagreeably the same. Probably none of the guarantors would like to keep a public-house, yet they are indirectly partners in the traffic.

The annual meeting of the London Temperance Hospital was largely attended. The report was most encouraging to friends of the temperance cause. In the eight months it covered, 495 in-patients had been admitted. Owing to lack of funds only sixty to seventy of the 120 beds were used. £1500 a year additional was needed.

BOSTON, U.S.—There are signs of a determined effort to bring to bear on the morally waste places of Boston, the helpful, vitalising forces of the Gospel of Christ, and by spiritual irrigation make a garden of the wilderness. The Baptists are turning the old Bowdoin-square Church into a fountain from which healthful streams of activity are going into the West-end. The Congregationalists now call Berkeley-street Church a "Temple." The Episcopalians are pumping new life into their City Mission.

THE JAPANESE AND RELIGION.—The Japan Weekly Mail summarises a discussion now being carried on in Japan, respecting the advisability of the people of that country embracing the Christian religion. "A movement, supported by some very prominent men, is on foot to give an impetus to the spread of Christianity by laying stress on the secondary benefits its acceptance insures." Mr. Fukuzawa, a well-known writer, says he takes no personal interest whatever in religion, and knows nothing of the teaching of Christianity; but he sees that it is the creed of the most highly civilised nations. To him religion is only a garment, to be put on or taken of at pleasure, but he thinks it prudent that Japan should wear the same dress as her neighbours, with whom she desires to stand well. Professor Toyama, of the Imperial University, holds that Chinese ethics must be replaced by Christian ethics. Mr. Kato, the late President of the Imperial University, urges the introduction of religious teaching into the Government schools, on the ground that the unlearned in Japan have had their faith in old moral standards shaken, and that there is now a serious lack of moral sentiment among the masses. The writer in the Yokohama newspaper says that those who urge the teaching of Christianity represent an influential section of educated Japanese opinion.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Monday, June 18, 1888.

⁂ Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

⁂ We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

⁂ Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

Cage-lane Mission, Plumstead.—For ten years this Mission has been the centre of much evangelistic activity, put forth by Miss Russell and her vigorous band of helpers. The place has become too strait for the increasing numbers. The owner of two cottages and freehold land adjoining expressed willingness to sell the property, and the amount needed for its purchase is £600. Mr. T. A. Denny has generously given £500 in a lump sum, which more than clears off the old-standing debt on the building. More than £500 is still needed. Miss Russell's address is 1, Thames View-terrace, Plumstead.

HOMES of HOPE,
4, 5, & 6, REGENT SQUARE, GRAY'S-INN ROAD,
LONDON, W.C.

This Society was established in 1860 for the reception of the less degraded class of penitent young women.

Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted from their previous good character and position to mix with others.

Since the Homes have been established 2900 have been admitted; of this number 1050 belonged to the class of young mothers who were thus saved from falling into deeper and continued sin; 325 were rescued from surroundings of great temptation unfallen. In almost every case the mothers, and those admitted unfallen, have turned out well, and about 70 per cent. of the others.

The Committee are obliged to make an urgent appeal for contributions:—

1. For the General Fund: the expenses of which amount to about £5 a day.
2. For the Child's Fund: a guinea or two to pay the nurses would in many cases rescue a mother and child. Five Shillings would pay for a child for a week.
3. For Law Expenses: in every case if it be possible the men are compelled to pay the sum allowed by law for the child's support.

The applications are so distressing and urgent, that every shilling has been spent. Contributions may be sent to the Editor of "The Christian."

To the Readers of "The Christian."

Day by day the most pitiable applications for Free Admissions to our Sea-Side Convalescent Homes come from Doctors, on behalf of their very poor patients; also from Clergymen, Ministers, City Missionaries, and others who are brought in contact with the Poor in all parts of the country. Not a day passes without similar applications from men and women just recovering from a wearying sickness, often with their means entirely exhausted. Their only hope of perfect recovery is a few weeks' rest and quiet, with good food, at a Convalescent Home; but to the majority of such applicants we have to refuse the needed help, owing to the want of Funds. This, we feel sure, would not be the case if our friends could spend a day in our offices and read the letters of appeal, and listen to the earnest pleadings of those who require, and deserve, help in their time of need. We are no friends of indiscriminate Charity; but it is our earnest and prayerful desire, and our constant endeavour, to respond to such applications promptly, practically, and in such a manner as will best help the Poor to help themselves.

Our present urgent needs are many, and are set forth below. With all the earnestness at our command we appeal for aid in this good work for the Lord and His suffering people.

Kindly give us your sympathy, and, if possible, your practical aid.

Donations, either large or small, will be gratefully received, and can be sent to

REV. C. B. SAWDAY,

Melbourne Hall, Leicester.

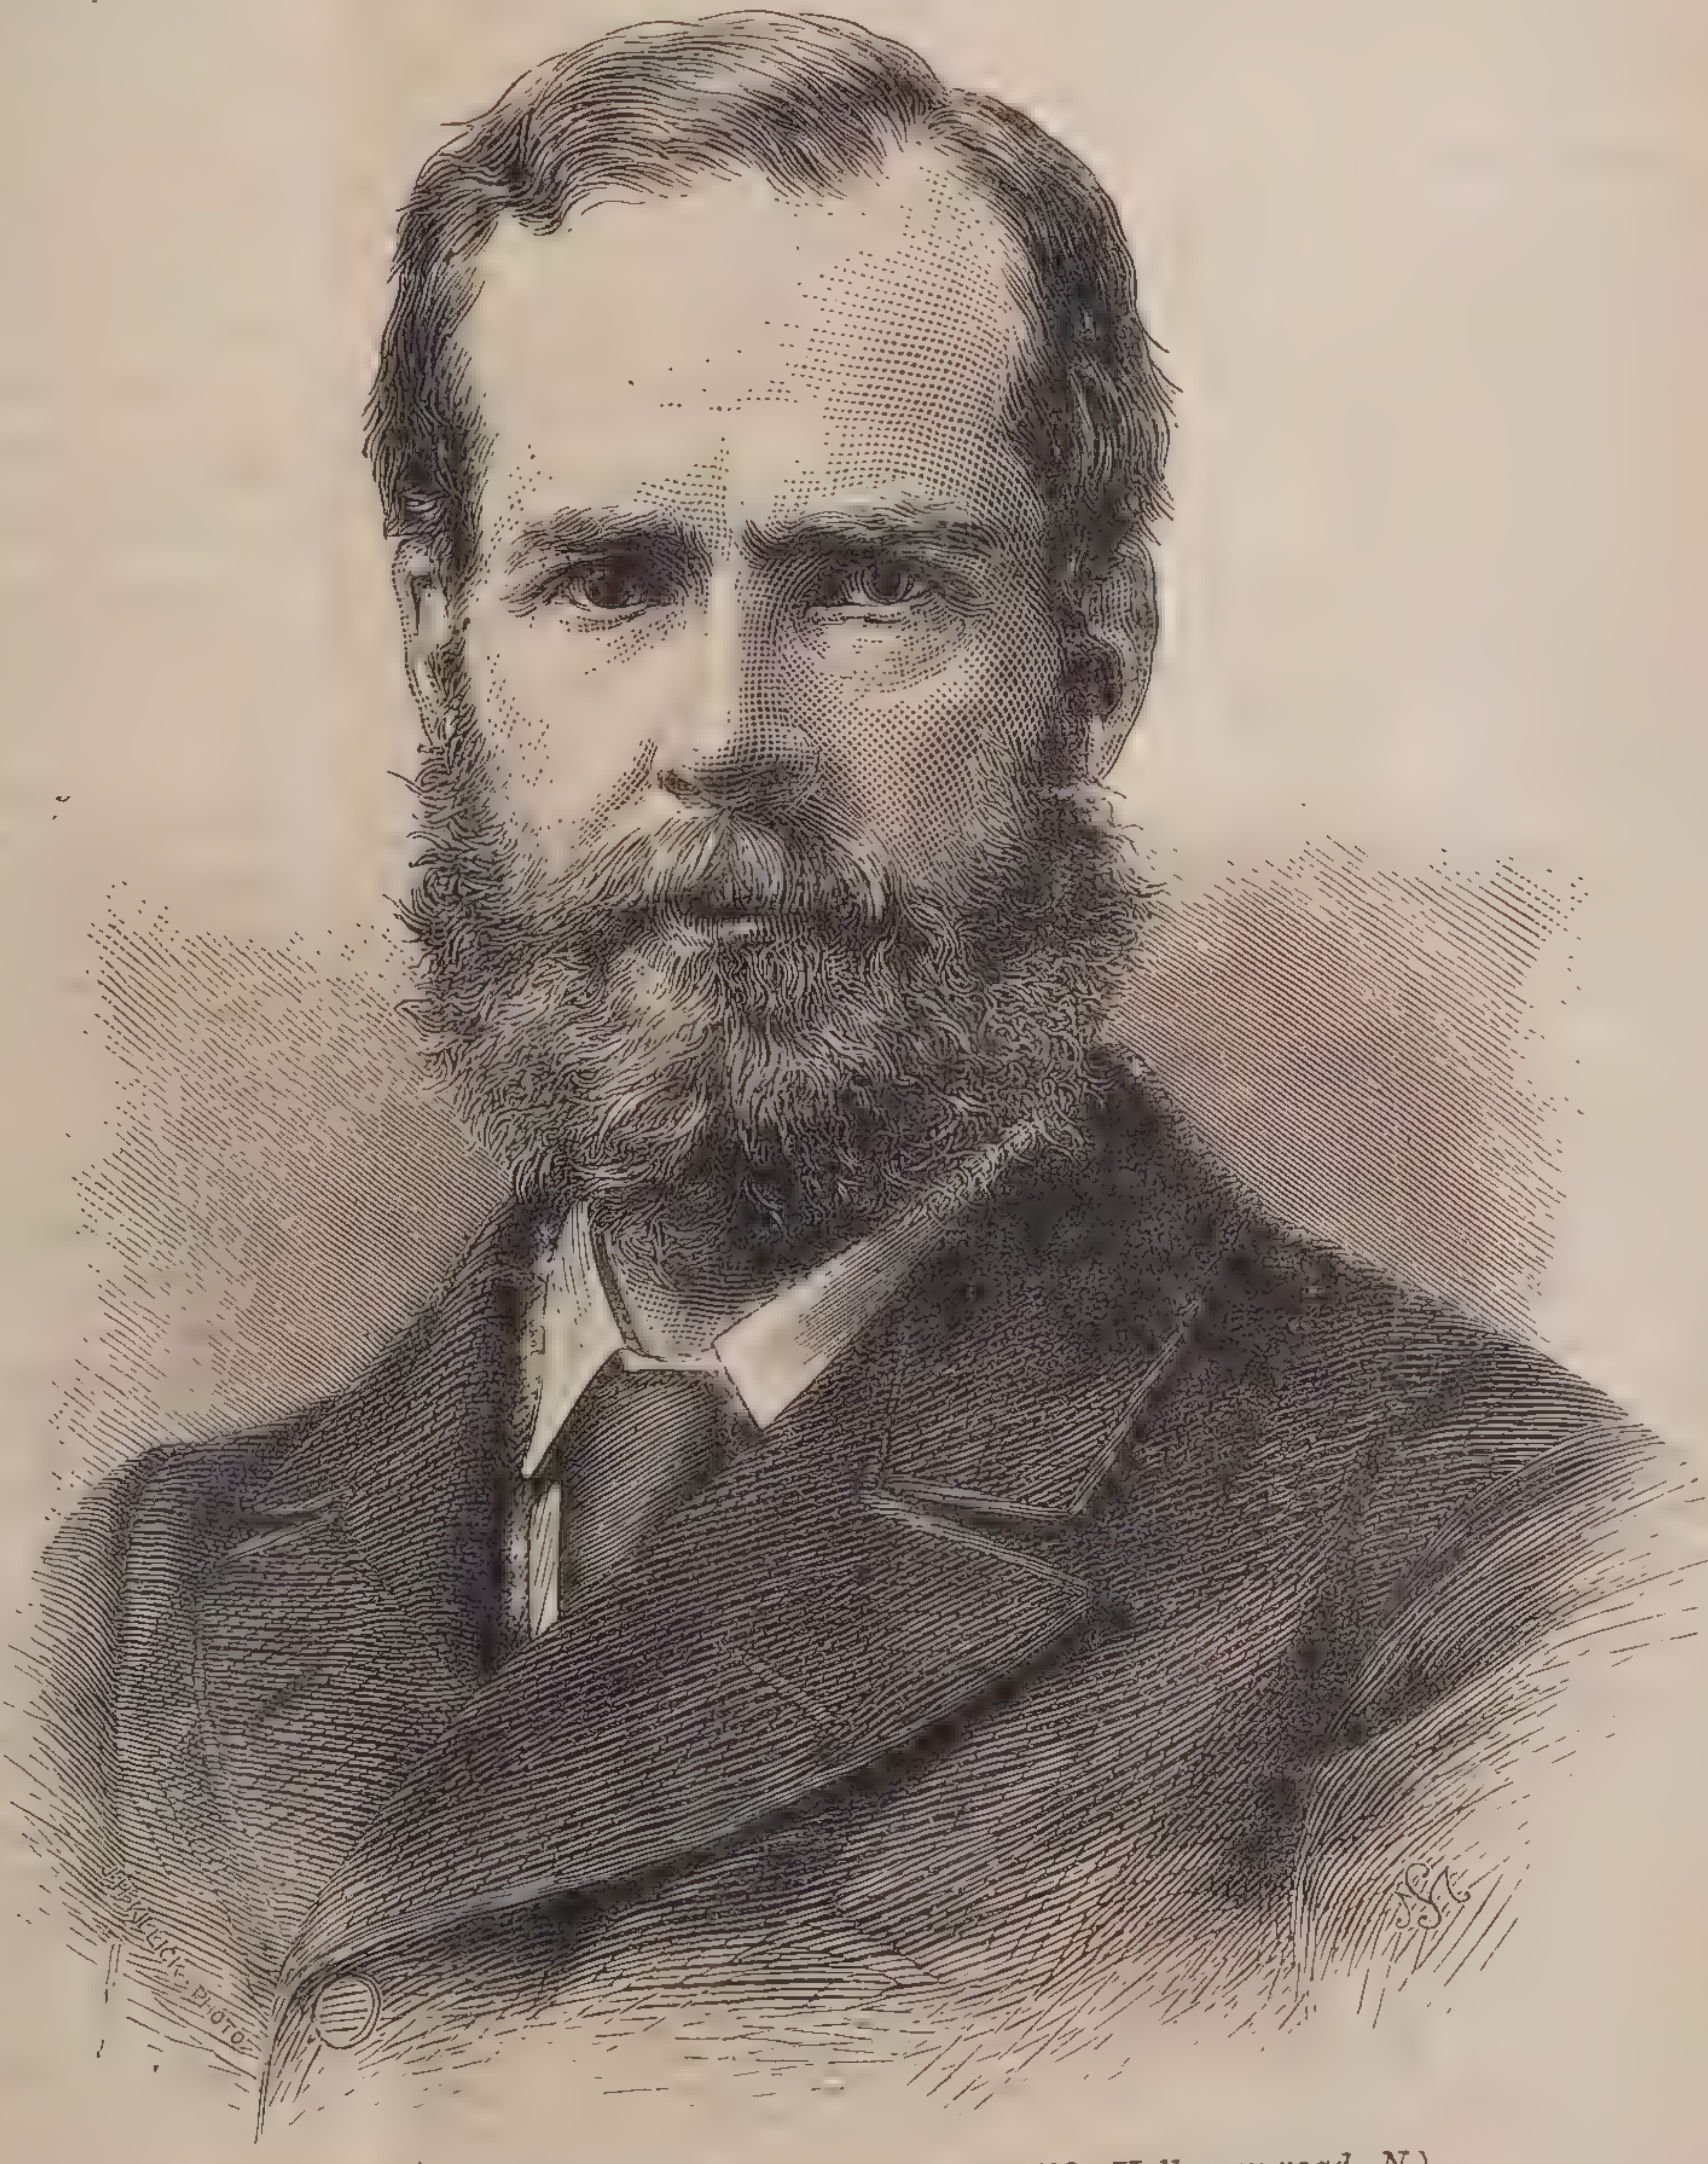
THE call of Rev. C. B. Sawday to the large and important sphere in Melbourne Hall, Leicester, brings specially under our notice the successful work of this popular pastor in North London. That he should have become a preacher of the Gospel, and have been so blessed, will not be wondered at when the early spiritual influences of his home in Devonshire are considered. His father was a well-to-do business man, and very active in the cause of Christ. He was a local preacher of much influence; a class leader and circuit steward among the Wesleyans; and by his assistance many places of worship were erected. Mr. C. B. Sawday's history is another testimony to the value of early Christian training; the influences of his boyhood days have never left him, especially those of the prayers offered at the family altar.

After his school days at Taunton College, Mr. Sawday came to London to learn his father's business, in order that he might become his successor; but events occurred while in this great city which altered the whole course of his life. On being introduced to Mr. Hitchcock, of St. Paul's-churchyard, the first thing that gentleman did was to kneel down with the father and son, and to pray that the young man might be brought to know God in that establishment. This prayer was not long afterwards answered; young Sawday was converted there, and has found in Mr. George Williams a true friend ever since.

On Sunday evening, November 24, 1861, he was accosted by a young man in the Edgware-road, who put to him the question, "Why are you not a Christian?" To this he merely replied, "I don't know," and, as quickly as possible, hastened away. But the question and answer went with him. Pondering over them, he said, "Can it be true that I am losing my soul, and don't know why I am not a Christian? I must be a thousand fools in one to lose my soul, if there is nothing to keep me from Christ." For three days and nights he earnestly sought the way of peace. A buyer at Messrs. Hitchcock's, noticing his deep concern, asked him if his anxiety was not about his soul; to which the answer was, "Yes; I am broken-hearted, and want to find Christ." His friend quoted John iii. 36. Afterwards the steward of the house took him to his bedroom; while kneeling in prayer before the open Bible, and with his finger on that verse, he cast his soul on Jesus. "I left the room," he says, "and going to the young men's prayer-meeting, entered as they began to sing:—

Oh! happy day, that fixed my choice
On Thee, my Saviour and my God.

There and then I joined in my redemption song." That same night he was used of God to the winning of the soul of a young man in the same warehouse, and began what has since proved to be a most remarkable career as a soul-winner.



(From Photograph by Mr. J. H. Killick, 399, Holloway-road, N.)

Early in the following spring he was baptized, and, resolving to offer himself for the service of Christ in the Baptist ministry, applied for admission to the Pastors' College. On Mr. Spurgeon seeing his intense earnestness to win souls, he said he would take him at his own cost; and at the age of seventeen he became a student in the Pastors' College. Soon after being received, one of the tutors was sent to hear him, and to report concerning his preaching abilities. He sent back the report that young Sawday's doctrine was sound enough, but his delivery was dreadful, and he would never make a preacher. Mr. Spurgeon saw the young student, and told him that he thought he had made a mistake; that he would never make a preacher, and he had better go back to business. The reply was, "I may leave College, but I am going to preach Christ and win souls." Thereupon Mr. Spurgeon said, "If that's the case, you shall stay." That very address criticised by the tutor was the means of the conversion of the daughter of the gentleman in whose house it was delivered, and she is to-day a member of a Baptist church in North London. In after years Mr. Sawday preached several times for Mr. Spurgeon in the Metropolitan Tabernacle; on one of these occasions he was the means of the conversion of his own brother George, who is now one of the most successful agents of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, and has founded a splendid orphanage at Tümkür, Mysore, India.

At eighteen Mr. Sawday went to preach at the Old Swan, a suburb of Liverpool; he was so abundantly blessed that at the end of two months he was invited to become the pastor. That invitation was not accepted, but he did not leave the congregation without having made many friends; in his library there is a complete edition of John Bunyan's works, in three volumes, and six volumes of John Howe, in which there is an appropriate inscription, telling of the Lord's goodness to that people through his short ministry of three months.

It was while he was engaged in the work of the Lord in Liverpool that the deacons of Vernon-square Baptist Chapel, King's-cross, were seeking for a pastor, and applied to Mr. Spurgeon. He said, "'Young strike-a-light' will be home this week, and I will send him." At that time the chapel was rented at £100 a year, and during the three previous years but one quarter's rent had been paid, so that when this young preacher entered upon his work there he found the church at a very low ebb, with a debt of £275. He preached there for the first time on Sunday, October 10, 1863, and was so blessed of God in soul-winning that after supplying the pulpit for two Sundays, he was asked to become the pastor. Such was the blessing attending his ministry that the chapel soon became too strait; in the spring of 1865 the church was compelled to seek a larger building.

Sadler's Wells Theatre, and, subsequently, the German Gymnasium, St. Pancras, were secured for a lengthened period, and though the expenses were considerable they were all met, with the help of some generous friends, including the late Mr. Samuel Morley, and Mr. George Williams. Crowds flocked to hear the Gospel, and many were the slain of the Lord under Mr. Sawday's most earnest ministry. Mr. Sawday has often preached at the Agricultural Hall to immense congregations. The chapel at Vernon-square was ultimately enlarged at a considerable cost.

It must not be concluded that Mr. Sawday's success has been that of an evangelist only. As a pastor he has been equally successful; for nearly twenty-five years he has ministered to the same people week by week. He has had the privilege of receiving into church fellowship over 2500 persons, and has built up a strong church which is a centre of much spiritual work. Many of the members are actively engaged in mission-hall and open-air work. There are now about twelve pastors of churches who are much blessed in their work, who formerly were members at Vernon Chapel, and received their training, before entering College, from Mr. Sawday.

The best description of the church at King's-cross would be that of a spiritual church carried on upon spiritual lines. The prayer meetings and week-night service are quite phenomenal. There are no seat-rents; but weekly offerings, and money has always been forthcoming, as required. The chapel and schools have recently been renovated at a cost of over £200, but Mr. Sawday leaves the church without a farthing of debt.

Two or three months since, on Rev. F. B. Meyer leaving Leicester for Regent's Park, Mr. Sawday was the first man invited to preach. After preaching two Sundays, a special church meeting unanimously invited him to become the pastor of the church, which numbers nearly [illegible] members and [illegible] Sunday scholars. It can be readily understood that it was with great difficulty Mr. Sawday could be induced to leave the church at King's-cross where so many are deeply attached to him and regard him as their spiritual father and teacher. It was only after a month of waiting upon God for direction that Mr. Sawday was clearly convinced that it was his duty to take up the work in Leicester.

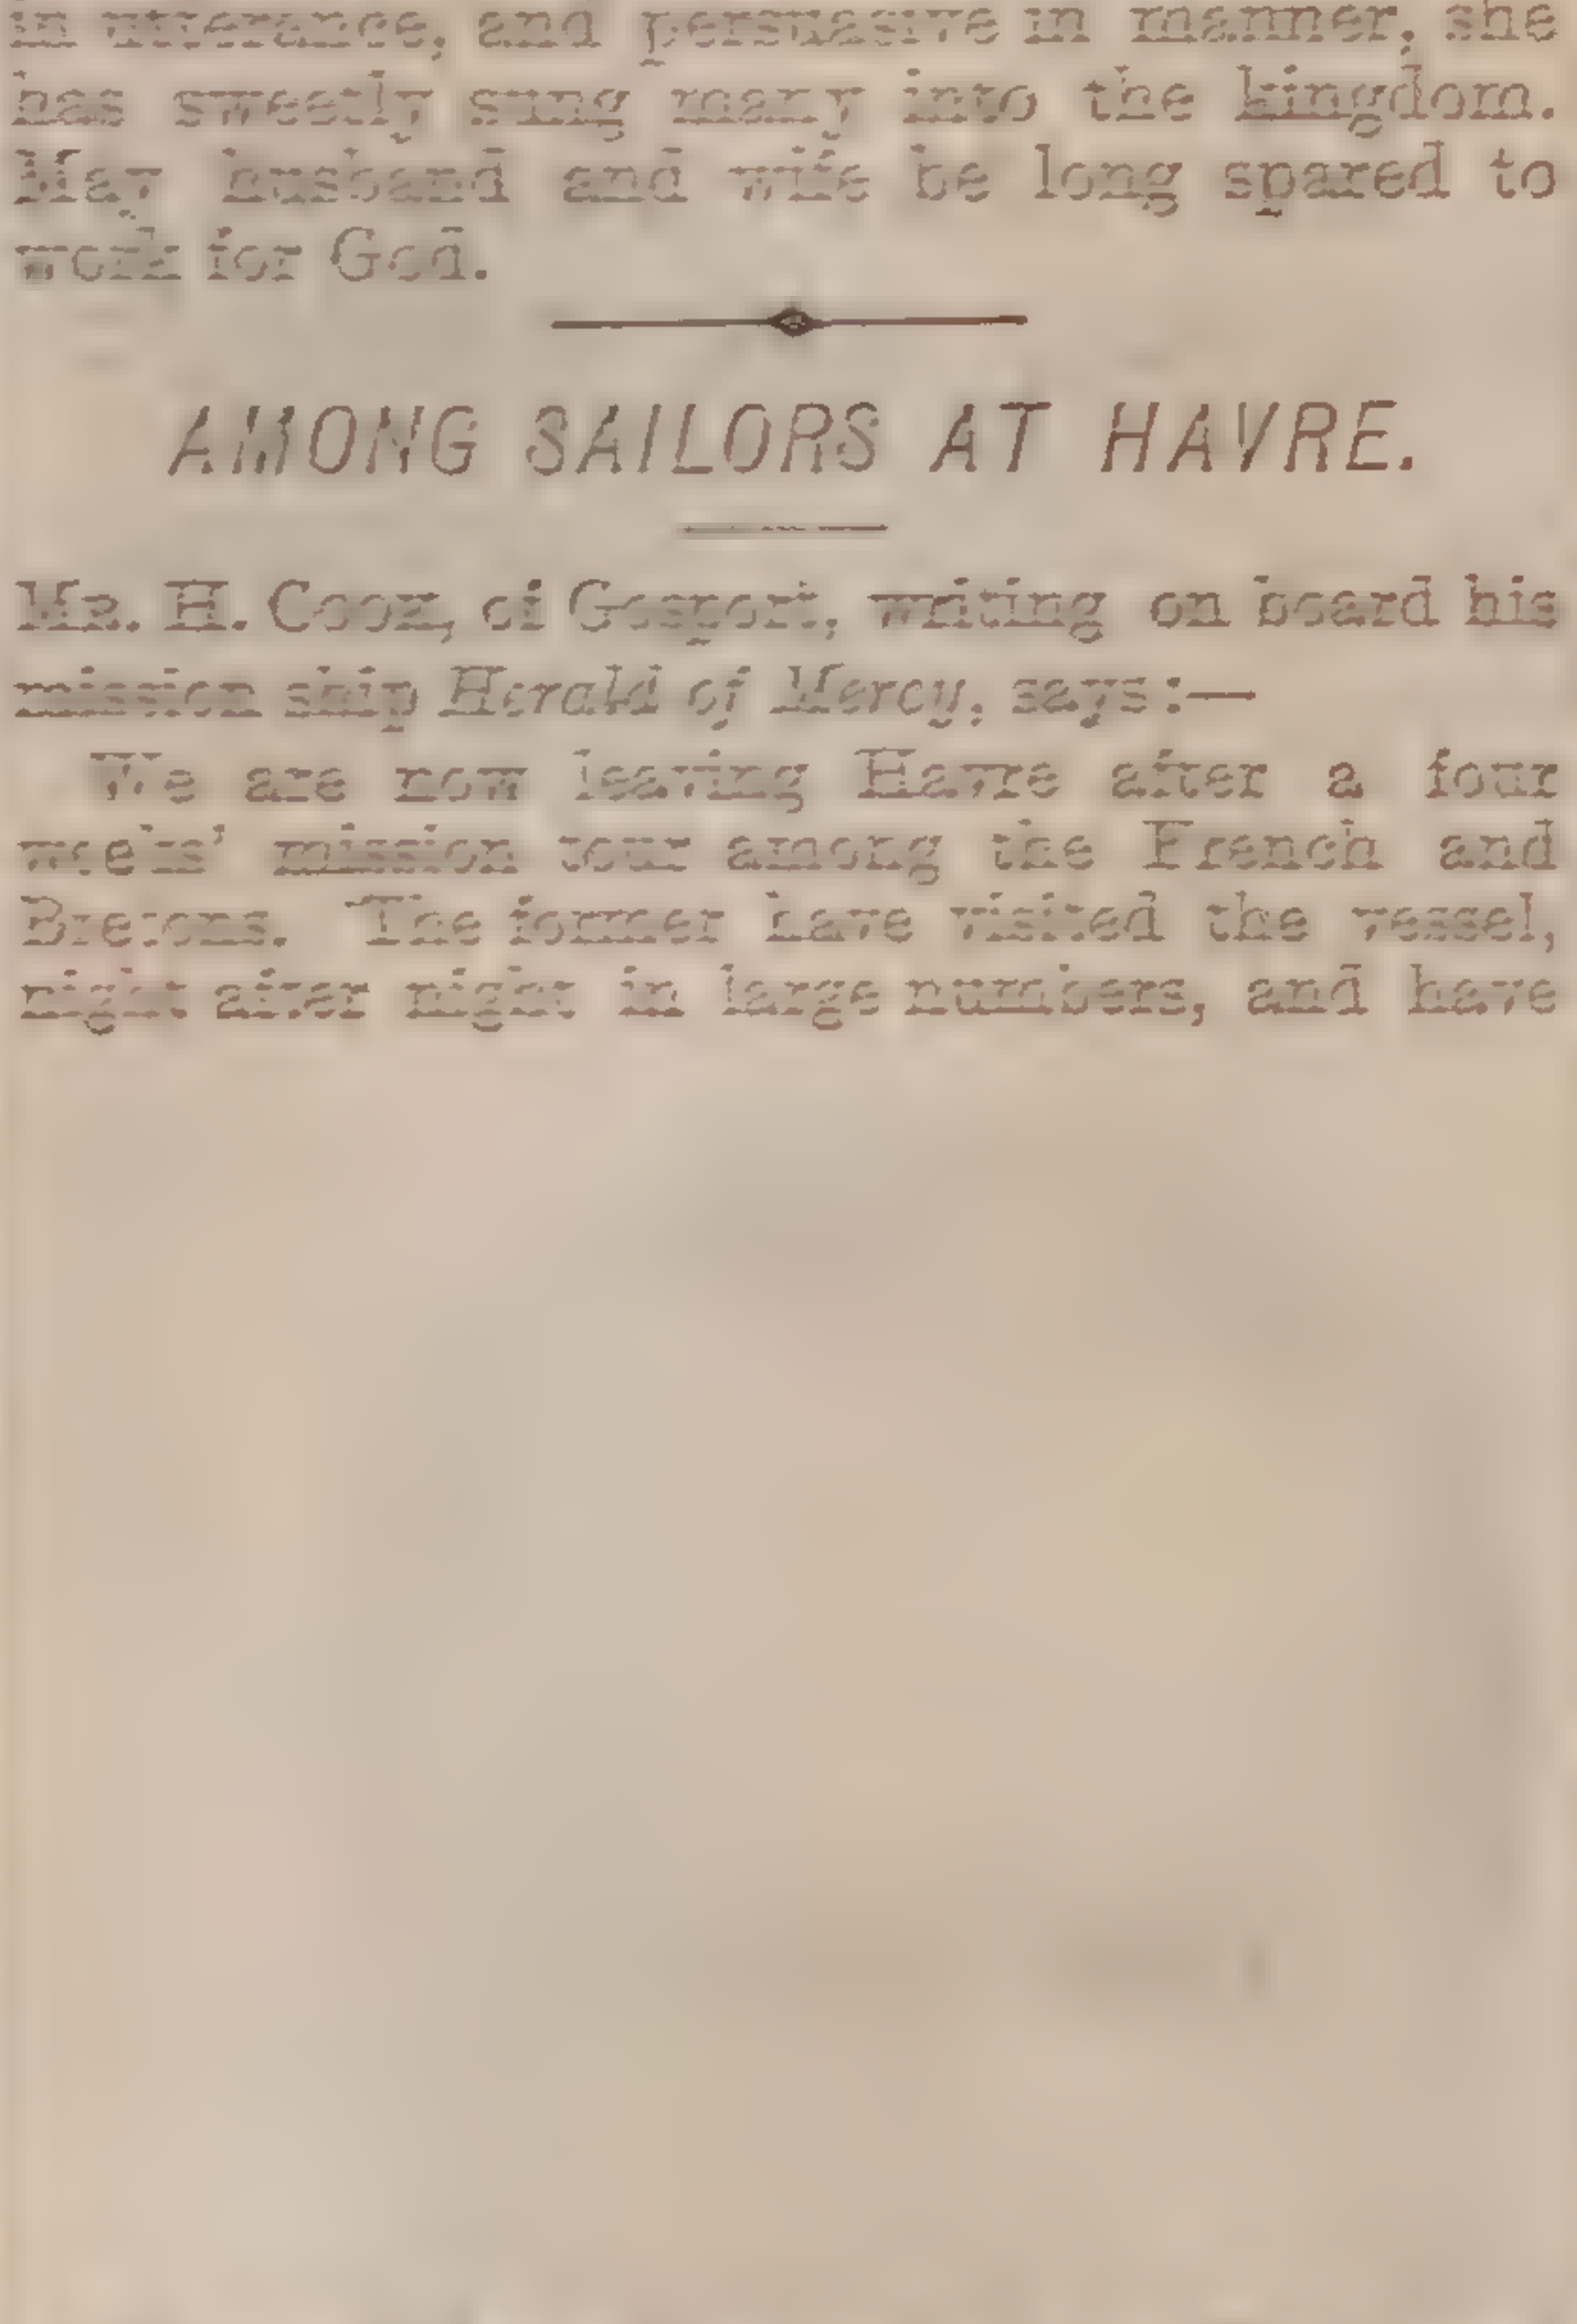
Mr. Sawday's labours have not been confined to King's-cross. He has always been willing to help his brethren in evangelistic services, and has been in this work greatly blessed of God. After five nights' services in one place, 100 were received into fellowship by one church, and thirty by the other.

This brief sketch would be incomplete without a brief mention of Mrs. Sawday's work of faith and labour of love. In evangelistic work she has been much used of God in the singing of the Gospel. Clear in utterance, and persuasive in manner, she has sweetly sung many into the kingdom. May husband and wife be long spared to work for God.

AMONG SAILORS AT HAVRE.

MR. H. COOK, of Gosport, writing on board his mission ship Herald of Mercy, says:—

We are now leaving Havre after a four weeks' mission tour among the French and Bretons. The former have visited the vessel, night after night in large numbers, and have paid most devout attention to the word preached by Rev. G. Whelpton, our evangelist, and others. Special meetings for soldiers and children have been arranged; they were largely attended by the latter, but the former were prevented through fear of punishment. New Testaments, Gospel letters, cards, &c., have been distributed among the people and left on board vessels of all sizes. Villages have also been visited, and everywhere the tracts and Testaments were courteously received.



Our humble efforts need a further supply of help in the shape of Bibles, Testaments, and so forth, also in practical sympathy for the working of the vessels, the crew, &c.

Some very cheering instances of the Lord's goodness have been brought under our notice. I give one. Three or four years ago a young fellow came on board the Annie when at Havre, to mock us, and I gave him a New Testament. Combined with the word preached, this led to his being won for Christ, and he is now a faithful preacher of the Gospel. He has helped us very much.

THE HOLIDAY SEASON.—DEAR SIR,—Kindly inform your readers that we are ready to receive applications from families requiring foreign governesses for the holidays. With many thanks for former kindnesses. Yours truly, PEEPS AT INDIA.—On Wednesday evening, last week, a most interesting lecture was given at the Y.M.C.A., [illegible], Aldersgate-street, entitled, "Peeps at India," by Mr. [illegible] Smith, of Poona. The lecturer illustrated his remarks by dissolving views of the temple, idols, country, and people of India, where he has spent upwards of twenty years of his life. Some fifteen ladies and gentlemen were arrayed by Mr. Smith in the most gorgeous Eastern costumes. There were also exhibited idols that had been worshipped, an Indian plough, and various other curiosities. A most profitable and enjoyable evening was spent.

HEART-HOLINESS AND CHRISTIAN WORK.

We all long for success in our work. Let us see to it that nothing in us hinders the Holy Spirit, the Great Fountain of blessing, from using us as his channels. "This is the will of God: even our sanctification." He "chose us in Christ before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before Him in love."

If He sees that success inflates us, does us more harm than good, He will leave us on one side and work through other instruments. Because He so loves us, He will disappoint us, humble us, rather than imperil the moral perfection which alone can fit us to be his companions. But, if we keep our hearts pure, if we cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, He can and will baptize us gloriously for his service. The condition of blessing in work is that we be free from all taint of self-seeking, self-glory, vanity, exultation over blessing granted to us and withheld apparently from others; free from every particle of anger or irritation against opposition or injustice (generally more fancied than real), and that we forgive even as Christ forgave us.

This state of soul depends upon ourselves, in that we must yield ourselves up to God for his Spirit to work it in us. We must put our will so resolutely on his side that we gladly accept any discipline, any mortification, any humbling, that may tend to develop and perfect this Christ-life within us. Yes, we make or mar our own usefulness according as we forward or hinder our own heart-holiness. God can cleanse us instantaneously from every idea, every principle, contrary to perfect love, but even then the devil will tempt us furiously on our old weak points, and unless we are "strong in the Lord and in the power of his might," unless we "resist steadfast in the faith," sin will revive and manifest itself, alas! in our unfruitfulness.

There is only one way of bearing much fruit: abiding in Christ, and He in us. Through this blessed, reciprocal indwelling, we shall be shielded from all sin, hallowed within and without; everything about us will testify of Christ; we shall be his witnesses all the day long, and under all circumstances. For when we are wholly sanctified to God, separate both from the spirit and the ways of the world, even our unconscious influence does more for his kingdom than the most indefatigable working, the most eloquent preaching, tainted with self and vanity.

May Christ dwell so fully in us that we literally feel nothing but his Spirit, and, therefore, can show nothing else in our words or lives!

There is no estimating the power for good of a soul so purified from earth that the Divine glory can shine through it continuously and undimmed! Who then is willing to die to all sin that he may live only in God? Who is willing to crucify every form of self so that God may be able to work through him? Who is willing to do violence to his own natural spirit, and be influenced only by the gentle, loving spirit of Christ? Lord, "thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power." Let that day dawn on us now!

Paris. H. W. G.

MISS VON FINKELSTEIN began her Australian campaign by a lecture in the Town Hall, Adelaide, on May 11, on "The Homes and Haunts of Jesus." The Chief Justice presided.

The Missionary Conference.

Above the signature of "R. N. C.," in The Record, appear the following appreciative and true remarks on the recent Missionary Conference:—

> One thing has been made evident without doubt, the solidarity of the evangelical churches. Between us and our Continental friends the barrier of language is no longer an impediment; between us and our friends from America the Atlantic no longer exists. That ocean can no longer appear in the Missionary Atlas. We are one army of the living God, differentiated in separate regiments, but under the same Captain of our salvation, the same banner of the Cross, marching on, marching on, to the conflict, and to victory. This is no mere flight of rhetoric; it is the deliberate outcome of our judgment. Talk no longer of the unity of the Church of Rome under one Pope. The Protestant Churches have a more enduring unity, though not uniformity, under the Headship of Christ. Over and over again in the different meetings this great fact was proved by the incidental remarks, and the bearings of the speakers.
> A second feature was the entire disappearance of the offensive manifestation of denominational differences. It, indeed, was difficult to find out whether the sweet and intelligent Christian in our company was a Congregationalist, or a Baptist, or a Methodist, or an Episcopalian, or a good Plymouth Brother; not that anyone was lax in his convictions, or unsettled in his Church views; but that each and all looked over the barriers of human and historical difference, and saw nothing but the face of Christ, and heard nothing but his parting words on Mount Olivet. And surely there is more real Christianity in this than in the Papal or Mediæval High Church arrogance of a monopoly of preaching the Gospel of Salvation based on a doubtful Apostolical succession.
> A third feature, and a remarkable one, though confessedly on a lower platform than the preceding, was the wondrous fact that within the walls of Exeter Hall were collected men and women who spoke a greater variety of languages than had ever been collected under one roof in ancient or modern times. And the object of acquiring those forms of speech, and the use of those forms of speech, was solely and entirely to spread the Gospel of salvation. The philologist might well bow his head in reverence; the ethnologist might well reflect on the passage in Holy Writ, "Seek ye first his kingdom and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you"; the statesman may well ponder upon the appearance of a new factor in politics, a Republic of enthusiasts, who will not be diverted from their object; a Parliament of men of diverse nationalities, but recognising one Law, one King, and one hope of everlasting life; a federation of the greatest benefactors of mankind.
> A fourth feature was the sweet forming, and the still sweeter renewal, of friendships. There is something in the personality, the expression of countenance, the utterance of words of an American, that attracts and conciliates friendship. They are not as we are in Great Britain, but there rests in their choice of words and formation of sentences something of the archaic peculiarities of our common ancestors, and a nobility of presence and an independence of bearing which in good, holy men (and we had in this Congress no others) is peculiarly fascinating; their eloquence is all their own, and, in spite of the obvious peculiarities of expressions and tones, goes to the heart. Some of their speeches, such as those of Dr. Pierson, of Philadelphia, Dr. W. M. Taylor, of New York, and Dr. Ellinwood, were simply magnificent, and can never be forgotten by those who heard them.

Had these wise and well-considered observations stood alone, or had they been accompanied only by fair and unprejudiced criticism, it would have been well for the writer; but we are not surprised that to the whole paper was appended the following editorial note:—

> [Some of the criticisms in this paper strike us as unduly severe, but our readers will recognise in the initials at its foot one than whom the cause of foreign missions has no truer or more faithful friend.—Ed.]

We do not wish to discount the recognition of "R. N. C." as a faithful friend of missions, but we must express our entire dissent from some of his criticisms, as not only "unduly severe," but as utterly untrue. His opening sentence is:—

> With the Valedictory Meeting on Tuesday evening the programme of the Congress was worked out; all subsequent meetings were accretions to meet the idiosyncrasies of particular persons.

These "subsequent meetings" were: (1) The Lord's Supper on Wednesday morning; (2) the great meeting on Wednesday evening, to denounce and deplore the triple sin of forcing the Opium Traffic on China, the Drink Traffic on the African races, and the infamous C.D. Acts on India; and (3) an all-day meeting for prayer on Thursday, from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. But evidently the force of this "unduly severe criticism" with which the writer opens his paper, is directed against the largest, most enthusiastic, and most unanimous meeting of the whole Conference, that of Wednesday night, for in another part of his article we read:—

> Missionary societies have entirely failed in obtaining the confidence, or even the toleration, of the ruling classes, the nobles, the scientists, the aristocrats, the demagogues, the men of undemonstrative piety, the ordinary good citizens, and the general public. Whole families, of whom the writer of this paper is a member, and wealthy and powerful, give not one shilling. Those who, heart and soul, have given themselves up to this service, this best of services, for more than forty years, feel this neglect keenly, but do not wonder at it. For why is it? The foolishness of a section, only of a section, of the missionary party causes this disfavour. In the great gatherings, with the exception of those members of the House of Lords and Commons who have avowedly thrown in their lot with us, all were absent. Yet it is a subject of the deepest regret, and is caused by the folly of a minority, who neglect the noble work of preaching the Gospel to the heathen, and alleviating the burden of the suffering, to take up fads, miserable crazes, about subjects totally out of the orbit of pure missionary work. They might as well call for a blue moon as suppose that their miserable penny trumpets will influence the counsels of the Parliament of Great Britain or the Government of British India.
> It was distressing to hear the crudity of some remarks, yet all spake with the air of Prophets just descended from the mountain with a new revelation. It seemed as if each man had a peculiar subject on his brain, and the whole world was to be altered to meet his wishes. There was often a want of sobriety, a want of humility, a want of self-distrust and self-abnegation. What can a man, who has been for years in Japan and China, understand of the wonderful mechanism which controls the revolution of European feelings, and the policy of European Governments? And yet an American born in the State of Ohio, or a German from Westphalia, and twelve years residing in China, undertook to tell an assembly of miscellaneous men and women what the British Parliament ought to do, and the foolish assembly clapped and stamped in token of approbation of what it is obvious they could not understand.

This is only intelligible as coming from one who pooh-poohed the opposition to the Opium Traffic; but we suppose we must take the "fads, miserable crazes, about subjects totally out of the orbit of pure missionary work," to include also the opposition to the Drink Traffic by which the African races are being exterminated, and the licensing of vice, by which the women of India are being destroyed. We fail to understand, however, the consistency with facts of the elegant passage in which "R. N. C." says, "they might as well call for a blue moon as suppose that their miserable penny trumpets will influence the counsels of the Parliament of Great Britain or the Government of India." This is startling in its fallacy, in face of the two recent victories gained in the House of Commons, by which first the Acts which have cursed India have been unanimously denounced, and, secondly, the Compensation Clauses have been thrown overboard.

"R. N. C." charges the missionary who marries early with want of entire consecration to the cause of the conversion of the heathen, and with forgetting his first love; and adds that—

> He cannot have read the Epistles of St. Paul rightly, if he could think of earthly love with the cry of the heathen ringing in his ears. As a reaction against such things come the Brotherhood and Sisterhood of the High Church party, the haphazard system of Mr. Hudson Taylor sending out men to take their chance of a living, and the extraordinary system of Bishop William Taylor sending out men, women, and children to live on nothing.

Mr. Hudson Taylor and Bishop William Taylor will be surprised to hear, for the first time, that the "haphazard" system of the one, and the "sending out men, women, and children to live on nothing," by the other, were a reaction against the early marriages of marrying and therefore backsliding missionaries. As a fact, the China Inland missionaries are remarkable for their marriages, and it is found that many difficulties are removed in the case of married couples which stand in the way of single men and women. How Bishop Taylor's sending out men, women, and children to live on nothing could be a reaction against the marriage of missionaries is beyond our comprehension.

It is pleasant to turn from these and other querulous criticisms to the closing sentences in which "R. N. C." notes that,

> The report of the great Congress will be published, and will mark an epoch in our missionary annals. Some may live to be present at the next great gathering at the end of the nineteenth century. Some words of this Congress are not to be forgotten. Dr. Ellinwood, of the United States, in his great valedictory address, spoke of gratitude, fellowship, kinship, and love to the British people; he said that he had almost forgotten his country, and that to-night we were all Englishmen, because we were all Christians. These precious words should live in our memory. Dr. Sutherland, of the Dominion of Canada, spoke of the essential oneness of Protestant Christianity. Oh, let us cherish this! all the world over, Christ is all! The Church is prepared to enter on a new work with new enthusiasm, for the love of Christ constraineth us. M. Rappard, of St. Chrischona, remarked that the Holy Spirit still clings to its work. Canon Fleming remarked that all the members of the Congress would go back to their homes, distinct, indeed, as the billows, but one as the sea. These are but samples of the noble expressions uttered by noble men, in the presence of vast assemblies of men and women, who desired holiness, even if they did not attain to it. It was well for each one of us to hear such sentiments, and better still to feel the heart beat high, and to appropriate such sentiments as our own. Many of those present will never meet again, but they have looked into each other's faces, they have heard each other's words, they have recognised each other's graces, and the contact has not been in vain. Such Congresses are the direct replies to the Œcumenical Councils of Rome. The Protestant Churches are in evidence, one in Christ, differing in Church government; one in essentials, divided in matters of less moment.

The All-day of Prayer on Thursday, far from being an "accretion to meet the idiosyncrasies of particular persons," was the fittest possible close to this Conference of many days. It was felt by all present that for the opportunity of pouring out praise and prayer to God, our venerable brother, Mr. Whitwell, at whose suggestion it was afforded, deserved our hearty thanks. To not a few it was the very best of these prophetic days. The Conference would have been incomplete without these last words to us from God, and from God to us.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a tent mission, now being held at Leigh, Sherborne; that many souls may be saved.——For special services by Mr. Opie Rodway, at Longcross Baptist Chapel, Cardiff, from July 1 to 8; Pontypool, July 9; and at Birdlip, near Cheltenham, July 14 to 18.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. William Arthur, an ex-President of the Wesleyan Conference, and author of "The Tongue of Fire," &c.

Our next issue will be a Double Number, price 2d., and will contain a full report of the addresses delivered at the Mildmay Conference this week, notes of the smaller gatherings, &c.

We do not like to seem importunate, but on behalf of the little ones we appeal for increased support for our "Day in the Country" Fund. The requests which come pouring in upon us for a grant are overwhelmingly in excess of the means in hand to respond to them, which necessitates a most sparing distribution. We trust that our readers will enable us to meet these demands more efficiently than hitherto.

A correspondent pleads for "tired workers" who have been hard at work amongst the masses of the people, often under unhealthy and disheartening conditions—that Christian friends in the country should invite one or more for a short visit to recoup their energies, mental, spiritual, and physical. There need be no difficulty in finding scores who would be only too grateful for such kindness.

The summer breezes bear upon their wings the glad tidings of the Gospel, published by many an earnest servant of the Lord in the open air and under canvas. The large cities and their suburbs are well supplied in this respect, but it is a solemn, though well-ascertained fact that many a country hamlet never hears the simple Gospel. It is in supplying this need that the Evangelistic Mission and similar agencies are doing such grand service to the cause of Christ.

We constantly hear outcries of righteous wrath at the continued toleration of the gaming tables at Monte Carlo, and it is extremely necessary that public attention should be kept alive on the subject. Meanwhile it must not be forgotten that at nearly all the principal watering-places of France and Belgium public gambling goes on, differing from that in the more notorious principality about as much as an alligator from a crocodile. The play goes on in the casinos, which are nominally clubs offering admission only to persons provided with suitable introductions, but which, as a matter of fact, are only too glad to open their doors to anyone who is ready to pay half a crown for a day's subscription. In many respects the danger is greater and the consequences are more serious at these resorts than even at Monte Carlo. The decorous hours of the Principality are not observed, and gaming is allowed to continue all night, so that the morning bathers may often meet the gamesters returning from the tables.

That this state of things should be tolerated by the French Government is as inconsistent as it is scandalous. They have properly placed severe restrictions upon betting at races, yet they leave this crying evil undisturbed. It is high time that an emphatic protest should be raised against a state of things which is an outrage on public morals, a danger to the public safety, and a violation of the responsible duties of the State towards the individual.

Those of our readers who wish to preserve or circulate the report of the late Missionary Conference appearing in this and the two previous issues, may still obtain copies on application to the publishers. The scattering of so much valuable information among ministers at home and missionaries abroad cannot fail to be helpful to the cause of missions. The three numbers will be sent post free (inland) for 6d. We have received the following letter on this subject:—

> Dear Sir,—Your report of the Missionary Conference in The Christian of June 22 is beyond my best expectations. I feel that it would be an invaluable message of comfort to many workers in far-off fields, who seldom or never see your paper, were they to receive the numbers containing the report of the Conference. I enclose P.O. for 7s. 6d. Will you please use this in sending copies to those missionaries whom you have reason to believe would not otherwise see it.
> Of course this small sum will go a very little way; but if I know of one labourer for Christ whose heart has been gladdened by the receipt of your report I shall be doubly repaid. Perhaps others of your readers would be thankful for the suggestion, and be glad to join in this effort. Had I the means I would not rest till every missionary possessed a copy. May God abundantly bless these meetings, that his kingdom may come speedily. Accept my thanks as a reader of your weekly for the privilege of knowing something of the Centenary Conference of 1888.—Yours in Jesus,

In our last week's report of the Missionary Conference Mr. Grattan Guinness was erroneously represented as stating that all the missionaries of the North African Mission are self-sustaining. The fact is, that three of them are partially self-supporting, but £100 a week is needed to carry on the present operations of the Mission.

The discrepancy between the statements of the Government in regard to India, and the actual state of things there, is a painful and serious revelation. Many, in consequence, feel increasing difficulty in accepting any official information with regard to the rule of our Indian Empire with confidence. A notable illustration of this discrepancy between statement and fact is found in Sir J. Gorst's assertion in Parliament on May 15, that the C.D. Act was suspended in Bombay. By the mail that arrived in London on Monday, Mr. Alfred S. Dyer received a letter from Mr. Wallace J. Gladwin, of Bombay, dated twenty days ago after Sir J. Gorst's statement, in which Mr. Gladwin gives a description of the full operation of that Act which he witnessed that morning. The scenes he depicts are too awful for quotation. Licences were openly issued to women to sin. He concludes his letter thus:—

> The second house from the examination room is a mission school. The school was being taught by two native Christian women. The heathen Marathi girls and boys were singing sweet hymns full of the praises of Jesus Christ; while, ten steps away, the "Christian" Government was dealing out its licenses to older heathen girls to shamefully break God's law. Licensing these women is virtually licensing all the men about to sin also. Vengeance is lingering; damnation is slumbering; but wrath from heaven shall soon be revealed against such wickedness.

It is evident there will have to be vigilance and determination on the part of the Christian public at home in order to get the recent decision of the House of Commons carried into effect.

A correspondent regrets that "much difficulty was experienced in Exeter Hall last week in hearing some of the speakers; and this was specially remarked at the United Communion Service. Along with other qualifications, a good voice and clear delivery are essential in a large hall."

The same friend says—"We should like to hear more of the Word of God read at united Communion Services. There are many chapters in the Gospels, specially of John, and in the Epistles, eminently suitable for the ante-communion, and glorious hymns of praise in the Psalms and Revelation for after the Communion."

As will be seen from our advertising columns, a very interesting and comprehensive programme has been arranged for the Pan-Presbyterian Council, which meets at Exeter Hall next week. We cannot doubt that these deliberations will leave an important mark on the history of this large section of the Christian Church.

The Secolo, a daily newspaper, of Socialistic principles, published at Milan, has introduced the Bible, in a somewhat singular way, to the notice of the people of Italy. Simply as a commercial speculation, the editor is issuing the Old and New Testaments in halfpenny weekly parts, which have so far sold with great readiness, as the pages are profusely illustrated. This event has given some encouragement to Christian workers throughout Italy.

At the twelfth meeting of the Yorkshire Evangelical Union, Rev. W. Odom, of Sheffield, stated that some congregations pay yearly a larger sum for music in their churches than they give all the year round to missions among their own neglected countrymen, or to send the Gospel of salvation to the hundreds of millions of benighted heathen. Protesting against the modern fashion of tableaux vivants, and dramatic performances on church premises, he said, "The devil never did a cleverer thing than when he suggested to the Church of Christ that it was a part of her duty to amuse the people."

Will it not be well, in view of the extent to which church entertainments are proceeding, to make inquiry, before contributing to church and chapel erections, whether they are being built for the worship of God, and to teach Christianity, or for rivalries with undisguisedly secular and worldly amusements? The travesty of religion that is now going on from bad to worse does not merely grieve devout persons, but is an offence to intelligent men of the world. It would be useful to inquire into the proportion of those who were benefited, and those drawn into the clasp of the unprincipled by these secular entertainments.

National Reform in its relation to morals has taken powerful hold of many of the first minds in the United States. They see politics degraded by party strifes, and great social reforms ignored by professed statesmen. They have, therefore, lately held in Philadelphia a Convention for the advocacy of Christian principles of Civil Government, especially as these relate to war, to temperance, to the Sabbath, and to family and social purity. Many of the best representative men and women of America were present, and the speaking in a crowded hall was of a very high tone. The meetings, moreover, were eminently Christian in their spirit of prayer, and reference to Scripture.

There is a call for such a Conference in England. There is ample proof that a large number of earnest men among us are taking action in regard to social questions. We may not look for absolute unity among them, but they are agreed on this, that Government ought to concern itself with matters that are impoverishing and degrading the people, and that threaten the welfare and progress of the nation. English Government rests now on a basis of democracy, and a corrupt democracy involves national ruin. A strong and united utterance, therefore, of those who hold that statesmen can no longer neglect the reform of past evil legislation, would go far to lift such reforms into due ascendancy in our electoral life.

Not in London only are the evils of the sweating system seen. The Leeds Mercury has revealed a lamentable state of things in that town. It appears that though there are few small sweaters there (one of whom is cited as making gentlemen's coats for elevenpence each), a very great deal of tailoring work is done at home, among most filthy and often disease-stricken surroundings. The special commissioner of The Lancet, who has visited Leeds, says in reference to a woman who worked for a large wholesale establishment in the clothing line, "the house was situated in a miserable street, in the very heart of the small-pox and typhus district." Here is another peril of "cruel cheapness," and one which makes it evident that in taking vigorous steps to protect the poor victims of the sweater, society would be taking measures for its own safety.

It is calculated that there are in Leeds about fourteen hundred Jews working under sweaters in the tailoring trade, and also five hundred Jewesses, who, however, are said to do only the better class of work, the worst kind being left for English girls. The account given of the horribly insanitary condition of the Jews' quarter is almost revolting, and it may be doubted whether anything worse exists in East London. The statement, however, that they are a "very orderly and intelligent people, who would never dream of resisting pressure from properly constituted sanitary authorities," indicates at once the quarter where much of the responsibility rests.

In well-informed circles in Ireland it is considered as almost certain that the Irish Sunday Closing Act will be made permanent; that, unfortunately, its provisions will not be extended to the five cities and towns now exempted from its application; and that early Saturday closing will be made the subject of another Act. It would be a great gain to society if the five exempted places could be brought within a measure which has in many ways been beneficial to Ireland; but if early closing on Saturday nights results from the labours of the Committee which has been gathering evidence from so many localities of the sister island, there will be much to be thankful for. With fewer temptations on the Saturday—and a walk through Dublin soon shows a visitor how terribly numerous those temptations are—there would come, as a matter of course, a happier Sunday, and that, in its turn, would influence the rest of the week.

It is gratifying to note that France, tired of being tossed about in the thousand ever-shifting currents of party disputes, is showing a disposition to deal with some of the problems affecting the practical welfare of her working-class population. The Chamber of Deputies has lately adopted a measure for regulating the hours of work of women and children in factories. In the course of the debate, a striking and powerful speech was delivered by the Comte de Mun, in which he earnestly contended for the principle that the law should equally protect labourers of both sexes, and of every age, and for the establishment of justice in the relations between capital and labour; he quoted the saying of Lacordaire, that it was for the law to interfere between the strong and the weak, and expressed his deep conviction that "a revelation of forgotten Christianity lay at the bottom of popular agitations." True, if the relations between capital and labour, master and servant, employer and employed, were based upon Christian principles, there would be none of the present embittering "strikes" and disputes.

The senators at Washington have been discussing the harm resulting from the widespread use of the cigarette, and a Bill has been introduced to prohibit the selling or giving of cigarettes, or of tobacco in any of its forms, to minors under sixteen years old in Columbia. Petitions in favour of the Act from 230 physicians, 85 clergymen, and 524 superintendents and teachers of public schools, were presented by Senator Chase, who spoke very strongly against the habit of smoking cigarettes as "destroying more youth than any one thing that is affecting the prosperity of America." We hope the measure may pass. It is quite time some of our English legislators made an effort in the same direction.

The question of the use of stimulants and narcotic drugs by women was the subject of an able paper read recently by Dr. Imlach, at the annual meeting of the Lancashire and Cheshire Branch of the British Medical Association. One or two drugs were referred to, of which Dr. Imlach said that although largely and legitimately used in the alleviation of pain, it was to be deplored that they were ever discovered or invented, so extensive is their use without medical advice or sanction. He asserted that "the antecedent conditions of drink amongst women are much oftener of a medical nature than they are among men."

With narcotics, as with ordinary stimulants, the habit of taking them can be frequently traced to the prescription of a medical man, who probably would have substituted something in lieu of them had he been aware of the danger they would be to his patient.

The contribution by Professor Sayce to The Guardian of the 13th instant, on the discovery of correspondence between Asia and Egypt, in the century before the Exodus, is a singularly interesting one; and as it seems probable that the "find" to which it has reference will be followed by others of no less importance, there is reason to believe that wonderful light may soon be thrown upon some portions of Bible history. It appears that tablets of earth baked in the sun have been found amid the ruins of Tel-el-Amarna, built by Amenophis IV., and they still bear the ancient inscriptions, pointing to "an active correspondence with the most remote portions of the civilised East." Professor Sayce states that matters of minor importance, such as the conveyance of horses, or the sickness of a governor in Palestine, as well as questions of high moment to the State, are treated of in these "earth tablets," and as he points to places in Palestine, and elsewhere, where libraries similar to that of Tel-el-Amarna probably would be discovered, there would seem to be ground for his remark that "we may well feel sure that revelations of the most unexpected character are about to be made to us."

Rome has once more verified her claim to the proud motto, semper eadem, and, in granting to the Duke of Aosta a dispensation to marry his neice, the Pope has simply followed the practice of his predecessors in regard to such licenses. It is open to question, however, what course would have been followed if the persons concerned had been denizens of a back street, and it is difficult to avoid the reflection that perhaps the payment of a fee of £4000 which, it is stated, the Duke has been required to make before the disparity of ages and the close relationship could be winked at, has had something to do with the Pontiff, who in these matters, as in others, doubtless lays claim to infallibility.

Two recent statements in regard to Ireland may be set against each other, and they may well give rise to some thoughtful consideration. One was made at the Spanish Armada Convention at Exeter Hall, recently, to the effect that during 1878 "in the poor country of Ireland there had been bequeathed to the Roman Catholic Church no less than £750,000 for masses for the souls of the departed." Doubtless, Rev. Mr. Isaacs had proof of this, for he referred to it as "an ascertained fact." On the other hand, the Irish branches of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, and of the Church Missionary Society remitted to the parent Societies in London, for the year 1887, £7832 15s. 8d.

The Canadian Executive a few weeks ago seized in the Custom House and confiscated a quantity of French novels, of the types which are permitted to circulate in England unquestioned, and which are being translated and published in this country and scattered broadcast to do their vile work of disseminating impurity. It is satisfactory to find that there is a movement at the fountain head, for a number of influential men in France have petitioned the Senate to take stringent measures against the promulgators of the so-called "art for art's sake" literature. An old Act has been found wanting when prosecutions have been undertaken, and hopes are expressed that the Government will strengthen it and widen it so as to include publications of a class to which at present it does not apply. In France, as elsewhere, the liberty of the press is becoming a somewhat doubtful blessing, and there, as in these islands, there is ample room for some wholesome restrictions.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.

MR. JAMES B. WOOKEY, well known in many places as lecturing in connection with the Gospel Purity Association, is now attached to Dr. Barnardo's Institutions as deputation secretary. He will be glad to receive invitations, and to make arrangements for visiting towns, churches, or missions, with a view to explaining and advocating the nature of Dr. Barnardo's rescue work. The only thing required of friends inviting Mr. Wookey is the use of a hall or church to speak in. No charge for travelling expenses, or fees of any kind. We had the pleasure a few days ago of revisiting all Dr. Barnardo's Institutions in East London, and were astonished at the large increase since our last inspection. No words can describe the boon conferred, not only on this great and dreadful city, but on the whole country, by these and similar institutions. We are sure that Mr. Wookey's descriptions and expositions of the Stepney Homes, the Labour House, the Leopold Home, the Village Homes for Girls at Ilford, and the other features of this, the largest Institution for destitute children in the world, with its ever multiplying and increasing developments, will procure for them a continually widening circle of interested friends and helpers. Mr. Wookey's address is, 139, Powerscourt-road, Clapton, London, E.

ABRAHAM: GOD'S FRIEND.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

XVII.—Angel Work in a Bad Town.

Gen. xix.

(FIRST PART.)

The waters of the Dead Sea ripple over the spot where once stood the cities of the plain, with their busy stir of life, and thought, and trade. But all the sounds of human joy, sorrow, or industry, the tread of the soldier, the call of the herdsman, the murmur of the market, the voices of little children playing in the open spaces, all are hushed in that awful solitude, the aspect of which is a striking testimony to the truth of the inspired Word.

Embosomed in gaunt mountains, the Dead Sea lies 1300 feet below the level of the Mediterranean Sea, and it is said that no bird flies over those deep dark waters, no shells line the strand, no trace of living verdure is found along the shores; but, strewn along the desolate margin lie trunks and branches of trees, torn from the thickets of the river jungle by the violence of the Jordan, and cast up again from the depths, encrusted with the salt, which makes those waters utterly unfit to drink. And as the traveller wanders around the spot, he is irresistibly reminded of the time, when "the Lord rained upon Sodom and Gomorrah brimstone and fire from the Lord out of heaven; and He overthrew those cities, and all the plain, and all the inhabitants of the cities, and that which grew upon the ground."

I. The Reasons which justified this supreme Act of Destruction:—

(1) It was a merciful warning to the rest of mankind.—The lesson of the Flood had well-nigh faded from the memory of man, and, heedless of all restraint, the human family had made terrible advances in the course of open and shameless vice—so much so that there seemed an imminent danger of men repeating the abominable crimes that had opened the sluices of the Deluge. It was surely, therefore, wise and merciful to set up a warning, which told its own terrible story, and reminded transgressors that there were limits beyond which the Judge of all the earth would not permit them to go.

It is true that the spectacle, if it postponed, did not prevent, the nations of the immediate neighbourhood from reaching a similar excess of immorality some centuries later, or from incurring at the edge of Joshua's sword the doom which heaven's fire had executed on their neighbours in the Jordan plain. Still, God's warnings have a merciful intention, even where they are unheeded; and this Sodom catastrophe has been well said to belong to that class of terrors in which a wise man will trace "the loving kindness of the Lord."

(2) Moreover, in this terrible act the Almighty simply hastened the result of their own actions.—Nations are not destroyed until they are rotten at the core; as the north-east wind which snaps the forest trees only hastens the result for which the borer-worm has already prepared. It would have been clear to any thoughtful observer who had ventured out after dark in Sodom that it must inevitably fall. Unnatural crime had already eaten out the national heart, and, in the ordinary course of events, utter collapse could not be long delayed.

Go into the tents of Abraham, and you find simplicity, hospitality, the graces of a truly noble character, which guarantee the perpetuity of his name, and the glorious future of his children. Now go to Sodom, and in that sultry climate you find a population enervated with luxury, debased by cowardly submission to a foreign tyrant, cankered to the core with vice, not ten righteous men among them all, whilst the purity and sanctity of home are idle words. All these symptoms prognosticate, with prophetic voice, that their "sentence lingereth not and their destruction slumbereth not."

This suggests a solemn lesson for ourselves. The tide of empire has ever set westwards. India, Babylon, Egypt, Greece, and Rome, have successively wielded supreme power, and sunk down into oblivion. Shall it depart from England, as it has departed from the rest? It need not do so. Yet, as we remark the increase of extravagance and luxury; the reckless expenditure on pleasure; the shameless vice that flaunts itself in our streets; the adulation of wealth; the devotion to gambling which supports so largely the weekly and daily Press; the growing laxness of the marriage tie, we may well entertain the darkest fears about the future of our fatherland. The only hope for us is based on the important part which we are called to play in facilitating the evangelisation of the world. Should we once fail in this, or should we send out more opium chests than Bibles, more spirit-sellers than missionaries, nothing could avert our fall.

(3) Besides, this overthrow only happened after careful investigation.—"I will go down now and see." Beneath these simple words we catch a glimpse of one of the most sacred principles of Divine action. God does not act hastily, nor upon hearsay evidence; He must see for Himself if there may not be some mitigating or extenuating circumstances. It was only after He had come for many years, seeking fruit in vain, that He said, "Cut it down, why cumbereth it the ground?" And this deliberation is characteristic of God. He is unwilling that any should perish. He is slow to anger. Judgment is his strange work. He tells us that some day, when we come to look into his doings, we shall be comforted, concerning many of the evils which He has brought on the world, because we shall know that He has not done without cause all that He has done (Ezek. xiv. 23).

(4) There is this consideration also, that, during the delay, many a warning was sent.—First, there was the conquest by Chedorlaomer, some twenty years before the time of which we write. Then there was the presence of Lot, which, indeed, was enfeebled by his inconsistencies, but was yet a protest on the behalf of righteousness. Finally, there was their deliverance and restoration by the energetic interposition of Abraham. Again and again had God warned them of their inevitable doom, if they did not repent. To use his own expressive words, "He rose up early" to send his messengers, but they would not hear.

Nor is his usage different in the case of individuals. The course of every sin is against a succession of menacing red lights, and exploding fog signals, warning of danger if it is pursued. Just as the quivering of the nerves tells when the system is overstrained, and demands immediate rest at the risk of certain paralysis, if their warning be disregarded; so has God arranged that no downward step can be taken, without setting on foot the ringing of vast numbers of shrill bells that tell of danger ahead.

To regard these is to be saved. To disregard them, persevering in spite of all, is to deaden the soul, and harden the heart, and run the risk of the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost. For that unpardonable sin is not an act, but a state. The condition of the soul that does not, and cannot feel; that is utterly insensible and careless of its state; that drifts heedless to its doom; and is not forgiven, simply because it does not admit or feel its need of forgiveness, and, therefore, does not ask for it.

(5) It is worthy of notice that God saved all whom He could.—Lot was a sorry wreck of a noble beginning. When he started forth, as Abraham's companion, from Ur, he gave promise of a life of quite unusual power and fruit. But he was one of those characters which cannot stand success. There is no temptation more insidious or perilous than that. The Enchanted Ground is more to be dreaded than the open assaults of Apollyon.

When first Lot went down to Sodom, attracted by the sole consideration of its pastures, it was no doubt his intention to keep aloof from its people, and to live without its walls. But the moth cannot with impunity flutter about the flame. By and by he abandoned the tent life altogether, and took a house inside the city. At last he betrothed his daughters to native Sodomites, and sat in its gateway as one of its aldermen. He was given to hospitality, but in the proposals by which he endeavoured to vindicate it, he proved how the air of Sodom had taken the bloom off his purity. He was hardly dragged out of Sodom, as a brand plucked from the burning, and it is decent, over the closing scenes of his life, to draw a vail. And yet such a wreck was saved.

Nor was he saved alone; but his wife also, who did not take many steps outside the city, before, by looking back, with a mixture of disobedience and regret, she showed herself utterly hopeless; and her two daughters, whose names are branded with eternal infamy. If God was so careful to secure their safety; how bad must those have been whom He left to their fate? Is it not clear that He saved all who at all came within the range of mercy's possibilities. There will not be one soul amongst the lost who had the faintest claim to be among the saved; and there will be a great many among the saved whose presence there will be a very great surprise to us. "They shall come from the east and west....but the children of the kingdom shall be cast out."

II. The Motives of the Angels' Visit.—These were three. The proximate, or nearest cause was their own love to man.—The angels love us. Though they know that we are destined to a dignity before which that of the loftiest seraphs must pale, no envy eats out the pure benevolence which throbs within their holy spirits. It is enough that God has willed it so, and that we are dear to their sweet Master, Christ. It is then no hardship for them to leave "their golden bowers," or "cleave the flitting skies," that they may come and hasten lingerers to repentance. If there were any hardship, it would be in their mission to destroy.

The efficient cause was Abraham's prayer.—"And it came to pass, when God destroyed the cities of the plain, that God remembered Abraham, and sent Lot out of the midst of the overthrow." Pray on, beloved reader, pray on for that dear one far away in the midst of a very Sodom of iniquity. It may seem impossible for you to go down into it for his rescue, or to help him in any other way; but, in answer to your prayer, God will send his angels down to that ship labouring in mid-ocean, into that log-house in the Canadian clearing, or shanty on African diamond mine, or away to that abode dedicated to vice or drink. God's angels go everywhere. A Sodom cannot hold its victims back from their touch any more than their bright presences can be soiled by the polluting atmosphere through which they pass. Whilst you are praying, God's angels are on their way to perform your desire, albeit that their progress may be hindered by causes hidden from our ken (Dan. x. 12).

But the ultimate cause was God's mercy.—"The Lord being merciful to him." Mercy, that is the last link in the chain. Is it not the staple in the wall? There is nothing beyond it. The Apostle himself cannot allege a more comprehensive or satisfactory reason for his position in the sunlit circle of salvation than this: "I obtained mercy." "By the grace of God, I am what I am." And this shall be our theme also through that eternity whose day-star has already arisen upon our hearts.

SOUTHPORT CONVENTION.

THE fourth Wesleyan Convention at Southport for promoting the spread of Scriptural Holiness, was recently held in a tent capable of seating 1,500 people. The meetings were largely attended, many persons having come from different towns in Lancashire and Yorkshire for this purpose. Rev. W. H. Tindall, of Birmingham, presided. Several new features were introduced this year, the most striking and successful being a meeting for considering the subject of aggressive Christianity. The inspiring addresses given by Revs. Peter Thompson and Hugh Price Hughes will long live in the memory of those who heard them. The attendance was larger on this occasion than on any other during the week.

There were no fewer than seventeen speakers present during the week and the subject of Scriptural Holiness was viewed from a variety of standpoints. Some of the addresses were philosophical, some doctrinal, and others eminently practical. One of the most powerful was that by Mr. Hughes on the Johannine conception of holiness. He argued that both in sermons and literature the ethical side of sanctification has been largely overlooked, and he pleaded very eloquently for a more masculine and womanly type of Christianity. Our love to God must, he insisted, be shown by our love to our brother.

There were four meetings each day, and one of the most refreshing of these was that held in the early morning, from seven to eight; the requests for praise and prayer were then read by Dr. Wood, of Southport, and the hour was spent in thanksgiving and supplication. There were perhaps too many addresses, and too little time allowed for quiet waiting upon God. Many bore witness to the blessing received during the week, and the fruit of the Convention will be seen in the home, business, and public life of very many who were present.

BRAZIL.—The law putting an end to slavery in Brazil was signed by the Princess on May 13. There has been great feasting and rejoicing in this and all other cities in Brazil. The Bill granting full liberty to all religions alike has passed its first reading. We hope for better things still in Brazil. We ask the prayers of all God's people.

Leaves from my Note-Book.

BY REV. WILLIAM HASLAM, M.A.

Author of "From Death into Life. An Autobiography."

XIII.—THE DUMB DEVIL.

WHILE I was on a visit to a clergyman, in course of conversation he said, "I have in my parish a most interesting young couple who are lying side by side in their beds dying of consumption. I cannot get a word from them about their spiritual condition, which greatly troubles me. They speak freely enough about their bodily state, their coughs, and their pains; but not a word can I get about their souls."

He asked me to call with him and see them, if they were so disposed.

I went with him, and was permitted to enter the sick chamber. On doing so, I was not a little surprised to find that the two sick ones were acquaintances of mine. I had known them both before they were married; but since that time, had lost sight of them.

They appeared very pleased to see me again, and to talk of old days. Whether it was that they were flushed with animation or what, I do not know; but to me they looked in blooming health, and their eyes were clear and bright. But for all this, the poor wasted forms under the bedclothes told another tale. It was only too true that they were both under sentence of death, and died a few months afterwards.

After a little conversation about other things, I said, "God has been very good to me; since I saw you last, He has saved my soul."

"Yes," said the lady, "we heard of that event, and we were very glad about it."

"I am thankful to hear you say so," I replied, "for most of my old friends have been very angry with me for being converted! Some have cast me off altogether. Are you converted?"

She was silent.

I then put the question to her in another way; but could get no response. "You would not like to die as you are," I said, "in an unconverted state, surely?"

"Oh, dear no," she replied, "I hope not."

"You know," I continued, "sickness like yours does not spring out of the ground, it comes from God in love and mercy. If health and happiness have not brought you in submission to Him for salvation, it may be that He is now trying what sickness will do."

She assented to this in a general way.

I said, "When I was ill, and told I could not recover, I gave myself up to God. I humbled myself under his mighty hand, and He raised me up. I really gave myself to Him; but not knowing better, I went into religiousness and tried to live a holy life. This was not pleasing to God, nor did it satisfy my soul. At length God brought me to see myself a lost sinner, and showed me my need of life before I could live it. Oh, it is such a blessed thing to be saved."

The lady began to cry.

"Shall I tell you," I said, "how you may be saved?"

She made no reply, but cried the more. Evidently she was struggling with some difficulty. At last, with considerable effort, she said, "I am saved."

"Thank God!" I exclaimed. "Glory be to God!"

It was such a relief to me, for her silence had greatly perplexed me. Bending forward I whispered, "Is your husband saved, too? You said we were glad, just now, with reference to my conversion."

"I do not know," she gasped with some difficulty.

The gentleman having overheard this question and answer, I turned to him, and said—

"Well, friend, what do you say? Are you saved?"

"Yes," he replied, "thank God, I am."

His wife gave an involuntary scream of joy, and put out her hand to reach his bed, and he did the same.

It was very touching to see these two sick ones look at one another.

I said, "How is it that you have kept this good news to yourselves so long?"

"I do not know," answered the wife, still crying.

Any way, the secret was out now, that they both had sought and found the Lord many months before. It appeared that there was no reason in the world, unless it was fear or shame, why they should have kept silence. The vicar had often tried to draw them out; but in the presence of one another they were afraid to speak.

Actually for months these two sick ones had been lying side by side talking of everything they could think of, excepting the one thing that was nearest their hearts. How they might have been rejoicing and encouraging one another in the Lord all this time!

Our tongues were made to speak with, as surely as our hearts were made to love withal; but God did not give us tongues to speak to everyone but Himself, and about everything but his love. Satan knows the importance of using the tongue for God and to God, and therefore he possesses as many as he can with a dumb devil. He also knows the importance to believers of speaking to one another about the things of God, and so he does all he can to hinder them.

This dumb devil being cast out of these two afflicted Christians, with joy they began to communicate with one another. The lady told her experience, and the gentleman his, and we all talked happily together of the love of God.

The sick ones were full of such joyful animation, that I began to fear we might be overdoing our visit.

"Oh, do not go yet," they both said; "we are none the worse." The gentleman added, "It has done us both good, I feel ever so much better!"

It is so, the Spirit does quicken the poor weak body very often. Nothing can cheer the sick and disconsolate like the love of God.

However, we thought it well to go, and so, after thanksgiving and prayer, we took leave, promising to call again.

Walking home with the vicar, he said, "Do you know, I think that I must be possessed with the dumb devil, as you call it, I never told of my conversion in my life?"

"Thank God," I said, "I do believe your dumb devil is going too! Tell me now, how and when you were brought to God."

He said, "My conversion was the turning point of my life, and in more ways than one. I was going into the army, before I was convicted and converted to God. After that, I went to college and entered the ministry; but I have often thought since that I mistook my calling in doing so."

"Not at all," I interrupted, "your calling is right enough; but the dumb devil has hindered your usefulness. You have been ministering without witnessing, and that is why you are discouraged. God would have all his children, ministers and witnesses, especially those in an official position. Now, do let the dumb devil go freely, and begin forthwith to tell what the Lord has done for you.

This was a new era in the vicar's life and work in his parish.

The following day we went again to see our sick friends, and this time the vicar told us his experience, how he also had been held by the dumb devil, and how he became free.

It pleased God to spare these two for several months, during which time the vicar had happy communion with them, and then they passed away, in joyful anticipation of meeting again, where partings will be unknown.

SAVING LIFE.—The lifeboats of the Royal National Lifeboat Institution have this year been instrumental in saving 358 lives.

Farewell to Missionaries.

On Friday last farewell meetings were held at Harley House, Bow, E., when leave was taken of a party of missionaries, about to start for South Africa, Cape Colony, Brazil, California, and other parts. The proceedings were instructive and profitable throughout, and the sixteen brethren whose preparatory course has just terminated at the East London Institute, were commended to God in earnest prayer.

Mr. T. A. Denny presided over the afternoon meeting, and, in an address full of sympathy with the work in which Mr. H. Grattan Guinness and his excellent wife and family are engaged, he warmly eulogised men and women who are willing and ready to take their lives in their hands and go to preach the Gospel in regions where God is not known and the name of Christ has never been heard.

REV. DR. J. N. MURDOCK, of the American Baptist Missionary Union, told the story of the Congo Mission and the circumstances under which Mr. Guinness handed it over to the care of the American Society. It was after some hesitation that the responsibility was accepted by the American Board; but that the work was of God has since been amply proved. Indeed, only a few months after the Mission changed hands, and Mr. Guinness was left free to give attention to the preparation of missionaries without being burdened with heavy responsibilities on the field, there came the surprising report that a thousand heathen had laid down their charms and idols and acknowledged Christ as their Lord and Master. It needs hardly be added that since then the Congo Mission has been very near to the hearts of American friends of missions.

MRS. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS

delivered a thoughtful address on the evangelisation of the world. God has given power and wealth to the Anglo-Saxon race, and with these He has unquestionably conferred responsibility. The Christian section of the Anglo-Saxon race should see the great opportunities now open to them; and, taking advantage of the rising tide, they should exert themselves for world-wide evangelisation. God's purpose is clearly indicated in the situation of things, and to work in harmony with that purpose should be a great delight to all who think upon his name. Mrs. Guinness pointed out that the Church is not charged with the conversion of the world, but simply with its evangelisation; therefore workers need not be discouraged if they notice that the world continues perverse in spite of noble and persistent efforts to spread abroad the knowledge of Christ.

REV. C. H. HARVEY,

from the Congo, gave a modest account of the important work he has been privileged to do in that dark region. He spoke of difficulties, but said nothing of his severe sufferings from fever. He referred to signs of progress, but was silent as to his own steady labours, which have resulted in the publication of a translation of the Gospel according to Mark, in the Congo language. He looked unwell, but spoke some earnest words on evangelistic work. It is not easy to reach the natives; it is not easy to love them. Degraded, mean, cunning, and selfish, the people are unlovable, as well as unloving. More than pity and compassion is required, however, and, by the grace of God, the love of Christ has constrained to a love for those who know Him not. The Gospel has been preached, with a conviction that it is the one thing needful for civilisation as well as salvation in Congoland.

Pastor Rappard, of St. Chrischona, spoke favourably of the work of Harley House, and Mr. Scholten, a student from the Continent, gave expression to feelings of high regard for Mr. Guinness and his family, as well as for the other young men in training in the institution.

REV. DR. GORDON,

of Boston, followed with a few words addressed to the outgoing missionaries. He advised them, in the words of the Apostle, "Stir up the gift that is in thee." He said that for fifteen years he had been sitting weekly on the Mission Board examining candidates for foreign work, and he had come to be very diffident in rejecting anyone, even on the ground of health. He doubted whether Paul himself could have got a medical certificate for work. He remembered the case of a young man who applied to be sent to the Telugu Mission, but whom the Board hesitated to send out, because he had had no theological training. He had been simply a civil engineer. But that young man was so persistent, and had such a clear conviction that God wanted him to go, that the Board sent him. Almost directly he went, God began to pour out his Spirit in that region, and in a single year ten thousand souls were baptized into the church. That young man's whole success turned upon the fact that he was a civil engineer. Arrived on the field, he took a contract to construct a canal, and he gave work to a starving population, for there was famine at the time. Then he preached the Gospel to those men, and told them to tell their neighbours; they did so, with the result that the whole country was penetrated with the Gospel. Another young man who applied to be sent out, said that he fully believed God wished him to go to the heathen. He had been a soldier in the English army, and wanted to preach the Gospel in the region where he had been wont to drink and run riot in sin. His gift was that he could speak the language of the people. The Board hesitated, but at last sent him, and today that man is one of the best missionaries in the field, having gathered some twelve hundred converts. Dr. Gordon further spoke of the grand results of missions from the very first, and of the joy which workers should experience in having a part in the Redeemer's joy, as He "sees of the travail of his soul and is satisfied." He referred with pleasure to the work on the Congo. He knew the Africans in America to be true to the Gospel, and that among them there are some real jewels of Christians. He maintained that Africa is a magnificent field.

In some kindly remarks, Mr. H. Grattan Guinness acknowledged the great interest of Drs. Gordon and Murdock in the Congo Mission. In a critical moment they were able to turn the whole sympathy of the Mission Board towards the work, and that sympathy is growing wider month by month throughout the Republic.

THE EVENING MEETING

was presided over by Mr. H. Grattan Guinness. Mr. W. Blackstone, from Chicago, explained some excellent maps and charts of his own making, in order to show the needs of the world, and the sad misdirection of wealth and energy. In the course of some remarks on the Institute, the Chairman said that, for some years now, students have been turned out at the rate of about fifty-two per annum—one missionary every week for some part of the field. The expenditure last year amounted to about £12,000. Rev. Dr. Pierson, who was on the platform, was curious to know where the money all came from. In reply, the chairman told the interesting story of the rise and progress of the large institutions in London and Derbyshire, of which he is the honorary director. Sometimes the ship has seemed to "touch bottom," but the money required to carry on the work has ever come in when absolutely necessary. Prayer has been offered to God on behalf of the Institute, information respecting the mission cause has been disseminated, public meetings have been addressed, and private individuals have been influenced. There have been remarkable answers to prayer, and friends are steadily increasing in number. Altogether over five hundred missionaries have gone through the College, and though the duties have called for some strain of effort, they have always been attended to with pleasure, because of the conviction that the thing is of the Lord and for Him. In answer to another question by Dr. Pierson, Dr. Grattan Guinness said that the average amount of the subscriptions has been about £5, but it would be gratifying if, by the multiplication of small donations, that average could be reduced. Dr. Guinness also gave details of the recent founding of a mission dispensary, at which there is an attendance of over a hundred persons two days a week.

Messrs. Bouroff (a Russian), Edwards, Mensinck (a Dutchman), Dawson, and Upcraft, outgoing missionaries, having delivered brief addresses, of Philadelphia, spoke. He could not say too much in favour of the work carried on by Mr. Guinness and his wife and family, nor could he too strongly emphasise the value of such an Institute in connection with the evangelisation of the world. He urged the young men to have faith in God, to keep before them the glorious hope of Christ's appearing, and to love men by constraint of the love of Christ. He said: I should not dare to live in London and not help Mr. Guinness in his grand work. To you who are going abroad, I say, I do not condole with you at all, but I wish I were going too. If I were thirty years younger than I am, there is no pulpit in these kingdoms that would keep me. I would rather go to-day than do anything else. I offered the Board of Foreign Missions in my own country, but they would not accept a man of fifty with a wife and seven children. I was ready, but there were encumbrances. I hold that there is nothing so magnificent as the work you are going to do; there is no privilege on earth to compare with yours, except it is to be president of Harley House.

REV. DR. PIERSON,

Considerable interest was manifested at the close of the afternoon meeting in the dedication to God of the infant daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Guinness.

PIONEERING IN FINGOLAND.

The weekly copy of The Christian comes regularly to Mbulu, Fingoland, South Africa, and is greatly appreciated by all; many thanks to the unknown kind friend who sends it. It came to me last week, on the banks of the Kie in a Caffir hut, where I had gone to hold evangelistic services among the wild heathen. A band of native converts from far and near came to assist. In the evening, in our hut, with these all around, I translated into Caffir portions of The Christian, and they were delighted and stirred to hear of the good work of the Lord all over the world.

In this place we were all the guests of a Christian Caffir, who made us welcome to his craal; and after partaking of his kind hospitality for four days we proposed to go, but the good Caffir said, "No, your work is not done yet; I have two sons who are not saved. I am going to kill an ox for you to-morrow." So we kept on working other four days. One of his sons and twenty-four others were pricked in their hearts, and cried out, "What shall we do to be saved?" We left the banks of the Kie amid the tears and joys of old and young. Four others have given their hearts to Jesus since we left. We had been at three places before this, with like results, and still we go on.

The fields here are white to the harvest. Pray that the Lord of the harvest will send labourers into his field.

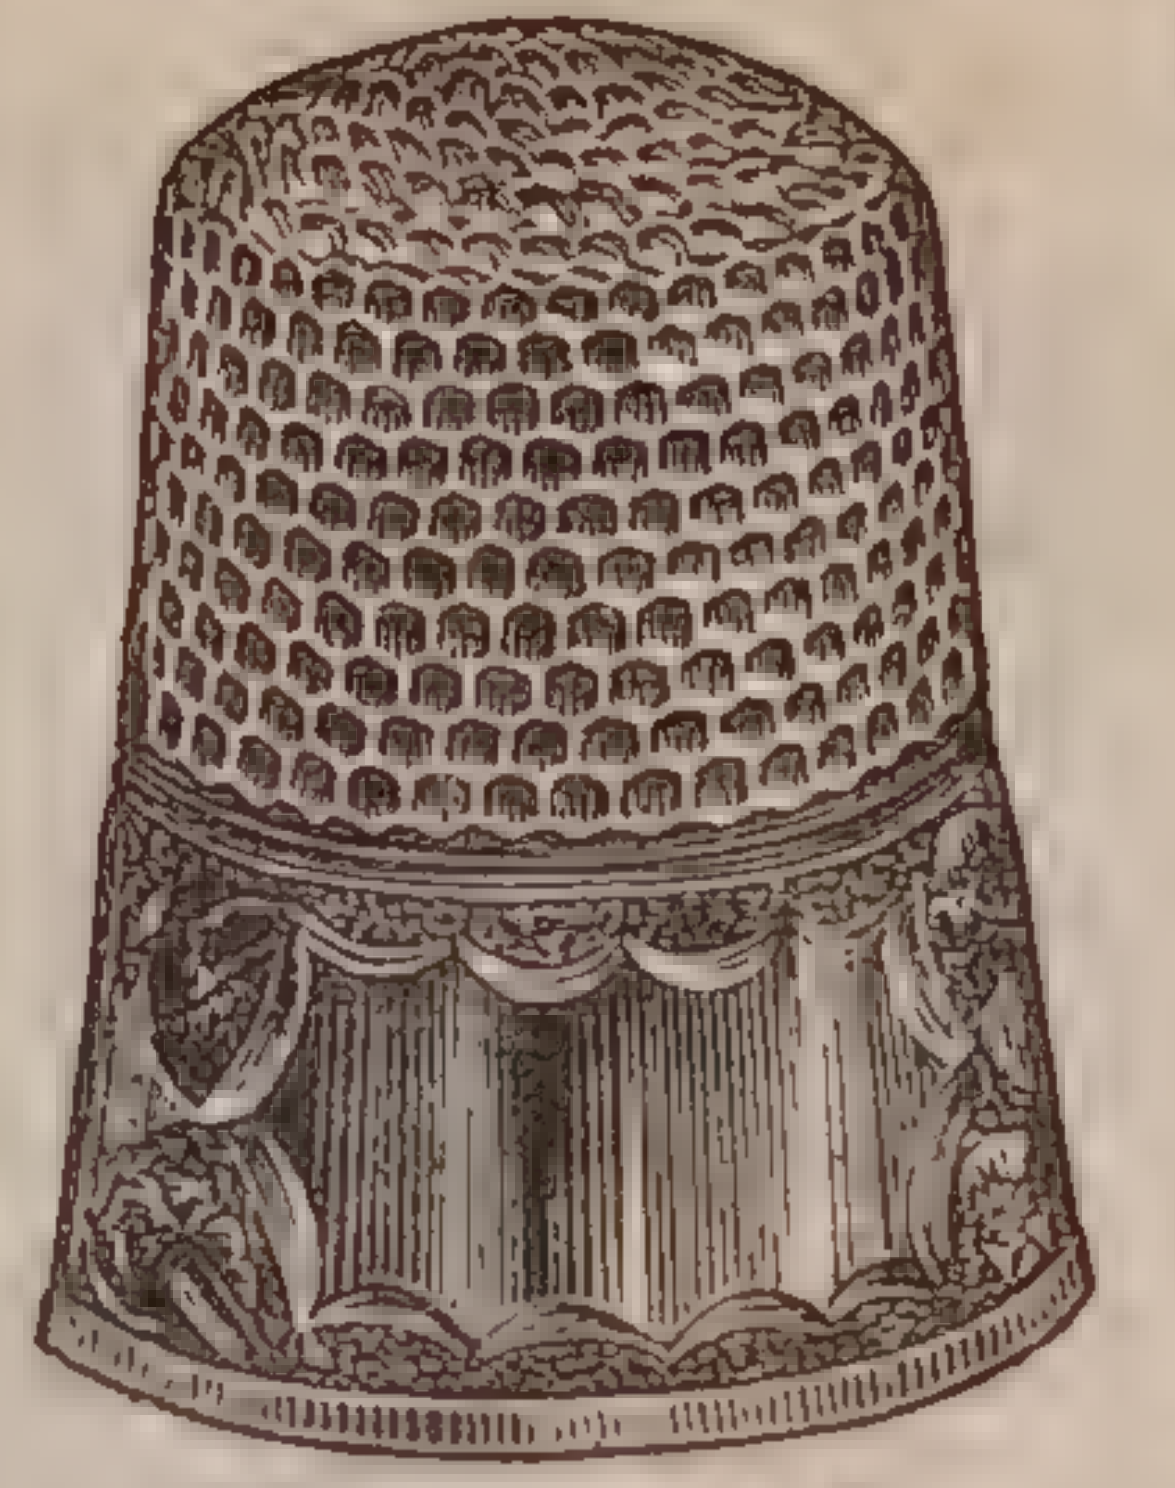
(Horner's Patent.)

STERLING SILVER.



2s. 6d.

The Queen, May 8th, says:—"The 'Dorcas' Thimble is more durable than the generality of these indispensable work-table implements; it is made in three parts, the inner and the outer being Silver, and the intermediate Steel; forming a resisting power not obtained in silver only. What is more uncomfortable than sewing with a thimble that has seen service to such an extent that it has holes in its sides? With the 'Dorcas' Thimble this annoyance vanishes."

DR. SUMMERS IN AFRICA.

Dr. W. R. Summers, of Bishop Taylor's Mission, has written to us very interesting letters from Luluaburg, Kassai (viâ Boma), Congo Free State. In the first, dated August 31, 1887, he reported himself in good health; in the second, dated January 3, 1888, he said he was just recovering from a five weeks' illness, in which he had suffered from pleurisy, septic fever, and an ill-defined but painful lung disease. In the former of his letters Dr. Summers gives an account of his journey in 1886 from Malange to Luluaburg. We append some extracts:—

On most of the way from Malange to Kassai the population is meagre, and the country wild; the people are savage, and very dirty, living in still more dirty villages of poorly-constructed grass huts. We suffered from hunger, the people not having food for themselves, as at best they plant but little more than they expect to consume. Then I was obliged continually to pay out for right of way, a rather exhausting process for my little stock. The people were generally well disposed, and missions could be established in several important regions, and would receive a welcome. To the east of the Kassai everything changed for the better. The country was for the most part park-like—cut up from three to five times each day's journey by deep-cut and swift-flowing streams; no swamps; hills covered with the oil-palm and dotted with pretty and regularly built towns. The people were enthusiastic over the advent of the white "mushange" (spirit). There was no more "right of way" to pay, as the people have a genuine love and desire for the "mushange." No more hunger, for the country is a profusion of good things. The people are no longer of the general negro type; they are lighter in colour (which speaks of but little malaria), generally tall and thin, and with faces sometimes almost Chinese in cast. Their faces are wonderfully carved in geometrically-correct patterns, as sometimes the whole body as well. They are not tatooed, but the flesh is deeply cut, and the wounds filled up with carbon of wood, and left to heal. This practice is now dying out, and but few children have to endure the pain their parents had. The process was seldom completed until the child was fifteen or sixteen years old. These peculiar people are the Bashilange, whose country extends between the Kassai and the Lubi, east and west; and south, to four days from Mwata Yamno's; and north to near where the Lubi enters the Sankuru. From the journeys I have made, I judge this tribe may be about six millions, all speaking the same language, while the Balubao, Bakete, Bassange, and Bassonge, belonging to the same family stock, speak what may be described as dialects of the Bashilange language rather than separate tongues.

My first day to the east of Kassai was as a revelation of a kind of paradisaical black world. Day by day signs of semi-civilisation became more frequent, until, nearing Luluaburg, most of the better or ruling class people were dressed in trousers, shirts, coats, and boots, and every petty chief had his imitation (and a good one) of the American folding chair. Lieutenant Wissmann met me on the road, and gave me a cordial reception, and said "he was so glad, as he had been promising missionaries to several chiefs." The native towns are all well built and clean, sometimes running at the sides of an oil-palm avenue, and usually on the tops of hills, while on the lower parts are the beautiful native plantations.

A CHECK TO OPERATIONS.

In November, Lieutenant Wissmann, accompanied by Lieutenant Le Marinel, of the Belgian Army, started for Nyangwe, delivering the station to Captain de Macar, the representative of the Congo Independent State. I then applied for permission to build, but was surprised to find that I would first have to obtain formal permission from the Administrator-General in Boma. I tried to explain that I was in front of Bishop Taylor's party, who should be at that time on the Congo; but this did not help matters, as I was told I must wait till he comes. So I was obliged to write, and then wait for a steamer to carry my letters. The steamer came in December, but since then we have had no communication by river. Whatever reasons may have influenced Captain de Macar, my real work has not received much of a check, as my time has been quite occupied with the language, and I can report "progress."

Lieutenant Le Marinel returned from Nyangwe last February, his immense caravan burdened by about eight hundred slaves, bought either by the Bashilange or by the Angola carriers, who were tacitly allowed to do this business in return for the poor payment they received. Of course, with such a caravan, the Lieutenant could not stop the traffic, if he had tried. His return journey was made quickly, but hundreds died of small-pox or of great ulcers, on the road, and many of the slaves fled. When the caravan arrived here it was in a miserable condition, as, in addition to sickness, they had had much hunger on the road. No doubt, most would have died of small-pox, had not Lieutenant Le Marinel acted with praiseworthy caution, in making a second caravan of small-pox cases, and ordering this to remain a good distance behind the others. I had much work with these people. A small-pox reservation was made on the other side of the river Lulua, and all new cases were immediately sent there. Chinguengue, the king, second in importance, was attacked by the pest, and refused to cross the river, and in a few days died. His body was placed on a bedstead, and five slaves built a mud and wattle house over it. His principal wife was then beaten to death by sticks, and her body cast into the Lulua, while the five slaves were beheaded, and their remains left to guard the body of Chinguengue. Chinguengue was by far the most intelligent man of the Bashilange, and his death was felt considerably by all. Kalamba, his brother, takes his place. Small-pox, happily for the diamba-debilitated Bashilange, did not spread this side of the river, only a few sporadic cases occurring.

CHIEFS BEG FOR TEACHERS.

Export slavery may be considered nearly at an end, as far as the Angola carriers are concerned. Internal slavery is the great curse. Few Bashilange care to work, but leave all labour to their wives and their slaves. Kalamba shows a good example by himself working generally in the woods, cutting down trees. Some time ago I paid a visit to Kasongo, about six days south from here. He had just returned from one of his slave-raiding tours, and had managed to gather many hundreds of slaves, much ivory and copper. He is a tall, thin, teeth-grinding, blood-thirsty man, about sixty-five years old. He cuts off heads for very little offences, and a short time ago beheaded his brother for having lost ten slaves. I purchased the freedom of a Malange shoemaker, who was held by Kasongo as a slave. Kasongo wants a mission, and was greatly disappointed that I could not remain. I explained to him the wrong he did in destroying towns, and catching the inhabitants and enslaving them. This he could not understand; but on the subject of cutting off heads he promised to reform, and never execute anyone unless for wilful murder. I am continually beset by chiefs, who ask for missionaries and teachers. Every chief wants one. In some places I have had difficulty in leaving the towns, the chiefs crying, and begging me to remain. At one place, near the source of the Mwansangomma river, the chief covered himself with pemba, and came crying for me to remain; he then covered himself with filth, and rolled in the dirt, beseeching me, with the tears running down his face, not to go away. When at last I did leave, he became almost wild with sorrow.

Another chief, Mwamba Mputto, was, with his people, overjoyed at my arrival. He begged me to stay, said he wanted his people to become like white men, that he "had been expecting me for a long time," &c. I said that I could not possibly remain, as I must first await the steamer, and that then I would perhaps come back, or some one else would probably come. I then went around his town, a fine one of about 4000 inhabitants, and on my return the old chief came to my hut, bringing in five sheep and much food, to show how he would treat me if I remained. He was surrounded by most of his men, and, when I gave him a suitable present, immense shouts came from the people and great clapping of hands, as this was the first present the old king had received from a white man. Mwamba Mputto then cried like a child, and said he was sure the white man would come at some time, and that he "had built a house" for the purpose; that it would be in perfect readiness in a few days. I saw the house: it is a large three-roomed house, with two entrance doors and four windows, and is on the model of the Angola trading houses, and had been built under the instruction of a Malange man. This is a case of faith in a heathen, but does not speak half of the wonderful desire that the people are continuously expressing for the missionary and teacher. I suppose the only remedy is to wait patiently until the missionary societies have worked themselves dry in places nearer the coast, and when the natives have no very great desire for them, then they may come in. It seems to me that God is preparing a people here for the reception of the Gospel on a grand scale, and that these Bashilange will help to solve the problem of evangelisation of great stretches of this part of Central Africa.

The chances of years of service on the part of missionaries are perhaps better here than in any part of Africa. The climate I consider decidedly healthy. There is but little fever, and that not of a bad character, being generally simple intermittent. Swampy land is scarce. Food is very abundant. Living is cheap, and a very little labour on the soil will make a mission self-supporting, as far as food is concerned, the first season.

I have to praise God for many wonderful blessings and providential deliverances. I find that "the great loving heart of Jesus" is just as near as (if not nearer than) it was in Europe or America; and his "Lo, I am with you always," tones down all annoyances, makes loneliness companionable, and converts despondency into lively hope.

DAILY PRAYER UNION.—Rev. J. Worthington Atkin, M.A., of Cork, has completed a third preaching tour in connection with this Union. Much blessing has resulted, and a very large number of persons have become members of the Daily Prayer Union, which now numbers 70,000 members.

HYDE PARK MISSION.—In connection with the Paddington Hall and Hyde Park Missions, much good work was done last year among the poor and the degraded. Homes have been visited, open-air preaching carried on, and downtrodden women helped in such manner as they most needed. The superintendent of the Mission is Mr. John Davidge, 90, Church-street, Paddington-green, W.

THE BALTIC PROVINCES.—Mr. and Mrs. Borst, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, have for several years spent their holiday month of August in Prussia, in the Baltic provinces, and have been the means of blessings to hundreds of precious souls. Many of their Christian friends have read the encouraging letters they have received of those who have been blessed through their instrumentality. They have received several urgent letters of invitation to return next August. Will Christian friends pray that the Lord may open the way for them this year also, and for a larger blessing on their effort.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHERS AND THE TIMES.

An Address at Tunbridge Wells

BY REV. W. GUEST.

IN speaking to this local Teachers' Union, I wish to draw attention especially to the Present Hindrances to a Saving Work of Conversion among young persons. Every teacher sees in his or her class those who carry within them a spirit fallen from righteousness; and, although we may differ as to the theological term which describes this, it would be an evil day for us all when the fact itself became ignored.

Even in a child, under the cover of an attractive countenance, there is a dark visitor within that only waits its opportunity to develop a selfishness, a backwardness towards God, a pride, deceit, and disposition towards sin which may afterwards make the inmost soul a fruitful hot-bed of evil passions, and kindle an inward fire of torment to carry into eternity. This, then, is of a true Sunday-school teacher, to lead a child to such a loving, confiding union with the Lord Jesus Christ as that it may have experience of the new-creating Spirit of life which sets free from a law of sin and death, and which the Saviour imparts to the feeblest soul that is brought into union with Him. Far distant be the day when this real and Scriptural regeneration of a child shall be denied by Christians. Thanks be to God, there are tens of thousands of living men and women who adoringly bear witness to this early regeneration through Divine love; and to this unspeakable boon, which was won for them through Scriptural teaching and affectionate prayers. The broadest and most vital distinction among young persons is this: on the one hand there is a nature that exhibits a constant deterioration of moral power; a going back, instead of an advance in beauty of character; a terrible and most distressing running down from bad to worse; and, on the other hand, there is a youthful nature that is more and more aspiring with the progress of years; that grows stronger in self-sacrifice and self-conquest; that recoils from moral deformity; that becomes increasingly influential on earth, and increasingly fitted to take its place among the sons of God in the new heavens and the new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness; and this great distinction is to be traced to those who have had the first training of the young, and the first opportunity for giving the right direction to the pointings of the nature.

Allow me now to glance at

to this saving work of blessing in Sunday-schools. And here I refer less to children than to young people. As to children, the present age has one decided advantage over preceding times. Our country has made a vast advance in its system of public elementary instruction. Where one child was at school seventeen years ago, there are three now. As a member and chairman of the Tunbridge Wells School Attendance Committee, I recently visited the day schools of that town. The order, the attention, the interest of the scholars, and the wise and painstaking efforts of the teachers, ought only to be described in language of very grateful admiration. It is so, one cannot doubt, all through the land. Sunday-school teachers have, in this respect, an enormous advantage over those of a past generation. Children come to their classes on Sunday with an intellect and intelligence wondrously quickened by the excellent discipline and teaching of the week. Alas, the set-off against this is becoming very marked. The crisis of life to English youths is now between the ages of fourteen and eighteen. Millions of them leave the common schools with physical energy rampant, with quickened intelligence, and curiosity all awake, and temptations then sweep around them more ensnaring, formidable, and perilous than ever surrounded our young in any age of our country's history. The time has come when we must look at these modern perils, and parents and Sunday-school teachers must thoughtfully confront them. An earnest clergyman said lately, in London, that he had been speaking with a police-court magistrate. The Metropolitan magistrate said to him:—"I have been on the bench for years, and I never thought the young people would have degenerated in the way they have. What we are coming to I cannot say." Such a testimony may not be treated lightly; and what is true of London is true of country towns.

A forceful distinction has been made between opinions and customs. Opinions progress from the people upward; as, in the movements of a fish, the tail moves the head. But customs and fashions go downward from the head to the tail. Consider what is the present state of three-fourths of the upper classes in London and of the topmost stratum of the middle class. I mention London because the metropolis of a nation always sets its fashions, and always began with their capitals. In the reign of Charles II. there came a reaction against what was thought Puritanism. England's greatness was arrested, and, but for the Revolution, which we this year commemorate, Great Britain would doubtless have become insignificant among the nations; a mere appendage to a European power. Another reaction against a supposed Puritanism menaces us, and it descends from those nearest the throne. England has deprecated a Parisian Sabbath. A Parisian Sabbath is upon us. Piccadilly is full of coaches for pleasure early on Sundays. The river, all down to Pangbourne, is full of boats. A club is opened for Sunday plays; another for Sunday boxing. Sunday dances are now common; Sunday garden-parties are the fashion; Sunday dinners, with actors and actresses to recite and sing, are the mark of high life. With no Lord's Day, there will be no religion in these classes. As in the latter years of the reign of the Stuarts, when Puritanism goes, Protestantism will go likewise. History repeats itself. And more than English Puritanism and Protestantism will go. The old English self-sacrifice will go. The old disposition of Englishmen to deny themselves for the sake of others will go. Pleasure will become the summum bonum of life, and true is it, as great moralists have always pointed out, "frivolity undermines all morality," so that nothing can arrest the selfishness and ruin of a people incessantly devoted to pleasure.

It may be said that it is present-day scepticism that is at the bottom of all this. But scepticism is the outcome not the origin of a life of pleasure. Present scepticism is a mere fashion, and never takes the trouble to look at the other side. For let me say, after some acquaintance with the best literature on both sides, that a rationalistic interpretation of the Bible, and a materialistic science are coming into the inconsistencies of a bewildering chaos, and that our religion never rested on a more impregnable foundation than it does to-day. But when people love plays and operas that are questionable in morality, feasts that are frivolous, and races with feverish betting; love all things, in short, which help them to live without reflection, infidelity becomes a necessity to them. When men and women do not want a Master they will thank the most contradictory cosmogony that bows God out of history, and welcome any arguments that keep the Bible from standing in their way.

Sunday-school teachers, you may rely upon it that this contagion of lawless infidelity is oozing from the upper circles, and penetrating to those below them. It is reaching first those of us who live nearest the capital, and will go on to those more remote. Already we are told of young women who fall an easy prey to which is widely diffused. Impure publications are alarmingly allowed to circulate among our youths. Boldness in sinning, boastings of unbelief, effrontery in irreligion, betting and gambling are imitated and are blighting the fairest promise of those who should be the hope of our country and of the Church.

To the objection that these things have always existed, we reply that they never existed with such facilities as this age brings. They have never existed with such attractiveness of temptations to concealed vice. They have never existed when a godless life had such captivation, and such numberless and dangerous examples. Vice does not lose its evil when it loses its grossness. It is the fascination around vice in our days that gives to it its subtlety and peril.

Observe this also: these dangers to our youths have never before existed when the warnings and threatenings of the revelation of God were so mercilessly ignored. I am no advocate for a preaching of terrorism, but I am an advocate for an honest warning to men of the punishment that God has in love to us tied to evil-doing. I do not declaim against an inquiry as to what Scripture teaches of the condition of souls in eternity. That inquiry is inevitable, and, when properly conducted, is a religious one. But the danger of these days is that the fear of the Lord is not enforced by its solemn sanctions. To conceal that which Christ has taught; to stifle his warnings; to soften down his words; to tell the wicked that if they do not turn from their wickedness in this life they will have another chance in the next, is fearfully to help on the irreligious indifference of the age, and to repeat the devil's first lie to man.

Not only so. A new and portentous hindrance arises from Sunday-schools themselves. In many of them the notion has grown up that diversion is made first, and conversion second. Oh, deadly reversal of the Divine order! Yea, modern arrangements foster the pernicious belief that for young people there is happiness in the secular, and dulness in the spiritual. Than this nothing can be more hurtful. Oh, what a fearful misery it is for a noble-minded youth to come to think much of amusement and little of conversion. How terrible to do anything whereby the innocence of childhood may become fouled in the mire of worldliness! How awful to think of a fair maiden who is led to regard pleasure as her best good, so that at the end she, who once thought much of her summer robe, comes to

LONG ONLY FOR HER SHROUD.

I know well there are teachers here who read and bow down before the Revelation which has been given. To them it is full of two supreme truths—that out of the heart of man all evil has proceeded and continues to proceed; and that the Son of God came in love, first to redeem by his mighty sacrifice, and then as the risen Lord to give a new life to a redeemed humanity. They dare not yield to the pitiably superficial notion that these doctrines are "trite and passé." They would have no adequate and saving message to teach if they taught not these vital truths. Their prayers, their faith, their labours, and sacrifices are directed to this end. And they have their reward. The Spirit uses them to stay the wastings of sin because they teach the only true remedy. It is no fiction to them that there can be conversion of nature among the young. They may not ask for the maturity of piety in their scholars, but they see its actuality in that they love Christ and turn away from evil. Oh! that the eleven millions of the scholars in the Sunday-schools of Great Britain and America had this truth of a change of nature, through the grace of the Spirit, pressed home to them, and that their million and a quarter of teachers most thoroughly believed in its reality, and waiting possibility.

Nothing will meet the present snares and temptations of the age as they assail the young, but this. Crises of trial demand fuller and more energetic belief. Would that I could sufficiently emphasise the fact that in these days the ultimate end of Sunday-school teaching is no longer, as once, the mere imparting of knowledge. That is largely done elsewhere. The end of a teacher now is the leading of his or her class to be livingly joined to a living Saviour. Arguments in defence of Scripture, chronologies, geographies, topographical confirmations, elucidations of Biblical histories and customs, are doubtless of inappreciable value, and by their helps a modern teacher has signal advantages. But let him follow the course of youths who have had all these explanations, and see how, in spite of them, they go over to the hosts of the godless, and he will learn that something higher was wanted. Let us not shut our eyes to the sad fact that millions of those who were instructed in "International Lessons" now never enter church doors. Not that these "Lessons" were not important, but they were not enough. The time has come when this aspect of Sunday-school work should be most anxiously reconsidered. Men abound who affirm that they want a "new theology": have these men prayerfully tried the old? We have all heard that on the battle field it is soldiers, but that it is a nation's oldest martial strains which animate them in their march to conflict. I confess to you that I regard the notion nowadays avowed that we may look for a fresh revelation in addition to that of Scripture, as a Satanic form of the Popish doctrine of the Council of Trent, that Holy Scripture does not contain all that is necessary to salvation. Would to God that we might set ourselves to learn, not merely by "Lessons" supplied to us, but by our own studies, what the Scriptures do teach. Sceptical theologies would have little effect before such studies. Would that we freed ourselves from the modern passion to amuse and to provide secular entertainments for the young; or, at least, if there must be entertainments, that they may be such only as maintain the manifest ascendency of pleasures of a supernatural order. Would that, in view of the formidable perils of the age, we could learn afresh of Him who taught that we must make the tree good if we would have the fruit to be good, and who loves to impart more abundant grace. His philosophy will live when present negations have been scattered like chaff. Above all things, the desperate coming down, with great power, of temptations in our times should enforce this as the lesson of the hour—that nothing is such a summons to profound humiliation as that evil can be so strong, and we, servants of an Almighty Christ, so weak; and this also, that we can receive power from on high and be "filled with the Holy Ghost."

THE FIGUERAS MISSION.

MRS. RODRIGUEZ writes:—The Romanists overbought the site we had in view, and their triumph against the Gospel appeared complete. But, contrary to all expectations, a far better site was immediately after offered for sale. It is situated in the principal street, in a central part of the town. Our only difficulty was that the price, with costs, was £250 more than we had in hand. This we laid before the Lord in prayer, and He most graciously answered. In addition to a former liberal donation of £100, a lady in Surrey most kindly sent £200, and "a friend" in Scotland, £50. Thus the exact sum needed arrived just in time for the purchase to be made.

All that now remains is for us to build the first permanent Gospel Hall in this dark Spanish province, which will we trust be the birthplace of many souls.

A CRY FROM MACEDONIA.

THE completion of the Turko-Servian Junction Railway has thrown Salonica open to the travel and traffic of Europe as it has never been before, and must form an era in its history. Opinions seem to be widely divergent—to judge by the local papers, almost contradictory—as to the exact result of these new influences upon the city, as well as the province, commercially and politically, the views entertained depending very much upon the standpoint, sympathies, or fear of the individual.

Only one opinion prevails as to the result of these influences, from a moral point of view. All agree that to the evils and vices of the place will be added those of Europe, so that Salonica will soon rival Constantinople and Smyrna in all that is worst of both Eastern and Western civilisation. Both of the cities mentioned, however, have many means for counteracting evil and doing good, such as churches, hospitals, Bible depôts, sailors' rests, as well as good schools for all classes and nations, under good Protestant supervision, which are here, in this grand old city of 120,000 inhabitants, entirely wanting, with the exception of a school for Jewish girls.

There is now a great and urgent need for an Evangelical Union Church near the centre of the town, where services could be held in English, German, Greek, or any other language, for those who now rarely go anywhere. The services in English are held in a small room in the house of the school missionary. A sailors' rest and reading-room are also needed. There is no city on the Mediterranean with so many inhabitants, or such large commerce, with no provision for the floating population. There is no Bible-reader or tract distributor, to say nothing of a rest, or reading-room. Our Mission will be delighted to render the most hearty co-operation to any good evangelical man or woman who will come and undertake such a work as is being done in Constantinople and Smyrna by Misses Green Armytage, and Grimston. Here is a wide and effectual door open for usefulness. Who will enter in?

A Bible depôt is another pressing want. Scriptures have been kept on sale for years in the upper room—used as study, chapel, and bookstore—of the Scotch missionary to the Jews, but now a more accessible and commodious depôt is required. Negotiations have been in progress for a long time—by co-operation or otherwise—to secure such an establishment. The American Mission has at last, with the approval of the agents of the British and Foreign and American Bible Societies, undertaken the not inconsiderable expense and trouble of this work, so that this necessity, it is hoped, will soon be supplied, but the work of the field is more than our strength or means can compass.

T. R. SAMPSON,
Missionary of Southern Presbyterian Church of America.
Salonica, June 15.

SCANDINAVIAN GIRLS.—The Continental Division Y.W.C.A. held a conversazione at Morley Halls for the Swedish, Norwegian, and Danish girls in London, on Monday, June 18. Meetings were arranged for in Danish, Swedish, and Norwegian, which will be held monthly (the first Thursday in each month, at 7 p.m.) at Morley Halls by various pastors. The happy faces and hearty thanks of the girls present proved how much they valued the interest shown in them.

MR. QUARRIER'S HOMES.—On arriving safely at Brockville, Ont., with 120 girls, Mr. Quarrier was most cordially received by the residents. The Fairknowe Estate, which has been bought as a Canadian Home, will prove of great service. Within a week of arrival over eighty of the children had gone to their homes, and Mr. Quarrier says that the applications for children were so numerous that if he had taken out 200 children about ten years of age they could have been placed out at once with good Christian people.

MISSIONARY HYMN.

BY MRS. MERRILL E. GATES, NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J.

Air—"From Greenland's icy mountains."

"WHOM shall I send?" He sayeth;
"What servant shall it be?"
'Tis Faith's strong voice that prayeth,
"My Master, O send me!"
Send me to tell thy story,
Abroad, or here at home;
Send me, O Lord, before Thee,
Where Thou Thyself wilt come.

Send me, for I have known Thee,
I would thy witness be;
To speak thy message only,
My Master, O send me.
Send me to speak of Jesus,
Of what my Lord hath done—
His finished work most precious,
Of this and this alone.

To bring the lost and sinning,
To Thee, the Sinless One,
To speak sweet words and winning,
Of Christ, the Father's Son.
Send me to darkest places,
To many a shadowed home,
Where with thy shining graces
Lord Jesus, Thou wilt come.

Send me to work appointed,
But, Master, let me be
By thine own power anointed,
Then, Master, O send me!
Not unto us the glory,
When lost ones find their home;
We only go before Thee,
Where Thou Thyself wilt come.

KOLAR MISSION.

THERE are fully three hundred persons connected with this work, including fifty families supported by the Mission, though all work for their daily food as far as they are able. The work is various. About twenty are teachers or evangelists, and devote all their time to preaching, or to teaching in the Orphanage. Various trades are taught, such as carpentry, tailoring, chair-making, &c., and any money earned thereby goes to the exchequer of the Mission. There are three small farms in connection with the Mission, on which a number of families are employed. Each farm has its prayer-house, where all are daily assembled for worship. Some get work at road-making, and thus help to support themselves. Quite a number are in the forest, timber felling for the Mysore Gold Mines, and earn good salaries. The young men working here lay by all they can, so as to purchase bullocks and implements for farming, with the hope of forming Christian villages.

On Sunday, everyone meets at the Orphanage for services and Sunday-school. Many have joined the church, and meet every week around the Lord's Table. There is a hall belonging to the Mission, in the centre of the town, where Gospel services are held every week in Canarese, Hindustani, and Telegu. The heathen attend in large numbers, and listen attentively. All villages round Kolar are visited by the young men, who preach the Gospel in the fairs, market-places, and streets.

The medical and zenana work is deeply interesting. The young ladies connected with this branch, when first they entered the town, could not go into any of the houses; now nearly every house is open; they are gladly welcomed, and are able to speak and testify for Christ in places where hitherto the Gospel has never penetrated. The Mission is a bright and shining light in this dark heathen country and is well worthy of practical sympathy.

For the Young.

"IS THY HEART RIGHT?"

2 KINGS x. 15.

AN ACROSTIC.

ONE morning in October, 1618, the gates of the Tower of London were opened, and a noble prisoner was led out to be executed. He showed no signs of fear, but with firm step he mounted the scaffold, and then, after a short prayer, he laid his head on the block ready for the blow of the terrible axe that was to end his life.

The superstitious executioner said to him, "Not that way, sir, lay your head toward the East."

But the brave prisoner replied, "No matter how the head lies, so long as the heart be right."

Let us ask ourselves the question, "Is my heart right in the sight of God?"

Let us take the letters of the word 'heart,' one at a time, and learn a lesson from each.

H.—There are Hard hearts.—Some people have heard all about the sufferings and death of the Lord Jesus, but it has made no difference to them. They can laugh and jest over sacred things. Let me ask: "Is it nothing to you that Jesus should die?" Or can you say, "I love Him because He first loved me?" If you cannot say this, listen to his message (Heb. iii. 7): "To-day if ye will hear His voice, harden not your hearts." There are some people who have hearts like the hard beaten road or highway, and so the good seed that is sown, cannot send down its roots and grow. But there is a beautiful promise even for such (Ezek. xxxvi. 26): "A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you an heart of flesh." God can remove the hard heart.

E.—Evil hearts.—King Solomon says that every man knows "the plague of his own heart" (1 Kings viii. 38).

Perhaps you have read about the great plague of London, in which so many people perished. About the time that plague was raging, a box of clothes was sent from London to a little village in Derbyshire; sad to say these clothes spread the disease, and more than half the villagers were carried off by it. About fifty years after, in digging some excavations, a party of labourers came upon some clothes that had been buried at the time of the plague. The disease was still in them, and several of the unfortunate men were smitten and died. Now that plague is a picture of sin in an evil heart. It may break out at any time, long after you think you have got rid of it.

What is the remedy for this evil heart?

A.—It is Asked for. The Lord Jesus says, "Give me thine heart" (Prov. xxiii. 26). This is a very strange thing. Our very best is evil and unclean, but although it is all spoilt by sin, still He asks for it, black as it is, for He knows that we can never grow any better, and so He offers to take us just as we are, and to save and keep us.

R.—Christ Receives the sinful heart. Luke xv. 2: "This man receiveth sinners." All are sinners, but some are lost sinners, and others are saved sinners. "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost."

T.—Your heart may be Transformed, or changed. "Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree" (Isa. lv. 13).

Instead of the thorns of untruthfulness and disobedience, and the briers of selfishness and unkindness, there will be the fir tree of truth and uprightness, and the myrtle of love and kindness. This great change is what the Lord Jesus meant when he said to Nicodemus, "Ye must be born again."

This is a change of heart. Perhaps you wonder how to get it. In Ezekiel xviii. 31, we are told, "make you a new heart." This means make it yours, by receiving the Lord Jesus Christ, and giving yourself right away to Him.

"EARLY SEEK AND YE SHALL FIND."

ONE Sunday evening (writes the Superintendent of the London Medical Mission) I was asked to go and see a little child—a bright, intelligent little girl of eleven years of age, who had for some years attended the Thursday evening Children's Singing Class. On entering the room I found the little one in bed, looking so pale and thin. The mother said that the child's throat was so bad that she had been unable to take any food for the past two days, and had not been able even to swallow such simple nourishments as milk or beef tea. My first thought was to have the child removed to a near hospital, but she seemed too weak to be able to bear the journey, and the mother did not care to part with her. I therefore did what I was able, and left instructions that, if at night, during our absence, difficulty of breathing should arise, she should be placed in a cab, and taken at once to the hospital.

Some two hours or more after I had left, our little patient said, "Mother, I am going to die; whilst I was asleep I thought I was talking with angels, and they told me that I should die to-night." "You must not talk like that," said the mother, "we want you to get strong and well again. You don't want to die, and leave mother, do you?" "I don't want to be away from you, mother; but I should like to go to Jesus, if you will be there too." Nothing, the mother tells me, could move the child; she was quite sure she had seen the angels waiting for her, and that she would die that night. Some hours later the dreaded symptoms arose, great difficulty of breathing came on, and the child was conveyed to the hospital in a cab. Surgical skill was of no avail, and ere the dark hours of night were gone, and the sun had ushered in that bright April morn, the child-soul had passed into the brightness of eternal day.

Angels! sing on, your faithful watches keeping;
  Sing us sweet fragments of the songs above:
Till morning's joy shall end the night of weeping,
  And life's long shadows break in cloudless love.
Angels of Jesus, angels of light,
Singing to welcome the pilgrims of the night.

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

THE forty-fourth annual report of this Union lately issued is pregnant with paragraphs of the deepest interest to those who wish well to neglected children. The Union exercises a fatherly oversight of 237 Sabbath afternoon and evening schools, with an average attendance of 47,373 scholars. The list also includes 42 day schools, and 126 week-night schools. Then a host of other beneficent agencies cluster round these schools in the shape of penny banks, bands of hope, free meals, &c. No less than 3783 voluntary teachers are associated in the good work. What an amount of self-denial, patience, perseverance, and piety these devoted men and women must have, or they would soon grow weary of this kind of well-doing.

The chief charm about this Ragged School system is the prominence given to religious agencies. The whole is based on distinctly Christian principles—not that educational and industrial agencies are overlooked. Then come shoe-black brigades, holiday homes, literature, and amusements. Over £10,000 has been dealt with, and a good account is rendered of this stewardship. Mr. John Kirk, the energetic secretary, will be happy to furnish copies of this illustrated document, at the Office, Exeter Hall, Strand, London, W.C.

PRESBYTERIANS IN AMERICA.

THE Presbyterian Churches of the United States have recently celebrated their Centennial at Philadelphia. One of the speakers was Rev. Dr. T. L. Cuyler, of Brooklyn, who gave a historical sketch of the progress of the Church. We give some of the closing paragraphs of his eloquent speech:—

The causes that have stood in the way of church growth have been the inadequate supply of ministers and of funds, and the frequent controversies and divisions. Brethren! he exclaimed, over the morning dawn which ushers in a new century, let us bend, like a polar arch, this glorious motto, "Union IN Christ for a world WITHOUT Christ."

A retrospect of the century just gone with its account to heaven furnishes abundant cause for devout thanksgiving. We may well be thankful that the Presbyterian Church has so largely escaped the prevailing malaria of doubt and of dissatisfaction with the ancient faith delivered to the saints. From the old bed-rock we have taken no "new departures." It was the honest boast of the greatest of our theologians, Dr. Charles Hodge, that Presbyterianism has made no new discoveries in Bible theology. Her telescopes sweep no fields beyond the limits of Divine Revelation. This sound conservatism never has been—it never must be—stolid stagnation. The wise man's eyes are in the front of his head; he is ever discerning new lines of progress on old lines of truth.

Within the last hundred years our beloved Church has carved her influence in broad and beneficent characters on the history of the Republic. Her iron has entered into the nation's blood. During the arduous struggle for independence the name Presbyterian almost included the name of Patriot. Her stiffly vertebrated theology has imparted backbone to the popular conscience. Presbyterianism has always stood for the sovereignty of Jehovah, the authority of conscience and the majesty of law. Her literature has enriched all libraries; her scholarship has linked the names of Edward Robinson, Schaff, Addison, Alexander, and many others, with the sacred scholarship of Europe.

Her money contributions toward the circulation of the Holy Scriptures and kindred objects of Christian charity have exceeded those of any other denomination. Her pulpits have exalted the sin-atoning Lamb of God; her Sabbath-schools have taught millions of infant voices to lisp his blessed name; her pastors have fed nine successive generations with the bread of life, and led three millions of converts to the Master's table. Her record is on high in the multitudes of precious souls whom her teachings have guided to glory.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sunday, July 1, Acts xxi. 15—26; Monday, July 2, Acts xxi. 27—40; Tuesday, July 3, Acts xxii. 1—16; Wednesday, July 4, Acts xxii. 17—30; Thursday, July 5, Acts xxiii. 1—17; Friday, July 6, Acts xxiii. 18—35; Saturday, July 7, Acts xxiv. 1—16.

DUBLIN RAGGED BOYS' HOME.—During last year this institution in Great Canal-street steadily pursued its useful course. The applications for admission were both numerous and pressing, and the need of the Home was more clearly felt than in former years. The inmates number nearly a hundred. Mr. J. Smyly, Hollywood, Carrickmines, is honorary secretary of the Home.

CHRIST-LIKE MISSIONARIES.—It is to be hoped that all may sufficiently feel the need, not so much of more missionaries, but of more Christ-like missionaries. The world will never be won until they see Christ in those who preach Christ. We must live Christ. His terms are, "Follow Me"; and the heathen world justly has but sneers for those who profess to follow Christ, while filling easy posts, on fat salaries, and living as luxuriously as the ungodly about them. Oh for real "following Christ!" He is grieved. His spirit is quenched. His kingdom is delayed by our levity, idleness, and worldliness.—Bombay Guardian.

The Centenary of Foreign Missions.

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE IN EXETER HALL.

MONDAY, JUNE 18.

The Work of Bible Societies.

At the Annex meeting in the afternoon, in the Lower Hall, the subject was, "The Missionary in relation to Literature," having special reference to Bible Societies. Mr. T. A. Denny presided, and referred to the great wisdom of the societies in the circulation of the Bible. He thought selling was preferable to giving; but where that cannot be effected, there should be the free circulation of the sacred Scriptures.

Rev. Dr. Gilman read a paper dealing with the question of the prominence to be given to the printed Scriptures in communicating the Gospel to mankind. There are some who hold that the printing and distributing of the Bible are in vain unless accompanied by the voice of the living teacher. There are others who hold that the Scriptures are not to be given to converts except under such limitations and restrictions as the Church may lay down. He deemed the circulation of the Bible to be of no less importance than the vocal preaching of the Gospel. The Bible must be given to people in their own tongue. The results of repeated experiments made by the Roman Catholic Church are a demonstration that, if nations are to be well grounded in the truth, the Bible must be given to them. The history of the Congo Mission in this respect is instructive, and that of Japan not less so. Unlike the Congo and Japan, the Church of Christ in Madagascar, when bereft of their teachers, had the Bible in their own tongue, and fed on such spiritual food; and during twenty-six years of persecution, the Christians increased in number from 1000 adherents to 7000, and from 200 communicants to 1000. The missionary without the Bible is like David going forth to meet the great Goliath without any stones in his sling.

Prebendary Edmonds, of the British and Foreign Bible Society, after some remarks upon the translations of the Bible, said three things strike our attention: (1) That the oldest documents of our sacred books are now more highly prized than ever as fountains of authoritative truth; not as instruments of popular teaching, still less as apparatus for public worship. (2) There is no trace of the existence of an ancient Church, however remote in situation, however lowly in intellectual culture, in which we do not find some trace of a vernacular Bible. The highest truths in the world have ever entered in at the very lowest doors, and the doors have always been open to receive them. (3) While the distribution of the Bible in translations is so wide spread, its distribution is also spontaneous. There is no rule, or canon of council, or decree enjoining it upon the messenger of the Cross. It is due to the great spiritual instinct of the Church, which has never ceased to follow the motto Semper ubique ab omnibus. No missionary work is permanent or satisfactory that does not provide the converts with the Scriptures in the vernacular. No vernacular version can ever be permanent or satisfactory that is not in the loyal hands of a living Church.

Mr. W. J. Slowan, of the Scottish National Bible Society, said that last year the Society had an income of £33,000 and an expenditure of £31,000; £16,000 of that expenditure went to foreign missions. Sixty-three thousand copies of the Scriptures were circulated at home, in the colonies, and in seven foreign countries. The circulation since 1861 amounts to over ten million copies. In one sense—and that of primary importance—the Scriptures are the Alpha and Omega of Christian missions. As it is in the Bible that we find the Church, so it is in the Bible that we find the missionary. Missions built on the Bible are built on a rock; those not built on the Bible are built on sand. Bible societies are no mere bookselling associations, but they stand alongside the Book itself, in the first rank of missionary associations. The number of copies circulated is not the end, but the means. Not by the number or extent of the circulation, but the effectiveness of them is their usefelness to be judged.

Dr. J. L. Maxwell, late of China, gave the substance of a paper written by a brother in South China, whose opinion was entitled to great weight (Rev. John C. Gibson, missionary of the English Presbyterian Church). Its object was to determine how best to have the Word of God given to some thirty millions of Chinese. His argument is that from this time we must seek to concentrate our efforts on the matter of translations—not in the dead written language, but in the spoken vernacular language of South China; and that the best letter for the use of the vernacular is our own Roman letter. The bulk of the Chinese people cannot read their own language, and experience shows that, from the nature of the case, they never will. There is no corner of China where the book language is a living language. When any native preacher rises to read the Scriptures to an audience, he has first in his own mind to translate from the dead language into the living language of the people. What he reads to-day may not be what he reads to-morrow, and so there is no guarantee of accuracy. No people have ever learned to read except in their own vernacular. No people ever became a reading people without reading in their own vernacular. The Christian Church must teach all its members to read, unless disabled by age or infirmity, in the vernacular. It is impossible that the agricultural people in China can be taught to read in their own tongue, using the cumbrous hieroglyphic characters. The Roman alphabet gives an easy solution of the difficulty. Anyone can learn to read in this form in three months' time.

Material Methods.

In the afternoon the subject of Home Work for Missions was further considered, chiefly with reference to its more material aspects. The chair was occupied by Rev. Dr. Ellis, of Baltimore, who delivered a brief address. Contending that giving is a part of worship, he maintained that we must go back to Bible principles. New schemes are not required, but the old one is the method that will work best. In his Epistle to the Corinthians, Paul devotes two chapters to the discussion of the motives and principles of Christian benevolence, and they are as practicable to-day as ever. There is money enough in the hands of the Lord's people to carry on the work, but the question is how to secure it. If at least a tithe was required of the Jew, whose religion was stationary, is it likely that less can be required of the Christian who has a responsibility in regard to the evangelisation of the entire world? On the foreign field, where converts give with all their heart, the raising of money is on more Apostolic lines than at home.

Rev. B. Romig, of the Moravian Missions, gave an account of some of the methods of work in Moravian churches. In addition to collecting in churches and Sunday-schools, there are missionary associations in connection with the congregations, also periodical offerings, weekly or monthly. There are also donation lists in which the names of members of other churches appear. The small regular contributions amount to a goodly sum, and are an important item in the account. All Moravians are taught that they have a duty in relation to missions, and one result of the enthusiasm is that the Society has labourers from Greenland's icy mountains to Afric's burning sands, from the snowy summits of the Himalayas to the desolate shores of Alaska.

Rev. Dr. Sutherland read a paper prepared by the Hon. John Macdonald, who is treasurer of one of the missionary societies of the Canadian Dominion. It was held that if children were fully interested and the grown-up public kept well informed there would be greater support. Not half the money is raised that might be. Many who give £1 could give £100, and many who give £5 could give £500, if not more. Mr. Macdonald believed the wealth of the world to be largely in the hands of Christians, for religion has made them thrifty and bright, and also given them character, which to men of business means fortune. He urged the giving of money as preferable to leaving legacies, and asked whether an effort could not be made to raise next year's contributions to mission work by fifty per cent.

Rev. Dr. Grundemann, a German delegate, said with enlarged knowledge there would be more enthusiasm, and more wealth would be consecrated to God.

Rev. A. D. Gring, of Tokio, informed the meeting that the Japanese churches had been greatly encouraged to become self-supporting, by the Home Society undertaking to raise three dollars to every one raised in Japan. Thousands of dollars had thus been raised. Mr. Gring further suggested that Churches should have their own special missionaries. The interest would thus be keener, and people would feel the responsibility resting upon them in foreign lands.

Rev. Dr. Pagan, of the Church of Scotland Foreign Mission, gave some particulars of his methods of sustaining interest among Sunday-school children. In the school of his parish, one part of the year is devoted to the needs of Africa, another to India, and a third to China. More money is contributed by the children of the poor than by those of the well-to-do. Young men should combine in guilds, to study missions, and help them on.

Mr. David Maclaren emphasised the importance of Christians realising that they are stewards of all they possess. God's blessing is assured to those who "prove" Him by "bringing the tithes into the storehouse." He approved of weekly giving by small people, and an account being kept by those in a larger way of business. He had never known a person begin such an account who was not at the outset surprised to find how little he had been in the habit of giving.

Miss A. R. Butler, of the Medical Missionary Association, thought it wise to touch the sympathies of Sunday-school children by having letters sent to them on work in the mission field. Not only, however, are children touched by children's literature, but others of maturer years also. The lady told some affecting stories of two missionaries, to whom the call to work came through reading small books which had been prepared expressly for children.

Mrs. Mary C. Nind, an American Methodist, giving her own experience, said that, early led to Christ, she was told that she must be all the Lord's, and not a part only. Instructed in missionary themes, she was taken to missionary meetings and read missionary books. She had only read one novel—"Uncle Tom's Cabin." She was early taught to save the money which would have gone in candies and superfluities of naughtiness. The family lived plainly, dressed plainly, and saved money in order to be able to give. "Get all you can; save all you can; and give all you can," one of Wesley's sayings, was, in her estimation, good doctrine, and she commended to others the method of bringing up which she had experienced, and since put into practice as a mother and a grandmother. She was converted at the age of five, and all her children underwent the change before they were twelve. She told her children that consecration must be complete, and that they must be attentive to Divine calls. She had the pleasure of knowing that they gave at least a tenth of every dollar to the Lord, and she had told them that if ever they should be blessed with abundance they ought to give one-fifth. She said, "Let missionary enthusiasm permeate the home; remember missions at the family altar; talk of them at the table; and live the missionary life every day. Then we shall not have so many stingy Christians as we have."

Rev. Dr. Schreiber, of the Rhenish Missionary Society, said that in Germany the greater part of the money came from the poor people, who are rich in Christ; while many of the rich are poor, seeing that they are in the hands of their money, its slaves. Dr. W. B. Derrick, a coloured delegate of the Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the American Methodist Episcopal Church, said he was the representative of 470,000 negroes, and declared that among them there is a missionary spirit as well as among other people.

More frequent giving was advocated by Rev. Dr. H. Warden, of Montreal. Pastors also should bring the matter before their churches, describing the work and explaining its progress and needs. The speaker also recommended the annual publication of the names of those who give to the Lord's work. Among some practical suggestions given by Rev. W. F. T. Hamilton, of the British Syrian Schools and Bible Mission, were addresses by pastors, so as not to expend money on unnecessary visits of deputations, also the formation of working parties.

Rev. George Wilson, of Edinburgh, believed the day to have come when we may make large use of the industrial gifts of artisans' mission work. We should send abroad men of God to live the Christian life, show Christian love, teach the heathen to use their hands as well as lead them to God. He told of a boy, a blacksmith by trade, who has consecrated his industrial talent to the service of God. In conclusion, he maintained that industrial missions are likely to prove a great power.

Bringing the meeting to a close, the Chairman referred to the large amount of wealth lying buried in finery and luxury, and being expended to no good purpose. The consecration of this to God would work wonders in missionary enterprise.

North and South America.

A meeting was held in the Lower Hall, in the evening, to consider the missions in these countries, Sir T. Fowell Buxton, Bart., presiding.

Rev. F. E. Wigram recounted some of his recent experiences in visiting the mission fields of North America. Some of these details were most interesting in their reference to scattered Christian tribes and communities. These have struggled to build churches and homes, and now they are united in a bond of Christian love.

Rev. B. La Trobe described some of the hardships which the missionaries in Labrador and Alaska suffer. The thermometer in winter is sometimes at 52, 60, and 70 degrees below freezing point. Mosquitoes and all the ills of summer add to the arduous nature of the work. Bishop Young's house, in Alaska, is of slab pine, stuffed with moss and mudded inside and out. In this house the Bishop was hoping, with a wife and child, to spend a comfortable winter. It is necessary to have funds with which to provision the mission stations. They could not take men and plant them down in Arctic regions, and then leave them. No news has been received from Labrador and Greenland since last autumn. The missions are ice-bound. We must give great thanks to God in that for over 118 years the mission ship with provisions has not failed to cross the stormy Atlantic and relieve the missionaries.

Rev. Dr. Josiah Strong having read a paper, written by Rev. A. F. Beard, D.D., Dr. Welsh recounted some wonderful cases of self-sacrifice in these inhospitable regions. He referred to the question of the coloured population in the Southern States. There are 8,000,000 to 9,000,000 of these people who could turn the balance of power in the great Republic. We must see that they are trained to do right. Fortunately their tendency is towards Christianity, but it is our duty to guide that tendency and educate them. Speaking of South America, he said that colleges have lately been founded, one at Chili and another farther North. The latter has been organised by a young man and his wife, who have already secured funds for four years' support of the work. It is hoped that at the close of this period the seminary will be self-supporting.

Mr. Alfred R. Pite read a paper on South America, which was a narration of events in connection with missions there. It gave many instances of hardship, massacre, and persecution, which the missionaries have had to endure. It has been found difficult to reduce many of the dialects to a written form; they are described as a series of guttural sounds and groans. By God's grace, however, the difficult task has been accomplished. Rev. Samuel Orden, of Brazil, rejoiced in the fact that the slaves in that empire have been released from their thraldom. We must now provide them with churches and schools. In Brazil they have freedom of the press, as well as religious and political freedom, and they must be trained for God. The great cry from Brazil is, "Send us preachers and teachers."

The Duty of the Church.

The Bishop of Exeter presided over a large public meeting this evening, when addresses were delivered on "The Duty of the Church: a new Departure in Missionary Enterprise." The proceedings were characterised by much heartiness.

After alluding in well-chosen terms to the death of the German Emperor, the Bishop made some remarks on the immediate subject. The duty of the Church is unquestioned; as to the "new departure," it will, of course, be a re-departure on the old lines. No new Gospel, no new Bible. The great problems of human life are the same as ever; there are sin and sorrow and death and eternity. The same old Gospel we love so well will alone solve those problems, and meet the deepest necessities of the human heart. Brought up as we have been in different confederations of church work, we have not met now to compromise that truth which we conscientiously hold; we hold it as firmly as ever. We all rejoice, however, in three words which are great favourites of mine—Catholic, Protestant, Evangelical. We hold these great principles in common, and, by God's grace, and in his strength, we shall hold them to the end. Therefore, we do not look forward to fusing into one those distinctive truths which God has given us to grasp.

Though we look for no changes, we do look for a fresh baptism of the Holy Spirit of God. In these days of the Church's warfare, which many believe to be the last days, may we not humbly expect "the latter rain"? "The early rain" fell for the softening of the soil for the seed-sowing in Pentecostal days. There has been mighty work done from age to age; even in those days which people talk of as the dark ages, how much of holy self-consecration there often was; how much of faithful service of the living God, by men who gave up all to go and take the Gospel to the heathen! I do believe that we may in these days look for the latter rain, the outpouring of the Spirit of God in a very remarkable way, such as was foretold by the prophet in the words, "I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy....Also upon the servants and upon the handmaids in those days will I pour out my Spirit." I really believe that it is thus that the Master will prepare the way for his return in glory.

Talking of new departures, we look for a firmer grasp of that new commandment which the Apostle has told us is, after all, the old one, the one which was heard from the beginning—that we should love one another. Greeting one another in brotherly affection is, I am sure, a real power. It reminds us of the words in the history of Joseph: "After that his brethren talked with him." We should also look to helping one another by counsel. But especially, I think, we should pray that there may be a new departure, by God raising up native apostles among the heathen. It is "according to our faith" that we shall have, if the things we desire are according to God's will; for we are assured, "If we ask anything according to his will, He heareth us." What would it be if native apostles were raised up in India, in China, in Japan, and in other countries far away among the heathen, if men full of the Holy Ghost and of power stood forth? We thank God for the faithful men He has already raised up, but we look that He will pour out his Spirit in such a marked manner that many a glorious standard-bearer should go forth. Another point is the work of Christian women, truly a "missing link." Thank God for it! Surely it is not a mere accident that we found at our last census that there were nearly a million more women in the United Kingdom than men. Oh, if God were, in his infinite mercy, to plant some of them out far and wide in the mission field! What an unspeakable power they might be! Those who have already gone forth have shown us how God works by them, and uses them to lead their sisters to the feet of the Lord Jesus Christ.

began a vigorous speech by asking the question, "What shall now happen as the result of this gathering?" It is a grand thing to be moved collectively with the enthusiasm of humanity; but I doubt not that God the Holy Ghost has also been moving in these meetings. Many too have felt themselves stirred by the impressions of brotherly unity, for it is impossible for men as Christians to come together shoulder to shoulder, without the angles being rubbed off. What of the "righteousness of life" which is to follow from the oneness which has been manifested? It is not sufficient that men be stirred with the enthusiasm of humanity because they have come together, and realised their collective unity as the Church of God. Over and beyond that, from this moment, if this meeting be taken in one sense as the closing meeting, each individual soul must comprehend what God the Lord would have it do and be. We may not stand still. God never let his empowered Church stand still at Jerusalem after Pentecost had occurred, but He speedily scattered its members; and they went everywhere preaching the Gospel. And we know that they were men and women. To all of them Christ gave one commission.

I thank God for the sense of brotherhood that has been apparent during these days. But I cannot rest contented with that. If the Holy Ghost were to move in our midst, what could God do if every man and woman here were to realise his or her blessed and glorious responsibility? And if this be laid upon us to-night, let me remind you that, though we have seen great things performed in the past, we have yet to learn what God can do with one man really consecrated unto Him. I look across the water and say, "Thank God" for such a man as Mr. Moody! Not all can have his special powers; but if every man were to realise his duty, we might see great things done. And what does God say to us? He says, "There is a work for thee to do, and wilt thou do it in the strength of the Lord?" We are waiting—not, I believe, for more conventions or conferences, in which to combine together with other Churches, with a sense of some unreal unification instead of unity—but we are waiting in order that we may personally realise the unbounded honour in being called upon each to do our own part. The best of us owe all to the Lord, and should heartily give our all to Him. I have heard it said that we cannot spare our best, brightest, and noblest men for foreign work, and that the common sort of men, inferior metal, will do for the heathen. I hold that God looks for all, and looks for the best. God must have the noblest, and He waits to-day, saying, "Who will say, 'Here am I, Lord; send me.'" Who dares hold back? It is not a mere matter of enthusiasm; it is the question of all questions, as concerning the glory of God. "Who is ready to go for us, and whom shall we send?" How can the Church dare sit still? How can we wonder that the heathen scoff, that the Mohammedans are said to win the day, and that the world at large is wondering that the Gospel of Jesus Christ, which professes to be for the healing of the nations, has made so little show? From the lips of many heathen it has come in this form: "If all this is true, and you have known it so long, why did you keep it all to yourselves?"

What we want to-day is men quickened, empowered by the Holy Spirit, and fully realising their dependence upon Christ, and the ability which God bestows on those who trust in Him. I believe there are some new methods. We might well send forth colonies of Christians—mechanics, artisans, shopmen, or labouring men—who might help to train the heathen in the habits and customs of civilisation, the purely religious work being in the charge of ordained ministers. I look forward to men and women going forth who are personally consecrated to God, full of the Holy Spirit, and realising their vital union with the Lord Jesus Christ as their living Saviour. Everywhere warnings are being uttered that strife is looming in the future among the nations of Europe. If that should be the warning cry that the coming of the Lord is at hand, I ask: "Are you prepared to meet Him who shall come as the Prince of Peace? Are you prepared to meet your Lord?" There is no saying what might be done by the men and women here, if each soul would realise its duty. How much do we believe that the Lord Jesus Christ will reckon with us when He comes, as to how we have used our opportunities?

DR. W. M. TAYLOR, OF NEW YORK,

proposed the question, What is required in order that we may obey the call to advance all along the line, in order that we may respond to the words which God is addressing to us, as He spoke to Moses, saying, "Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward"? We need in the homes and Churches a deeper intensity of love to the Lord Jesus Christ. If we would go forward, we must first go backward. In service everything depends upon the motive, and I am profoundly convinced that many a time we dwarf our best works by doing them from other than the highest motives. We must take our motive power from the love of Christ. The power of Christianity centres in the person of its Lord. Again, if we are to make this advance the Churches need a deeper sense of individual responsibility. We have the Gospel in trust, to use the words of the Apostle Paul; we are not to keep it, but to spread it abroad. We are not to stand between Jehovah and his message to mankind. The Apostle Paul declared himself a debtor to the Jew and the Greek. What was he a debtor for? Not on account of anything he had received from them, but rather in respect to something he had received from God on their behalf. It was a matter of honesty with Paul to deliver the message, and so it ought to be with us. You and I have to rise to the zeal of the Apostle in this regard. We are just as much "put in trust of the Gospel" as he was, and we are just as really "debtors" as he was. We owe the debt primarily to the Lord Jesus Christ, but that which we owe to Him He has made over to our fellow-men, and asked us to pay it to them. Let us not fail to do this act of honesty.

We must also have a larger measure of liberality. I would like to see a revival marked by Christian giving. As we know, in the old times there was the tithe. Let us not forget, however, that the New Testament tithe is the whole ten parts. All that a man has must be devoted to Christ; the new Testament Levites are all priests. We also want a new spirit of prayer. Of organisation for our work we have all we need. Oh for a baptism of the Holy Ghost and of fire!

REV. E. E. JENKINS

spoke of the sufficiency of the Gospel to meet men's needs and interpret God's love. It has been proved by an accumulation of testimony and a force of argument that could only be furnished from the materials of missionary history that as there is one Lord there is one faith—that Christianity is not "on the whole the best" religion offered to the world, but that there is none other that can occupy a permanent place among the forces of regeneration. The old faiths are not parents of that distinct and complete message which was delivered to mankind in Christ, and is intended to supersede them all. Those old religions are not doing any regenerating work in the world. I believe that the future safety of the Church depends upon her missionary advancement. The adversary is asking, "Where is the 'all power'?" It is an awful question, and we may ask another, What is the explanation of the ignorance even of Christ's name on the part of millions whom He redeemed by his life? Let us realise that Mohammedanism never would have flourished if there had been a living Church. With all their wealth the Churches at home cannot stand as isolated fortresses of truth. As a fact, they are not the Churches of Christ if they do not possess the missionary spirit of Christ.

REV. DR. BRUCE, OF HUDDERSFIELD, held that about the duties of the Churches in respect to missions there cannot be two opinions. Through the grace of God, we have adequate means and adequate strength to evangelise the world; for there is in Christ Jesus and the Holy Gospel everything that is required for the salvation of all who believe. He was of opinion that no church at home, no minister at home, will lose anything by giving to the missionary cause. Speaking on new departures, Dr. Bruce said that the missionaries know nothing of what is called "the romance of missions"; people who stay at home and get their ideas from novels read in easy chairs may know something of "romance." The missionaries face the facts, and leave the fiction. In methods there may be new departures, but from the Gospel there must be no departure. About 120 persons assembled in the room at Jerusalem in waiting for the descent of the Holy Ghost at Pentecost. We hope the experience will be repeated now that representatives of about a hundred and twenty missionary societies are gathered together in conference upon the Lord's work.

We do want one departure of a really practical character. We should labour that all those who go out from England and America for the purposes of trade and commerce, for curiosity and otherwise, should be Christian men. If every English captain and every member of his crew, every English soldier and traveller, were a Christian man, what a new departure that would be! Instead of carrying brandy and adulterated spirits and opium, we should have them engaged in commerce of a beneficial rather than hurtful kind. For the abolition of the evils which we now deplore, let us labour and pray. The Government can turn vessels of commerce into vessels of war for the time being. Let us pray that our merchant vessels may have written over all their cargoes, "Holiness to the Lord." Let us try to bring to bear the influence of our Churches, so that this fearful traffic in evil may be entirely put down.

REV. DR. A. J. GORDON, BOSTON,

looking upon the Conference as a "Centennial Exhibition," made an "inventory" of what had passed. Asking the question, What have we found? he said, we have found a Church divided in form, but united in spirit. And I hope you will not make haste to quarrel with me when I say that I believe that this division is God's providential agency for the more speedy evangelisation of the world. In those times and places where the Church has manifested the most rigid outward uniformity, there has been least aggressive evangelisation and religious zeal. In this nineteenth century, when rigid uniformity is not found, we have had the greatest missionary movement that has occurred in any period of the Christian era. God has wonderfully overruled this state of things for his own glory. When the Church of Jesus Christ by Satan's art and malignity was broken into fragments, God took advantage of the fact, that through these divers bodies He might the more rapidly carry the Gospel to the ends of the earth. Do you think there would have been to-day thirty-three missionary societies in China, and thirty-five missionary societies going into the Dark Continent, if the Church had been outwardly one? Yet we are to look for the union of the Church. The Apostle Paul encourages us in these terms: "We beseech you, brethren, by the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto Him." That will be a reunion in which will be included nothing that defileth or worketh abomination. We have found another thing. Though translated into three hundred languages, our Holy Scriptures are one. All great Reformations have been founded on single texts. For instance, "The just shall live by faith" was the basis of the German Reformation, while the English was from one that fell into the heart of Bilney: "It is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief." One text transformed Augustine; he says that the words, "Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make no provision for the flesh," came to him as though God spoke from heaven.

We have also to-day a revived and regenerated Christian conscience. The time has been—and we confess it with shame—that the Church of God has been in guilty complicity with slavery, and with the use and sale of strong drink, without protest. I cannot speak for England or Great Britian, but I can for America, when I say that there is such an uprising to-day, and such a determination as has never been known, that this drink evil shall be utterly banished. If you notice, just as soon as the Gospel is planted in a place, the great enemy brings strong drink forward in order to undo the work of God. Satan never sets his dog on his own sheep; as long as the world lies still he lets it alone, but when it is elevated by Jesus Christ, then he attacks it. As soon as the Gospel is planted anywhere, we meet the drink evil. As in Alaska, so on the Congo, redemption went in, and rum and ruin followed, with the white man. In a revived conscience we have power. If our Governments have no conscience, then this Convention will act as an external conscience, and I have no question that if we act vigorously we shall make an impression. The engineer of the suspension bridge at Niagara declared when that structure was completed that he had no fear of its standing any weight that might be taken over it, nor any external pressure that might be brought to bear upon it. But, he said, there is one thing that I fear it would not stand, and that is the movement of a brigade of soldiers marching to music. Now there is an opium suspension bridge from England to China, and a liquor suspension bridge from the United States to the Congo. Let this convention determine to give God no rest, and give Governments no rest while these bridges remain. Let us march to the music of the Gospel of Christ; let us fall into line, and then tramp, tramp, tramp over these bridges, until they sway, and swing, and break. A new departure! Yes, let us have a repetition of the old departure. Let the 120 societies reproduce that which was done before Pentecost by the 120 individuals. Let there be aspiration and emulation. Let us "tarry" until we be "endued with power from on high."

TUESDAY, JUNE 19.

Missionary Comity.

At a morning meeting in the Lower Hall, on the mutual relations of the societies, Mr. H. M. Matheson presided. Violation of the laws of missionary comity, he said, frequently came about through lack of wisdom on the part of missionaries. In connection with one society he knew of, there had been only one case of misunderstanding about boundaries, in forty years. A missionary violated an understanding by trespassing on a neighbouring mission field and founding a station. The London Committee sent out a remonstrance, and he at once withdrew.

Sympathy was expressed for Dr. Warneck, who was unable to attend and read his paper. He was unable to leave Germany, pending an appearance before the High Court on an unfounded charge for libel. Prayer was offered on his behalf.

Rev. Dr. A. C. Thompson read a paper in which he defined "Missionary Comity" as an observance of equity and Christian courtesy in foreign evangelisation. Equality of rights is a prime principle. Evangelistic economy is required. Priority of occupation establishes a right that deserves to be recognised. Certain limitations to these rules are to be observed. Great seaports, like Constantinople, Bombay, Madras, Calcutta, Singapore, Canton, Shanghai, Tokio, and Osaka, may well admit of co-existing labours by different societies. Another limitation may exist where different nationalities with different languages occupy the same town or territory. Another exception may proceed from an inadequate cultivation of some part of a field, especially where the region is extensive and densely peopled. Agreement between contiguous missions as to the scale of wages is a great desideratum. No mission should employ a native agent who has been in the employ of another mission without an understanding between the two. Such persons are generally unworthy of employment; or, in seeking a change, they are influenced by unworthy motives. Inter-mission comity should be exercised in relation to Christian discipline. Unauthorised appropriation of the fruits of one mission by another is a violation of comity that should be sedulously avoided. The intention to establish a new mission should be made known. Simultaneous independent movements in the same direction may thus be obviated. Territorial allotment should be carefully sought and regarded. The speaker recommended the formation of a Reference Committee.

Rev. Emanuel Vanorden (Brazil) regretted that there was a possibility of these difficulties increasing. They found it so in Brazil. These difficulties would not crop up if missionaries began their work on a clear understanding.

Rev. J. E. Padfield (C.M.S.) said these questions of dispute ought never to come up. They had to dismiss men in India frequently for misbehaviour; and it is no uncommon thing for them to be taken on at a neighbouring mission at higher pay. This is putting a premium on bad conduct.

Rev. J. Hudson Taylor said that missionaries were not so anxious about the bribing of ten or twelve men who misconducted themselves as for their souls, and they were especially anxious for the men who were put to the front. We must discriminate between occasional differences and a general principle. Is it right that authorised publications of Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, Congregational, and other missions should be circulated to show that they are the Churches with the true roots of Christianity in them? After an experience of thirty-four years, he could say that Christian love was practised generally. He hoped the audience would not go away with the impression that disagreement among missionaries is the rule. The rule is, "Let brotherly love continue."

Rev. John Ross, of Manchuria, said: We have been pleading during the past week for men and money, and yet all the morning we have heard of missionaries trampling on one another's toes. The root of the matter is sectarianism. He illustrated a point by stating that on incoming vessels the company's flag was hoisted over the national flag. This is precisely what happens in many mission fields: the flag of sect is raised above the Banner of the Cross. Christ should come before sect.

Rev. W. E. Malaher gave a refreshing instance, in opposition to the majority of those quoted during the morning. They sent home for two missionaries to be sent to the island of Fernando Po from the Primitive Methodist Missionary Society. Whilst the message was on its way to England, the venerable Bishop Crowther crossed to the island. Here he collected £200 from residents to build a church. The agents of the Baptist Missionary Society arrived about the same time and prepared for work. The news soon came, however, that two Primitive Methodist Missionary Society agents were coming. It was stated to Bishop Crowther that they had been sent for before he came, and immediately he took most honourable action. He returned the £200 for the use of the incoming agents, and, in company with the Baptist missionaries, withdrew from the island.

Another meeting on the same subject was held in the afternoon, presided over by Mr. Robert Paton. Rev. W. J. R. Taylor, D.D., read a paper on

CO-OPERATION IN FOREIGN MISSIONS.

We Protestants, he said, have much to learn on this subject. Had it not been for the catholicity of the missionary, and the essential oneness of Christian missions in foreign lands, and the goodly fellowship of missionaries, there would have been the same barriers to union abroad that divide the churches at home. How far has union among native Christians in heathen lands been found practical or desirable? The answer is that wherever missionaries have been actuated by love to the Saviour and their work, they have readily found their way to closer fellowship and co-operation. Illustrations are to be found in Amoy among the Protestant missionaries from America and Great Britain; and more recently in Japan where the movement towards union has assumed new phases and national proportions. No true and abiding union can be forced, but must grow from the imperishable seed of the kingdom.

At what stage of missionary work should independent churches be encouraged? That depends upon the intelligence and ability of native pastors and officers of churches to stand alone. Among barbarous tribes, among the poorer and more humble classes, it might be cruel to leave the natives without any help; but, wherever sufficiently educated and trained to take care of themselves, it is wise and proper to encourage the self-support and self-propagation of the native churches. How far may federal counsel and co-operation be maintained between missions on the same fields, though not organically connected? The best answer to this question is to be found in the proceedings of American Councils and Alliances held of late years, and notably in the records of returned missionaries representing nearly all the evangelical Churches of Canada and the United States. These Œcumenical Councils are the types and promises of what may be expected in every other land. Is it desirable to concentrate missionary effort on fields of special readiness and promise by this Conference, in order that such fields may be immediately and thoroughly evangelised? By all means concentrate; but, as the Apostles did in their day, in order always to diffusion. The grand strategical points must be seized and held, plans of campaigns that embrace whole continents must include innumerable details, where marches and battles in the missionary cause have to be undertaken.

Is it possible or desirable to map out the whole heathen world among different missionary societies or Churches, so as to ensure its more rapid evangelisation? If the whole heathen world were not a terra incognita, it might be possible thus to map it out; but, as it is at present, to attempt any such project would only lead to a historical repetition of the tribal feud of ancient times, when Ephraim vexed Judah, and Judah Ephraim. It would lead to confusion and conflict among the labourers in one mission field and those in another. Let a federal union be formed, composed of Churches of all nations, to carry the Gospel into "the regions beyond," wherever possible. Let us of the old world or the new not fight over old battles, but organise more unitedly and more wisely for the propagation of the Gospel over all the world.

REV. C. C. FENN

one of the secretaries of the Church Missionary Society, said the relations between different missionary societies constitute a problem difficult in detail, but seldom difficult in practice. Work is too engrossing, whatever our differences are, to give much time to talk about these differences. In choosing a field of action, every society will seek for those localities where it will not come into contact with the agencies of other societies, and which will not prevent two societies from working together. No society will seek to draw converts from another, or try to show the superiority of one over another. As to the question how soon native Christians should be independent of extraneous organisations, all missionaries will practically come to the same conclusion, that all self-management by natives must proceed gradually. Every possible pecuniary help and voluntary service must be supplied to the native Christians from the time that they attach themselves to the visible Christian Church. The foreign missionary cannot be a part of the pastoral organisation which the native Church supports. Foreign societies should not exercise control and government in those churches. Our control must continue only so long as we give pecuniary subvention. Contributors will insist in knowing about the persons to whom voluntary contributions are allocated. A committee cannot delegate this matter to others. If it grants monies, it must retain the power of control in ultimately directing the expenditure. The proper move is to introduce from the very first a system of control with advice and help, but to keep the two factors, the external and internal, as distinct as possible, steadily to diminish the external aid, until they cease to feel the need of it. True union between Christians is vital, springing from vital union to Christ. It can and does overleap ecclesiastical barriers. It dislikes them; this dislike will grow more and more powerful until at length it will sweep these barriers away, until in India and China, and in all the world there will be one flock and one Shepherd.

In the course of the subsequent discussion, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe asked whether it was possible or desirable to map out the whole heathen world among different missionary societies or churches. He thought not. After glancing at the great populations of the heathen yet to be evangelised, he said they must make a new departure; they must endeavour to send men who will deny themselves, give up their positions as merchants, lawyers, doctors, ministers, and go to the uttermost parts of the earth, if possible. Rev. W. F. Swanson said everyone knows that division in the mission field means mischief, for we are exposed to influences that make friction more easy than at home. Professor Thomas Smith, of Edinburgh, said there was a temptation to all missionaries to keep their converts somewhat longer in leading strings than is desirable. Rev. W. M'Gregor, of Amoy, said that if union does not take place it is not due to the native Christians. When a man is rescued from heathenism, the great central truths bulk before him, and he cannot recognise denominational distinctions. Lord Radstock said all difficulties would be solved if they took them to the Lord. Rev. C. H. Bell, of St. Louis, suggested that the officials of mission boards should meet together for conference with regard to general affairs. A number of other friends briefly contributed to the important discussion.

Commerce and Missions.

At a meeting of members, on Tuesday morning, there was a discussion on the relations of commerce and diplomacy to missions. Mr. Duncan McLaren presided, and in some introductory remarks referred to the serious hindrances standing in the way of the Gospel in China and India, through the traffic in opium. The fault does not lie with traders, but with the Indian Government; and, as British subjects, we have a direct interest in the matter. Another great evil which Government sets in the way of mission work is those Acts for the regulation of vice; these are working incalculable mischief in India. Condemned in the British House of Commons, and suspended by the English Government, the Acts are still not altogether suspended in some places, and, unless, with others like-minded, we work hard and protest vigorously, they certainly will not be entirely suspended as we desire them to be. We have to consider the relations of commerce as well as diplomacy to missions. It must be admitted that missions have been very beneficial to commerce; for, wherever the missionary has forced an entrance, commerce has followed. Though, however, there is much reason for rejoicing that we have so many Christian merchants going forth both from Britain and America who do much to help mission work, yet there are some merchants whose operations are far from beneficial to the human race. As a consequence, people in heathen lands form a very wrong idea of Christianity.

REV. DR. ELLINWOOD, of the American Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, pointed out that the new impulse towards colonisation, promoted by the European powers, is likely to necessitate some changes on the mission field. As the German and French Governments take possession of territories in which English-speaking missionaries are working, they require changes in the educational methods. Already, in some parts of West Africa, the word has gone forth for all teaching to be conducted in the French language, and the Board with which he was connected has retained its stations by promptly complying with the order. As the uncivilised parts of the world are taken under the protectorate of various powers, such embarrassments are most likely to occur, but he was confident that God would over-rule all for his glory. Maybe the missionaries are at present being brought more closely together—English, French, and German—on the various fields, in order that their testimony may be the stronger; one in Christ, they will be able to stand firm whatever comes. While the missionaries have been tolerated in a friendly spirit by one Government and another, it will not do to lose sight of the probability that, as the work becomes more formidable and influential, there will be jealousy, and notice to quit will be given to the missionaries in some countries. In the Turkish Empire this spirit has already begun to show itself, as the authorities have become afraid of the schools. Only yesterday he received a letter saying that in the Corea the Government had issued an order that all religious teaching shall be stopped. Very likely, as this work goes on, there will be difficulties such as these in more quarters than one. How shall we be prepared for them? In the first place, let us strive to stamp a spirit of consecration upon the native churches—such a deep spiritual sense that, by the help of God, even if we are all swept away as the missionaries were some years ago in Madagascar, the Church will come forward and carry on the work. Moreover, let us, as missionaries, draw closer together, so that, instead of being found scattered here and there, we shall be bound together in one spirit, and hardly know whether we belong to this party or that.

Another exigency is that we shall find many more foreign residents in the great marts of the world than we have found in the past. Some missionaries are for cultivating the acquaintance of foreign residents; others are for having but little to do with them. I believe that we have got to make these people, especially those who are Christians, our helpers on the field. We must draw near to them, and if they are jealous of us, and turn the cold shoulder upon us, we must live it down, and, by kindliness and genial confidence, overcome all their objections. We must get hold of their hands and compel them to co-operate with us. I have been delighted by the number of men whom I have found on the mission field, whose assistance is as valuable as their hostility would be damaging. Moreover, young men going to foreign lands must be looked after. Pastors should write to missionaries and others asking that young men in such circumstances shall not be lost sight of, so as to become a reproach to the Christian name, but rather be taken hold of and induced to help in Gospel work. In conclusion, Dr. Ellinwood referred to the dissemination of poisonous literature in India and elsewhere. The forces of Christianity must be marshalled against infidelity, as well as organised against heathenism. Young men who have learned to read must be banded in Christian associations, and then their power for good will be conserved. In India, China, and Japan there might then be expected a host of young laymen raised up to render an important testimony for Christ.

A CHRISTIANISED COMMERCE.

Rev. W. Walker, late of Ceylon, read a paper on this subject. Adverting to the liquor traffic on the West Coast of Africa, he declared it to be no new thing. Some thirty years ago, protest was raised against the introduction of intoxicating drinks on the Old Calabar river. While the Christian conscience of Great Britain has been asleep, the trade has increased; but it is to be hoped that its days are numbered now.

Rev. G. Piercy, Wesleyan missionary, late of China, opened the discussion. He spoke of the magnitude of the opium traffic, and the deadening and deadly character of its influence. It has destroyed innumerable lives, and spread a baleful shadow over many more. It is only evil, and that at all times and in all places. The trade has been a curse, and not a blessing. Its history is a roll written within and without with lamentation, and mourning, and woe. The outlook in regard to the opium and drink traffic of this so-called Christian nation is such as to lead us to question whether, commercially, at least, Britain is not a greater curse than a blessing to the world. Even if our hands were washed of the business to-day, China has not done with it. She has invoked Satan to cast out Satan, and grows her own opium, vainly supposing that if the supply from India were cut off she would be able to deal with the matter. But Satan is not divided against himself. He means that his kingdom shall stand. Opium-growing will not cure opium-smoking. But I do not despair. Only let Britain do her duty, actuated by a Christian sentiment.

Dr. Pringle, late of the Bengal Army, read from several Government documents to show that the evils alike of the drink and opium traffics in the Indian Empire, are admitted. Alluding to some remarks recently made by Dr. Cust with reference to the cultivation of the poppy, the speaker said that the Government makes a grant in respect of opium growing. Let the grant be made for the cultivation of wheat, and little will be heard of raising opium.

HOW THE OPIUM TRAFFIC AROSE.

Mr. David Maclaren, who has been identified with anti-opium agitations since 1840, gave a brief account of the traffic. First of all the East India Company, which was the Government of India at the time, made opium from the juice of the poppy. Then that Company sold opium to China. Thirdly, they withdrew from the shipping into China, and left that to private merchants, who were imprisoned, with the consequence that the Chinese war took place. After that the introduction of opium was legalised, and the Chinese began to grow it for themselves. In due course the English Government took over the government of India, and now the largest manufacturer in the world is Queen Victoria. Then the Chinese began to draw a revenue from opium, not only from that imported, but from that grown in the country. So the Government which had said it would never draw a revenue from the misery of the people, has been induced to do so. We are responsible in the sight of God for all these evils. How shall the united influence of missionary societies and churches be brought to bear? I do not know what we can do. We can say to the Government, however, when the Chinese treaty expires, that the Chinese shall be at liberty to do as they wish. The Indian Government are still the makers and producers of the article. Samples are brought from China, and examined chemically, in order that the same kind may be produced. If we say, "give it up," then bankruptcy seems to stare the Indian Government in the face, because of the failure of revenue. If the opportunity for repentance is not accepted, surely God will take the matter into his own hands. Therefore, I think, we must teach the people of this country, so that when God's judgment falls upon us we may be able to recognise it. The country should be warned that the judgment of God will descend upon us in respect of this. At the same time we must use our endeavours to induce the Government to stay the evil. It is said, "the Government must live." That is what the poor outcast of the street says. Do we admit it in her case? Is the argument more valid, then, in the case of a Government. I do not see the way out of the difficulties involved in doing right, unless it be by our Government considerably curtailing expenditure in India, and not engaging in wars as they have done in the past.

MR. B. BROOMHALL

said that for years he had marvelled at the indifference of Christian people as to the opium traffic. He was sure that the subject had not been grasped by Christian people. If they knew what a sin was being perpetrated in their name, the Christian community would rise against any Government which allowed a thing so infamous. With criminal neglect, our Christian people at home have failed to inform themselves of their own connection with this deadly business. We raise from five to seven millions a year for the Indian Government from the manufacture and sale of opium. He was afraid that eight or ten millions (figures quoted by a previous speaker) greatly understates the numbers of the people who use the drug. If we were enabled, by God's mercy, to cleanse our hands from complicity with this source of crime to-morrow, we could not stop the torrent which we have started. We have set in motion forces of evil which we cannot arrest, and for generations to come China will be the worse for our action. May it not be hoped that, through God's mercy, there shall be aroused from this Conference such a feeling, such a determination to deal with it, that something shall be done to bring about a different state of things? He looked upon this as a question of national sin to be dealt with on the ground of righteousness, rather than one on the ground of benevolence to the Chinese. If we cannot reduce Indian expenditure within bounds, we should be prepared to bear the burden imposed by our policy until the needful re-adjustment can be made.

Mrs. M. C. Nind, an American delegate, speaking on behalf of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, advocated prohibition on the Congo. She urged that English people should sound in the ears of their Queen, and Americans in the ears of their President, that awful woe: "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbour drink, and putteth the bottle to him, and maketh him drunken." And another woe: "Woe unto the city that is builded by unrighteousness"—and the nation, too.

Rev. J. A. Taylor, a coloured delegate, pleaded the cause of the African people. He said that many of his brethren in America are willing to carry the Gospel to Africa; but what is the use, if the people are corrupted by unscrupulous merchants? He urged England and America to join in a great effort to give Africa a chance.

Rev. Dr. Phraner, of New York, who has recently been visiting mission stations in China and elsewhere, said that he had not seen much sympathy between foreign residents and the missionaries. The two classes are of a different spirit. The missionaries have to condemn much of what is done in the name of European nations; and, as for the foreign residents, they are intent upon making fortunes as quickly as possible. He rejoiced to find noble exceptions in some places.

REV. J. F. B. TINLING, of East Finchley, an anti-opium agitator of many years' standing, agreed with those who complain of the sinful apathy of the Christian public. There is a question just now between two sections of those who support the anti-opium movement. That question ought to be settled, and that immediately. The fact is, the agitators are paralysed by a certain difference of opinion respecting the present position of China and the amount of coercion, if any, exercised by our Government on the Chinese. This ought to be a matter of immediate conference, so that some modus vivendi or basis of co-operation may be found. No man has ever exaggerated the evil, nor, indeed, can exaggerate it. We might almost put aside half our other work and grapple with this matter, and protest every month, every week, and every day, until the unjust judge—the Government of England—is wearied by our supplications. The Christian Church has got the power. It is possible for, and incumbent upon, the missionary societies to meet and utter a protest every day. We have not used our pulpits enough, and the missionary societies might ask pastors to preach on the subject, or allow a deputation to do so.

Rev. H. Duncan said that, when he looked at the facts of the mission field, he thought it a marvel that progress had been made upon the ranks of heathenism. Rev. G. Smith, of Swatow, China, maintained that the traffic is not only a fearful evil to the Chinese, but also to our own countrymen who take up residence in China. Rev. James Thomas, formerly of Shanghai, spoke of having received much help and sympathy from merchants and others in China. Rev. Goodeve Mabbs pointed out that the revenue from the traffic is decreasing; this may hasten or facilitate the sweeping away of the evil. An effort is now being made to induce some men of influence to take up the subject. Rev. Wm. Stevenson, formerly of Madras, spoke of the importance of a thorough grasp of the facts. With them a strong battle may be fought. With reference to commerce, he remarked that it had been wonderfully developed through missionary enterprise, and it has been argued that, as a method of investment, it would pay commerce to support missions.

Valedictory Meeting.

The original intention of the Committee was to close the Conference on Tuesday evening, and the meeting on Wednesday evening was an after arrangement. The valedictory programme was, however, carried out in its integrity.

Lord Aberdeen, with the Countess by his side as usual, took his place as chairman, while the opening hymn was being sung. Then he read the appropriate 133rd Psalm. The earlier part of the speaking consisted of addresses by Canon Fleming and Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, on the importance of distributing the Scriptures and pure literature as auxiliaries to the direct preaching of the Gospel through the living voice. Their remarks were interesting and weighty, but they necessarily traversed ground trodden in previous meetings of the Conference, and therefore we need not report them in detail. The invaluable aid rendered to all missionary effort at home and abroad by the British and Foreign Bible Society and the Religious Tract Society was alluded to, and the importance of sustaining these great agencies was duly emphasised.

LETTER FROM MR. JOSEPH COOK.

Rev. James Johnston, as General Secretary to the Conference, said he had received communications from Sweden, Norway, Finland, India, China, Australia, America, and elsewhere, expressing the deepest interest in the proceedings. He also read telegrams from the Archbishop of Canterbury and Rev. W. Arthur to the same effect. The following letter from Mr. Joseph Cook, Boston, was read:—

"It is impossible for me at present to cross the ocean, but I gladly respond to the request for a letter on the great Missionary Conference in London. I rejoice that the Conference is to represent the whole world. The sky in our day is the roof of only one family. Speed in intercommunication has reduced the entire globe to a single whispering gallery of very moderate dimensions. There are not, and there can be no more, any foreign land or hermit nation. The world-wide contagion of good and evil is becoming a momentous force in modern history. The best and the worst thought of the world anywhere is rapidly becoming the best and the worst thought everywhere. When the educated and upper classes give up their hereditary misbelief, it is more readily replaced by imported unbelief than by Christianity. In the Orient the educated classes are now in greater danger from this imported unbelief than from hereditary misbelief. If sound opinions do not fill the world speedily, unsound ones will. There seems to be a presentation of half truths and distorted truths in the nations now emerging from false faiths.

"My conviction is that one of the supreme dangers of the Church is procrastination in taking advantage of the opportunities now open to reach the whole world. The accessible un-Christian population of the world ought to be supplied with at least one ordained missionary for every five thousand people. The desire of all nations is for deliverance from the love of sin and from the guilt of sin. There is one only Name given under heaven among men by which it is possible to obtain that double deliverance. God grant that as friends of missions we may adopt no opinions, old or new, that encourage men in the delay of repentance—anything that would introduce or support the unscriptural hypothesis of probation after death, or would teach that it may sometimes be safe for a man to die in his sins."

CONFERENCE STATISTICS.

Some interesting figures as to the scope of the Conference were submitted by Mr. Hugh Matheson, Chairman of the General Committee. There have been 58 American societies represented, and the number of delegates from the United States has been 187. From 10 societies in Canada there have come 27 delegates. Seventeen Continental societies have been represented by 42 delegates. Two colonial societies each sent a delegate. From 54 English, Scotch, and Irish societies there have come 1300 delegates and members. In all, 141 societies have been represented by a delegation of 1500. Mr. Matheson said the guiding hand of God could be recognised all through the proceedings; he referred in terms of peculiar pleasure to the deep impression made by the American friends. He believed the Conference would mark a blessed epoch in the progress of Christian missions throughout the world, and that it would give a great impetus towards the universal proclamation of the Gospel. When the beloved brethren and sisters leave our shores they will be followed by many prayers for safe journeying, and for a rich blessing on them and their future work.

DELEGATES IN REPLY.

Dr. Ellinwood, as the mouthpiece of the American visitors, delivered a very interesting and hearty speech, in which he sought to give expression to the feelings of gratitude, fellowship, and kinship they cherish towards the friends in England. He was especially emphatic in thanking Lord and Lady Aberdeen for the opportunity given to the delegates of visiting Dollis Hill, and seeing in high places the beauties of a Christian home. A very sympathetic chord was struck when the speaker, referring to the downtrodden condition of woman in many of the nations represented at the Conference, alluded to the fact of Lady Aberdeen having taken her place in the meetings by the side of her husband. Surely we may see in this the finger of Providence pointing to the time when in other lands woman will take her true place as the equal of man, and his beloved companion. Dr. Ellinwood proceeded to say that they had all felt so much at one in the Conference they had almost forgotten where they came from and what Churches they belonged to. The Spirit of Christ had overflowed every barrier. They had met simply as Christians and missionaries, banded together for one common purpose. In the course of his remarks he also thanked the citizens of London for their hospitality, and the Y.M.C.A. for the sympathy and fellowship shown in connection with the use of Exeter Hall.

Dr. Sutherland, of Canada, after words of congratulation, said the lessons of the Conference were many and precious. It had illustrated the essential oneness of our Protestant Christianity. It remains for the Churches now to go forth and carry the blessing and peace of the Gospel to the millions of sad and sorrowful hearts and homes in the world around. If we do not do this, better we had never come together at all.

On behalf of the Continental delegates, Pastor Rappard, of Germany, expressed the heartiest gratitude for all they had seen and heard and learned. The Conference had been a kind of church at Philadelphia—a church of brotherly ove. That was the church which had set before t an open door—an emblem to us of our duty to go forward and enter in at the open doors in every nation for the preaching of the glorious Gospel. The pastor spoke of the heightened sense the European delegates had gained of the value of the Bible, and said they would go back to their spheres of labour resolved to give it its true place in their churches and homes.

Pastor BOEGNER, of Paris, said that with their feelings of gratitude there came a sense of loneliness because of the smallness of their numbers in the Roman Catholic nations of Europe. Still they would remember that they belonged to the great Protestant family, and they would take fresh courage, and go away, not only with new ideas, but new hope and greater consecration.

The last of the foreign delegates to speak was Dr. SCHAFF, of New York, who said that to Old England and New England is largely entrusted the future of Christianity. It had seen three great epochs; Apostolic Christianity resulted in the conversion of the Roman Empire; mediæval Christianity brought about the conversion of Europe, and now modern Christianity would compass the conversion of the whole world.

THE NOBLE CHAIRMAN,

in his closing remarks, said the predominant feelings in every heart would be those of mutual kindness, unity, and Christian brotherhood. Though the Conference has been comparatively a small body of people, it has represented a vast circle of Christian feeling and sympathy in all the lands whence the brethren and sisters have come. Recently it had been the good fortune of Lady Aberdeen and himself to travel round the world, and they had had the pleasure of greeting many at the Conference whom they had previously seen engaged in mission work abroad, or at whose hands they had experienced wondrous hospitality. One of the great desires of the Committee was that the gatherings should be of a practical character, and he thought this object had been largely attained. The part which he and the Countess had taken had been a comparatively small one, but they would ever look back with feelings of deep thankfulness and appreciation. One of the messages of the Conference to us should be sursum corda—lift up your hearts. Then we must exalt the pure Word of God as the weapon of our warfare. The Conference has come to an end all too soon, but the end must come; and, as a parting word, he could not better express his desires for all than in the familiar sentence "God bless you." His lordship then moved that an address be prepared and sent to Christian congregations in heathen lands, expressing the warm affection felt towards them by European and American Christians, and assuring them of sympathy in their joys and sorrows.

Lord Aberdeen also read a brief letter from Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, who wrote that nothing but extreme weakness had prevented him from mingling with the honoured brethren attending the Conference. He said he had heard of the usefulness of the meetings, and felt sure that more good must come of it. He prayed that through the Conference the work of missions might be greatly revived.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 20.

The Lord's Supper.

IN the morning the delegates and others assembled in goodly numbers, in the Large Hall, for the observance of the Lord's Supper. The service was the suggestion of a lady, and, in mentioning this fact at an early stage of the proceedings, Rev. Dr. THOMPSON, of Boston, U.S.A., who presided, made some appropriate remarks on the love of woman for Christ, as illustrated in the Gospel story. Dr. Thompson directed attention to the great significance of the fact that Christ "gave thanks" for the bread and wine used in the institution. And this notwithstanding the painful things typified! The Lord knew that He was to be as a sheep in the midst of wolves, and that the Church, his Body, for which He gave Himself, was to endure bitter trial, yet He "gave thanks." Amazing grace! In the East there is a tradition that the sons of Seth lived round a mountain which was so high that when they went to the summit they could hear the songs of heaven. During these ten days we have been climbing such a mountain, and now we are on the top, and do we not hear the very words that are being sung? Do we not catch the strains: "Now unto Him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father: to Him be glory and dominion for ever and ever." Also we hear them singing: "Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred and tongue, and people, and nation." And again: "Blessing and glory, and honour, and power, be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever."

The supper having been partaken of, a brief address was delivered by Professor WELCH, of Auburn Theological College, New York. He called special attention to the consoling fact that the Lord's death is thus shown forth "till He come." So the Supper tells us of a living Jesus, who is the life of those who follow Him. In all the circumstances of life the transcendent thought, "till He come," should cheer and sustain us. Jesus, the risen, glorified conqueror of death, who has redeemed us from the power of death and sin, and hath abolished death, will, indeed, come again in power and great glory, to take the kingdom. We know not how soon, nor how remote his coming may be, but this we do know, that then, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, we shall be caught up to meet Him in the air, and thereafter we shall be for ever with the Lord. Let us labour in our several spheres earnestly until that day, when the Lord's desire will be fulfilled, "Father I will that they also whom Thou hast given Me be with Me where I am, that they may behold my glory."

Evangelical Alliance Conversazione.

This gathering at Regent's Park College on Wednesday afternoon was shorn of its proportions by the rain, and the company had to keep within doors. There was plenty, however, to interest the visitors, after tea and chat, in inspecting the missionary relics displayed in the annex to the Library. Among these is Carey's signboard, setting forth that "secondhand boots and shoes" were to be had at the future missionary's establishment.

In the name of the Council of the Alliance, Mr. DONALD MATHESON welcomed the friends. Everybody present, he said, by reason of the unity of spirit that prevailed among them, would be honorary members of the Alliance. Their gatherings had really been as the days of heaven on earth—still "on earth," for the tabernacle groaned under the burden of so many meetings. In separating, we are to continue one in telling it out that the Lord is King.

Rev. W. H. WEBB-PEPLOE said that all must feel how much more real was the unity seen in the Conference than that embodied in any outward organisation. We are not one like a frozen mass, but one as a mighty fructifying stream, flowing over the whole earth. Much as we glorify God for our own special organisations, it does not do to bind men together except by the one great bond of a common love. The great command of God to us all is to "Go into all the world"; and surely this call has been sounding in the ears of many of us during the past days. Though petty differences do to a great extent vanish in the presence of heathenism, there are divisions even in the mission field, and, therefore, we need to exalt the principles of the Alliance in cementing the hearts of all who are God's true servants. We cannot fraternise with a Church like the Church of Rome till it is radically changed; but among the reformed Churches there may be real unity, if not union. The Evangelical Alliance is a potent means of thus uniting us around the person of Christ.

A brief sketch of the practical results of efforts of the Alliance was given by Mr. A. J. ARNOLD, the secretary. The Alliance, he said, is not the synonym for a mere sentiment. First he referred to the Week of Prayer, which originated with the Alliance, and is now well-nigh universal. The extension of this Week of Prayer has been synchronous with a remarkable advance in the growth of missions throughout the world. Many revivals of religion have been reported in different parts of the heathen field as an accompaniment or outcome of the Week. During the last forty years the Alliance has been instrumental in bringing relief to many persecuted for conscience sake. Turkey seems to be on a retrograde path in this respect, and we should have to see to it that the liberty which is secured by treaty is fully granted. The great international conferences of the Alliance have also been followed by happy results.

Rev. Dr. PHILIP SCHAFF, of New York, as the honorary secretary of the United States branch of the Alliance, brought the friendly greetings of the brethren in America. The lesson of history, he said, is that we may have unity with diversity. This feeling of unity must be translated into action by fostering co-operation among the different missionary societies. Let the Churches in the foreign field present one unbroken front to the heathen peoples. Dr. Schaff was followed by Dr. STRONG, the well-known author of "Our Country," and general secretary of the American branch of the Alliance. Someone had said that Englishmen and Americans are blood relatives. Is it not true that all those who believe in Christ are blood relatives—made one by the blood shed on their behalf. For the sake of the heathen lands we ought to look well to the work of evangelisation in the United States for the next ten years. It is a time of crisis in the spiritual history of America, and there are many perils surrounding her life, by reason of the diversity of the population. The unalloted lands of the Republic will all be settled in the present century, and the character of the nation will be fixed. There are those present who may live to see 200 millions of population in the United States, if the current rate of progress is sustained—perhaps 400 millions. The country can easily sustain 1000 millions. There are 1500 million acres in Dakota. The State of Texas could hold Dakota, with Great Britain, Denmark, and Belgium thrown in. Texas is only half as large as the territory of Alaska. To meet this crisis, American Christians are seeking to carry the Gospel to every household in the United States. This movement is spreading all over the land. One month's work in Rochester, New York, has brought 380 non-church-going families under the influence of the Gospel.

Some interesting remarks followed from Dean Vahl, Copenhagen; Dr. Prochet, Rome; Dr. Kalapothakes, Athens; and Professor Blackie, Edinburgh, all of whom bore testimony to the value of the principles of the Alliance. Eighteen nationalities were represented in the company.

A Magnificent Demonstration.

A TRINITY OF EVILS CONDEMNED.

The final meeting of the great Missionary Conference will not soon be forgotten by those who were present. It was the largest of the series, and by far the most enthusiastic. The subjects under consideration—the Opium Traffic, the Drink Traffic, and Licensing Sin—naturally lent themselves to the expression of strong feeling; both speakers and hearers fully took advantage of the opportunity. The opinion was expressed during the evening that, in the matter of the opium trade, the Christian conscience of Great Britain has of late gone to sleep. The proceedings of Wednesday evening ought to do something in waking it up and keeping it wide awake till the cause for such wakefulness has disappeared. The outstanding features of the evening were the powerfully explosive utterance of Dr. Taylor, of New York, the remarkable reception given to Mr. Alfred S. Dyer, on his return from India, and the heartiness of feeling shown towards our two eloquent American brethren, Dr. Gordon and Dr. Pierson.

The chair was taken by Sir Arthur Blackwood, who was supported on either side by an array of gentlemen well known for their active interest in questions of national morality. In the opening prayer, Dr. Parsons, of Toronto, struck an appropriate keynote by his reference to the foes that oppose the kingdom of Christ and prevent the salvation of men.

SIR ARTHUR BLACKWOOD'S ADDRESS.

After some remarks on the wisdom of the decision to hold such a meeting in connection with the Conference, the Chairman said:—Not as part of a cut and dried plan prepared beforehand, not as an outburst of hasty enthusiasm, but as the deliberate, solemn conviction of men and women qualified to judge, you have decided to speak out and denounce certain deeds and practices, and to deplore their terrible results. I am sure I am right in saying that we do this in sorrowful confession of the blameworthiness of the Churches, as well as in solemn condemnation of these practices. Were it not for lack of faithful testimony, watchful attention, earnest prayerfulness, courageous utterance, these things could never have attained their present magnitude. Surely the standard of morals in so-called Christian nations and Governments must be low indeed, when practices like those can not only continue unchecked but be defended; and that not merely on the ground of expediency but of actual necessity. Where have the Churches of Christ been in their testimony against these things? We must confess our own guilt. We are not met for discussion; that time has gone by. Denunciation is our object to-night—unanimous, I hope, and vehement if need be. What cause can demand it more? It is to be the denunciation of deeds done contrary to every precept of the Gospel, contrary to the whole spirit of the Christian dispensation, and even protested against by the very heathen themselves. We are indeed deeply thankful that no sooner has one of those practices in its clear and terrible character been fully exposed and recognised than the British House of Commons resolved unanimously (for the few defenders of the practice dared not record their votes against the resolution) that this system should be abolished root and branch. That proves, thank God, that the moral sense of this nation is still alive with regard to such matters. But doomed systems often live long, and your denunciation and your protest to-night are none the less needful because, so far as that judgment has been uttered, this thing is doomed in all its horrible enormity and atrocity.

We are not only here to denounce, but to deplore the results, direct and indirect, of these deeds and practices. The direct results, alas! who can estimate? Eternity alone will disclose the ruin to the thousands and thousands of bodies and souls of those amongst whom these practices have been carried on by members of so-called Christian nations—carried on by those who ought to have been the protectors and the friends and the saviours of the heathen to whom they went. The indirect results have been no less fatal. What might not the progress of the Gospel of Christ have been among the nations of the earth, had that Gospel been commended and enforced by the lives of those who profess to be Christians? What can more effectually have barred its advance and have stayed its progress? I must allude here, for one moment, to a challenge thrown down to you by the world. It is not often needful nor wise to pay much heed to what the world says about Christian work. Yet at times it is necessary, and I wish to draw your attention to the utterances of The Times, which, in a leading article dealing with your Conference, spoke the other day in these words:—

> Criticism cannot express itself as altogether contented with the amount of ground which has been annexed.... Before the promoters of missionary work can expect to have greater resources confided to them they will have to render a satisfactory account of their trust in the past. Their progress, it is to be hoped, is sure; indisputably it is slow. A Congress like the present would be better employed in tracing the reasons for the deficiency in quantity of success than in glorifying the modicum which has been attained....The cause marches at a pace, which, unless it be registered by the enthusiasm of Exeter Hall, appears little more than funereal. ...For eyes not endowed with the second sight of the platform, the principal citadels of heathendom continue to flaunt their banners as before. If some people profess to believe that they hear too much of foreign missions, the explanation is that they see too little of their results.

I think that demand is a fair one, and that we are right in answering the challenge. The world asks, Why have you not accomplished more? It says: "Trace the reasons for your want of success, instead of talking about what you have done." We have come together for that purpose to-night. Whilst in the spirit of self-judgment and true humility before God for our well-known shortcomings in enthusiasm, in zeal, in self-denial, in prayerfulness, in effort, we declare before the world that, foremost, perhaps, amongst the causes which have hindered the progress of the Gospel of Christ in heathen lands, have been the three practices which we desire to hear denounced to-night. How could it have been otherwise, when wherever the missionary has pitched his tent the rum merchant has sent his barrels, so that we have gone to the heathen in certain lands with the Bible in one hand and the rum-keg in the other. What can those people have thought of the character of the Christianity which thus presented itself to them? How can we wonder that the Gospel makes small progress? With our cannon balls and bayonets we have forced the introduction of opium into China, and, alas! taught the population to grow the drug itself in order to oust our Indian products, thereby inflicting upon them irretrievable injury. What can that people think of the Christianity that came to them in that guise? And, again, when upon the defenceless, uneducated female population of India, a Christian Government has fastened the horrible, diabolical system to which allusion must be made to-night, and enforced it with all the tremendous weight of its authority; when side by side with the chaplain and the church has been the Government brothel, how can we wonder that there, in India, they have laughed at our Christianity, and cast contempt upon the name of our Lord Jesus Christ? If the world taunts the missionary enterprise with its little progress, and says, "Find out the reasons for your lack of success," we can indeed say, with all self-judgment as regards our own shortcomings, "These practices, carried out by Christian nations, and authorised and enforced by so-called Christian Governments, have much to bear of the blame for our want of success." It is our business to-night to lift up our voices, and that with no bated breath; and in no indistinct manner, to declare, in the name of the Lord, and on the ground of every obligation that we owe to Him who has redeemed us by his blood, that, so far as lies in our power, so far as our protests and prayers can effect it, these deadly evils shall be stayed, and, by God's help, be impossible for the future.

The China Opium Trade.

moved the following resolution:—

> That this Conference, representing most of the Protestant Missionary Societies of the Christian world, desires to put on record its sense of the incalculable evils, physical, moral, and social, which continue to be wrought in China through the opium trade—a trade which has strongly prejudiced the people of China against all missionary effort; that it deeply deplores the position occupied by Great Britain through its Indian administration in the manufacture of the product, and in the promotion of the trade which is one huge ministry to vice; that it recognises clearly that nothing short of the entire suppression of the trade, so far as it is in the power of the Government to suppress it, can meet the claims of the case, and it now makes its earnest appeal to the Christians of Great Britain and Ireland to plead earnestly with God, and to give themselves no rest until this great evil is entirely removed; and further that copies of this resolution be forwarded to the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for India.

Mr. Taylor observed that the fact that the opium traffic is a huge ministry to vice, and an obstacle to the evangelisation of China, is surely sufficient reason why the subject should be brought forward and protested against by this Missionary Conference. He then said: I made the statement at a previous meeting, which I will repeat, that while the result of eighty years of evangelistic effort in China has brought us to rejoice in 32,000 converts to Christianity, about 150,000,000 of the Chinese have been either turned into opium smokers or have come to suffer from the opium vice, as husband, wife, father, or mother. If the evil is so rampant, and it is most difficult to help the smoker or his unfortunate family, surely it is high time that our protest was raised against it, and that we did our utmost to bring the evil to an end.

Proceeding to quote from official documents and the writings of well-known men, Mr. Taylor showed the iniquitous character of the traffic. Rev. Griffith John condemned it unsparingly, and appealed to "the great heart of England" to remove the curse. Rev. Howard Malcolm, of the United States, remarked that "the proud escutcheon of the nation which declares against the slave trade bears in this trade a blot still broader and darker." Mr. C. Aitchison, chief commissioner of British Burmah, in a memorandum addressed to the Government of India, speaks of the "demoralisation, misery, and ruin produced among the Burmese by opium smoking." After quoting other testimonies, Mr. Taylor contended that England is directly responsible for every acre of Chinese soil engaged in the cultivation of opium. We introduced the drug, and then the people of Chinese raised it themselves. The Chinese appealed in vain to England's kindly feeling and sense of rectitude; they appealed to every sentiment which was likely to move a professedly Christian people: but in vain. Then they came to the conclusion that England has no moral sense, no conscience, but only a pocket, and that the only way to move England was to prevent the money from reaching her revenue by China producing the drug at home, until the pressure of England is removed.

The Government of India is to a large extent the producer of the drug. More than half the drug manufactured in India is produced and sold directly by the Government of India. It is said that we need the revenue. Remember the well-known words of Mr. Henry Richard in the House of Commons. He said he had a firm conviction that no nation had ever been engaged in any business so absolutely indefensible on all grounds as the opium traffic:

> It might be true that the power of England was forcing it upon the Chinese, and was spreading among them demoralisation, disease, and death—but there was the Indian Revenue. It might be true that the traffic created an enormous amount of ill-will and heart-burning towards England on the part of the Chinese Government, and the Chinese people, which had led to one war and might lead to another—but there was the Indian Revenue. It might be true that the traffic constituted the most formidable of obstacles to Christianity among the Chinese—but there was the Indian Revenue. It might be true that it interfered with the development of every kind of legitimate commerce—but there was the Indian Revenue. It might be true that it dishonoured the character of England in the eyes of other nations, and prevented her from protesting against similar practices elsewhere—but there was the Indian Revenue.

To put it plainly, as Mr. T. A. Denny had well put it, this plea amounts to this, that "the English nation cannot afford to do right." I sincerely trust that this meeting will make it very plain that in its estimation the English nation cannot afford to do wrong. In conclusion, Mr. Taylor expressed a hope that the wrong may be put right while there is opportunity, and before the wrong-doer is visited by Divine judgment.

formerly missionary to Formosa, seconded the resolution. It is quite true he said, that the Indian Government is the chief party to the evil. But before that there is a British House of Commons to be reached, and still before that there is the conscience of England to be reached, and, yet again, before that, there is the heart of the Christian Church in England to be touched. The question is absolutely beyond discussion. We deliberately cultivate the poppy and minister to the vice of a heathen people; more than that, we fatten upon that vice, in spite of the fact that the rulers of the Chinese have again and again remonstrated with us, and in spite of the fact that our action is leading to the physical, moral, and social ruin of the people. Of late years there has crept over the Christians of this country a very strange apathy in dealing with this opium trade. Intellectually we have acknowledged that it is wrong, and we have signed memorials against the traffic; but we have not kept it in our hearts as a burden upon our souls before God. Why do we not arouse ourselves? In this Hall to-night, there is a constituency large enough, if set on fire on this subject, to begin to move England from end to end. Who dares to measure what the progress of speed in dealing with this would be, if each of us pledged himself before God not to forget the matter; but in private and in public so to move that this blot shall be removed from the nation? Only let us get to faithful handling of the evil, looking to God for help, and absolute suppression will in due course be reached. The resolution was carried unanimously.

Native Races and the Drink.

DR. W. M. TAYLOR,

New York, submitted the following resolution, which he supported, by a tremendously earnest and rousing speech:—

> That this International Conference, comprising delegates from most of the Protestant Missionary Societies in the world, is of opinion that the traffic in strong drink, as now carried on by merchants belonging to Christian nations among native races, especially in Africa, has become a source of terrible and of wholesale demoralisation and ruin, and is proving a most serious stumbling block to the progress of the Gospel. The Conference is of opinion that all Christian nations should take steps to suppress the traffic in all territories under their influence or government, especially in those under international control, and that a mutual agreement should be made to this effect without delay, as the evil, already gigantic, is rapidly growing.

After stating that he had received several pressing mandates on this topic to be delivered to the Conference from Presbyterian bodies in the United States, Dr. Taylor said: We who look back to this as our dear old home-land have a very tender regard for her reputation, and we feel sad to have to hang our heads in shame over her when the opium traffic is brought up against her. But our hands in America are as deep in this drink traffic as yours are, and we come here to beseech you along with us that the Christian Church of Europe and America as a whole shall advertise itself out of this business, and shall declare that whosoever hereafter is responsible for its continuance, that responsibility, by the help of God, shall no longer lie at our doors. I protest against this traffic because of the demoralising effect it has on the native races. We know something of what it does at home, but these effects are far more tremendous abroad. These native races are in the position of minors or infants. If we insist, and rightly insist, that those who sell liquor to children and minors shall be punished, shall we force this traffic on those nations that are composed of minors altogether? I protest against the traffic, also, because it is destructive of legitimate commerce. The expenditure of resources for the gratification of the drink appetite renders it impossible for the natives to deal in more wholesome articles of trade. I ask you, in the name of common sense and righteousness, if you are going to allow this one deadly traffic to deprive you of honest gain in those countries which in so wonderful a way have been opened up to trade in modern times. If you force rum upon them, you cannot give them cotton, because they have nothing to buy cotton with. But stay, there is one trade that may be improved by the rum trade. I saw in one of your morning papers this week a paragraph with reference to King Quamin Fori, and a visit paid to him by Sir Brandford Griffith, Governor of the Gold Coast. "All that King Quamin Fori asks, is that Her Majesty's representative will instruct the merchants of Addah to pay for palm oil in cash instead of gin." The Governor, in answer to this appeal, said he could not interfere with the course of trade. The last sentence in the paragraph is to the following effect:—

> The prevalence of the habit among Christian traders in that region of paying the heathen for his goods "in gin" may possibly have something to do with the curious circumstance that king after king with whom the Governor held a palaver, during his official progress, appears to have asked for a supply of handcuffs.

Yes, the trade in handcuffs is one that is stimulated by the gin traffic. Here is a trade-mark for the gin bottle. Handcuffs! Handcuffs! Yes, handcuffs that enslave, handcuffs that degrade; oh, yes, put it on the gin bottle everywhere.

I protest against this traffic because of the retribution which it is sure to bring on the nations who protect it. I rejoice in the ringing words quoted by Mr. Hudson Taylor from Mr. Henry Richard. The government of God is real; the government of God is moral; the government of God is retributive. Has Great Britain forgotten to read the lesson of the Indian Mutiny? Has America forgotten to read the lesson of the Civil War? Shall we allow ourselves to go to sleep again over an evil like this, folding our arms and saying, "Let it alone; it will take care of itself"? The Governor of the Gold Coast said, "We cannot interfere with the course of trade." This has been said again and again in history. It reminds me of the passage: "Yet a little more sleep, a little more slumber......so shall thy poverty come as one that travelleth, and thy want as an armed man." Oh, that armed man! We saw him in America twenty years ago, and Gettysburg was the retribution of letting it alone. You saw it in the Indian Mutiny away back among the fifties, and that fearful time was the retribution of letting it alone. Are we to let it alone again, and bring down still greater retribution upon our heads in America and upon you here?

Once more I protest against this detestable traffic because of its neutralising effect upon the efforts of our Christian missionaries. Why should we go to the heathen handicapped and hampered by men who have no care but to make money, and who have yoked the motive-power of appetite to the car of mammon, that they may ride the more surely over men? Oh brethren, as the representatives of the Missionary Societies of the world, let us rise in our might and say: "It is time that we should be unlimbered and unhampered and delivered from this terrible evil." If the Churches of England were united, and in earnest, and right, no Government would be able to resist them. If the Churches of England, of Europe, and America were united, and in earnest, and right, no evil in the world could stand before them. Let there be no pessimism among us in regard to this. Pessimism is for those who have no Christ; courage is the characteristic of those who know that they have Him with them and in the midst of them. But we must ourselves have clean hands. Let us labour, and pray, and determine in the might of God to lay low everything in the shape of demoralising traffic with these native races. Let us knock it on the head, and sweep its kennel clean out.

Mr. J. Bevan Braithwaite seconded the resolution in a few most earnest words. Let us not say that we are weak, he urged, and that we have no power to stand against these tremendous evils. All power is given to those who have Christ on their side. One great effort in all the Churches ought to be, that our Christianity should not be a mere jumble of theories or a system of opinions, but the realised possession of an almighty Saviour, transforming, re-creating, and strengthening us in all holiness of life. Let us be true to our glorious Captain, and seek to act out a living faith in Him in all the transactions of everyday life.

The resolution was carried by acclamation.

KING LEOPOLD AND THE TRAFFIC.

A third resolution, recognising the benefits that have already accrued to Africa in connection with the founding of the Congo Free State by the King of the Belgians, invoking his aid in suppressing the drink traffic, and appointing a Committee to proceed to Brussels and lay this important matter before His Majesty, was submitted to the meeting by Rev. Dr. J. Murdock, of Boston. In doing so he mentioned an incident told in New York by Mr. H. M. Stanley. When that explorer met the King in Uganda, the King asked him many questions about Queen Victoria, the Emperor of Germany, and others; then he said, "What tidings can you bring me from above?" Mr. Stanley, unhappily, was not an expert in these matters, but he gave the King a New Testament, which he declared contained the only answer which man could ever receive to that most momentous inquiry. After a long passage across the Continent, Stanley came at last to meet with the coloured people of the Western Coast, and the first question they asked of him was, "Have you any gin?" That, said Dr. Murdock, is the difference between heathendom pure and simple and heathendom as touched by the curse of Western civilisation. It was in order to touch this evil at its very core that the matter would be laid before the King of the Belgians. The resolution was seconded by Mr. H. Grattan Guinness in a somewhat lengthy paper, full of startling facts most eloquently and impressively stated. We must, however, for want of space, defer our report of it. The resolution was heartily agreed to; the gentlemen appointed to carry out its provisions being Dr. Murdock, Mr. Grattan Guinness, Mr. J. Bevan Braithwaite, and Mr. Alfred Baynes.

Licensed Vice in India.

The fourth and last resolution was moved by Mr. ALFRED S. DYER, who, as the Chairman remarked, had only a few days before returned from India. On rising, Mr. Dyer was greeted with oft-repeated rounds of cheering, and it was some time before he was able to speak. He read the resolution, as follows :—

> That this Conference has heard with shame and sorrow of the extensive system of State-licensed vice carried on throughout India by authority of the Indian Government; that at the same time it desires to place on record its deep sense of the great service rendered to the cause of morality and religion by the House of Commons determining the repeal of all legislation which authorises and encourages vice; and it confidently expects that Her Majesty's Government will now take immediate measures to abolish what constitutes a social degradation, and so remove a stumbling-block to religion, and the dishonour to the name of Great Britain which have resulted from this system; and further, that copies of this resolution be forwarded to the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for India.

The time being far spent, Mr. Dyer had proposed simply to read the resolution, leaving it to speak for itself without any advocacy of his own. In response, however, to the calls of the audience, he said: The uppermost feeling in my heart is one of unbounded thanksgiving to God for the great victory which has been gained in the House of Commons in this cause of social purity. I honour the noble men in that House who have stood faithful to this cause amid so much ridicule.. I honour them in that they have been faithful to the truth of our Lord Jesus Christ, and I look upon this victory entirely as an answer to the prayers that have been offered up. We have been praying about it in India. Not a day passed that I did not pray for it, so that I feel, as I have said, unbounded thankfulness to God, while I thank those members of Parliament. After seven or eight months' patient investigation in India, and coming into contact also with the drink traffic, I have come to the conclusion that the two great obstacles to the success of missionary work in India are the systems of licensed vice and of licensed drink. I would only add that we must see that the resolution of the House of Commons is carried out in India. I hope in a few weeks to go back there; and I intend to stay there, to act as your representative, to exercise a due vigilance, and to see that the system of licensed vice is abolished. While I am there, I shall also make it my business to investigate further these questions of the drink traffic and the Chinese opium traffic, and to see if I can help you to get rid of them.

seconded the resolution. He said: It was with extreme repugnance that I undertook to speak. My repugnance arose from the fact that I felt myself to be a citizen of another land, and that this was a question which primarily concerned Britain. But in presence of such a question you are not Englishmen, and I am not an American, but we are all of us citizens of the commonwealth of man, and endowed from heaven with the freedom of the city of God. I take that freedom to protest against the worst form of outrage that has ever been perpetrated against a defenceless people. Anglo-Saxon fathers, hang your heads with shame for the cause that brings us here to-night. Anglo-Saxon mothers, turn your heads away from your husbands and your sons; you cannot look them in the face as you discuss a question like this. Anglo - Saxon daughters, draw your veils over your faces lest you put me to silence by the mantling blushes on your cheeks. Twelve years ago the civilised world was stirred to its depths by the story of the Bulgarian atrocities. A few undisciplined Bashi-Bazouks, elated by victory, were guilty of atrocities which brought down upon their country a desolating war, which dismembered it, and which drew from one of your statesmen that famous utterance that the Turks must be driven "bag and baggage" out of Europe. We have been guilty of an atrocity which surely might justify the statement that we ought to be driven "bag and baggage" out of Asia. This, moreover, is not an atrocity by a few guerilla soldiers, but by a Christian Government, with its two established religions and its numerous churches and chaplains. We have gone into India in an official capacity, to degrade, first our own sons, and then the daughters of the weak subject races. It is with shame that we confess that our race has sunk to such a degradation as that. Turn to a more cheerful aspect, and rejoice at the action of the House of Commons. All honour to those noble men who have stood up and vindicated the right. I repudiate, and never will believe, the accusation, that the medical profession stands behind these acts. I have been a member of that profession for twenty-seven years. I say that when you press this matter on your legislative bodies, you may rely upon the medical profession being with you. And let us press forward in the consciousness that God is with us. The resolution was carried unanimously.

Closing Words.

The Chairman intimated that after a hymn he would call upon Rev. Dr. Gordon and Rev. Dr. Pierson, delegates from America, to deliver short addresses. As the evening was well advanced, there were calls that the hymn should be dispensed with, so that there might be more time at the disposal of the speakers. This course was adopted, with a result that was not regretted, for the addresses were of a very helpful character.

DR. A. J. GORDON

said: It has been said, and I think truly, that there is enough sentiment, and conscience, and enthusiasm, and spiritual power, in this audience to move our Governments to the abolition of these terrible iniquities. Let it be remembered for our encouragement that in England, when the slave trade was to be abolished, agitation began with only two or three men, who carried it to a successful issue. I remind you also that our great conflict in America began with two or three men who for years stood alone. Again, remember that the leader of that movement placed on his banner the motto, "Immediate, unconditional Emancipation," and in spite of all ridicule and all abuse, and all dissuasion, he never would take that motto off his banner, but carried it forward until at last the whole nation followed him, and we swept the curse of slavery from our land. I suppose it will be admitted by our American brethren that the most eloquent man America has produced in modern times was Wendell Phillips. He stood side by side with Lloyd Garrison—the two stood alone, for years. I remember the time when they could not rally twenty men in a city to listen to them, eloquent as they were. This, however, is what I am going to say: Oh, English women, oh, American women, do you know what you can do? Just before Wendell Phillips died, I had a memorable conversation with him. Knowing that he had sacrificed social position, and much besides, I had the curiosity to ascertain what led him into the agitation. He had an invalid wife, who for years never left the house. I asked, "What first led you to espouse the cause of the slave, and to stand by him?" He replied, "My whole career is due to my wife. She said to me, before the thought had ever touched my conscience, 'Wendell, you must take up the cause of the slave,' and I did it at her request, and I fought it out, because she stood behind me." There is a lesson for Christian women! And now let us remember that if two leaders can finally bring a whole vast nation to follow them, in demanding the abolition of such an evil, we are more than two, and we have had as eloquent men leading us to-night as either of those I have named. Let us follow them. There is nothing that can stand against iteration and reiteration. Suppose you suspended a piece of iron weighing a hundred pounds in the midst of this hall, and, when it was perfectly poised, you brought a schoolboy to pelt it with pieces of cork. At first there would be no impression, but if the boy kept at it long enough, and directed the pieces of cork at one point, the time would come when the whole mass would begin to move. In like manner, our testimony may in itself be very weak and unworthy, but let us bring it to bear long enough—testimony after testimony, protest after protest, demand after demand, abhorrence after abhorrence, expressed in the intensest terms against these evils; and by and by the great mass will begin to move, and it will be swept out of the way. Let us not be disheartened. Let us take courage from the assurance that God will bruise Satan under our feet shortly.

REV. DR. PIERSON,

in the course of a stirring address, said: If I had time I would like to take up the challenge thrown down in that secular newspaper. For I reckon that it knows a good deal more about the kingdom of Britain and other kingdoms than it does about the Kingdom of God. We stood this afternoon in the London Missionary Society's premises, and had rehearsed to us in brief outline the wonderful story of the progress of the Gospel in Tahiti and the neighbouring groups of islands. The missionaries laboured in Tahiti for years without any apparent results, but then within a very short time the people became so thoroughly Christianised that they sent to the other groups, and within forty-four years the regeneration of Polynesia was accomplished. And yet this newspaper thinks that the progress of foreign missions has been funereal! Having told of wonders wrought in China, Dr. Pierson said: We have spoken much in this Conference about the union which has been exhibited. I want to say that I take not the slightest credit to America or to myself for this unity. If in the presence of the gigantic foe that unites all its forces and masses all its hosts against the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, I did not forget that I am an American, and also forget the denomination to which I belong, I should consider myself a fossilised ecclesiastic, and not a disciple at all. When Herod and Pilate are made friends in order to crush Christ and Christianity, it behoves all true disciples to stand shoulder to shoulder, and to close about the ark of God. The fact is, our unity is largely the involuntary unity of those who in the presence of the adversary have come together because they cannot help it; and I think that the methods and manner adopted by our foes make it clear that we can pursue no successful policy of warfare but an aggressive one. We had better stop throwing up defences, and carry war into the enemy's camp. A positive, aggressive Gospel is surely the one that is going to win the day.

A Missionary Memorial.

SIR,—I have received, in my capacity of Hon. Secretary to the City of London Committee for the Repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts, the following highly important memorial from missionaries labouring in our Indian Empire :—

"To the Boards of Directors of the Christian Missionary Societies represented by missionaries in India.

"It is impossible for us, as ministers of Christ, to be neutral in view of the conflict which is going on against the licensing of impurity by the British Government in India.

"We are bound to uphold the obligation of the seventh commandment. We cannot admit that it is ever expedient to break the law which has been ordained by the supreme Ruler of the universe and the Creator of mankind.

"It is therefore with sorrow and shame that we behold the Government of India recognising prostitution as a lawful 'business,' providing houses for the free occupation of numbers of women engaged therein, and issuing to the said women certificates authorising them to pursue that course of life which God so repeatedly and so emphatically condemns, prohibits, and warns against in his written Word.

"The action of the Government in this respect cannot do otherwise than seriously hinder the work of Christian missions among large masses of the people of India.

"We therefore solemnly invite the managing boards of the respective missionary societies with which we are connected to make such representations to the Imperial Government of Great Britain as will help to speedily remove the unholy institution of licensed impurity from India."

This memorial is signed by no less than 403 missionaries connected with 36 Protestant missionary societies in Great Britain, America, and on the Continent of Europe, including the following :—

I attended on the evening of the 20th inst. the closing meeting of the International Missionary Conference in London, when resolutions were proposed denouncing (1) the opium traffic; (2) the drink traffic with native races; and (3) the licence of sin in India, as hindrances to the spread of Christianity. I informed the chairman, Sir S. A. Blackwood, K.C.B., of my intention to introduce to the missionaries and friends present this memorial, so unique in its character, and so germane to the subject under consideration, as showing the perfect accord of those who were labouring in India in reprobation of the State licence and regulation of sexual vice. Towards the close of the meeting I was informed by an official of the International Missionary Conference Committee that the introduction of the memorial was "quite inadmissible." I could not, without disturbing the proceedings, appeal to the chairman, so I left the meeting, determining that 400 missionaries who had uttered their solemn and indignant protest should not be boycotted, and that I would by every means in my power make known the memorial at home and abroad.

I have only to add that the respected chairman has informed me that the communication made to me was unknown to and unauthorised by him.

Will you, Mr. Editor, assist me in giving publicity to these facts, and to the existence of this unique and important memorial.

Yours truly, BENJAMIN SCOTT,
Hon. Sec., City of London Committee for Repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts.

THE CYPRUS SOCIETY has been formed for the advancement of hospital and educational work in the island of Cyprus. The primary object of the Society is the establishment of a hospital at Kyrenia, where there is none at present; with the prospect of its subsequent development into a convalescent hospital so very much needed for the island. Information will be gladly given by the hon. secs., Miss S. Chapman Hand, and Mr. Wm. White, F.S.A., 30a, Wimpole-street, London, W.

EVANGELIST FRANK SMITH.

There have probably been no more Christ-like deeds in the world's history than the experiences of Frank Smith, now of Cleveland, Ohio, when confined in Andersonville prison. One day, after he had been there several months, an officer came in with a roll in his hands, and proceeded to read the names of a number of persons who had been selected for exchange. Down at the bottom, the very last with one exception, was the name Frank Smith. He went to the officer, and received the paper that in the morning would set him free, and as he turned away with a great deal of exultation in his heart, he saw the tears rolling down the face of a middle-aged man who seemed to be struggling to conceal his emotions.

When Mr. Smith asked him what the trouble was, the man replied that he had a wife and four children in a distant State, and that now he feared he would never be able to see them again. He had been hoping, almost against hope, that his name might be included in the list of those to be exchanged; but reading the names had produced only disappointment, which it seemed as though he was unable to bear. Mr. Smith said to him, "But you shall be able to see your wife and children," and gave him his ticket of release, while he himself was content to remain amid the awful sufferings of the prison life for the succeding months.

After several months had passed, somewhat to his surprise his name was read a second time, as one of those who were to be released upon the morrow. During this interval this Christian brother had received so much of God's spirit and a so much deeper experience of Christian grace and helpfulness, on account of his self-sacrificing act, that he had made up his mind that if he should again receive an exchange he would transfer it as he had done the first one. So when the second one came, he went to a man with whom he had had many conversations in endeavouring to persuade him to accept Christ, and, sitting down by him, talked with him for some time about Christ, but without any seeming success in leading the man to forsake his sins and accept the Saviour. At last he took out the card that was to have given him his liberty, and, handing it to the man, told him to go to his home, and that he thus made him his substitute for Christ's sake. This melted the heart of the man, and then and there he yielded himself to Christ.

For several weeks longer this brave hero endured the atrocities of the horrible prison life; and he had determined in his mind that if by any possibility he should be exchanged for a third time, it would be necessary, on account of his failing health, to take advantage of it, and go back to his friends and into active service in the army; and when, after weary weeks of waiting, his name was called for a third time, he could scarcely contain himself for joy at the thought of his release. He went to one who had been his bunk-mate—a young man nineteen years of age, who had become very sick—in order that he might wish him "good-bye." When he told the boy that he had received his freedom, and was about to leave him, the youth burst into tears, and said, "Oh, Frank, you must not go!" He said, "I want you to go, and yet I don't see how I can bear to be left here without you; I know that I should die! can't you wait until I am dead?" The brave-hearted and generous man said to the suffering boy, "I will not leave you to die alone," and, running out, hunted up a third substitute, and sent him on his way to freedom, while he waited until, after other terrible months, he was released by the fortunes of war.

It is not surprising that God can use such a man as this, as he now uses Brother Smith, in winning numbers of wanderers to Jesus Christ. To read such an incident makes a man proud to be called a Christian; and ought to make us all humble and tender and self-sacrificing in our willingness to fill up that which is left behind of the sufferings of Christ.—Words and Weapons.

COLPORTAGE IN IRELAND.

It is clear, from the tone of a section of the Irish press, that the Papal Rescript has produced a marked sense of distrust of Rome in the minds of Irish Catholics. As to whether they are right or wrong in their views of the Rescript, we express no opinion. It is the fact of distrust alone that concerns us; let the significance of the fact be minimised as it may by Rome itself, and by her faithful adherents over the world, it remains true that Ireland believes it has received a wound; and that wound, we predict, neither a day nor a year will heal. What does concern us, however, as well-wishers of that distracted country, is the question, Will this sense of irritation and distrust open any doors for the entrance of the truth? Our answer is, We believe it will. God is clearly working, and if his servants in Ireland only work with Him wisely, He will overrule this crisis so that infinite good may come out of it.

We do not advocate unwise and irritating work, but such work as can be done quietly and graciously, in the spirit of the Master, and the efficacy of which will very much depend, under God, on its meek graciousness and decided quietness. This may be done in many ways, but we believe about the best, and indeed, at present, the only way, is by means of Colportage. For some thirty years or so Colportage work has been carried on by the "Bible and Colportage Society of Ireland," and during these years tens of thousands of pounds' worth of Bibles—Douay and Authorised—and general religious tracts and periodicals, have been sold and circulated in the most intensely Roman Catholic districts in the country, without the shadow of opposition on the part of the people. In truth, we believe the Colporteur is ever received most kindly, especially the Irish-speaking ones, of whom the Society has several.

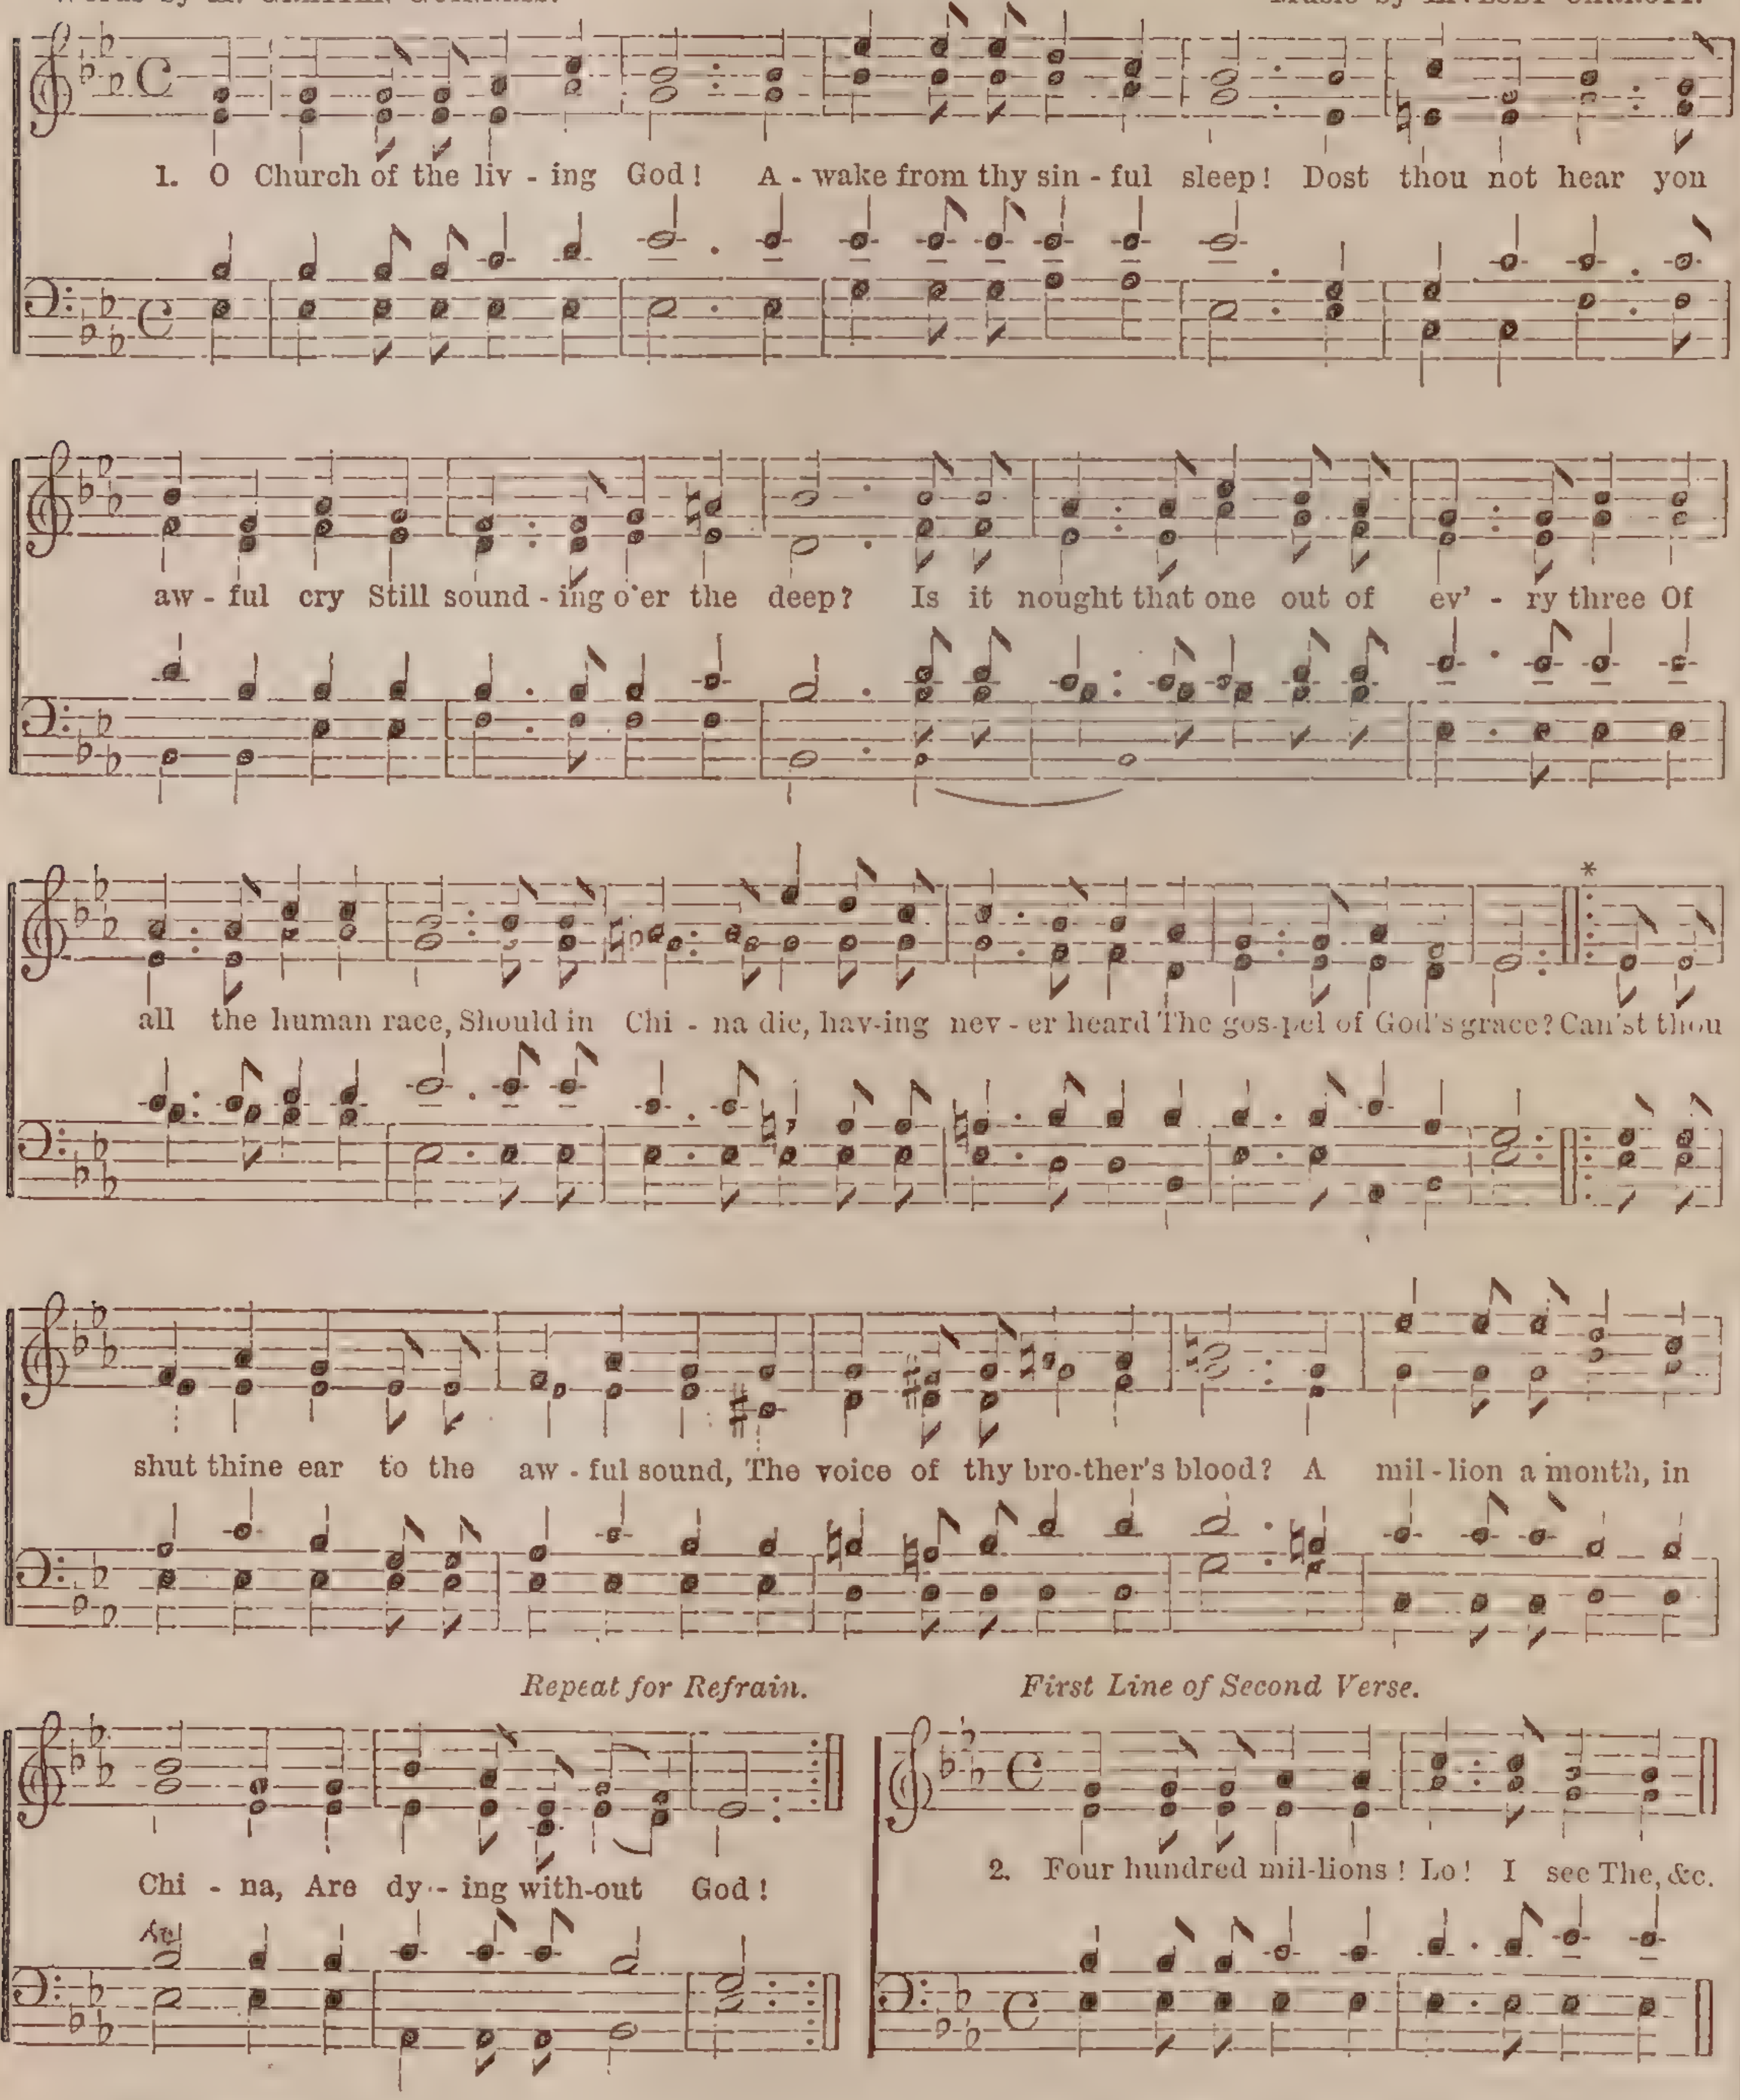
This Society is strictly unsectarian and undenominational. It is supported by all Protestants who wish well to Ireland. Numerous contributions used to go to it from London and the South of England. Death, and removals and depression, have interfered with many of these. The Society, it seems, is at present in need of funds to enable it to carry on its healthful operations. Its two secretaries are now in London advocating its claims. We commend the Society and its work to those who wish Ireland well, and who desire that the Bible and Colportage Society should be in a position to take fair advantage of any opening which this present crisis will undoubtedly afford.

MR. HENRY VARLEY attended the Noonday Prayer-meeting at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, on Monday, and delivered an address on Christian work in Australia. He summed up by saying that at the Antipodes, as well as in Europe, there are many things which make the Christian long for the return of the Lord from heaven to put right that which is wrong, and to establish righteousness in the earth.

CHISWICK MISSIONS.—The many excellent agencies of the Chiswick Missions received encouraging support last year. Mr. R. T. Smith, the evangelist, has been obliged to take rest for the present, and the seventh annual report comes out signed by Mr. J. Protheroe, the minister. The two halls, in Fraser-street and William-street, are inadequate to accommodate the large number of people who assemble. Mr. Protheroe's address is 29, Binn's-road, Chiswick, W.

"Dying without God."

Words by H. GRATTAN GUINNESS. Music by LIVESEY CARROTT.



1. O Church of the liv - ing God! A - wake from thy sin - ful sleep! Dost thou not hear yon aw - ful cry Still sound - ing o'er the deep? Is it nought that one out of ev' - ry three Of all the human race, Should in Chi - na die, hav-ing nev - er heard The gos-pel of God's grace? Can'st thou shut thine ear to the aw - ful sound, The voice of thy bro-ther's blood? A mil-lion a month, in Repeat for Refrain.
Chi - na, Are dy - ing with-out God!
First Line of Second Verse.
2. Four hundred mil-lions! Lo! I see The, &c.

2 Four hundred millions! Lo! I see
The long procession pass;
It takes full three and twenty years!—
Yet scarce two hours, alas!
Mine eye need gaze to count the saints
Amid that mighty host;
So few, so very few the saved,
So numberless the lost!
The lost! ah, does no righteous voice
Accuse us of their blood?
A million a month, in China,
Are dying without God!

3 O Watchman of God, thou seest
The sword of destruction come;
Why soundest thou not the warning
'Mid the hosts of heathendom;
God says, that if thou warnest not
The wicked, at his command,
He shall perish,—but his blood shall be
Requirèd at thy hand!
Oh, cleanse thy hands from murder,
From the stain of thy brother's blood:
A million a month, in China,
Are dying without God!

4 Go! for the Saviour sends thee
To call, from the distant East,
The idolaters for whom He died
To his heavenly marriage-feast.
The Gospel that thou bearest
The power of God shall prove,
To triumph o'er the souls of men
By the omnipotence of love.
And remember, while thou lingerest,
The voice of thy brother's blood:
A million a month, in China,
Are dying without God!

* If sung as a Solo, the Repeat can be sung by a Quartett after each verse.

MR. WILLIAM NOBLE addressed an audience in the Edinburgh Castle on Sunday evening last, in behalf of the Tower Hamlets Band of Hope Union. He took for his subject, "The Pleasures of Sin for a Season," and a deep spiritual tone pervaded the meeting.

REDRUTH TOWN MISSION.—Much blessing attended the labours of the missionaries, Mr. J. W. Wilson and his wife, during last year. The efforts put forth included meetings in the mission-room and the open air, visiting from house to house and reading the Scriptures, comforting the sick and aged, and the distribution of tracts. The accounts show a balance of £44 due to the treasurer. Mr. E. Milford Cock is the secretary of the Mission.

DR. MOXEY is at present residing in Venice. He writes that his health has much improved since he went there.

SAVING LIFE AT SEA.—A most remarkable invention, of which a working model is shown at the Alexandra Palace exhibition, is the detachable life-saving saloon for ships which has been designed by Mr. William Hutchings, shipwright, High-street, Erith. Mr. Hutchings would convert the fixed saloon of the liners into a navigable life-saving saloon, which can be put overboard by the simple method of unlocking the saloon. The model of this invention is most complete, and conveys a much clearer idea than any words can do of its practicability.—Iron.

SALVATION ARMY RESCUE WORK.

THE fourth anniversary of the rescue organisations connected with the Salvation Army was celebrated a few evenings ago in St. James's Hall, Piccadilly. General BOOTH, who presided, declared rescue work to be part of the Army's business. There are branches in several countries. In Great Britain the Homes are 11 in number, accommodating 212 girls. They are always filled, and of the 2000 who have passed through them 1500 have been effectually reclaimed from a life of shame.

The General said that no less than 70 officers were engaged in this particular department. They come from various classes; some, like the ordinary workers in the Salvation Army, from the very class we are endeavouring to save; others are motherly matrons, who lavish their affection upon these poor girls; and others come from higher ranks in life, having abandoned homes of luxury and refinement, and devoted themselves entirely to the work. Only funds and workers are required greatly to enlarge the work. The expense of a Home accommodating 20 girls, is £500 per annum. Already the girls are earning a large sum of money; something like £200 in the last six months. For the coming year £4000 is required. The speaker's soul seemed stirred with holy indignation as he spoke of one of the evil results of the sweating system, of which so much has lately been heard, and of the part played by the drink makers and sellers in keeping up the inhuman traffic in the bodies and souls of men and women.

Mr. T. A. DENNY remarked upon the wonderful way in which the little Home at Whitechapel has grown into twelve others. Mr. RICHARD CORY also spoke some words of sympathy. Mrs. BRAMWELL BOOTH, who has charge of the work, remarked that these poor fallen women are like every other class of sinners, in that they are very much bound together. She felt that each of the rescued ones was like a ray of hope for the hundreds and thousands who are still living in sin. The endeavour is to shut them away from temptation by placing them under bolts and bars. The Rescue officers try, as far as possible, to make the Homes a break for the girls between the sad past, of having their own way and doing nothing, and the future of hard work most of them have to look forward to.

Commissioner HOWARD made a statement as to the good that has already been accomplished by the newly-developed enquiry system, in finding out persons who had been lost; and then, dealing more particularly with the Rescue Work in Australasia, he told how they had recently extended their operations by opening a Home for female prisoners, in which a large number of the most desperate cases had been reclaimed. To such an extent is this glorious work recognised by the Australian Government, that, in addition to the permanent grant of one thousand pounds a year, the prison authorities of Victoria have had a notice affixed on every corridor of every prison throughout the colony to the effect that all who desired to live a better life, the Salvation Army would be glad to meet at the gates on their release.

ST. JAMES'S, HOLLOWAY.—The "District Report for the Jubilee Year 1887-88," gives a detailed account of a large amount of parochial work. Not only are particulars given of the rise and progress of many useful local agencies, but much is said about the actual working of the societies, institutes, auxiliaries, and schools, which seem to be in excellent order.

THE UNITED SERVICE INSTITUTE, GOSPORT, is a very useful institution. It was founded by Mrs. G. Bedford (née Miss E. Gurney), who is about to leave the neighbourhood under medical direction. The institution is highly appreciated by men of the services, and requires extension. Details may be gathered from "A Year's Retrospect," which may be had from Major-General Synge, Upnaghur, Pelham-road, Southsea.

CUCKOO CLOCK and WEATHER HOUSE (COMBINED).

A handsomely carved wood clock, 22in. in height, with ivory hands and figures, strikes the hours and half hours on a powerful wire gong. Each time the clock strikes a charming little cuckoo pushes open a door at top of clock, and comes out, and cuckoos the hours and half hours, then retires, and the door closes after it. Above the clock is the Weather House, containing beautifully modelled figures of male and female peasants, 3in. high. The man comes out if about to be wet, and woman if fine We warrant these clocks to go for years, and for time-keeping qualities no better clock can be obtained at any price, while they are ornamental and fit to decorate a palace.

BIRDS OF THE BIBLE:

Chats with the Children about Bible Birds.

By JAMES BOWKER, F.R.G.S.I.

AN ELEGANT GIFT BOOK.

Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s.

WITH COLOURED FRONTISPIECE, and TWENTY-NINE OTHER ILLUSTRATIONS.

"We delight in books of this character. Scripture and Nature are set side by side; and the young are made to see the one illustrated by the other. Fine type makes these pages pleasant to the eye of the old, and simple language adapts it to the taste of the young."
Sword and Trowel.

"Mr. Bowker knows much about the birds; and he makes his feathered favourites teach many a sweet lesson. By all means let the children have this prettily-written and prettily-illustrated work."
British Messenger.

"A beautiful little volume, printed in red and black, with numerous engravings. Will be found both interesting and instructive to the young folks who are fortunate enough to obtain a copy. One friend to whom we showed the book at once ordered three dozen copies for Sunday School Rewards. We hope that many others will follow his example."—Christian Treasury.

"This book . . . is illustrated in very good style, the coloured frontispiece of the swallow being specially good. The list includes seagulls, peacocks, cuckoos, sparrows, ravens, and others."—Bookseller.

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings; and may be ordered of any Bookseller.

YOUNG CONVERTS;

OR, BEGINNERS IN ZION'S WAYS.

By ROBERT BOYD, D.D.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth, 1s. 6d.

From "PREFACE" by D. L. MOODY.

"I have been continually asked by young converts where to get a book in which they might find advice that would be helpful to them. I had sent to me a copy of this volume, which seemed just the thing needed. I have known the Author for many years as a dear father in Israel. I have read his work carefully; and recommend it to all young Christians for prayerful meditation."

"THY FIRST LOVE."

CHRIST'S MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH AT EPHESUS.

By Rev. J. CULROSS, D.D., M.A.

With Chromo-lithographic Frontispiece.

Cheap Edition, Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, 2s. 6d.

"The glow, as from a golden sunset, which the imagination sheds over his style, gives it a great charm."—The British Messenger.

"We do not know higher-toned or healthier devotional literature, of the evangelical type, than is represented by this and Dr. Culross' previous works. This work is instructive, suggestive, full of spiritual force, and at the same time strong and manly; these latter adjectives we find it impossible to use concerning many of the devotional books produced in our day. Because we may honestly use them in this case, we heartily commend this book for the refreshment of our busy teachers."
The Sunday School Chronicle.

QUEEN VICTORIA, or THE POPE?

By the REV. J. A. WYLIE, LL.D.,

Author of "The History of Protestantism," &c., &c.

ABRIDGED EDITION of 100,000 Copies. Price Threepence, or 2s. 8d. per Dozen.

Special Terms for Large Quantities, for Distribution, on Application.

"It seems exceedingly likely that ere long we shall have to engage in a very serious conflict with the growing power of the Papacy in this land of religious liberty. Two things will prepare us for a victorious issue: first, a great increase of spiritual religion; second, the spread of information as to the real present character and designs of the emissaries of Rome. We have no sympathy with those who raise the cry of religious bigotry at every attempt to make known the evil plots and doings of the Jesuits and their allies. Let us get at the facts of the case, and then make them as widely known as possible, above all things acting and speaking in the spirit of Christ.

"In the little volume before us, Dr. Wylie—honoured veteran in the cause—traces the steps whereby the Papal party have been steadily succeeding in removing the ramparts erected by our Protestant forefathers around our religious rights and liberties. He brings forward evidence the most convincing, to prove that the spirit and aim of the Romish Church remain what they were in the days of persecution and martyrdom, and closes with earnest words of warning and appeal.

"This book is cheap enough for all to purchase. Get it; read it; lend it; give it away; talk about it."—Divine Life.

CHRIST LIFTED UP.

By Rev. ROBERT GILCHRIST.

Special Cheap Edition, Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.

Superior Edition, Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

"An earnest, practical exhibition of the Gospel, under a variety of aspects. Christ lifted up on the cross, and at the Father's right hand, is the grand theme, and affords scope for setting forth a wide range of Gospel teaching. The writer does this in an interesting, while simple style.
British Messenger.

LIFTED UP:

LIFE OF WALTER DOUGLAS.

With Frontispiece.

Tinted Covers, 6d.

Presentation Edition, Cloth Boards, 1s.

"A really wonderful narrative of a man, who, having lost a good worldly position through lack of the sustaining power of religion, sank lower and lower until he would seem to have reached the very brink of destruction. From it, in the mercy of God, he was, however, 'lifted up;' and made a 'chosen vessel' to proclaim the Gospel."
The Friend.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.
ADVANCED CASE of DECLINE—Miss A. RIVETT, of KIRTON, IPSWICH.

In the beginning of last year I first received a statement of this patient's case. Symptoms of Consumption had gradually manifested themselves. For several months her strength had been failing. The body had wasted all over. The ankles and one leg were swelling. No appetite. Phlegm difficult to raise. An eminent physician at Felixstow told her she was in a decline, and would go to a situation no more.

This case was one of little hope, humanly speaking, yet she recovered. Of course the improvement was very slow and gradual; and seeing that for months she could not be dressed, her restoration was certainly a marvel, and should be an encouragement to all.

Her mother writing me recently says:—"It is my duty to thank you for the wonderful good you have done my daughter, Alice Rivett. Before commencing your treatment she was brought very low. In fact she was not dressed for four months. The physician said, 'Nothing could be done to restore her.' I am so glad I sent to you last year. She has gone to a situation again. Make any use of this you please.—Mrs. CHAS. RIVETT, Church-lane, KIRTON, near IPSWICH."

A VISIT TO MR. DENHAM SMITH.

Again I have seen Mr. Denham Smith. He asked me to give his love to his many friends; and some of those who have not the privilege I enjoyed may like in part to share it. I called this (Sunday) afternoon, and, being shown upstairs, found him reclining on a sofa by the open window, looking out upon the park. His wife, his eldest son, and one of his married daughters were there. He was dressed as of old, and had the old cheerful manner, quite different from what he was when I saw him last December.

Almost at once he began to tell me of his joy in knowing that from the daisy in the garden to the brightest orb in heaven all were ordained of God. But now his face was turned again this way (pointing to earth), instead of that way (pointing to heaven). God had called him back awhile. The wrench of parting from loved ones had been terrible, and now it seemed hard to be called back; but the servant who loves his Lord does not choose what he likes, but what his Master wishes, and so he was content. Paul knew this when, after having been stoned, God sent him back to suffer stripes and imprisonment.

I asked him if he had had during his illness, and when near death, any heavenly visions. He replied, "Oh, dear, yes. I cannot tell whether it was in vision, or dream, or a real visit. But I thought the Lord came to me in person. He was so bright and beautiful; you cannot imagine it. He said to me, 'Now is there anything troubling you—your sins, your coldness, your lack of service, your pride? Come along with Me into Psalm lxix. and Psalm xxii. You cannot come all the way, but come as far as you can. And observe there is no standing there. It is all sinking. I sank in the deep mire for you. Now touch Me and you will find all you need.' Then I saw that He had taken all my sin away. I cannot describe to you how beautiful it was, or how that vision impressed me."

Other members of his family entered the room; his grandchildren came in, too, and affectionately grouped themselves round his knees. It was a most delightful family picture. He gave the children such a touching little address. "Ah Claude," he said, "you are only six years old now, but if you live to be as old as I am, how changed everything will be. I shall be gone, and grandmother gone, and your father gone, your mother gone, and your aunt too. You will want something to sustain you through all that; and nothing but the fear of the Lord can carry you through. When I was a child like you I was always singing, and they told my mother she ought to stop me, but she always answered, 'Ah, life will take it out of him soon enough.' Tell me, dear Eileen (he continued), who died for you." "Jesus did." "And if you die, where will you go?" "I shall go to God."

"Would it not be nice, dear Olive," he said to another little grandchild of nine years old, with long flossy hair hanging over her shoulders, "if we were to have a hymn; will you and little Eileen lead off, 'Oh, won't you love Jesus?'" Thereupon these two sweet silvery voices led off clear and true. At once Mr. Smith joined in a beautiful rich tenor, and then the others, for they all can sing. When that hymn was finished, little Eileen started, "There is a land, a sunny land," in which all joined. Then he prayed for us all.

After that he said he should like to have a little walk, so he took his son Gilbart's arm and mine and walked about the room a little. Then he wished us all "Good night," having first said, "Jehovah, the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, bless you all, now and for ever more."

It seemed to me that this dying gladiator has been sent back from the threshold of paradise, just to speak words like these, full of simple pathos and power—though spoken in much bodily weakness; and thus to witness once more for a little while to the power of Christ to sustain those who trust Him when passing through the valley of the shadow (but it is only the shadow) of death.

A SHAKING IN CHINA.

A remarkable letter from Miss E. J. Burroughes, and Miss P. L. Stewart (now Mrs. C. T. Studd) appeared in the June issue of China's Millions. We make some extracts:—

Surely if we knew our God, we should do exploits and be strong. Here we feel like Elihu, "God is great, and we know Him not." But, hallelujah, we have laid hold of Him, and He is revealing his majesty and power and might. He is letting us hear the voice which breaketh the cedars, which can divide the flames of fire, which is able to shake the wilderness. First in our own hearts He has broken away much that was deeply rooted: He is working in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure. He has given us a thorough, downright shaking, and aroused us up not to be content with the faith as a grain of mustard seed, even though it can remove mountains. Out here He has indeed made the devil real to us, sin real to us, hell real to us, eternity real to us; and very real that these people are dead, and that nothing but the voice of the God of Glory thundering forth can awake them.

The Chinese seem to feel that there must be a mighty spirit working through us, and that our God is a living God. We do feel that God, with his great "whosoever" heart of love, cannot be satisfied with the salvation of these souls by two and threes. We have entered into a covenant with the Lord our God to seek Him with all our heart, and with all our soul, for the salvation of souls. He has given us a solemn heart-searching through Paul's testimony, "Serving the Lord with many tears," and warning everyone night and day with tears.

Putting forth our utmost effort, it is, at the best, comparatively speaking, but few women we can visit. Feeling the conviction that we were not "blowing the trumpet" in the ears of ALL the people, we asked the Lord what He meant us to do, and determined to go forward at all cost. The result was the Lord showed us He meant us to go out, and compel them to hear. So, accordingly, through the goodwill of our landlady, who believes in the doctrine, we went out to a large open space not far from this house, which belongs to her, and had a meeting, and the Lord did manifestly set his seal upon it. The people were as if spell-bound.

The Lord gave us some tokens for good that first open-air meeting; He laid hold of the people by the power of the Holy Ghost. There was no disturbance whatever—on the contrary, perfect quiet and attention; women joined us, too, and little children. Now we have been out three Sundays, and, praise the Lord! He has given us "victory" from the very first; He showed his approval the first effort we made in his name, and we are proving there is no limit to what the Lord can and will do if we are willing to follow Him and to obey. With the command He always gives the strength and power.

Some who never ventured before, both of men and women, have come since to our indoor worship; and we believe that our going out and letting them see what our worship is like, will win their confidence. We are proving that the sight of our earnestness draws hearts to believe in the reality of salvation—that it must mean something—and breaks away, too, much of the prejudice they have against us.

The victories He gave us urged us on to still greater faith; so we got the Christians to meet with us every evening, for ten evenings, to wait upon God for still greater blessing in our own souls and in the work. We have Hoh-chau's hundreds to listen, but we must have Hoh-chau's thousands. They listen with intense interest and eagerness, and stand the meetings out, no matter how long. Before, only our teachers and some of the Christians have spoken and given their testimonies—two or three in real style too! Between each all join in singing choruses; we are constantly learning new ones. At the first two meetings we had only thirteen women at the most. Last Sunday we truly did feel small when we saw the grand result the Lord gave to the feeble effort we had made the previous week in waiting on Him a short time each day, by bringing out forty women (some of the better class) to join us, and doubling the number of men.

It was grand to hear Miss Reuter proclaim, Ye must repent! She said to the women, "Why is it, when you come to see me, you have only a long tale of woe—no happiness, no peace, &c. It is just because of the sin in your heart, and because you do not know this Jesus." It wrung one's heart to hear the moan of sorrow that went through the place where the women stood. As she told them the true reason why we were here—only because we love them, and to tell them of salvation—a sight was seen which could scarcely be credited—tears in the eyes of one of Hoh-chau's largest shopkeepers, one who has mocked us in his shop. Now, glory to God, he has a tract on the wall of his shop!

It is simply lovely to see the delight of the people, and their astonishment, too, at our little band of children standing, singing, and beating time with their hands—

Jesus can help little children
To sing and to pray, and not dare commit sin, &c.

What strikes us so much is the almost breathless silence in the crowd during the whole meeting.

Hope thou in God! We have been having holiness meetings with the Christians, and not shrinking from going straight at their lives. The result has been the men and women are giving up their tobacco-pipes, the women their jewellery, and some of them who have only sham small feet are unbinding them. "It is not by might, nor by power, but by My Spirit, saith the Lord."

THE STEPNEY CRECHE.

Those many friends among our readers who take an interest in this Institution will learn with deep regret that for some weeks past Mrs. Hilton has been laid aside, in consequence of the shock to her system through the running away of a horse with a cab in which she was riding. She has now taken a turn for the better, but is not yet able to leave her room. As Mrs. Hilton has efficient help in every department of the Institution, the children have been well cared for; but her absence from the oversight has told considerably on the receipt of the much-needed funds. We trust that our readers who have been helpers in this good work for many years will show their practical sympathy with Mrs. Hilton in this time of her trial.

The Training Home at Feltham, which is in many respects so great a boon to the children, was lately reopened. The cost of maintaining it is a large item, and it would be an unspeakable loss to the Institution if it had again to be closed for want of the necessary support. A sale of work on behalf of the Crèche and Homes will be held at the Friends' Mission Hall, near Stepney-causeway, Commercial-road, E., on July 3—5.

ROMAN CATHOLICS AND THE BIBLE.—The Dublin correspondent of The Rock writes:—A well-known Roman Catholic publisher is advertising a large type New Testament, at a cost of one shilling and sixpence. This is a sign of the times! I have never seen one so advertised heretofore. It is, indeed, as remarkable in its way as the sale of Father McGlynn's rebellious speech against the Pope, which is advertised in all directions.

PERSECUTION IN SWITZERLAND.

THE Salvation Army soldiers are having a bad time in Switzerland. Mrs. Booth-Clibborn writes:—

In Bâle, where hitherto comparative immunity from persecution has been enjoyed, the people have been beaten and stoned in the streets, and one of the officers has been sent to prison. Another has been fined fifty francs for holding a tea-meeting, with three weeks' imprisonment in default. At Oberutzwil an officer is in prison for disobeying an illegal decree forbidding all meetings except between seven and eight when none can come. Public announcements are put out forbidding the Salvationists to visit from house to house, and if they do visit, it is to be made known to the police.

At Neiderbipp there are fourteen saved and testifying converts. At Monchaldorf there is also a good band of converts, and no disturbance. We open at Liestal this week. Petitions are signed at Bäle and Zurich to shut us out. We are acting with great care, doing nothing without proper advice. We are full of faith that we shall win.

At Herisan, during a soldiers' meeting at a soldier's house, a policeman came and ordered them to disperse. They refused, saying they had invited a few friends to sing and pray; it was not a public meeting. The policeman went and fetched the Chief of Police, who, arriving out of breath, began to read the law; but, in his excitement, read some law about the railways, which caused an involuntary peal of laughter! They appeared yesterday; judgment was postponed.

Other officers were summoned for singing a hymn in their lodging. The police made a false report, declaring that they were in the hall, holding a meeting and making a noise, while at the same time the key of the hall was in the hands of the authorities. The greater part of the day the policemen are round the house to watch that nobody sings.

There is an excellent spirit between soldiers and friends; the latter give us little gifts, knowing we can take no collection.

We have just had a splendid "open-air" in the woods, some way from Zurich; a woman followed the officers home, and is now crying to God for mercy.

One of the Zurich papers, however, disapproving these persecutions, which pursue our people even to their private meetings, says, "It is like shooting hares with cannon." On one occasion one of the persecutors came into the meeting dressed up in a bear-skin, and sat the whole time close to the officer who was leading the meeting. The latter went on courageously without taking the slightest notice of him. This officer, a simple servant girl, has been the means of leading hundreds of her country people to the Saviour; thirty of these are now officers.

Paris, June 22.

OMNIBUS MEN.—On the evening of Friday, June 15, about two hundred omnibus men of the south-west district were entertained at the Mission Hall, Lackland-terrace, King's-road, Chelsea, to a substantial supper, by Lord and Lady Compton. After supper the men adjourned to the large hall, when various friends addressed them.

A CONVERTED ATHEIST'S TESTIMONY.—Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh, editor of The Anti-Infidel, has received the following from one who has recently laid hold of the truth:—"Just a line to thank you, and to say that if my utter condemnation of Atheism, with its hopelessness, its dreariness, and its cruelty, is worth anything to you, here is my verdict: Atheism degrades a man because it perverts his reason. Atheism takes all the meaning out of life, and throws a hopeless gloom over the grave. Atheism deprives a man of his power to do good. It narrows and corrupts his mind, and renders his life barren and fruitless. Atheism spells ruin."

STOCKWELL ORPHANAGE.

ON Tuesday week the annual festival of this Institution was also made the occasion for celebrating its president's birthday—he is now 54. In spite of leaden clouds, an entire absence of sunshine, the prevalence of a biting east wind, the attendance appeared to be quite up to the usual average. The Orphanage was thrown open to inspection, and throughout the afternoon and evening a constant stream of visitors looked through the various houses. The grounds looked gay with floral, flag, and illuminated lamp decorations, while the little inmates, boys and girls, neat and trim in appearance, were either scattered amongst the crowd amusing themselves, or formed into procession, that a fair idea might be formed of their numbers.

Mr. Spurgeon paid a visit in the afternoon, and, of course, met with a birthday reception. In view of his continued weakness, he wisely refrained from any open-air attempt at speaking, but in advance of the evening gathering a meeting was improvised in the Drill Hall, at which he took the opportunity of making a brief speech. He referred to the numerous remittances which had arrived by the morning's post as birthday offerings, and spoke hopefully of the progress and prospects of the Orphanage. Incidentally he mentioned that the receipts of the past year had enabled them to set aside £2000 towards a reserve or capital fund which might form a sustenance to the Institution in years to come when he has been called hence. They also hoped to add another £5000 this year. At this meeting two American doctors of divinity, visiting London to attend the Missionary Conference, Drs. Ellis and Pierson, also offered congratulations and expressions of high regard to Mr. Spurgeon, who soon afterwards left for home.

In the evening quite a host of friends assembled on the lawn in front of the temporary and protected platform, and an open-air meeting was held. Mr. James Spurgeon mentioned the receipt of a letter explaining that Lord Kinnaird, who was to have presided, was ill in bed, and could not therefore attend, but enclosing £20 for the funds. In his lordship's absence, Mr. C. F. Allison, one of the Tabernacle deacons, presided. Rev. Burman Cassin, vicar of St. George's, Southwark, having opened with prayer, the chairman alluded to the admirable and unsectarian character of the Orphanage, through which a total of 1244 children had passed since its opening. During the year the children and their parents had collected £275, while the boys (under the direction of Mr. Charlesworth, the master), had, in various parts of the kingdom, obtained through their handbell playing, £1140. Rev. J. A. Spurgeon made an interesting statement, embodying some details of the expenditure. There are 500 resident orphans.

Rev. Dr. MacEwan counted it a pleasure and a privilege to join in honouring one to whom all honour was due. For the sake of the Gospel he preached and the truth he so courageously defended, they prayed he might be long spared to see many happy returns of the day. Dr. T. B. Stephenson, of the London Wesleyan Children's Home, added his personal experience of the value of the Orphanage, and he bade Mr. Spurgeon God-speed in the name of the Lord.

Introduced by Mr. Jas. Spurgeon with thanks for attending, Rev. J. S. Pratt, a neighbouring vicar, expressed his thankfulness to God for such a work, and his greatest possible reverence for Mr. Spurgeon. Speaking of the Orphanage report, he was especially struck with the sanctified common-sense it exemplified—a rare gift, particularly in religious work. Mr. Charles Spurgeon, of Greenwich, in a brief though vigorous address, paid a birthday tribute to his father, and rejoiced that, though so many great ones of the earth had recently fallen, yet such a champion had been still spared to them and the work. Rev. Newman Hall came also to express his respect, deep affection, profound reverence, and earnest prayers for the father of that Institution, the great teacher of the Tabernacle, and the evangeliser of the world. They honoured the memory of the late German Emperor for his quiet endurance through suffering, but they could not forget through how many years of periodical suffering their friend Mr. Spurgeon had patiently and perseveringly pursued his many labours. Several other promised speakers were present, but the weather continuing so cold, it was deemed prudent to close the meeting, and the audience accordingly dispersed to witness the illuminations and other objects provided for their entertainment.—Baptist.

THE NAVVY MISSION.

WITH over thirty Scripture-readers, employed in all parts of England, and in South Wales, the Navvy Mission Society is carrying on an excellent work.

The tenth annual report is a record of a most encouraging character, and the outlook is very promising. With the present year five missionaries were added to the staff for work in connection with the Manchester Ship Canal. These men are engaged entirely at the expense of Mr. T. A. Walker.

In the winter months the mission-room services are well attended. The Bible-classes are successful, and the schools and reading-rooms are highly appreciated. In the University vacations special missions were held by Oxford and Cambridge men. Without the assistance given by friends and supporters, the Society's machinery would not be nearly so effective as, under God, it really is. Constant help is rendered by ladies living near various stations, and neither time, exertion, nor money is spared by them in devotion to the cause of the navvies.

Forming a great nomadic tribe, numbering about 90,000, with women and children in a small proportion to the men, the navvy population is a community quite outside parochial and other religious provisions. The Mission has succeeded in getting at the hearts of many of the men, and now when new works are opened applications are sent by the navvies themselves for missionaries to minister to their spiritual needs.

Mrs. C. Garnett, of Ripon, the motive power of the cause, edits a "Quarterly Letter to Navvies." It is gratifying to know that all the agencies are in good working order. The Secretary of the Society is Rev. F. E. Rogers, Abbey Walk, Cambridge.

SACRED SONGS AND SOLOS.—A correspondent of The Record, in a lengthy account of a visit to the North Sea fishermen, writes:—I may here remark the wonderful fondness these men display for Sankey's hymns. The Director of the Mission, Mr. Mather, told me before leaving that a smacksman is seldom to be found without his Sankey's hymn-book. These hymns are constantly in the men's mouths. The man at the wheel never seems happier than when singing one of them at the top of his voice. The men seem to find it impossible to be together for even a few minutes without one of them starting singing, and being immediately joined by his companions. The men know the numbers of the hymns by heart, and it appears to be customary at their meetings for anyone in the company, who happens to be the first to speak, to call for any particular hymn. "Brothers, let's have two-fifty-five," says one: and the hymn named is found and sung. "Three-sixty-two," shouts another, without looking at his book; and the invitation is readily responded to.

The Church Army have in constant use in all parts of the country fifteen tents; twelve more are needed at once. Rev. W. CARLILE, hon. sec. (128, Edgware-road, London, W.), appeals to persons who have tents lying idle to give the loan of them for a few months free. A new tent, to hold about 300 persons, which would cost some £20, is also much needed.

MRS. WHATELY'S CAIRO MISSION.

On Monday afternoon last, at Morley Hall, Regent-street, Miss M. L. Whately and Mrs. Shakoor gave an account of the schools and medical mission work at Cairo, as well as of the operation of other religious agencies in Egypt. The Earl of Meath occupied the chair. From first to last, the story was one of increasing prosperity, and it was made abundantly clear that the Mission is capable of wide extension. In some opening remarks, the Chairman said that while travelling in the East lately with Lady Meath he saw something of Miss Whately's work which he regarded as of a really genuine and praiseworthy character.

Miss Whately's address was full of interest. The work is chiefly among the large Mohammedan section of the population. She said:—Twenty-six years ago, when I first visited Egypt, there was scarcely any educational provision for the boys, and none at all for the girls. The lower classes of the people are now, what they were then, very ignorant, and live in squalor and wretchedness. The lot of the women is a sad one: wherever there are Mohammedans there are slaves, and among the women in that portion of the community there is little or no happiness. I once heard a woman say, "When we are dead we turn to dust, and are finished—finished—finished." The importance of the school as a nursery cannot be exaggerated. The schoolmaster has declared that of the boys brought up under his tuition, not one had, so far as he could find, taken more than one wife. This shows a great breaking away from of the iniquities of Mohammedanism. The majority of the boys gladly learn English and French; the girls, who do not stay at school so long, are only taught to read and write well in the vernacular.

But firstly, secondly, and thirdly, all are instructed in the Scriptures. The children are very charming, but yet we cannot leave the poor women out of account. They come to the Medical Mission, and while they wait for treatment by Dr. Azoury, we read to them the Bible in Arabic. In the course of a year we have five or six thousand patients. Many Mohammedans know the truth, but are afraid to declare themselves; trodden down so long, the Egyptian people have but little courage left. Nevertheless, a great change is being effected in a quiet way. There are about 600 children in attendance at the schools, although the accommodation is only sufficient for about 400. The children are "almost sitting one upon another," and the crowding is prejudicial in more ways than one. Therefore, it has been decided to build a wing to the premises, so that the accommodation may be adequate for the still growing demands made upon the schools.

Mrs. Shakoor, who assists Miss Whately, gave particulars of work in the villages along the Nile. Every year a trip is made down the river and back again with the special object of visiting the Moslem hamlets. Although at first the natives were in some places shy, in others hostile, now there is on all hands a warm greeting for "the people with the Good Book"; the medical officer's services are greatly appreciated, and Bibles and portions of the Scriptures are eagerly sought after, and as diligently read by those who receive them.

Rev. Dr. Tien related some of the far-reaching results of the Mission. On boarding vessels at Gravesend, he had found Egyptian sailors quite intelligent in Holy Scripture; and inquiry has in some notable cases disclosed the fact that the men had become possessed of the Bible through the instrumentality of the English-Egyptian Mission.

Some words of sympathy were spoken by Rev. Dr. Flavel Cook. We learn that a Jesuit school is in course of erection at Cairo, and it is therefore important that Miss Whately's premises should be speedily extended, so that parents may have no excuse for placing their children under Roman Catholic influence. About £500 will be required to carry out the building project mentioned by Miss Whately. Subscriptions will be received by Miss Jourdan, 21, Westbourne Park-villas, W.

THE BLUE RIBBON IN ARMENIA.

Mr. William Noble recently received an interesting letter from Constantinople, relating to Blue Ribbon work in Armenia. "It is now more than a year and a half," says the writer, "since one of our coffee-room waiters—an Armenian, Dajed Artin—was converted and signed the pledge. His example was followed by other of his friends and acquaintances. Then he began to think about his home, people, and friends in the interior." This man had the Blue Ribbon card translated into Armenian, and sent some to his native town. Since then applications have been received from batches of 20 to 100 people. The movement is making its way in nine large towns. The work has been carried on with the object of making it a really spiritual one. Thus, much blessing has followed in every place.

The letter cites cases of men who kept drink shops, distilleries, &c., signing the pledge, becoming converted, and giving up their business. Their example is always followed by others. The men read their Bibles, and the press has spoken favourably of the movement. Judging by the contents of this letter, a good work seems to have opened up in Armenia.

EDUCATION OF THE BLIND.

On Saturday afternoon Mr. Mundella, M.P., opened the Fawcett Memorial Playgrounds at the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind at Upper Norwood. In the course of his speech, he referred to the great courage and zeal of Mr. Fawcett. The Normal College began with two students only sixteen years ago, at a time when, to use Mr. Fawcett's own words, only 1 per cent. of the blind in England were able to earn their own living and in the enjoyment of independence, as compared with 50 per cent. in America. With its 160 or 170 students at the present time, the institution owes its great prosperity to the coming of Dr. Campbell from the other side of the Atlantic. The College is now the best example in Europe of what a blind institution may be. The worst thing that can be done for a blind child is to regard it as a helpless invalid; that is the tendency of many mothers of blind children, and it is the trained blind person who can most successfully prove its fallacy. Other institutions are now beginning to learn that to mew up the children in blind asylums is, as Mr. Fawcett said, little better than putting them in prisons. The children must be taught to do all that people with sight can do, and to do it with courage and self-reliance. He hoped the Commission on the Blind would take care that no blind child should escape from tuition or be deprived of the advantages which an institution like the Normal College presents.

Sir Lyon Playfair remarked that among the intelligent blind there is none of that apathy and despair that prevails among the uneducated blind. The attention given to bodily health has enabled the inmates of the institution to make such remarkable mental progress.

REV. EMANUEL VANORDEN expects to sail for Brazil from Southampton on July 5. He requests that all communications for him be directed to Mr. M. H. Hodder, 27, Paternoster-row, E.C.

REV. H. P. BEACH, a missionary of the American Board at T'ungchau, China, has succeeded in an ingenious experiment to represent the Chinese spoken language by a system of clear and simple phonetic symbols, fashioned after the Pitman style. An educated foreigner can learn the system in from two to five hours and a bright Chinaman in ten lessons.—Christian Leader.

IN MEMORIAM.

THE EMPEROR FREDERICK.

A pause amid the rush of life,
  To hear the distant knell
That tells a warrior's soul has passed,
  The stern fight ended well;
The sword is lying by his side,
  The cross upon his breast;
He has borne, and he has battled,
  Now God has given him rest.

Oh, lips from which no murmur came,
  Unmoved and silent now!
And quiet heart that throbs no more;
  And calm, and peaceful brow!
Thought pictures all, that still death-room,
  Where mourners looked their last,
And, 'mid their sobs, thanked God for him,
  The fiery conflict past.

The victor from life's battlefield,
  Who has so nobly borne;
With patience bound upon his heart,
  And as a mantle worn;
His hand upon the helm of state,
  Which weaker hands laid down;
His post wherever duty called,
  The cross above the crown!

We thank thee, Father, for the strength
  With which thy soldier fought;
We thank thee for the precious gold
  By thy keen furnace wrought;
And for the rest Thou givest now,
  To thy beloved sleep,
Where the weariness is over,
  And the mourners cease to weep!

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Brinkworth, Wilts.—Tent services have been held in this village during the past three weeks conducted by Mr. John Elliot. Hundreds have been drawn together to hear the Gospel and many are praising God for the blessings they have received.

Messrs. Thompson and Nesbitt, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, have held for the past week Evangelistic services at Castledawson, co. Derry, and have been very much encouraged. Looking for many blessed results, they hope to go on for some weeks in the same place.

Mr. John McAuliffe, during June, has visited the valley of the Nidd, Yorkshire, and has also in connection with his Wayside Bible carriage, held meetings at Buxton, Hartington, and Monyash, and surrounding villages in Derbyshire. He asks prayers for this work of village evangelisation.

Mr. Charles Inglis.—A week's united mission has been conducted by Mr. Charles Inglis, at Hastings. Night by night the Y.M.C.A. Hall has been crowded by all classes eager to hear the Gospel. Many have been blessed, and sometimes, till a late hour, the workers have been pointing the anxious to the Lord Jesus. The afternoon Bible lectures were valued by the Christians from various denominations who attended them. Many a weary worker has been refreshed; timid saints have been encouraged.

Mr. B. Short, evangelist from New South Wales, has concluded a series of illustrated addresses at the Central Institute of the Y.W.C.A., 17, Old Cavendish-street, on "The Way of Salvation explained through the shadows of the tabernacle leading to Christ the Substance." The lectures were most interesting and helpful. Mr. Short will remain in England only a few months longer, and in desirous during the time of holding similar missions. His address is 5, Forest Drive, Leytonstone, E.

Arlington, Glos.—We have had a fortnight of special evangelistic services in the Baptist Chapel here, conducted by Rev. James Sprunt. The attendance each evening was very encouraging, and the forcible way in which the evangelist addressed his hearers, combined with his splendid talent as a singer, has produced an impression that will never cease. Many expressed anxiety concerning their spiritual welfare, and found peace, while numbers of believers have been strengthened in the faith. Altogether we feel it to have been a blessed season.

OUTLINES PREPARED BY HENRY THORNE.

Sunday Afternoon, July 8.

Zacchæus.—Luke xix. 1—10.

In Luke xv. we see the mercy of God pictured in graphic and beautiful parables; in this chapter, it is revealed in a human life. Zacchæus was a lost man (ver. 10), but Jesus sought and saved him. The brief record of his meeting with Jesus and of the glorious consequences that followed are contained in our lesson for to-day. We shall look at Zacchæus—

(1) In the World.—He was: (a) In a bad place.—Jericho might be classed with Nazareth for ill repute. It was destroyed by Joshua, and the only persons saved were Rahab and her family. Its name comes from a word which signifies the moon, and which is supposed to connect it with idolatrous worship. In attempting to rebuild it, Hiel laid the foundation in his firstborn, and set up the gates thereof in his youngest son, according to the Divine prediction (1 Kings xvi. 34). (b) In bad repute (vv. 7, 8).—An ill reputation is sometimes a stimulus to evil doing. Reputation is not character, but it is often a strong defence of character. (c) In a bad business.—"The Roman system of tax farming," says Dr. William Smith, "was essentially a vicious one." Illegal exactions were often enforced by the tax gatherers (Luke iii. 13). Matthew left the seat of custom when he heard the Master's call (Matt. ix. 9). (d) Surrounded by bad company.—The publicans were classed with the heathen (Matt. xviii. 17), with harlots (Matt. xxi. 31), and with sinners (Luke xv. 1). "Evil communications" produce evil results (2 Chron. xxxiii. 9; 1 Cor. xv. 31). (e) Exposed to the bad influence of wealth.—Riches were a hindrance to a Jewish ruler (Matt. xix. 22). They would be no less so to a publican. Some would have said he was in a good position, because of his wealth, but the man who possesses gold without grace is in a bad position (Jas. v. 1).

(2) In the Crowd.—There is a moral value sometimes in a crowd. The crowd on a race-course has an attractiveness by which hundreds are drawn down to death. Zacchæus may have been attracted to Jesus, as many others have been, by a crowd. Note here: (a) His curiosity (ver. 3).—Curiosity is often a means of grace. "Wonder," as Lord Bacon has said, "is the seed of knowledge." Children wonder at the stars, wonder leads to inquiry, and inquiry to a knowledge of astronomy. It is no wonder that men should wonder at Jesus, for it is written that "His name shall be called Wonderful" (Isa. ix. 6). (b) His hindrances.—"The press." The crowd prevented his seeing Jesus. Difficulties stand in the way of all men who wish to see the Saviour. These difficulties come sometimes from the crowds of worldliness (Eph. ii. 2), and sometimes from religious crowds (Matt. xxiii. 13). Zacchæus was little of stature, so he was hindered from seeing Jesus by something in himself. Nelson failed to see the signal at Copenhagen, because he put the telescope to his blind eye. He could not see because of a personal defect. So is it with the man who cannot see God ("Corrupt are they," Ps. liii. 1). (c) His earnestness.—He "sought to see Jesus." Difficulties with him were "things to be overcome." He who seeks as Zacchæus sought will soon find (Deut. iv. 29). Zacchæus "ran before." He sacrificed propriety. It would do one good to see some men run; but, stiff-limbed and stiff-hearted, they seem quite incapable of such an expression of earnestness.

(3) In the Tree.—Comp. Adam amongst the trees (Gen. iii. 8), and Nathanael under the figtree (John i. 48). While Zacchæus was in the tree he had: (a) A good purpose.—It was to get a view of Jesus. Adam got amongst the trees to hide from God; Zacchæus got into the tree to see the Son of God. (b) A wrong idea.—Probably thought Jesus could not see him. Must have been surprised when Jesus said "Come down." A sceptic took a seat in an obscure corner of a place of worship wishing not to be seen. A sermon was preached on the words, "Before that Philip called thee, when thou wast under the figtree, I saw thee." The sceptic, like Nathanael, was led to Jesus by that word. (c) A blessed surprise.—He saw Jesus, and heard his call. This call was personal, piercing, gracious, surprising, and assuring (1 Cor. i. 26—29).

(4) In the Street.—Zacchæus was doubtless saved in the open air (here is an encouragement for those who work for Christ in the streets, Luke xiv. 23), and he became an open-air preacher ("stood and said"). The words of Zacchæus were a splendid reply to the sneer of the Pharisees. Zacchæus was made a better man, and this was the best vindication of the Saviour's conduct (comp. 1 Peter ii. 12).

(5) In the House.—See here the house of a believer in Christ ("Son of Abraham"; comp. Gal. iii. 6, 7), a house in which Christ was a guest (John xiv. 23), and a house in which there was abounding joy ("joyfully," ver. 6). We need not be surprised that Jesus went to be the guest of a publican; it is, perhaps, more surprising that He went to be the guest of a Pharisee (Luke vii. 36). There is in this lesson encouragement for lost and guilty men (ver. 10). Jesus is "the Son of Man." This was his own chosen title. It occurs twenty-six times in the Gospel, and in each of these cases it was used by Christ Himself. The Son of Man is the Saviour of men.

He came to seek and save the lost—
Regardless of the awful cost,
He came to seek and save.

International S. S. Lesson.

Sunday Afternoon, July 8.

THE GOLDEN CALF.

Ex. xxxii. 15—26; Golden Text, 1 John v. 21.

Introduction.—Our last lesson told us of the Covenant Feast kept by the seventy elders, the two sons of Aaron, with Moses and his servant Joshua, half way up the Holy Mount. It closed with the call to Moses: "Come up to Me into the mount," &c. (Ex. xxiv. 12). To this both Moses and Joshua respond, by leaving the others, and ascending high up the hill—probably to the outer fringe of the awful cloud of glory that crowned it (Ex. xxiv. 13). Here they waited six days, and on the seventh, when "the sight of the glory of the Lord was like devouring fire on the top of the mount in the eyes of the children of Israel," Moses, called again of God "out of the midst of the cloud," "gat him up into the mount: and remained there face to face with God" forty days and forty nights. Some of the instructions then given to him are recorded in Ex. xxv.—xxxi. Lastly, God gave him the ten commandments, written on tables of stone. At the close of this marvellous interview, the Lord told Moses of his people's sin; whereupon Moses interceded with Him, and stayed his anger (xxxii. 7—14). "Then Moses turned, and went down from the mount." We must suppose that, through all these forty days, Joshua, the faithful, was waiting somewhere on the outskirt of the cloud, patiently watching for the coming of Moses.

History presents no contrast more striking or awful than the one seen here between Moses and Joshua, the faithful ones, the one enveloped in the blessed light of God, and the other waiting just on its verge, and the people below plunging so shamefully and recklessly into desperate sin. Compare, too, their contemptuous reference to their leader, as "this Moses" (ver. 1), with his own great-hearted intercession for them (vv. 11—13). (Apply this: How many think lightly of Christ, as they did of Moses; and yet He intercedes for them with a love greater than that of Moses!) Altogether, Moses was absent about seven weeks. There was very much in this to try their faith, e.g. (1) the length of his absence, (2) its mystery, (3) the terrible nature of the desert, (4) the watchful enemies (Amalekites and others) that surrounded, and (5) the appearance of devouring fire into which their leader had entered. Yet, there were many and great aids to their faith. (1) Memory told of God's wonders in Egypt and the Red Sea. Every step of their journey had witnessed to his goodness and power. (2) They had entered into a covenant with God and He with them, only six weeks or so ago. (3) The glory-cloud witnessed to his presence and majesty, while (4) the manna came night by night to tell of his faithfulness and care. Thus, "they forgat his works, and his wonders that He had shown them."

The Tables were the Work of God, &c. (ver. 16).—God never works an unnecessary miracle. The miraculous shaping of these tables by the hand of God, and the engraving of the commandments upon them by the finger of God, was done with a great and solemn purpose. We are taught by this that the law was altogether from God; that God is infinitely concerned in our obedience to it; that it is most precious; and that it has all authority. Pictures generally represent these tables as much larger than they could possible have been. They must have been small enough and light enough to have been easily carried a long distance.

And when Joshua heard the Noise.—Dean Stanley tells us that in all the latter part of the descent from Sinai, the plain at its base is shut out from sight; and that sounds would be heard from it long before the plain came into view.

And Moses' Anger waxed hot (ver. 19).—His was holy anger. If he had loved God and God's people less, he would have been less angry. If great evil does not make us burn with indignation, we are wanting in true love for God and for righteousness. The anger of Moses must have been very awful. How Aaron quails before it (ver. 22). There is no wrath so terrible as the wrath of love. Good parents are generally more grieved and angry at the wrongdoing of their children than others, and are sometimes more stern to punish. But both their anger and their sternness are rooted in love. They love righteousness, therefore they hate the child's sin; they love the child, therefore are they the more grieved and angry that he, the one so loved, should commit the sin. Love, too, makes them stern to correct.

He cast the Tables out of his Hands, and brake them (ver. 19).—A most momentous and significant act. The first use to which men put God's law and covenant, so solemnly given, accepted, and ratified, only seven weeks before, was to break it. Only those who have a new heart, with God's law "put within it," can keep it. This breaking of the tables told the people that they were condemned as those who had broken covenant with God. This, too, is our position till we enter into the new covenant in Christ Jesus. He took the Calf…and burnt it…and ground it to Powder, &c. (ver. 20).—It was probably made of wood, overlaid with plates of gold; so it could be both "burnt" and "ground." "Gold and silver, subjected for a short time to a white heat, readily calcine, and are then easily crushed to a fine powder." Moses did all this unhindered, though he had 600,000 men against him. Note the power of one good man standing alone for God and righteousness! He who can stand alone with God against the world has mighty power. Made the Children of Israel drink of it.—They are made to swallow their god! Thus contempt is poured both on him and on them. Again, they are taught that sinners must "eat the fruit of their own doings," that "the backslider in heart shall be filled with his own ways."

Aaron's Excuses, 21—24.—They came to this: The people were bent on evil; I tried to stop them; they would not hear; so I had to give way. They probably threatened his life. Jewish tradition says, what is certainly not improbable, that the people slew Hur for opposing their will, and that this frightened Aaron into submission. But all excuses for evil are vain. It is no excuse to say you cannot do right because you are afraid. We cannot blame others if we consent to do evil because they threaten us. Their wrongdoing is worse than ours, yet must we bear the full weight of our own fault. God expects good men to do good at any cost.

Who is on the Lord's Side?—No one can escape this question. Everyone must answer it. We are always answering it by our actions. We either side with Satan and against God; or with God and against Satan. It is a tremendous question; let us see we answer it aright.

ILLUSTRATION.

The late Archbishop Trench tells in verse a story of the great Mohammedan conqueror of India, Mamoud, the image-breaker. He found an image, 15 ft. high, and was about to destroy it, when persons interposed, offering him an enormous ransom, if he would but spare this idol. He put their beseechings from him, and, answering that he would rather be known as the breaker than as the seller of idols, he struck the image with his mace. Others followed his example, till it was broken to pieces. As it broke, it poured forth such a wealth of diamonds, rubies, and other precious stones as far more than outweighed the ransom he had just refused. So, when our weak heart pleads that this or that which we fear to be wrong should be spared, let us remember that we shall must gain greater riches of peace and joy, by putting from us what is evil, or even what is doubtful.

MORAVIAN MISSIONS.—On Wednesday, last week, a valedictory service was held on board the barque Harmony in London Docks, prior to her starting for Labrador with stores for the six mission stations there. It is 119 years since the first ship left on this dutiful errand, and the voyage has always been made in safety. Addresses were delivered by Rev. Dr. Pierson, Pastor Rappard, and Mr. Isaac Sharp.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Bishop of Oxford, owing to ill health, has resigned the bishopric.

Dr. F. H. Thicknesse, archdeacon of Northampton, has been appointed Suffragan Bishop of the diocese of Peterborough, with the title of Bishop of Leicester.

A few Sundays ago Rev. A. H. Kelk, of the London Jews' Society, baptized a young Jew in Jerusalem. Rev. W. Becker, missionary at Breslau, on April 8, baptized a Jew from Galicia, and on May 2, two Jewesses, sisters, of Silesia.

The Bishop of Peterborough, in the course of his visitation charge at Kettering, last week, urged the importance of systematic giving. He heartily wished the Church could do without bazaars and fancy fairs, which are most objectionable contrivances for raising money.

A Bill to abolish the Bishop's Veto was read a first time in the House of Commons on Tuesday last. The Bill has been introduced by Col. Sandys, M.P., at the instance of the Church Association. A strong feeling against the abuse of the Veto by the bishops has been created by the action of the Bishop of London in the Reredos case.

Mr. S. C. Edwards has been assigned by the Church Missionary Society as a medical missionary to the Niger Mission, in West Africa, and will proceed thither in October; Revs. J. E. Beverley and H. T. Robson, and Miss A. Wardlaw Ramsay will proceed to Eastern Equatorial Africa. The two latter sail from England on Wednesday next.

Ritualism makes headway in England. The English Church Union has made a gain of 1272 members during the past year; and the total on the roll is now 23,289. At its recent anniversary an address was adopted, asking the bishops who will assemble at the Lambeth Conference to take steps to secure in all churches weekly and holy days' communion, the observance of fasting days, and that clergymen may not be imprisoned for ritual offences.

The Bishop of Rupert's Land preached in St. Mary's, Cambridge, on Sunday week. His sermon began with a sketch of the amazing material progress of British North-West America during the twenty-two years of his own episcopate, from the time when there was not a village in his vast original diocese until now, when it is broken up into many dioceses, and Winnipeg is a city not much smaller than Cambridge, and with a University of its own, containing four colleges.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The Adult School system is taking some hold in Australia. Melbourne school advances, and there is unlimited room for extension. The school is suited to bridge over the gulf between working men and the church.

A new meeting-house has been built and opened at Woonton, Herefordshire. A tea-meeting, at which 230 were present, began the inauguration. Many could not find room in the public meeting that followed. John T. Southall, of Ross (whose family for 200 years has been associated with the place), presided, and several Friends gave historical and explanatory addresses.

Travelling with a certificate from his Monthly Meeting, William Hobson, of Cardiff, has been engaged in public Gospel meetings and visiting families in Devon and Cornwall Quarterly Meeting. The last three Sundays have been thus occupied in Plymouth, St. Austell, and Exeter; and at Liskeard, Redruth, Falmouth, Truro, and Torquay meetings have been held. There seems a very open door for service in the two counties, and the love and hospitality of Friends are unbounded.

BAPTIST.

Mr. Spurgeon, we are glad to learn, is making gradua progress towards health, and was able to preach at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Sunday last. On giving out the notices, he said he hoped to conduct the usual prayer-meeting last Monday evening, and to deliver the usual address on Thursday evening.

The ministry of Rev. J. Wesley Bond, at Penge Baptist Chapel, appears to be much blessed, and the report of the past year's operations in connection with the church is of a very encouraging nature. The increase of members during Mr. Bond's pastorate has been so great that it has lately been found necessary to enlarge both the chapel and the schoolroom.

The Year Book of the church at Mare-street, Hackney, shows very encouraging progress. In his address the pastor, Rev. Evan Thomas, thankfully records many evidences of grace and blessing. The statistics show a net increase of ninety-three, making the membership 494. The scholars at the parent Sunday-school number 703, sixty five of whom are Church members, twenty-six having joined in 1887.

The anniversary of Rev. W. Dickins' settlement at Herne Bay has been celebrated. Five local preachers are attached to the mission stations at Hampton and Beltinge. The latter was commenced as an outdoor service last summer, and since then the workers have held cottage meetings. Recently a lady offered a piece of ground on which to erect a mission-room capable of holding a hundred people.

Rev. W. J. Mayers, of City-road Chapel, Bristol, has been invited to occupy the post of deputation secretary in connection with Dr. Barnardo's Homes. The acceptance of this post, while necessitating the relinquishment of a settled pastorate, would still afford Mr. Mayers opportunity for the constant exercise of his preaching gifts, as well as the occasional undertaking of evangelistic and other special mission work. Mr. Mayers has been the pastor of City-road Chapel for fourteen years, and we learn that he has the invitation of Dr. Barnardo under consideration.

A circular-letter, signed by the President, Vice-President, and Secretary of the Baptist Union has been issued to the ministers of Baptist Churches in various parts of the country, urging a "general visitation of churches in town and country, with a view to the quickening of spirituality, the increase of unity, the winning of young Christians to the avowal of discipleship to Christ, and the arousal to thought and decision of the apathetic and timorous."

CONGREGATIONAL.

All publications of the Congregational Union are now issued from the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C.

Rev. C. A. Berry, preaching for the London Missionary Society at Nottingham, said religion does not primarily deal with the surroundings of man; it deals with the man himself. But then it does deal with man's surroundings secondarily; when men take away all religion from their politics and their judicature they are simply handing them over to the devil.

By the will of the late Mr. David Spencer, of Coventry, a well-known philanthropist, the Congregational Church at Coventry gets a legacy of £1000; Cheshunt College and Mansfield College, Oxford, £500 each; technical education in Coventry £20,000; and, after a large legacy to a relative, the residue of the estate, estimated at about £70,000, goes to found almshouses.

There are signs of a coming revival in several parts of Wales. A few months ago the manifestations of a revival were very marked, among some of the Welsh Baptists of Glamorganshire, but at the yearly meetings of the Congregationalists at Aberavon, the week before last, scenes were witnessed, the like of which have not been seen in South Wales since the great revival of 1831-3.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The church at Brockley contemplate entering into more extensive mission work in Deptford.

Mr. J. T. Morton, of Caterham, who in so many ways is assisting the churches, offers a prize of £100 for the best essay on the Sabbath, to be competed for by ministers of the Irish Presbyterian Church.

The meetings of the Pan Presbyterian Conference commence on Wednesday next, in Exeter Hall, and continue till Thursday of the following week. One of the meetings will be a great missionary gathering.

The American Northern Presbyterian Assembly has passed a resolution recommending the sessions of Presbyterian Churches to refuse to admit into these churches persons who are engaged in the liquor business.

The report of the Jewish Mission of the Irish Presbyterian Church indicates steady progress. In Hamburg and Damascus and the Hauran the missionaries are doing a good work. In Syria, however, they have the steady opposition of the Turkish Government to encounter. But neither the "unspeakable Turk" nor the prejudiced Jew can stop the progress of that Word of God which is a power both to Jew and Greek. Mr. J. S. Crawford, who has studied in America and in Ireland, is about to be sent out as an additional Jewish missionary.

METHODIST.

Camborne, where the Wesleyan Conference assembles on July 24, has lately been the scene of the most remarkable revival that has occurred there during the last thirty years.

As a result of a special mission, conducted by Mr. Ware, at Wirksworth, over one hundred persons have professed conversion; numbers of believers have been quickened, and backsliders reclaimed.

Revs. Dr. Kilner and M. C. Osborn, besides Rev. E. E. Jenkins, have announced their intention to retire from the secretariat of the Wesleyan Missionary Society at the end of their term of office next year.

The Methodist Times of last week devotes over a page to a report of a "great forward movement" at Huddersfield. "There has been nothing less than a moral revolution in our church in that large and important town."

There is a proposal that the centenary of Charles Wesley's death, which recently passed almost unnoticed, should be celebrated by the erection of a Methodist Tabernacle in the City, with the money derivable from the sale of the mission house in Bishopsgate-street.

The Methodist Conference continued in session in Dublin during the whole of last week. Encouraging reports as to the progress of Christ's kingdom in the south and west of Ireland were presented. The general impression produced was that a brighter day is dawning upon Ireland.

There is no abatement, says a contemporary, in the success that has attended the Manchester Central Hall Mission. The summer evenings afford grand opportunities for outdoor effort, which is a prominent feature; and the band does good service in the gathering in of the outcast and indifferent.

Zealous Methodists are contemplating commencing missions in Sunderland and Birkenhead, similar to those in London, Manchester, Birmingham, &c. At both of these places there is a fine opening for evangelistic work, and the feeling prevails that a raid ought to be made forthwith on the irreligion of the populace.

In both the New Connexion and Primitive Methodist Conferences the subject of Methodist Union has occupied the thoughts of the brethren. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes remarking upon this, says:—"A disunited Methodism cannot stand against persecuting sacerdotalism on the one hand, and crushing indifferentism on the other. But united we can carry everything before us."

SALVATION ARMY.

Commissioner Tucker left for India on Friday morning last. Mrs. Booth-Tucker follows later on with the Indian party.

Very successful meetings have recently been held at Belfast. The "two days with God" are reported to have been times of wonderful power and blessing.

The Army has now between 2000 and 3000 members in the town of Christiania. A number of the daily papers are denouncing the Army as a public nuisance, but it grows and prospers in spite of these attacks.

Following the missionary meeting recently held in the City Temple, Dr. Parker invited Mrs. Booth to take the mid-day service there on Thursday last week. The edifice was nearly filled. Mrs. Booth, though suffering from great weakness, spoke very distinctly, and vigorously dealt with the question of saving the world.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. Chas. J. Townsend, rector of Tomhaggard, Kilturk, and Kilmore, co. Wexford.—Rev. Canon Trevor, D.D., rector of Beeford.—Rev. Thos. Gallworthy, one of the oldest ministers of the Congregational church; he entered the ministry in 1837.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

The Habitual Drunkards Act Amendment (No. 2) Bill has been read a third time, and passed.

"The Drunkeries" is a slangy term for the Glasgow Exhibition. Pity there should be any foundation for the title.

The British Medical Temperance Association has now 387 members and 120 associates, showing a steady increase.

The annual temperance festival at Newcastle-on-Tyne extended over three days, and was in all respects most successful.

FOREIGN.

In the New York Christian Home for Intemperate Men the beer drinkers have been found the most hopeless cases.

A Centennial Temperance Congress has been held in Sydney, at which all the Australian colonies were represented. Papers on the history of the temperance movement in New South Wales were read by prominent local temperance reformers, and the social and moral aspects of the temperance question have formed the subject of many debates and papers.

One of the Melbourne daily papers lately published a striking article showing the proportion the liquor trade bears to every other known industry. There are two publicans in Melbourne to every draper; three to every baker; four to every printer; five to every blacksmith; six to every bookseller; ten to every school; twenty to every produce dealer; 21 to every coffee-palace or temperance boarding-house; 24 to every miller; 45 to every bank; and 422 to every circulating library.

[As it is found that infidels and others send tracts to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most desirable that all books and papers received should be carefully read before being given away.]

THE LIGHT IS GROWING in Russia. The demand for the Scriptures is yearly increasing, the most liberal purchasers being found in the rank and file of the army. Five thousand portions of Scripture were distributed among the exiles of Siberia last year, and the work was greatly helped by the Russian officials. Interest in Bible circulation is becoming so general in Holland, Germany, Switzerland, and Denmark, that it is expected the Bible Society may shortly withdraw and leave the work to be done wholly by the local societies.

The Book World.

 Publishers will greatly oblige by always marking prices in books which they send us for review.*

GRACE TREVELYAN. By Mrs. Coote. Religious Tract Society. A gracefully written story, which will be appreciated by our young lady readers.

THE BIBLICAL ILLUSTRATOR. ST. MARK. By Rev. J. S. Exell, M.A. This is a remarkably complete repertory of anecdotes, similes, emblems, and illustrations, on the verses of Mark's Gospel, gathered from a large range of home and foreign literature. It is the result of much patient industry on the part of a scholar who has done not a little to make Scripture knowledge accessible to the general reader. (7s. 6d. J. Nisbet & Co.)

A GLIMPSE AT THE INDIAN MISSION FIELD AND LEPER ASYLUMS. By Wellesley C. Bailey. J. F. Shaw & Co. In 1886 the Committee of the Mission to Lepers in India sent Mr. Bailey on a tour of inquiry into the condition of the lepers of the Empire. In this book some of his observations and impressions are detailed. The facts are inexpressibly sad, but they enable us to form some idea of the progress of Christian effort among a class which should excite peculiar pity. We commend this book, which is suitably illustrated, to friends of mission work.

CHRISTIANITY IN THE DAILY CONDUCT OF LIFE. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. The contents of this book are decidedly disappointing. Ten or eleven discourses deal with Christian duties and graces; but in vain do we look for a Scriptural definition of Christian doctrine. While praising what he calls, "the corporate powers and relations" of Christianity, the anonymous writer depreciates those personal hopes and experiences with which the Psalms and Epistles abound. The author withholds his own name, and it would certainly be hard to give a distinctive name to his nebulous [illegible].

THE CHRISTIAN MIRACLES AND THE CONCLUSIONS OF SCIENCE. By Rev. W. D. Thomson, M.A. 2s. T. & T. Clark. This is one of the Handbooks for Bible-classes and private students, and sustains in every way the excellence of the series. The writer executes his task with a masterly grasp of his subject, and the reader will find it a clear, concise, and comprehensive summary of all that is important and useful in the discussion of miracles as the expression and evidence of the supernatural. The amount of valuable matter which is condensed into this small space is surprising.

PREPARATIONS FOR THE PULPIT. By the late Rev. Charles Stovel, edited by W. Willis, Q.C. E. Marlborough & Co. This volume will not only interest the friends of a departed saint, and Christians of one denomination: it will cheer and edify all believers, and give many a young minister, not only spiritual matter, but an excellent method in pulpit preparation. Well-known texts are treated in a most original, yet never fanciful style. "Admonitions and encouragements for the day of trial," a sermon for the day of humiliation in 1854, might most profitably be preached in this day of pride, fulness of bread, and abounding errors. A good gift-book for ministers.

SERMONS ON SYMBOLS. By Rev. H. B. Chapman. Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein, Lowry & Co. These short meditations on the principles, expressions, and development of the Christian life as symbolised by sacred art, are marked with thoughtfulness, freshness, and beauty. They are divided into four groups, illustrating respectively the axioms of Christian life; the inner life of the Christian; the result of the Christian life, and the teachers of the Christian life. The writer, in addition to being a lover of truth, is evidently a lover of art, and an earnest believer in the service it can render to the cause of religion when devoutly employed in the cause of religious truth.

BISHOP BUTLER'S THREE SERMONS UPON HUMAN NATURE; with Notes and Introduction, by Rev. Thomas B. Kilpatrick, B.D. 1s. 6d. T. & T. Clark, Edinburgh. This little volume is one of the series of useful handbooks for students and Bible-classes, brought out under the joint editorship of Dr. Marcus Dods and Dr. Alexander Whyte. Its aim is twofold—to explain and illustrate Butler's three sermons on man as a moral agent, and to give an impetus to ethical study. We fully appreciate the service thus rendered by the [illegible] and the wisdom of their method. The introduction is everything that could be wished for. The notes are excellent, and will materially aid and interest the class of students for whom the work is intended.

THE CHILD'S GUIDE TO TEMPERANCE. By Alice Price. 1s. 6d. National Temperance [illegible], 337, Strand. An admirable temperance primer in a catechetical form. The nature and effects of alcohol on various organs are described in a lucid and pointed style. The processes of fermentation and distillation are well given. One lesson, on the downfall of the ancient empires of Assyria, Babylon, Persia, Macedonia, and the States of Greece and Rome, largely in consequence of luxury and drinking habits, is particularly useful. Every temperance society should invest in this little book, and fortify their juvenile members by aid of it.

THE VOICE OF THE YEAR, by A. S. Lamb, of the Inner [illegible]. Nisbet & Co. A clear and thoughtful review of England's present attitude with regard to Romish error and Scriptural truth.

The latest additions to Messrs. W. B. Horner & Son's series of "Penny Stories for the People," are "Ebenezer Tovey's Victory," a thrilling and timely story of the Spanish Armada, by James J. Ellis; "Brought Back," by Fanny Eden; "Breakers Ahead: A Story of English Coast Life," by Sydney Watson; "Kitty: A Lancashire Story," by the Author of "Nell," &c.

HOMES of HOPE,

4, 5, & 6, REGENT SQUARE, GRAY'S-INN ROAD,
LONDON, W.C.

This Society was established in 1860 for the reception of the less degraded class of penitent young women.

Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted from their previous good character and position to mix with others.

Since the Homes have been established 2900 have been admitted; of this number 1050 belonged to the class of young mothers who were thus saved from falling into deeper and continued sin; 325 were rescued from surroundings of great temptation unfallen. In almost every case the mothers, and those admitted unfallen, have turned out well, and about 70 per cent. of the others.

The Committee are obliged to make an urgent appeal for contributions:—

. For the General Fund: the expenses of which amount to about £5 a day.
2. For the Child's Fund: a guinea or two to pay the nurses would in many cases rescue a mother and child. Five Shillings would pay for a child for a week.
3. For Law Expenses: in every case if it be possible the men are compelled to pay the sum allowed by law for the child's support.

The applications are so distressing and urgent, that every shilling has been spent. Contributions may be sent to the Editor of "The Christian."

REV. WILLIAM ARTHUR, M.A.,

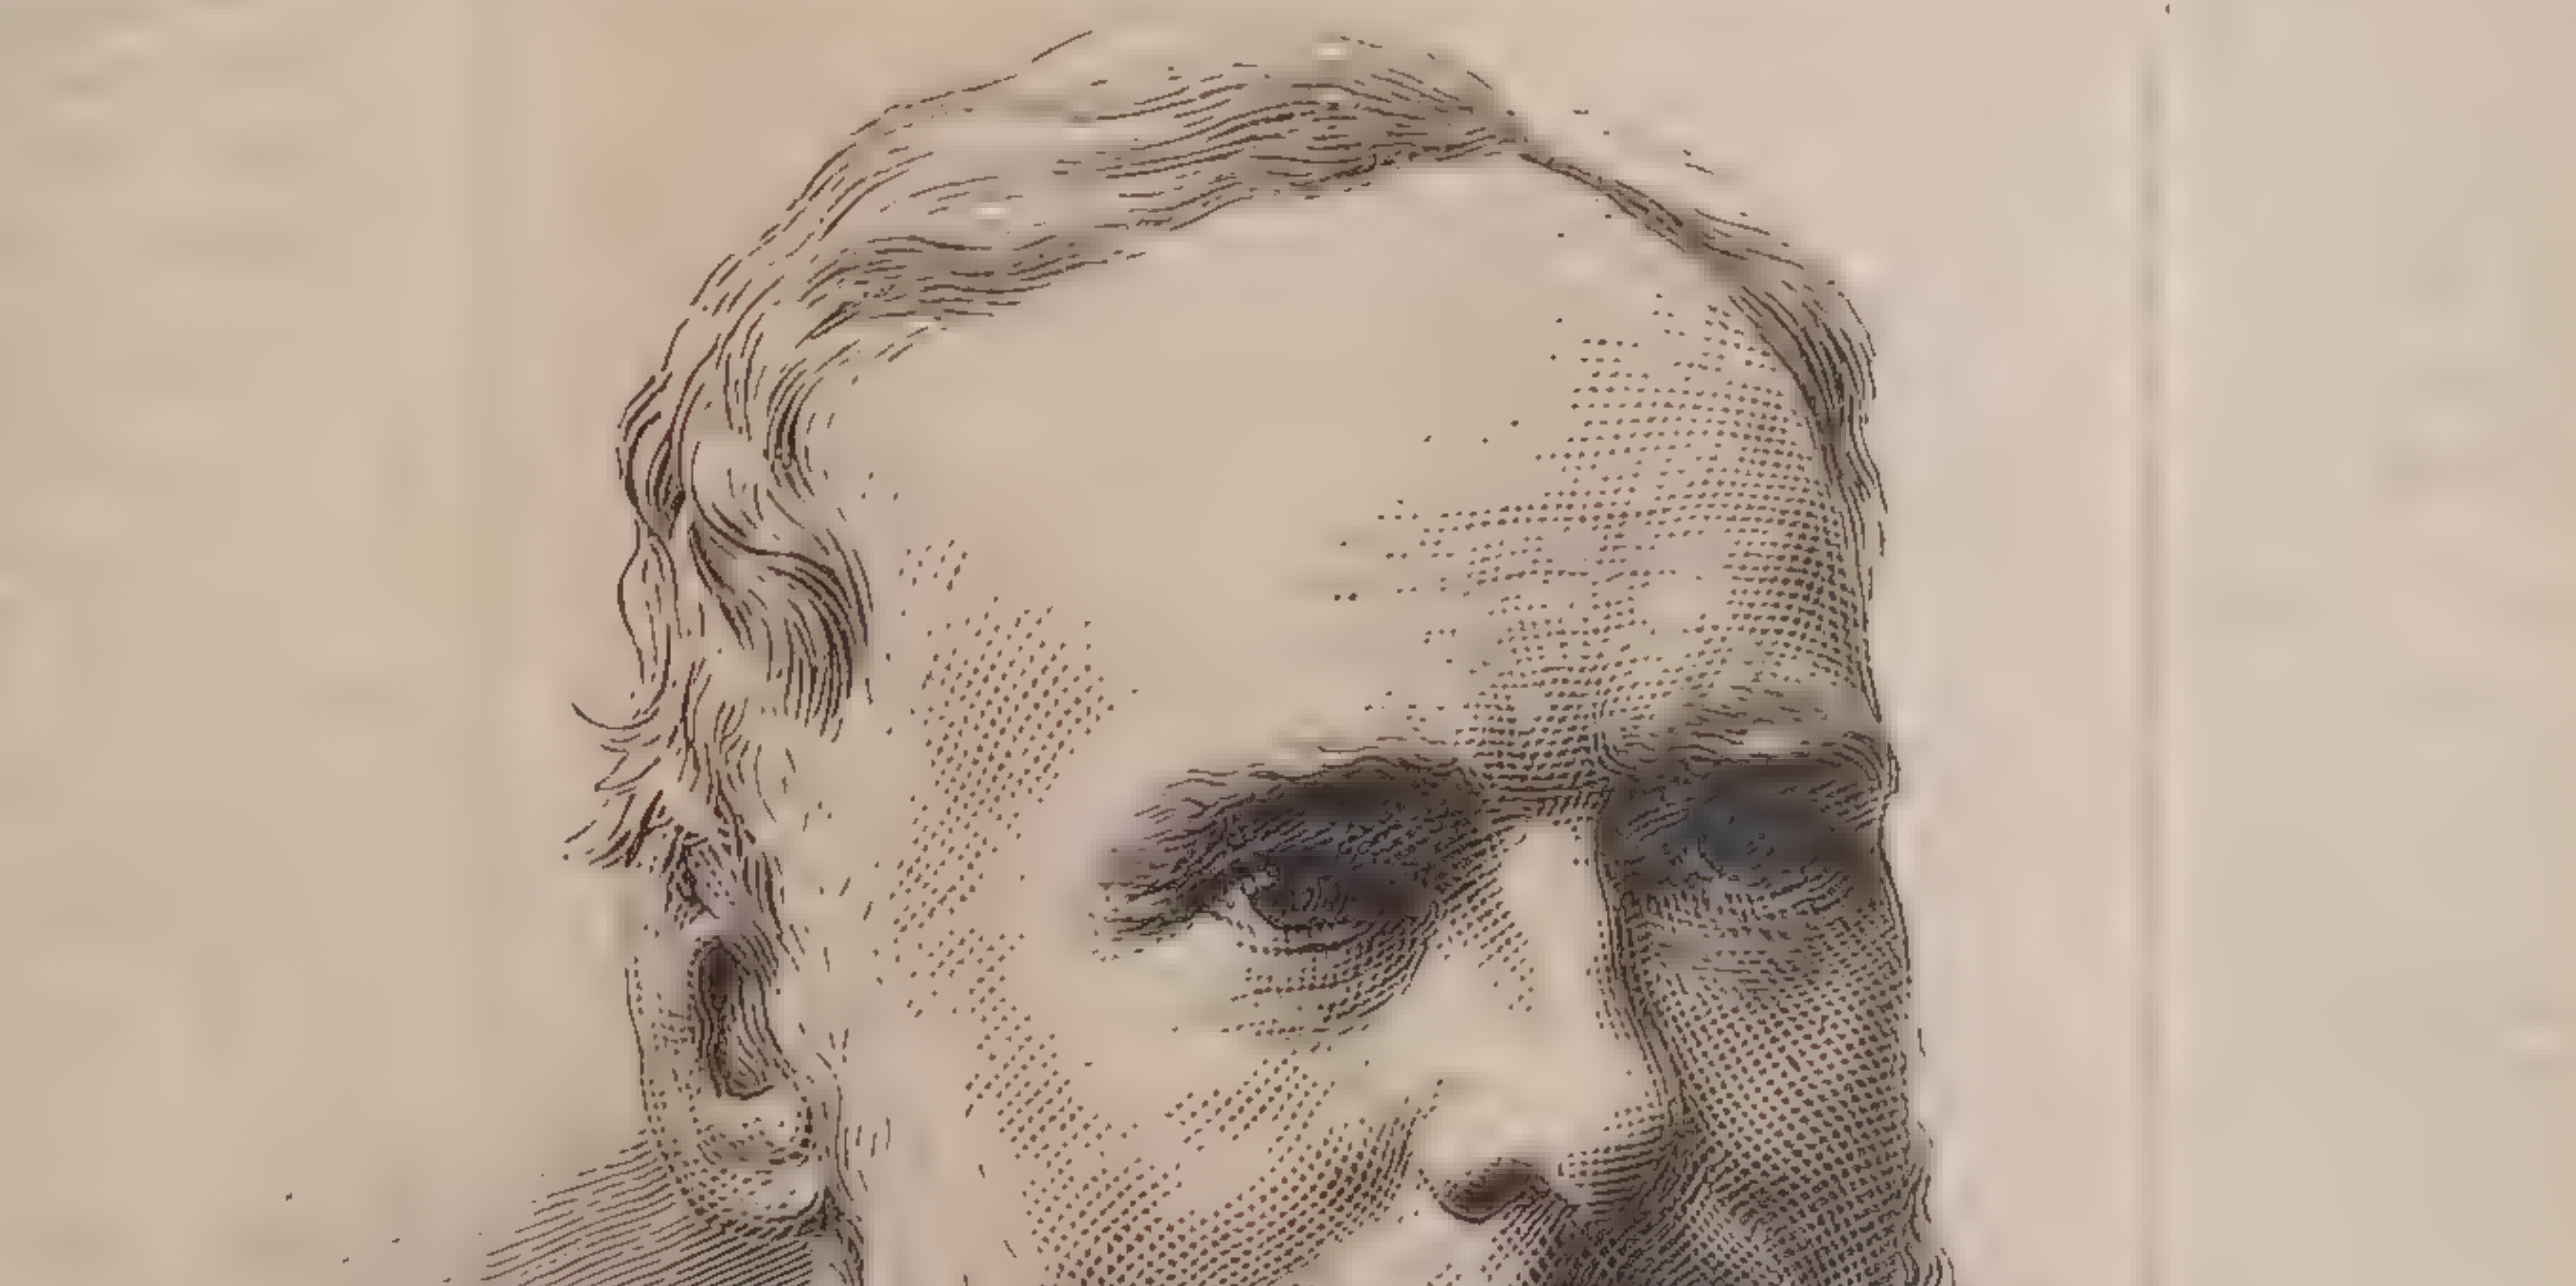
Author of "The Tongue of Fire," &c.

WHEN requesting permission, a few weeks ago, to retire from the full work of the Wesleyan Methodist ministry, Rev. W. Arthur referred to his Irish extraction. His life and labours are one more proof, if such were needed, of the capacity of the sister isle to produce men second to none, throughout the Empire, in natural gifts, and the power to apply them for the best interests of the nation.

WILLIAM ARTHUR was born at Kelso, county Antrim, in 1819. When twelve years old his parents, who were Presbyterians, removed to Westport, county Galway. He was designed for commercial life, and, with a view to this, was placed, when fourteen years of age, in the employ of a trading firm at Westport. But God had other work for him. He was brought under the influence of the Methodists, and attended one of their services, an event that turned his life into an entirely different channel. It is said that the congregation on this occasion consisted but of three persons, William Arthur being one of the three. The preacher was a plain, godly man named John Holmes, and his message was the power of God unto salvation to the subject of our sketch.

A resolve to associate himself with the Methodist people gave serious offence to his parents, but his heart was fixed; and before he was sixteen years old William Arthur had made his first attempt to preach. Those who heard these earliest efforts saw in them the promise of considerable pulpit power, and they predicted for the young preacher a career of eminence and usefulness. Mr. Arthur was received by the Irish Conference as a minister on probation in 1837, when he was not more than eighteen years old, and was sent for a course of training to the Theological Institution at Hoxton, London. Here he displayed great aptitude for learning, and gave indications of the mental characteristics by which he has since been distinguished. As a preacher his success was very marked. Speaking of him at this time the Governor of the Institution said:—

> We have a remarkable young Irishman here. God has given him great power to win souls, and he never preaches without seeing conversions.



(From Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry.)

Mr. Arthur did not in maturer years see the same results attending his ministry as in his younger days. The form of his usefulness had changed, but he ever looked back with intense longing upon the days when he had so much success in persuading sinners to be reconciled to God.

The Irish Conference having given its consent to Mr. Arthur's transfer to the work of foreign missions, he was appointed, at the termination of two years at Hoxton, to Goobee, in the Mysore district in India.

He was just twenty when he sailed, in company with three other young missionaries. He suffered so much during the voyage that fears were expressed lest the climate of India should prove unsuitable to his constitution—fears which in a short time were too sadly realised.

He entered upon his work with the enthusiasm of a true missionary, having made considerable progress in Canarese during the voyage. The method of study he adopted may be useful to those who anticipate similar work. He says:—

> My plan was, after having written an address and had it corrected by my teacher, to commit it to memory, and deliver it verbatim. These addresses were only three or four minutes long, but they increased to twenty or thirty minutes. After proceeding in this way for some time I ventured on an extemporaneous sentence or two. In this department practice gave greater freedom, so that I have spoken for ten or fifteen minutes when the inquiries of the people have called for information. I have also begun to pray extempore. The ability to do so much in the vernacular affords me great delight. But my heart is still imprisoned, and this limited communication with the people, which, as through the gratings of the prison window, it is now able to hold, only increases the anxiety for an unobstructed intercourse in which it might express all its feelings and desires respecting them.

There was in these words the promise of a brilliant missionary career. The young missionary was profoundly impressed with the needs of India, and with his own responsibility. He was deeply absorbed in his work, and had displayed great aptitude for it; he saw what ought to be done, and had just learned the way in which to do it, when failing health laid its despotic embargo upon his eager striving, and he was called to enter into an experience only known to large-souled men who have set their heart upon doing some glorious work—the experience that renunciation costs more than the costliest service.

Failing eyesight was followed by failure in his general health, and having tried the change to a colder clime without experiencing relief, the only alternative was to obey the orders of his medical advisers, and return to the shores of Great Britain. A letter written to a relative at this time shows how fully his work had taken possession of his heart. He says:—"You may think that it savours a little of affectation to say that I left the shores of India with the deepest regret. This, however, did not arise from any want of attachment to home or friends; but the people of my mission had become inexpressibly dear to me. I saw their woeful need of the Gospel, and longed to spend my life in making it known to them. Gladly would I have resigned every hope of seeing in this life a single relation, had the Lord only counted me worthy to preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ. But his will was otherwise."

Mr. Arthur's personal appearance in England as an advocate of missions evoked deep sympathy. His pale face and wasted form, his sight almost gone and protected with a green shade, added to the pathos and power of his appeals for the millions of India. So eloquent and convincing were these appeals, that they changed the current of English thought in regard to India, and awakened an interest in these missions such as had never been previously known.

Next to actual employment among the heathen is advocacy at home on their behalf, and in this congenial work Mr. Arthur was engaged for the next three years. It was during this period that he was called upon to experience another keen disappointment. When speaking at a meeting in Liverpool, carried away by the inspiration of his theme, he sustained an injury to the vocal organs, from which he has never recovered, though no expense or care has been spared. In the very ripeness of his powers his stewardship in the holy trust of preaching was to a large extent revoked. Keen though the disappointment was, it was enough for Mr. Arthur to know that infinite knowledge, faultless wisdom, and absolute love presided over his eventful life.

As his health required a warmer climate, he removed in 1846 to Boulogne, where he remained one year, spending the two following years in Paris. When his voice allowed him he preached in French with the same ease as he had done previously in Canarese, and large and influential congregations gathered to hear him. He was in Paris during the revolution of 1848, and passed through an experience which was often afterwards turned to good account. In 1849 he returned again to England, became a member of the Evangelical Alliance, and, in order to promote the cause of temperance by precept and example, he joined also the United Kingdom Alliance, and was elected a vice-president of the same. After two years spent in London circuits, Mr. Arthur was appointed one of the general secretaries of the Wesleyan Foreign Missionary Society—an appointment which was in perfect harmony with his tastes and aspirations.

In 1866 he was elected President of the Wesleyan Conference. He was then forty-seven, and was the youngest man, with one exception, who has ever filled that position. He discharged the laborious duties of the presidential year with commanding ability, his ordination charge to young ministers being one of the ablest and most memorable ever delivered.

After seventeen years spent at the Mission House, Mr. Arthur was given back for a short time to Irish Methodism, at their urgent entreaty, to take charge of the newly-established Methodist College at Belfast. He fulfilled the functions of principal and theological tutor for three years, during which time the college was well established in all its departments, and Mr. Arthur was at liberty to return to England.

He then became honorary secretary of the Missionary Society, which position he has retained to the present time. His sound judgment, mature experience, and remarkable power of intuition have rendered his counsels of great value to the Society, whose interests he delights to promote in every possible way.

Perhaps no Methodist preacher who has ever lived has been able to make so large an acquaintance with public men and public affairs as Mr. Arthur. Having travelled extensively in three continents he has acquired a familiarity with the actual conditions of political, ecclesiastical, and social life over a very wide area. He has been brought into contact with so many celebrated personages both at home and abroad that his position in this respect, so far as Wesleyan ministers are concerned, is absolutely unique. He has not allowed the work abroad to absorb his sympathies to the neglect of that at home. In all proposals to adapt the polity of Methodism to the changing conditions of society, he has taken the deepest interest, and has shown a characteristic breadth and largeness of sentiment. He possesses enterprise without rashness, and liberalism without extravagance. London Methodism owes much to his influence and foresight. When Sir Francis Lycett, feeling the responsibility of great wealth, consulted Mr. Arthur, he was counselled to do for his own church what Mr. Samuel Morley was doing for Congregationalism. This was the germ thought of the Metropolitan Chapel Building Fund, and led to Sir Francis Lycett's princely donation of £50,000 to it.

So prolific has been Mr. Arthur's pen that it would be difficult to mention all the books and pamphlets he has written. His first work, "The Mission to the Mysore," contains his personal experience as a missionary, and is a most interesting and valuable record. His principal biographical works are "The Successful Merchant: Sketches of the Life of Samuel Budgett," of which no less than eighty-four thousand of the English edition have been sold, and the "Life of Rev. Gideon Ouseley," a fascinating record of Irish Methodism. Mr. Arthur's best-known book is "The Tongue of Fire; or, The True Power of Christianity," an English classic which General Gordon recommended for frequent reading to the Manchester city missionaries. It has had an immense circulation, has been marvellously fruitful, and has been translated into Welsh, French, Italian, German, Tamil, Kafir, and Tongan. Several of Mr. Arthur's books deal with the important subject of Papal activity and aggression. "Italy in Transition" was the first of these; then came "The Modern Jove, a review of the collected speeches of Pio Nono." The largest of these books, and one that occupied several years of hard and close study, is called "The Pope, the Kings, and the People," a history of the movement to make the Pope governor of the world by a universal reconstruction of society. This book is the outcome of extensive observation and research, and during its production the author visited Rome, and obtained access to the Vatican library. Among the productions of more recent years is that masterly refutation of the modern atheistic hypothesis, entitled "The Difference between Physical and Moral Law," and a work in three parts, entitled "Religion without God, and God without Religion," a work which lays the whole Church of God under obligation to the venerated author.

Mr. Arthur has always taken a keen interest in all political and social questions. He is widely known in the United States, and sympathised ardently with the North throughout the terrible struggles of the Civil War. His articles in The London Quarterly Review were among the ablest contributions to that side of the question. He spoke strongly on the temperance question at one of the meetings of the Social Science Association, and declared himself in favour of Local Option. He took a prominent part in the agitation of 1885, respecting the dangers that surrounded the lives of young girls, and a few weeks ago he seconded a resolution in the First London District Meeting, condemning the Acts which have done so much to counteract the labours of missionary and philanthropic societies devoted to the elevation of the people of India.

Mr. Arthur recently sustained a great loss in the departure of his beloved wife, a lady whose fragrant and beautiful spirit and gentle and winning demeanour endeared her to all who knew her. She was in every sense worthy of the man whose name is to-day a household word in many lands, whose influence is felt in every quarter of the globe, and whose life will, we trust, be spared to the Church of Christ for many years to come.

SAILORS' REST, NAPLES.

The following extract from a letter by Mr. Stephen Burrowes tells graphically of the good work being done at Naples in connection with the opening of the new and larger rooms for the Sailors' Rest, where Mr. D. M. Cameron has been assisting at special meetings:—

"The religious awakening continues here among the seamen of H.M.S. Cruiser, and has spread among the merchant seamen. Last night, in the Mission-hall at Via Pace, a sailor from the Cruiser told how one of the wildest men in the ship knelt beside him one evening before retiring to rest and decided for the Lord. A merchant seaman who had been thoughtful for some time, and who carries a Bible and hymn-book in his ship, made an open profession at the meeting, and came to the Rest for further conversation."

The Mildmay Conference.

THE great Missionary Convention, which celebrated the centenary of modern missions, has fitly been succeeded by the Mildmay Conference, where three thousand Christian workers met to wait on God and to confer together as to progress in life, and walk, and work.

They came from all denominations. Thirty-two years ago, it was thought a perilous thing to ask Churchmen and Nonconformists to meet on one platform to speak one to another concerning the kingdom of God; and during the intervening years, the multiplied Conferences of this kind have met in some quarters with scant recognition, sometimes with cynical criticism. But old barriers are breaking down, and the increasing communion and communication of fellow-believers simply as such is evidenced by the sympathy expressed in denominational organs. Indeed, the current issue of The Nineteenth Century contains a warm eulogy of the Missionary Conference and a most valuable sketch of missionary enterprise, from the pen of Sir William Wilson Hunter, K.C.S.I., LL.D. The Nonconformist gave the Missionary Conference a special and extensive report, and in a very appreciative notice of the China Inland Mission it thus speaks of the Mildmay Conference Hall and its institutions:—

"Few strangers to the locality who might saunter along Mildmay Park-road and round by Newington Green would imagine that there is anywhere in that locality so remarkable a building as the Mildmay Conference Hall. It is hidden away behind rows of ordinary-looking houses, and is only approached by narrow avenues and openings that promise nothing imposing. Imposing enough, however, is it when you come to it —at least in dimensions. There is no architectural ornamentation about it, and possibly a feeling of disappointment may be experienced by anyone who, having heard of the fame of Mildmay, sees the building for the first time. But it was erected for work, and not for show, and never was structure better adapted for its purpose. This must strike anyone the moment the interior is reached. It is spacious, lofty, beautifully lighted and ventilated, and acoustically it is perfect. There is an air of almost severe simplicity about it, but also of quiet repose; and, if we may say so, of severe respectability, reminding one of a Friends' or Moravian Meeting House.

"The Mildmay audiences, too, are characteristic. They seem to represent the well-to-do, serene, and thoughtful aspect of the Christian community. Yet the serenity is not that of indifference, but—as the whole history of Mildmay proves—of quiet earnestness, springing from deep conviction and not to be turned from its purpose. A speaker may be sure that it will be sympathetic, provided he is within the lines of evangelical truth, but it will not be demonstrative. His words will be fruitful in something much better and more enduring than cheers; but the cheers he must not look for, unless his oratory be of that rare kind which takes an audience by storm and surprises them into self-forgetfulness."

From every point of view the gatherings last week at Mildmay were of more than common interest. To this the presence of so many foreign brethren contributed. A third of the morning and evening addresses were given by them, and were among the most striking utterances at the Conference. It may seem invidious, amongst so many excellent addresses, to particularise any, but we must mention that of Dr. Gordon as of peculiar interest and value. No doubt the estimate of a speech depends almost as much on the hearers as on the speaker; and an address which may seem of less importance to one proves to be a special means of grace to another. Our appreciation of what is spoken is to a great extent consequent upon our own condition and capacity.

The introductory words of the Chairman were well conceived, appropriate, edifying, and not too long. Perhaps it would have been well had this last quality been preserved throughout. We think that twenty minutes should be the normal limit, and half an hour the extreme and exceptional extent on these occasions. The missionary idea was in the ascendant throughout, and the fact was accentuated as never before, that the fulfilment of the Lord's behest, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature," is well within the reach of the present generation.

The rain interfered somewhat, though comparatively little, with the proceedings. The hall was full every time, and on the last evening an overflow-meeting was held in the tent. The restitution of the afternoon meetings for accounts of work, which were discontinued for a year or two, is a decided advantage, not only to the missions, but to the visitors, some of whom are more interested in the works described than in the expository or hortatory addresses.

A new feature has been introduced this year, in a third speaker at the evening meeting, whose function it is to give some closing words. This requires tact and judgment. To put a point on what has been previously said, and not to divert attention, or introduce a new theme, needs some degree of self-effacement, and an ability to gather the thoughts of others into a burning focus. No part of the proceedings requires more grasp of the subject, or more delicacy of touch. Time is necessary to its success. A man may speak like an angel, but without effect, if his audience has already received as much as it can bear. Water cannot be poured into a full bottle.

The conveners, and all who are interested in the spread of the Gospel, have every reason to be gratified and thankful for the spirit and influence at the thirty-third Barnet-Mildmay Conference; the coming year will, we doubt not, in many beneficent ways, make manifest its results.

☞ It is very painful to us to state that Mrs. Bailhache, who has given herself with unqualified devotion to the rescue of the fallen, is lying, we fear, at the point of death. A lady is immediately required to carry on the work of the Rescue Home in the North of London, which has hitherto been managed by our self-sacrificing friend. Any who would take her place, even for a time, as a voluntary and unpaid worker, is invited at once to address Alpha, 255, Seven Sisters-road, Finsbury-park, N.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR ON THE BIBLE.—On Sunday afternoon the Lord Chancellor, Lord Halsbury, addressed a crowded assembly of young men in the large hall of the Y.M.C.A., at Mare-street, Hackney. His lordship chose for his theme the Bible, and in the course of his address he strongly urged the fallacy of the opinion held by many persons that the Bible is an exploded fable. He severely criticised the so-called religious novels recently published, and warned young men against those persons who endeavour to throw doubt upon the accuracy of the Bible. The Bible has nothing whatever to fear from the researches of scientific men, or from any kind of test to which it can be put; but what we have especially to guard against is half, or imperfect, investigation of Biblical truths.

ROYAL COMMISSION on EDUCATION.

THE Report of this Commission has been anxiously looked for. Now that a summary has been published, though without authority, we present to our readers those recommendations which command a general concurrence of opinion. Persons who have a moderate acquaintance with public elementary schools will hail the condemnation of the present hard-and-fast payments according to results—i.e., according to the number of marks gained in examination on a certain class of subjects. The existing method brings a great and cruel hardship on teachers, leads to modes of cramming which are bad for scholars, and, proceeding as it does on the false principle that all children are alike as to acquisition and memory, is altogether misleading and unjust in its estimate of educational results.

Equally satisfactory is the recommendation that the State should pay more attention to the healthiness of school premises. Vast multitudes of children breath a health-destroying atmosphere in their homes, and there was a demand for a more watchful regard than now exists in the matters of space, air, ventilation, and the airiness of the site of their schools.

We are glad also to observe a recommendation that the theatrical employment of children should be brought under more vigorous inspection; also that the payments of fees by Poor Law guardians should be made quite apart from poor relief; that regard should be paid to the moral tone of a school; and that manual and technical instruction, suitable to the industries of different localities should be given.

We could wish that the majority of the Commission had not advocated what is termed definite religious teaching, by which must be held to be meant definite sectarian teaching, and, as things are going, Catholic and anti-Protestant teaching. This will be resisted, and such a dispute is to be deprecated. It gratifies the enemies of Christianity. On the other hand it is true that character rests on morality, and the contention of the Commission that the Bible should be used for instruction in morals is sound. We hope that the heart-burnings which may be raised over extreme aspects of this religious question may not hinder the carrying out of other valuable recommendations.

DR. A. J. GORDON, of Boston, gave a very instructive Bible study on Monday evening, at Morley Hall, Regent-street, W. Our report is held over till next week.

OPEN - AIR MISSION.—A very interesting and profitable gathering in connection with this Mission took place at Exeter Hall, on Monday evening, when addresses were given by Pastor Theodore Monod, of Paris, and Dr. Gordon, of Boston. We hope to give a detailed account next week.

SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE, PORTSMOUTH.—Dear Sir,—With reference to a paragraph in your issue of last week, headed "The United Service Institute, Gosport," may I inform your readers that I have taken over the place from Mr. and Mrs. Bedford, and it will be worked as a branch of the Portsmouth Soldiers' Institute in future. A sum of £200 is needed for improving and furnishing the premises, and I shall be glad if Christian liberality enables me to pay this without encroaching on our Portsmouth funds. We hope to open the Institute the first week of September. Our large Gospel Tent, by the Landport Railway Station, has been opened for daily and nightly work. Helpers will be welcomed.—Faithfully yours,
SARAH ROBINSON.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the Right Rev. H. B. Whipple, D.D., Bishop of Minnesota, U.S.

In this issue we have given all the morning and evening addresses delivered at the Mildmay Conference. In order to compass that we are compelled to hold over the instalment of Rev. F. B. Meyer's discourses on Abraham, and many other contributions.

We have just received a very welcome pamphlet, "Open Doors in Japan. 'Behold, I set before thee an open door.' Who will go? By Miss M. McLean, nine years a gleaner in that field." (Passmore & Alabaster. 2d.) We have only time and space this week very warmly and urgently to commend it to all our readers.

At this season of the year, in prospect of the large number of Christians who will come in contact with railway-men, it is fitting that those who travel should seek opportunity for ministering unto their spiritual needs, or render practical aid to those who have facilities for doing so. The excellent work of the Railway Mission is its own commendator. We greatly regret to hear that it is hampered for want of funds.

The evils of "sweating" appear to be as rampant in Glasgow as in the large manufacturing towns further south. The revelations made by The Lancet special commissioner are horrible, and plainly show that the time has come when some legislative action must be taken to control the doings of the harpies who prey on the wants and weaknesses of their fellows. The Commissioner makes the serious accusation that some of the worst disclosures in Glasgow are connected with work done under contract for the Municipal authorities.

The latest accounts from Central Africa are not of a reassuring kind. Dr. Laws and Dr. Cross, of the Free Church of Scotland Missions, report serious trouble with the native tribes, in consequence of Arab influence, and they state that the outlook seems gloomy. There can be little doubt that the slave-traders will not retire from their recruiting grounds without a struggle. It is to be hoped that the authorities at home will do all that is possible in sustaining the hands of the missionaries and Christian traders who are seeking to root out this great evil.

Mr. Frederic Harrison writes in The Nineteenth Century "A Few Words about Picture Exhibitions," in which he asks "whether our painters are as clear as they ought to be on these great antecedent problems: What can be painted? what ought to be the end of a picture? what, in great ages of art, did the artist regard as his business and function?" Mr. Harrison is opposed to exhibitions, and much more to such "infamies on canvas" as are found in the Paris Salon. He says, "No one is obliged to read Zola unless he deliberately choose. To expose on a life-size canvas, to the public gaze, Zolaism in its crudest shape, is an offence against civilisation, which every decent man and woman ought to treat as an unpardonable outrage."

It is stated that of the Presbyterian ministers in the United States and Canada over fifty were formerly Roman Catholic priests, and that the same may be said of a large number of Methodist ministers, and members of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Too many of us who accept fish as a welcome addition to our daily food, either do not know or are apt to forget the serious risks to life and limb incurred by the fish-catchers. The recent annual report of the Board of Trade Inspector of the Sea Fisheries of England and Wales, states that two hundred and one lives were lost in this industry during the past year by wrecks and casualties, as compared with only eighty-four in the previous year, whilst one hundred and thirty-three men met their death by falling overboard and from other causes, as against ninety-four in 1886; and during the past four years no less than one thousand and thirty fisherman have perished whilst following their calling.

Those who have read "Nor'ard of the Dogger," will not be surprised to learn that last year twenty-four lives were lost in the dangerous process of ferrying the fish from the smacks to the steamer. It is surely not too much to say that by prompt and efficient surgical assistance many of these lives might have been saved; and such figures as the above ought to stimulate interest in the Deep Sea Fishermen, and to cause a ready and liberal response to the appeal for funds wherewith to provide a hospital-ship for each fleet.

A somewhat unusual placard was to be seen in the neighbourhood of Notting Hill last week, announcing that at 7 p.m. on Sunday Bishop Smythies, of Central Africa, would preach in All Saints' Church, to be followed by "a special evangelistic address" from J. Townsend Trench, J.P., Irish land agent and lay evangelist; subject—"The Day after Death." It seems generally supposed that it is illegal for a layman to address an audience in a "consecrated" church. But this restriction applies only to the regular services. There is no law to prevent a layman speaking from the chancel steps after the ordinary worship of the day is concluded. This plan might be far more generally adopted by evangelical clergymen, thus opening an effective door for the preaching of the Gospel to the masses. At present many excellent lay-preachers might be utilised with great effect, if the conservatism which prevails in this respect were overcome.

The touching memorials contained in the Catacombs of Rome (which are stated to be now threatened with wanton disturbance, if not destruction) often furnish a powerful and practical answer to Romish practices and sacerdotal assumptions, and bear vivid testimony to the falseness of those innumerable accretions which have obscured and perverted the simple teaching of primitive Christianity. Thus, from such useful handbooks as "The Catacombs of Rome, and their Testimony relative to Primitive Christianity," by Rev. W. H. Withrow (Hodder & Stoughton), we may learn (inter multa alia) that attempts to picture the horrors of the Crucifixion have no existence in the designs of the Catacombs; that Peter is nowhere specially distinguished from the rest of the Apostles either by name or attribute; that the inscriptions bear no trace of the existence of a celibate clergy; that there are indications of baptism being administered at all ages, and that the tables used in administering the Lord's Supper were not, like the "altars" in Romish and Ritualistic, and even in many other churches, placed against the wall, but set out at some distance from it.

We have again been informed by correspondents of the fraudulent doings of a woman assuming various names who answers in person advertisements for domestic servants that appear in our columns. She says she comes from some distance, on behalf of a daughter, and appears frequently to succeed in extracting money to pay her fare home. We have often warned our readers against this method of fraud. We recommend all advertisers to make a careful note of such attempts and communicate at once with the police authorities at Scotland Yard, Whitehall, S.W.

There have been of late many signs of a reaction against the latter-day tendency on the part of some influential writers and speakers to place "scientific" above all other knowledge. Perhaps one of the most striking is that given by Miss Frances Power Cobbe, in an article on "The Scientific Spirit of the Age," which appears in The Contemporary Review. We are far from being able to agree always with Miss Cobbe, but most of the views in this paper we can cordially commend as being worthy of the thoughtful consideration of all who are interested in modern problems. She says:—

> What shall it profit a man if he find the origin of species, and know exactly how earth worms and sun-dews conduct themselves, "if all the while he grow blind to the loveliness of Nature...and as unable to lift his soul to the Divine and Eternal as were the primæval apes."

Recent biographies of scientists certainly do not afford much data upon which to base a very satisfactory reply. Unfortunately, there is only too much ground for the assertion that, as regards a scientific education, "there seem to be positive evils almost inseparable from such training when carried far with the young," and that the student is almost certain to fall into partial materialism.

Miss Cobbe finds that the advance of the scientific spirit has been "to individuals and classes the signal for a subsidence of religious faith and religious emotion," and that, just as the typical man of science "becomes an embodiment of the scientific spirit, his religious spirit flickers and expires like a candle in an airless vault." There is much truth in this, but, happily, there are plenty of scientific men who adhere to revealed truth.

Our American contemporary, The Churchman, tells of a new scheme of Romish aggression across the Atlantic. It states that the Romish ecclesiastics in that country, "not content with all they have managed to secure for the aggrandisement of their communion in the North and North-West, are putting forth all their strength to capture the South, and to render it likewise a fief of the Vatican." This is to be done by means of a vast immigration scheme, whose leading feature is to buy up not only waste and unoccupied lands, but those under cultivation in the more sparsely populated districts of Mississippi, Alabama, Tennessee, Georgia, and Florida. After the eviction of the present tenants their places will be filled by Italian and Irish colonists. The scheme is said to have assumed a practical shape, and already questions are being raised as to the policy of allowing the plan to be carried out.

Some prominence having been given to a statement that a firm of Roman Catholic publishers in England are advertising a large type New Testament at a cost of one shilling and sixpence, it is only fair to Dublin Roman Catholic publishers to state that they have for years back published editions of the Douay Bible at various prices, from two to thirty shillings. There would be no difficulty experienced on the part of Romanists in obtaining copies of the Bible in the edition which bears the imprimatur of the Cardinal at Dublin, but the priests, following the teaching of Rome, do not advise the reading of it. As a matter of fact, most of them do not even give the reference when they quote the text before a sermon. In Ireland, therefore, although it is not unusual in some districts to find the Bible in the houses of Romanists, it is not a book which is read or studied, and practically, might just as well be forbidden altogether.

The iniquitous "compensation clauses" have disappeared before the storm of national indignation; but their abandonment was no valid reason for throwing overboard the salutary provisions for Sunday closing and for relegating the control of licensing to the county councils, and it is much to be regretted that the motions for the retention of these latter clauses have been defeated in the House of Commons.

After the magnificent protest against the three terrible blots on our national honour, with which the Missionary Conference closed, it is to be hoped that the interest aroused will not be permitted to die down, but will spread through the country, with especial reference to the opium traffic. It is surely time that that discreditable trade should cease. But there are only two possible ways in which it can be put an end to. Either the Chinese will grow opium enough for themselves, and not need our supply, which is becoming every year more probable; or the Christian Church will take it up, and insist that it shall cease.

It seems to us that the circulation of Mr. Broomhall's recent pamphlet should be largely promoted with a view of arousing the attention of Christian people. In addition to this, we should like to see concerted action, by which the whole Christian feeling of this country might be focussed, and kept so, on this infamous crime, in complicity with which we are all more or less involved.

At a conference of working men convened lately to consider why working men in such large numbers absent themselves from our places of worship, amongst other reasons alleged was the following: that the teachings and practices of many Christian ministers were so unlike those of Jesus. It was a remarkable study to hear a professed socialist quoting passage after passage from the New Testament, and contrasting the simplicity and unostentation of Jesus Christ with the luxury and show, the wealth and pride, of his professed followers. Amid the applause of many of his fellows, he announced that he had no controversy with the teachings of Jesus, but with the prevalent misinterpretations of them.

Of course men often speak thus to justify their own rejection of the New Testament. But there is a great deal of truth in what was said. And we shall never win the sympathy of the masses of the working classes until they see a new embodiment of those principles of simplicity, sincerity, and self-sacrifice, which once won the Roman world for Christianity.

A movement is being set on foot by the Philanthropic Society in Paris for providing better dwellings for working men. On the occasion of the laying of the foundation-stone of the new block of buildings for this purpose, M. Pilot, a member of the Institute, stated that fifty-four thousand families, comprising one hundred and ninety thousand individuals, are now receiving relief from the Bureaux de Bienfaisance, the condition of the Parisian poor having of late years become much worse, owing to the richer classes having gone to live outside the city. Over-crowding, with all its attendant evils, is by no means confined to this side of the Channel, for whole families in Paris, it was stated, live in one room. An instance was cited of one tenement, containing twelve hundred apartments, "the condition of which was indescribable." The liberal provision of healthy houses for the poor is of the highest importance, both morally and physically, and it is hoped that this praiseworthy enterprise at Paris will meet with success.

It is a very suggestive experience to spend a day at Mildmay during the great annual meetings—the hush of the vast multitudes, the devotional atmosphere, the fervent singing and prayers, the mingling of all names and denominations without the least distinction, the catholicity of the spirit of the place. There is no uncertain sound in the evangelical tone, and yet there is entire liberty of thought about non-essentials. It is an evangelical alliance of the best sort.

One of the most striking features is the devoting of the afternoons to a variety of meetings, in advocacy of branches of Christian work carried forward on undenominational lines. This sort of teaching is prolific in the consecration of energy and time, of wealth and lives. Their severest critics cannot accuse the Mildmay folk of caring for their own souls to the neglect of a dying world. And it is interesting to see how much they can do in common, and on broad unsectarian lines. Would it not be better if we had fewer small denominational societies; and more large comprehensive ones, in which Christians of varying views on minor questions might unite for common purposes?

A formal discussion has recently been held in London between the vicar of St. Luke's, Peckham, and Mr. G. W. Foote, the Secularist. The latter made much of what he termed the cruel legislation of Deuteronomy, and "the barbarities" of Elijah and Jehu. We do not know what was the course adopted by the estimable clergyman in reply to the Secularist; but sure we are that a timidly apologetic way of excuse for these Bible narratives is a mistake. The idolatry, against which Elijah warred and Deuteronomy protested, was a huge crime against society. Lust, unutterably foul, vices which, beyond all other things, degrade men, were fostered by it. It was not to be tolerated, but exterminated. There are devilisms of our own times, concerning which only one of two courses is possible—either to convert them, or destroy them, and there may be mercy to men in the latter course, even though our methods differ from those of earlier times.

Rev. John Pulsford, in last week's Christian World, commented upon the terrible story in Joshua vii. Truly "the judge and all the people felt the awfulness of what they did, but they felt they must put away sin, or their sin would put away God." The language of Joshua to Achan is very tender. How he addresses him as "My son": how he says "I pray thee": how he exhorts him to take the whole blame to himself, and to "give glory to God." We hear nowadays of youths in Bible-classes asking whether such examples of punishment can be true. Would it not be well for teachers more to emphasise the fact that to have allowed the wicked in those days to quench the only light of righteousness in the world would have been to make the world insufferable for those who dwelt upon it?

The Primate's veto of the proposed prosecution of the Bishop of Lincoln, for illegal practices, has caused much dissatisfaction in evangelical circles. This following so closely upon the Bishop of London's defence of the Popish reredos, accentuates the need of loud protest and united action. Whatever be its shortcomings, the Church Association has rendered good service to the cause of Protestantism, and deserves the support of those who view with sorrow and anxiety the encroachments of Rome in our midst and their condonement by the heads of the Establishment.

Many of our readers are soon to scatter themselves for their annual holiday, some to distant lands, others to various parts of the United Kingdom. The ordinary avocation with its smoke and dust will be exchanged for the breath of the sea, the scent of the heather, the gurgle of the mountain brook over its rocky bed, and the deep lanes beneath over-arching canopies of green. It is well at such a time to remember the exhortation to seek the good of the people amongst whom we may be cast. The servant of Christ cannot cease to be such, nor would he if he could. True, in many cases there should be the entire cessation from public work, yet there may be the wayside seed scattered on many a strange plot of ground; and, above all, much may be done in searching out lonely and perhaps discouraged workers, attending some of their meetings, and inviting them to partake of some of those good things which God has given to enjoy, and which will seem all the sweeter when shared.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

In Russia tea public-houses are common.

In New York there is one drink saloon to every 120 inhabitants.

One of the best workmen in his trade states that his intemperance was due mainly to drink given him in houses at which he worked.

Rev. C. H. Rappard, of Chrischona, states that there are now prosperous temperance societies in nearly every canton in Switzerland.

Mr. G. F. Cook has had a very successful week's mission at Middleton. Many not usually present on such occasions were induced to attend.

A Bengalese tribe, the Oswals, of Marwar, have had entire immunity from cholera, while tribes all around were suffering. Their safety is attributed to their abstinence both from animal food and spirituous liquors.

The American National Temperance Society reports continued and successful work among the coloured people of the Southern States. Efforts have also been made to check the traffic in the Western Pacific Islands.

XIV.—WHY STARVE IN THE MIDST OF PLENTY?

The mariners of a ship were in terrible distress for want of food, and suffered greatly. All the time they had abundant provision on board, but did not know it. After supplies had reached them from another source they discovered that they had a large cabin full of all necessary stores.

This made it the more sad that any of their members should have had to bear such privations. Some person or persons must have known that these provisions were there, but probably neglected to give the proper instructions about them to others.

What numbers of people there are suffering around us for want of knowledge! And who is to give it to them but those who know themselves about pardon and deliverance.

I once fell in with a lady who was spiritually starved, and in her sadness and distress felt that she was nigh unto perishing. It was a real case of starvation. She had been brought up to rely upon the blood of Jesus for salvation, and she believed this to the saving of her soul; but there she stopped. She had never learned anything beyond that, as if salvation was all she had been created for.

It is sadly true that multitudes do not hear so much, or, we should rather say, so little as this.

This lady knew nothing about God's provision for her, consequently her whole religious life was one effort to keep herself alive as well as she could. She admitted being troubled with doubts and fears, but she did her best (that was her panacea for everything) to resist them.

I asked whether she ever heard of the little girl who had a plant in a flower-pot, and how she took it out of the earth every now and then to see if the roots were all right. The child became very unhappy because the plant appeared to be withering instead of flourishing; and no wonder!

"So it is," I said, "with too many believers. They are continually looking back to their conversion, and sometimes wondering whether they really are converted. These doubts and fears come from Satan, whose object is to keep them always looking back instead of forward—looking at themselves instead of Christ."

The lady said, "I suppose that is my condition, for I am continually looking at myself."

God has provided milk, bread, and meat for his children, but she knew nothing about these things; and remained in a starved and sinking state. In this position she made but feeble battle against the tyrannical enemy.

When I told her of the provision God had made for her and put within her reach, she was surprised, and, like any other hungry creature, was ready to partake of food when it was set before her. Such a change passed upon her as to her life and general appearance that it attracted the attention of her friends. They said, wondering, "What has come to Miss ——?"

What was it that had come to her?

For the benefit of others who may be suffering under the same spiritual starvation I will tell.

Here was a lady who had been converted for several years; but she was not growing, that is, she made no progress in spiritual life, and did not know that she was intended to do so.

I told her, first, of the milk of God's Word, by which she might grow.

She said, "Oh, I have tried over and over again to read the Bible; it is of no use; I cannot understand it at all."

"No," I replied, "you are not asked to understand, but to believe it. A child does not understand what milk is, but takes it, and thrives accordingly. Suppose you take a simple text from God's Word, for instance, 'God so loved the world that He gave his Son,' and apply it to yourself. Ask yourself, Does God love me? and Did He really give his only begotten Son, that I should believe in Him and not perish, but have eternal life? (See John iii. 16.) What can you think of such love, if you believe it, and how can you help being glad? This is the way to read God's Word. Take it to yourself, and ask God by the Holy Spirit to apply it to you. You will soon find your attention drawn away from self towards Him and his goodness to you."

"All this sounds very easy," she said, "and looks simple enough; but do you think I can do it?"

"Without doubt," I answered, "you can, if you will. There is something else," I continued. "God has also provided bread for you—the Bread which came down from heaven, of which if a man eat he shall live for ever." (See John vi. 50.)

Interrupting me, she said, "You mean going to the Lord's table, and I am afraid to do that."

"No, no," I said, "I do not mean that. I mean a continual feasting upon the love of a living Christ. Think of his protecting care, and hide yourself in the Rock of Ages, which was cleft for you. Meditating upon Him, your soul will be confirmed and strengthened, as your body is strengthened by the bread you eat. Who can condemn me? It is Christ that died, yea, rather, that is risen again. He lives to keep me.

"Then again, God has provided meat for us. This is working for Him, and doing his will. The Lord Jesus said, 'My meat is to do the will of my Father, and to finish his work.' (See John iv. 24.)

"The same is our meat also. Nothing strengthens our faith so much as exercising it. When we praise God, that is, when we recommend Him to others, it is surprising how our own souls are benefited. Watering others, we are watered ourselves."

This lady forthwith began to read the Word, to meditate upon Christ, and to work for God. She was so absorbed in this threefold occupation that her thoughts were entirely taken away from herself, and directed to Christ, whose presence she realised at all times.

She was thus roused up from her selfish despondency to live the Christian life. She became happy, rejoicing, and useful, the very opposite of what she had been.

As summer with its brightness and fruits changes the aspect and darkness of winter, and brings sunshine instead of gloom, so the fulness of the Gospel of blessing brought this once starving lady into a life of gladness and liberty. The change wrought upon her was more manifest and striking than when she was first converted. May such be the change upon multitudes of others who are now starving in the midst of plenty as she was!

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sunday, July 8, Acts xxiv. 17—27; Monday, July 9, Acts xxv. 1—12; Tuesday, July 10, Acts xxv. 13—27; Wednesday, July 11, Acts xxvi. 1—18; Thursday, July 12, Acts xxvi. 19—32; Friday, July 13, Acts xxvii. 1—17; Saturday, July 14, Acts xxvii. 18—29.

A CHILDREN'S FLOWER SERVICE was held in connection with the Hinde-street, Manchester-square, Branch of the Children's Scripture Union, on Sunday last. The service was conducted by Mr. H. Hutchinson. After the service the children and friends went to the Marylebone Workhouse, and had the joy of giving the flowers to the aged in the infirmaries, and having a little singing, prayer, and short addresses in each ward. This gave great pleasure to both young and old. Others may take the hint, and do likewise.

TWO RECENT CONFERENCES.

SOUTHSEA.

Our seventh Christian Conference has been held, and certainly a more blessed one we have not had. I have not heard of one who did not find it good to be present, and I have since received some very precious testimonies to the real blessing it was made. It is, I think, to be accounted for partly by the spirit of prayer which preceded it, partly by the absence of all discord and want of union, and partly by the fact that at the very commencement we were led to self-judgment and self-emptying, and to take a low place before God, through the consideration of the opening subject—"Our Spiritual Shortcomings."

St. Simon's, Southsea. F. Baldey.

GLOUCESTER.

We do not seek God "in vain." He does not disappoint the longing soul. Of this truth we have had a fresh proof in the blessing so largely poured out at our sixth Annual Conference, held last month. There was evidently much preparation of heart, and the tone throughout was quiet, real, earnest, and deeply spiritual. Speakers and hearers alike seemed to be manifestly under the guidance and power of the Holy Spirit.

The teaching was clear, definite, and most practical. Everything which was advanced was based upon the authority of the Word of God. The addresses were singularly free from exaggerations or from flights of imagination. Whilst there were no false expectations aroused, the all-sufficiency of the grace of God was clearly pointed out, and the responsibility of Christians to receive and retain that grace was faithfully proclaimed.

We were led of the Lord, we believe, in the choice of the subjects, and also in the order in which they were placed. On the first day, we were reminded of our "Calling"; on the second day, of our "Failures"; and on the third day, of our "Strength." That is to say, our thoughts were first directed to the standard of what we might and ought to attain as Christians; then, to what we really are in practice; and, finally, to the way in which we can lead a life of increasing holiness and usefulness. On each of these subjects, the following were leading remarks:—(1) The Christian's calling follows salvation, and is not to be confused with salvation. The order is, "saved and called." This calling is to fellowship with God in Christ—a fellowship including a share in his sufferings, as well as in his glory.

(2) The Christian's failures spring chiefly from his being out of harmony with the will, and way, and Word of God. Also, from his lack of confidence in God.

(3) The Christian's strength lies in his committing all to God, and being persuaded that He is able to keep all, and counting upon his faithfulness to his word.

There was much "love of the brethren" manifested at the Conference, and abundant proofs were given of practical self-denial and self-sacrifice. Until our next Conference, and until Jesus comes, may we continue and abound more in the grace of our God!

ANTI-INFIDEL TRACTS.—Perhaps there are few enterprises which serve the cause of truth more efficiently amongst working men than the work of Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh in disseminating literature which combats current infidel thought and opinion, as expressed from platform and press. His "Artizan Series" of pamphlets, containing "Answers to Infidel Objections" (1d. each), are extremely valuable. It has been Mr. Bradlaugh's custom to send parcels of £1 value free, if the carriage be paid by applicant; but this led to a deficit of £80 in the funds of the Depôt during last year, and the sum of 5s. is now charged for each parcel. Friends willing in any way to help this excellent work should write to Mr. Bradlaugh at the Anti-Infidel Tract Depôt, 70, King's Cross-road, W.C.

MILDMAY PARK CONFERENCE,

JUNE 27, 28, and 29, 1888.

SUBJECTS.

PROGRESS: THE LAW OF THE KINGDOM.

(1) Progress in Life: in Labour.

(2) Hindrances to Progress: in Walk; in Work.

(3) Helps to Progress: in Sanctification; in Service.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 27.

THE Conference was opened this morning with a very full attendance, and with no diminution of the eager interest that has attended these gatherings for so many consecutive years. The comfort of the outdoor proceedings was marred a good deal throughout by the rain, but it did not interfere greatly with the attendance at the major assemblies.

The proceedings of Wednesday morning were begun as usual with a period of silent prayer, a hymn by the late Rev. W. Pennefather, and prayer by Rev. W. H. Barlow, Vicar of Islington.

Sir Arthur Blackwood's Address.

WE are again permitted, beloved Christian friends, to meet within these hallowed walls—walls sanctified to us by many precious seasons of communion with our Lord and with his people, and fragrant with many blessed memories of those who have been with us here in times past, but who now rest from their earthly labours in the Master's presence on high. One in particular we miss—Lord Cavan, who left this earthly scene soon after the last Conference, one of our trustees, whose life of blessed service we desire to follow, and for whom we praise God. Surely the place whereon we stand is holy ground! And may we put off our shoes from off our feet, for the Lord has been, and is, in this place!

And if the place is holy, because of his presence, surely the time of our meeting is remarkable. The greatest Missionary Convention the world has ever seen, or the Church has ever called, has been very lately held in this city—a unique and unparalleled event, fraught, we believe, with rich blessing to the Church of God and to the world around. And closely following our Conference will be other great gatherings—the Pan-Presbyterian and Pan-Anglican. The Missionary Convention has been occupied with the consideration of active duties, of special fields of labour, with their difficulties, with conferences concerning methods of service and work; the gatherings that are to follow will be occupied, perhaps, mainly, and not unnaturally, with sectional or denominational concerns, yet we hope not exclusively so; and we trust that those who meet together in them will have grace to look over the walls and regard the whole catholic Apostolic Church of God as their partners, their brethren, and look with sympathy on their fields of service also.

And in between these gatherings, in the midst of them, we meet here—all denominations, neither knowing nor caring to know or ask to what particular section of the visible Church of Christ we may individually belong, owning one name alone, our Lord and Master, and recognising with holy joy our union as brethren in him. We meet, beloved friends, for holy worship, for restful communion, and for direct spiritual edification. While the side meetings which will be held throughout these days will be occupied with special subjects—fields of special labour and special prayer—our main purpose at these larger gatherings is adoring worship and communion with the Lord and with his servants. And shall we not believe that, as in times of old, when they came together for three days' communion with the king, and were "eating and drinking" with David, for "their brethren had prepared for them," so He who has met with us here so constantly in times past, will renew his former mercies; so He, who has said to us once again "Come ye yourselves apart and rest awhile," will feed us with the finest of the wheat, and with honey out of the rock, the wine and milk, without money and without price, and with the living waters from the throne of God.

Only let us be careful that we discern his presence. It is possible, easily possible, to spend a whole day supposing that He has been in the company, and not to miss Him until the day has gone. This is equally possible at times of Conference, as at other times—nay, perhaps more easy—for when the sons of God come to present themselves before the Lord, Satan comes also among them! May He give us grace to have our eyes lifted up to Him, and hearts to discern his real presence!

Just one word upon the special subjects that we have for our Conference.

Progress: We do not meet, my beloved friends, to boast of progress. Nay, for one thing we meet to lament our lack of progress—lack of progress in individual Christian life, lack of progress in united Christian enterprise. As regards the one, Who is there among us that does not feel that he is but a babe? And, as regards the other, do not the unevangelised masses at home, and the fields abroad, teeming with their hundreds of millions, condemn us? No, it is not to boast, but to deplore, to confess, to lament before the Lord, everyone of us.

What do we aim at in progress here? Let me remind you that it is not progress in doctrine. Of a broader platform, of freer thought, of larger hopes, we know nothing, and desire to know nothing. Content with "the faith once delivered to the saints," we are not afraid to stand on the old foundation; we are not ashamed to cleave to the doctrines of grace. What we desire, what we shall be praying for, what we shall be seeking for, is—I am sure I express your feeling in saying so—progress in the apprehension and appreciation of the Lord Jesus Christ; progress in understanding his Word; progress in conformity to his image. We desire to progress in obedience to his commandments, in love to the brethren, in compassion for the world, in labour for the extension of the kingdom of our Lord and Saviour to the uttermost parts of the earth. What is our starting-point for progress? Life—life in Christ. What is the sphere of our progress? The revealed will of God in Christ. And what is our object in progress? The glory of God in Christ. May God the Holy Ghost, the Lord and Giver of life, grant us this during these days of Conference, and may the outcome be to his glory, by whose precious blood we have been redeemed, and who has made us kings and priests unto his God and Father.

The assembly united in the reading of Rev. vii. 9 to end; after which the hymn, "Praise God, ye seraphs bright," by the late Rev. W. Pennefather, was heartily sung.

Progress in Life.

REV. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE.

MAY I read four verses from Psalm xcii.:—

> The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree: he shall grow like a cedar in Lebanon. Those that be planted in the house of the Lord shall flourish in the courts of our God. They shall still bring forth fruit in old age; they shall be fat and flourishing; to shew that the Lord is upright: He is my rock, and there is no unrighteousness in Him.

Then to God must be all the glory, my beloved Christian brethren, for every advance that is made in spiritual life and power, and in all the steps of preparation by which He would prepare us for the everlasting glory which awaits us when Christ appears. Each individual soul must be enabled to say: "He is my rock." And in the clefts of that rock the soul must hide for safety, for peace, for comfort, for shading. In that rock we hide ourselves when trial and temptation and difficulty assail us. On that rock, and surrounded thereby, the soul must stand for strength and ability. Under that rock the soul must lie for peace, when yearning for comfort and sustenance. Our rock is not like the rock of our enemies; it is a living rock, a rock from which there floweth forth not only the water of life—for God has given us to be the participators in his blessed life—but streams that accompany us in the desert; that refresh and comfort us in our weakness and weariness. From that rock, moreover, there comes the flowing forth of honey—of the sweetness of God's presence, the enjoyment of his love, and the refreshment of his power. By that rock too we are enabled to find perfect strength—the supply of iron and brass and all other abilities needed, whether for warfare or for service. We take our stand upon that rock; we lie down with joy under it; we rest with perfect peace within it; and we trust it for everything; knowing that the rock which followed Israel in their wilderness journey was Christ; and that the rock which upholds, which accompanies, which enables, which underlies, which surrounds, which comforts, which gives all blessing and power to us, is the Christ in whom we live and move and have our being. Thanks be unto God for the Rock of Ages—Christ, whom God hath bestowed upon us.

LIFE INVOLVES ADVANCE.

And now for the advance that is to be found in those who are on that rock. For we must understand, what has already been slightly alluded to by our president, that progress distinctly implies a point of departure; that advance assumes the possibility of retrogression; that if there be what our Blessed Master calls a "life more abundant" as distinct from "life," it is possible for people to be living, and yet not living daily that abundant life that God would have them live. If, therefore, we gather here as Christians not think upon progress; or even if we view ourselves not only as Christians but as reasonable men, that is, either in the sphere of the spiritual or the natural, if we want to attain to the ultimate end of our desire and to have the very best that can be had, we should seek for every possible provision by which progress may be made, and should be determined, cost what it may, to have all that lies within our power with regard to this blessed privilege, and to take the very utmost that God enables us to receive. And if we speak concerning spiritual progress, while with deep humility we recognise the fact that it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps; that it is not in man that thinketh even to think a good thought of himself, and that all our sufficiency must be of God, who alone can make us able for what He demands of us—yet we may never forget that there are surroundings; that there are attachments; that there are, according to the popular word so well known, environments, for which each man is to a certain degree responsible. Though he cannot make himself to grow in life (which is the special point to which our attention is now to be directed), except so far as he considers the existence of, and dwells day by day upon, the possibilities wherewith God hath endowed him, yet for securing the surroundings that shall promote that growth, he is ever responsible. He is ever called to desire this progress and to seek that all things that concern himself, so far as he has any control over them, should directly tend towards that point. While we feel that we are not responsible for the real progress of our own inner life, except so far as concerns those surroundings, yet we are called this morning to affirm, by our own spiritual enjoyment and progress, that there is a law in the kingdom of our God, which law is found to pervade all the different departments of man's being and action, and that is a law of progress which pervades every department of that kingdom. We take our place before Him and say, "My King, my King"; and as we claim Him to be our King, we claim that we are his subjects, bound, yes to the very depths of subserviency (and in that word is involved the highest glorification), to obey our Master, our King, and our Lord in all things. Therefore we are thankfully submissive to the law of the kingdom. As the Apostle Paul has said, we are not under the law, yet we are not without law, but we have come under law to Christ.

WHAT IS LAW?

Law is a terrifying word, notwithstanding that nineteen centuries have passed since Gospel privileges were given to the world. Men draw back when they hear of law. They little understand (until the Holy Ghost has instructed them) what we Christians mean, when we gather thus and speak of the law of the kingdom. We do not mean an autocratic fiat that makes a demand upon the creature—that utterance by which a magistrate, with the scourge hanging over the recalcitrant one, demands that the man shall obey his behests—we mean simply the principle of our life, the normal condition in which we live, and by which we enter into the purposes that pervade the kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. By Law we mean the inevitable principle that works throughout the being of one who has been introduced into the kingdom of Christ—the law which I believe is the governing principle of every part of that kingdom. It is the law that governs the spheres around us; the law that governs the great creation of God in the heavens; the law that governs the being of the animal or the child — that while there is life there shall be progress in that life. Thus, when we speak of the law of the kingdom with regard to ourselves, we are not to think of the old dry, dead sentence from which, by the grace of God, we are delivered: "The man that doeth these things shall live by them" (or in them, as it is in the Greek). We take up the converse and say: "The man who lives will do these things." That is the law that governs us—the law of the inherent necessity of our being; the law that governs the very nature which God has placed within us, and that compels that nature to evolve itself, because it is a vital principle working outward, working upward, working onward, and that cannot do otherwise.

We are here this day to enunciate, as a great gathering of Christians, before the eyes of a world that cares very little for our Christ, that where He gives Himself He gives ability; and that where He gives ability He expects results, not because of compulsion by any great edict or fiat, but because of the working of this law through which He would exalt his creatures, step by step, towards Himself; and that when a man is in Christ he ought no more to step backward, or go downward towards evil, but should rise as surely towards God as water to its level. Thus we stand upon the solid rock of the principle that it is not by mere edict, but by the necessity of our being, that the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ in those who accept his service is to be carried on step by step to the throne of God.

And if this be the great principle that we have to enforce, the part that lies at my door is briefly to attempt to show you what this great power of life in the Christian is, and how by necessity it will ever be, working upward and onward. If there be those that seek to check it, or make it stagnant, to shut it in by determination, or by rejection of the principle, is it any wonder that they themselves fall ill? And is it any wonder that the world, which waits for the great fresh spring, as it were, to pass to it from God through his creatures, is dying for want of this water of life, which Christians refuse to let out by this great law and action of progress?

SPIRITUAL LIFE DEFINED.

When we speak of the life that God has given, are we perfectly clear as to what we mean? I may take these words of Professor Drummond in his well-known book. "There are two great schools that advocate exactly opposite views in the religious world; one that spiritual life in man can only come from pre-existing life; the other, that it can spontaneously generate itself." I am prepared to accept these two main definitions; these two great conflicting opinions, or schools of thought, as involving all that might be said upon the subject as to the generation or the donation of spiritual life. At the same time, we must regard some of the sub-definitions that we find in association with them. When we ask ourselves what are the opinions that prevail around us concerning the obtaining of spiritual life, there are at least five great branches of thought:—

First, there are those who affirm that all men when born into the world possess this life by the very gift of God to the creature, and that it is theirs for ever, and cannot be destroyed; so that when a man sins against God and apparently falls away from the gift which he once received, he is but a child paining his father, and he may at any moment return, and say, "Father, I have sinned and I am sorry," and he is restored at once to favour and privilege. You will observe that, in this view, all thought of the Atonement by Christ is absolutely and completely put away. I trust I need hardly say in a gathering like this that we reject that thought most absolutely and completely.

Another school of thought is this. While spiritual life is not by nature inherent in man, yet he can by his own energy rise step by step towards the throne of God, till at last he enters into a condition, by effort and labour, in which he may be said to possess spiritual life. He generates this life, as it were, of himself, by his devotion and obedience to the law of God. Here, too, all thought of the Atonement is completely banished from consideration. Again I say that by God's grace we reject completely and in toto such a theory as that.

A third school of thinkers would say that by baptismal action upon the part of an officiating minister, there is communicated to the soul of the child or man the actual possession of spiritual life from God; and that they who possess it are only they who have been admitted into the Church of Christ by the act of baptism. This gift, generally speaking, may be removed or may be lost at any time by sinful action, but can again be restored by real penitence, and absolution given by a priest. Need I say that I trust, before God, we dogmatically reject such a theory as that. (Murmurs of assent.) Life can never be bestowed by any officiating priest.

A fourth school of thought would say that, even if spiritual life be never received in this world, there is a hope for those who pass to the grave without the possession it, because in the æonial ages, by prunings and by the dealings of justice, men will be taught to lift their hearts to God, and that, at last, the great, holy God will remember them in mercy, and bestow upon them that gift which they never enjoyed in this world. That is the doctrine, I suppose, of "Eternal Hope," which tells men that however contrary to God's will their life may have been upon earth, they may look for hope in what is practically a purgatory. Again, in all solemnity, I avow my conviction that this is contrary to God's Word. (Renewed murmurs of assent.)

I take my stand upon the fifth great school of thought, and say that this blessed gift of spiritual life comes directly as a gift from God Himself, only by and through the Holy Spirit imparted to and implanted within the man, in consequence of the great work which Christ Jesus wrought, and whereby He purchased this blessing for all who believe; that it is communicated by the Holy Ghost to those who have faith in the Lord Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour; that whosoever believeth in the Lord Jesus Christ thus receives into his soul this blessed gift of eternal life; and this life, being divine, and once communicated to the creature from the Divine Being, cannot be said to pass away or be lost, but is as absolutely everlasting as the life of God Himself, and is as secure to the creature as Christ's life is to Him.

PROGRESS INHERENTLY NECESSARY.

If we accept this as the theory which finds its foundation in God's holy Word, concerning the gift of eternal life, or the spiritual life of which we are to speak, do we not see at once how inherently necessary will be the law of progress, when we consider the action of this life in each individual creature? When that blessed gift of the Spirit comes to a man who is by nature dead in trespasses and in sins, what is the event that takes place at the moment? There is not the removal of anything that existed before in the man, except the guilt and the sins committed, which are washed away by the blood of Jesus. There is no withdrawal of any one portion of his being; that is to say, though he have a nature of evil, it is left with him, but there is introduced into him a new life—the life of the Son of God in His resurrection power, communicated by God the Holy Ghost. The life that God bestows acts by the Spirit—enters into the spirit department of man, as into a citadel. Claiming possession of the creature for God, the Spirit of God has taken up his loving abode in him, and He proceeds to work outwards towards each different department of man's being. From the spirit He claims the soul, including in it the heart, the emotion, the will, the feelings, the desires—in fact, all that we call the entity or personality of the man in its fullest extent.

This is at once a proof that there will be progress in this life. As the Spirit lays claim for God to each individual part of your being, you find that there is resistance to his work; not only that the man himself is not fully desirous of being given over to God, but there is the action of Satan, causing resistance at every point. Still, the vital spark, the great living power of the Holy Ghost, is stronger than all the devils in hell. When first the Spirit enters into the man, he is, as Paul describes it, a babe in Christ; yet step by step the Spirit works on, and works on, till He claims the heart, then the whole will of the man if possible, then his feelings, then his studies, his desires, and opportunities — all things around him. In that way the man is claimed by the Spirit for God, and progress will inevitably come, as each separate department of his being is consecrated to God. Resist not the Holy Ghost, O men and women, when He claims each department of your being. Quench not the Spirit, O sons of God, when He demands that this or that be yielded up unto Himself. Let it never be said again of us Christians that when we heard the great principle or law of the kingdom, in which our God demands that every iota of our being be submitted unto Him out of love and not by compulsion, that we refused to give Him the thing He asked for. As He claims us step by step in each separate department of our complex being, and as we hear his voice, let the ear be ready, anointed with the blood and the oil, and let us say: "Lo, here am I; oh take me." It is for want of this tender waiting upon the God of love that so many of us have not been advancing. Our life would be progressing day by day if only there were this yielding of the entire will, given over to the great ends for which God has claimed possession of us.

GLORIFICATION YET TO COME.

Upon earth there will never be, you will observe, the taking possession fully, by God the Holy Ghost, of the corrupt body which is described by the Apostle as "dead because of sin." We wait for the redemption of the body; we wait for that great part or department of the adoption. Meantime the body may be used as an instrument for God's service unto righteousness, treating it as a dead instrument. Exactly in proportion as the heart, mind, will, and conscience of the man are submitted, step by step, to God the Holy Ghost, we shall find that the body is taken possession of; not to be purified and glorified in this dispensation, but to be kept in subjection to God and to be a submissive instrument, because the spirit dictates to the body and keeps it under subjection by the law that governs our higher being, and says, "This is the only pathway by which a man can mount to the glory of God." And when the great day of the Lord shall come, then will be completed the glorification of the body; then shall it be not only instinct with the Spirit of God, as it may be now—the soul, the heart, the mind, the will, yielded to God to the utmost of our possibilities—but when Christ shall appear, then shall we also appear with Him in glory. Our very body will be like unto his, because we shall see Him as He is; his resurrection power will have taken possession of the whole man, that it may be conformed to the image of God's dear Son.

Now, beloved, how can there be otherwise than progress? There must be progress in a twofold sense. First, the man himself will be more and more progressively given over unto God, because God will take possession as we yield this or that point, this sphere, that chamber. He longs for it, O sons of men, and how can you deny the Lord that bought you, the blessed privilege which He accords to you. Not only so, but while you yield to Him, He progressively advances into your being; and, working outward, the new life, like the palm tree, will grow up and bear fruit to the glory of God; so that you too will be advancing progressively into the life of God in intention, in direction. How can it be otherwise with the man born of God? The life we have came down from God, who is the water of life. Water by necessity rises to its own level. Stop it, and you are doing a grievous wrong. Let it flow forth naturally, and inevitably it works back again to the level of God's throne, whence it came down. So, there will be in the man the letting-out of his being towards God—the whole will and determination yearning more and more for God. "My heart is athirst for God, yea, even for the living God. When shall I come and appear before God?" We cannot be content with the toys of earth, if our heart and conversation and real life be in heaven. If it be true of anyone here that his life is hid with Christ in God, the man must be seeking the things which are above, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God.

FROM MILK TO MEAT.

Again, there must be progress in power. As the babe develops towards manhood, the strength of his body increases day by day. So the child of God will be truly increasing in hunger for the Word of the living God; not only for the babe's milk, but for the strong meat. I confess with pain that my congregation and those I meet—the great majority of men—seem to live always by drinking milk, instead of wishing to go on and take the stronger meat. There are men, thank God, whom one knows in one's own congregation, and everywhere, who seem to love the great, hard, and difficult morsels, that require much care and consideration and action upon them. Brethren, deal with your consciences now, and see if it is not the case too often that you like to linger around that one text perhaps that brought your soul to God, "Come unto Me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Men and brethren, "go on unto perfection," not only in appetite, but in power for service. There ought to be a daily increase of power in the man who is looking up unto God to give him the ability for walk, for work, for endurance, for manifesting to an astonished world all the glory of the Lord that comes through his sanctified creature.

Once more, there should be progress in tastes. Surely we do not expect that when we have grown to manhood the cupboard of toys that gave us once such delight is to occupy us in our spare moments from study and business. The man of God, when he has his seasons of rest, surely takes up some new spiritual science; some new development in the things of God's kingdom.

Lastly, what are the spheres in which this progress will be seen? Will it not be manifested in the individual man; in the family; in the congregations or separate churches; in the Church as a whole; "till we all come in the unity of the Spirit, filled with the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, to the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ"? Beloved, consider your environments; watch over your surroundings, your circumstances, the accidents of your life, and see that they be regulated with a view to real progress. Take care of your soul—of its daily feeding; see that it has proper times of rest. Take care of your heart, that it be not ensnared with the foolish things of the world around. Give yourselves constantly to the study of the Word and to prayer. Then lift up your heads, and expect great things of God—yea! expect that day by day, entering into the liberty which He gives, you may indeed, "with open face beholding (or reflecting) as in a glass the glory of the Lord, be changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord."

Requests for Prayer.

Mr. J. E. Mathieson intimated the following special requests for prayer: For our beloved Queen, and for her widowed daughter, the Empress Victoria of Germany, that God in his tender mercy will lead them through their bereavements to realise the fleeting character of all earthly possessions and glory, so that they may be enabled to seek and find in Christ the true riches and eternal peace, and the crown of glory that fadeth not away.—For God's sustaining love and mercy upon Lady Cavan, now in Canada, that He will comfort her in her sore bereavement, and keep her in his tender love during her remaining years.—For God's blessing upon Rev. J. Hudson Taylor and his son, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe and his wife, and several students from Oxford, Cambridge, and Edinburgh, on their way to Mr. Moody's Conference at Northfield, Mass., and for a double portion of blessing on Mr. Moody at the present time.—For blessing upon the labours of Mr. Spencer Walton, now on his way to the Cape Colony, and that his future path may be made clear.—That the testimony of Mr. George Pearse and his wife among the Kabyle races of North Africa may be graciously owned, and strength be given to the labourers for further service.—That workers in Adelaide, Sydney, Melbourne, Ballarat, in Australia, and Launceston, in Tasmania, may be anointed anew for service and testimony, now that Satan by his emissaries is instigating tremendous evil in those cities.—For Mr. James Adler, who is about to take a long journey in work for the Lord, that his faith and courage may be strengthened, his mind kept in peace, while engaged in distributing Hebrew New Testaments among the Jewish people; also that other workers in the same field may have much blessing.—For Christian work in Germany, Finland, and Russia.—For the Church of England, that God will be pleased to arrest the flood of Romanism and Ritualism now rising so rapidly therein, and will raise up men valiant for the truth, who will contend earnestly for the faith, that her candlestick may not be removed out of its place.—That in these times of theological unsettlement, the fundamental truths of the holy Gospel may be brought into clearer prominence, that those who have swerved may come back to entire allegiance to the Word, and that the people may grow in earnestness for the faith; also for blessing upon universities and colleges, that many young men filled with the Holy Ghost may be sent forth to work for God.

Progress in Labour.

REV. DR. ANDREW BONAR.

When the Lord Jesus had risen on the third day, you cannot but remember that at his sepulchre the women met with the angels, who said to them, "He is risen; go, tell his disciples to go into Galilee; there they shall see Me." And they went on their way, and Jesus met them; and as they held the Master by the feet, He said to them: "Go, tell my brethren that they go into Galilee; there they shall see Me." I have often thought, Christian friends, that the disciples must have wondered a good deal at that style of message being sent to them: "Go into Galilee; meet Me in Galilee." And yet it was the Saviour's message. On another occasion, not fully defined, He told them that they were to meet Him on a mountain in Galilee—a mountain that He appointed. "And there," He said, "you will see Me."

Now, surely there must have been great thoughts of heart amongst the disciples about this. I can suppose them assembled now and then in yon upper room, and saying, "Why did the Master not say that He would meet us here? Why did He say, Look forward to Galilee?" Then, perhaps, some one says, "Ah, brethren, you recollect the night before the Master died, He said, 'The sheep shall be scattered, but when I am risen I will go before you into Galilee. I will be your Shepherd still, going at the head of the flock, and I will go into Galilee.'" There must be some great meaning in this going to the mountain in Galilee. Again, let us suppose they are met in the upper room, and this is the theme—What can it be that the Master is going to reveal to us when He meets us on the mountain in Galilee? One says, "He may not be going to show us anything; He has already bestowed many blessings upon us." Another says, "He has given us the blood of the everlasting covenant that cleanseth from every sin. Can He give us a greater blessing than that?" Yet another says, "Yes, and you recollect that He gave us his own peace before He left us: that night before He died, He gave that peace which is the counterpart of his own. For He wrought our peace by the blood of the cross, and we, in full view of the cross, get his peace reflected on our inmost souls—and no peace is worth having but that by the blood of the cross." Another says, "Yes, and you remember that He said, 'These things have I spoken unto you that my joy might remain in you.' His own joy—'my joy'—a joy that 'remains,' not like the world's; and, besides that, a joy that is 'full.' What more can He give us?" Another then says: "Well, brethren, I remember that He left us another blessing. He said, 'The love wherewith the Father loveth Me, is the love wherewith I love you.' What more can He say after this?" "Yes," says another, perhaps it was Peter, "Ah, brethren, one thing more you heard Him pray that night, for He said to the Father, 'The glory thou hast given Me I have given them.'" Now the cup runs over. I wonder what then passed through their minds. Well, dear brethren, the day appointed came, and they were at the appointed place, and Jesus met them as He had appointed. The Master comes again among them! What a meeting! We cannot know whether his countenance shone as glorious as when on the mount of transfiguration, but I am sure of this, that very gracious words fell from his lips.

THE GREAT COMMISSION.

Well, the Shepherd of the flock, who had said that He would gather his flock in Galilee, and be at the head again, the great Shepherd of the sheep, rises, and they know his voice, and they are waiting with intense anxiety to hear what He has to reveal to them: something greater far than anything that He has yet spoken to them; at least, quite of the same kind, if not greater, than the blessings He has already left them. Listen to his words. He rose, and He looked round on them, and He said, "Go into all the world, and preach the glad tidings to every creature—to the whole creation." Possibly He repeated the command, "Go and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." That was the sum of what He had to reveal to them that day. Is this the richest part of the pasture that the Shepherd would lead us to, after raising our expectation so high? Yes, it is. He knows what He is saying; He knows that He has led them to the right point. "Go ye into all the world, and preach the glad tidings to the whole creation;" for "every creature" is the same as "the whole creation."

If for a moment the disciples were disappointed, it would be but for a moment. Soon they were alive to the truth: "It is more blessed to give than to receive." There is something better than getting even his peace, his joy—something better than getting all these. Here it is: Go, and give to others. The Father's greatest joy is giving—even to the great gift of his Son. I suppose the Father never had greater joy than when He gave us his own Son. "It is more blessed to give than to receive." Christ, too, never had greater joy than when He gave Himself for the life of the world, and his joy is repeated every time he gives Himself anew to some sinner coming to Him. Again, the Holy Spirit's joy has been from the very beginning of the world until now to give the light that shows this Saviour, and the Father in Him. The Spirit's joy has been giving—giving freely. Now, Christian friends, this is our privilege, and it is in this direction that we have to make progress in labour.

The law of the kingdom is progress in labour. "Go into all the world; preach the Gospel to the whole creation." There is a great mystery here. Does it sometimes almost oppress you? How is it that, for century upon century, the most part of the world has been left to sit in darkness, and in the region of the shadow of death, and at the same time one or two favoured spots in the world have been getting the Gospel light in abundance—line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little? How is this? There is a deep, deep mystery here. Christ spoke of that when He said, "If these things had been told in Sodom, they would have received them." And again, "If these wonders had been done, and these tidings proclaimed, in Sidon and Tyre, they would have remained to this day." But He did not explain the mystery. We will get the explanation soon, for the Lord is coming soon; and in the day when He takes off the veil that is spread over all the nations, He will lift up this veil too, and we will understand the wisdom of the arrangement.

AN ANCIENT ILLUSTRATION.

But go back, Christian friends, to the camp of Israel. Somehow I always like to go back to the Old Testament church, where the Lord did so much, and from which we have got so much. Above two millions of people are encamped yonder. What has happened? There has been rebellion, and the fiery serpent is going through the camp. I am using this as an illustration, not in all respects detailing the history, and am supposing that every individual in the camp was bitten—man, woman, and child. Yonder is the brazen serpent, lifted up, and what is Moses's commission? To point them all to the brazen serpent. The moment every bitten one, any bitten one, looked to that serpent, he was healed. See what a busy camp it is now! Here are Moses and the seventy elders running through the camp pointing people to the brazen serpent, and everyone who has been healed is pointing his neighbours to the serpent; mothers, too, are taking little children in their arms, and holding them up to the serpent. Do you wonder? It must be done before the sun sets, because there is no knowing whether the brazen serpent will be there another day. So you can understand the eagerness there is to get the bitten ones healed.

What is the fact as regards ourselves? We are in a world where everyone is bitten—even infants are bitten—with that awful malady, sin; and who but God knows what sin is? There is an awful meaning in that word, "sin"—that rebellion, and rebellious nature, which is in the soul is enmity against God. Well, every soul in this world is under that terrible infection of sin, and our part is to go to our dying brethren, and tell them of the uplifted Saviour. Our part is to go to the fourteen hundred millions of our race—not two millions, like the camp of Israel—but at least fourteen hundred millions, of dying sinners. Oh, Christian friends, do your hearts not yearn to-day to run, run, and tell them that Christ is lifted up, and that "Whosoever believeth in Him shall not perish, but have everlasting life"?

THE FIELD IS THE WORLD.

Now it is not as in early days, before the Saviour rose. The sphere of labour is not the land of Israel, but the wide world. I suppose when the disciples stood on the mountain, the Lord pointed them to the grand scenery around. Thank God they were not in the upper room; they had a better room for the purpose, under the canopy of the blue sky. Look westward—Europe and America, the latter yet to be known. Look eastward—the Euphrates, India, and China. Look also south and north, and your commission is to go all over these nations, and tell of the Saviour, whose blood can cleanse from sin. There is not one, you know, in that multitude that no man can number, but was cleansed with that blood alone. There is not one of the redeemed that sing before the throne but says, "Thou hast redeemed us to God by thy blood." We are to tell of that atoning blood, and to every creature that we have the opportunity of speaking to. It is the blood of the atoning sacrifice. You know there is the figleaf of self-righteousness, and the figleaf of self-sacrifice. The devil's way of hiding Christ's sacrifice is to speak of self-sacrifice. The blood of Christ heals all wounds, and we have to tell of this to every nation, and kindred, and people.

There has been great progress made. We might enumerate the countries known now that were not even heard of in early days. Wherever there is lively faith and love in the believer, there is a desire to go forth and tell the message. If you have not the missionary spirit, then you are not in a lively state. I remember reading that, when Sir Thomas More's "Utopia" was published, telling of an imaginary region, some people said, "There is no mention of Gospel truth among the people; let us find out where this island is, and some of us will go and tell them." That is the true Christian instinct—going out to tell of the Gospel. There has been great progress made, and one part of the progress made is in giving.

But we have not got to the point yet. You know who was the greatest giver ever known in the Church of God? It was King David. If you enter into a calm calculation of his gifts, you will find that they amounted to sixteen millions of money—for the house of God. Where is the giver like that? When shall a Christian David arise? Is he to come from this meeting? Or shall we find him in America? Where shall we find the man to give sixteen millions for the house of God? We have found out many ways of spreading the truth. There is the circulation of the Word of God. You know, two hundred million copies of the Word of God have been sent through this world since the beginning of the century. Yet this is only a little of what is needed. Again, the languages into which the Word has been translated show that, though every man does not hear in his own tongue the wondrous works of God, he may read of them in his own tongue. This is progress. Then there are new agencies; there are female agencies, and medical missions are another agency of wonderful power. But I am not going to forget another, and it is this—the Jews are coming to the front. The cause of Israel is coming to the front, and until Israel is acknowledged in its right place, the full blessing will never be given to our efforts. Let us continue more and more to remember that Israel is to be "life from the dead" to the world.

BE OF GOOD COURAGE.

I must come to a close. But I want to say to you, Go forward. You have splendid opportunities everywhere to say, every man to his neighbour, "Know the Lord," and then to send far abroad. This is a day when you meet with discouragements. You know the word, "Rule in the midst of thine enemies." In a little while Christ will be here, and, putting his foot upon his enemies, He will sweep them out of the way. There are difficulties now about men and means, and because of opposition of every kind. He will "rule in the midst of his enemies," and have a people for his own out of every nation and tongue. Be of good courage, and be active, and do the work at once. It is your only opportunity of doing saving work, converting souls, and it is getting near the change with some of us. This is man's only opportunity. Remember that Jesus taught that there is no hope beyond the grave; if a man dies in his sins, he is undone. He is sunk like the vessel of which we read the other day: the vessel has gone down, and will never have another opportunity. If you have an unsaved friend, seek that friend's salvation now. We will have wonderful stories to tell in the New Jerusalem by the side of the waters of life; we will meet and tell of what God has done in the days in which he graciously enabled us to do any little thing which He put within our power. Knowing these things, "be ye steadfast, immoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord."

THE BISHOP OF NELSON, N.Z.,

briefly spoke: First, let me thank you for your promise to pray for the bishops about to meet in council at Lambeth. It is not to be called the Pan-Anglican Council, but the Lambeth Conference; a change has been made in the name, and the change has an important meaning. I am sure you will pray for us during the whole of the time we are sitting. It will be a most momentous time, and we greatly need the gift of God's Holy Spirit. Continue to pray for us.

In the next place, with regard to what we have heard: As to the progress, Mr. Webb-Peploe said it must be manifest in the family, and show forth results to-day. A very great comfort to my mind is this—I believe that God has work for us to do hereafter, and that this is one of the greatest reasons for progress here. He has difficult work for his saints to do, otherwise what does it mean when our Saviour says: "Thou hast been faithful over a few things, be thou ruler over many things." Difficult work has to be done hereafter in the Lord's providential purposes, and it is a great consolation when I see a whole family—one is now in my mind, that of my dear rector—making progress which is not for this world only, but to be transferred to the new sphere. Thus faculties are so developed by grace here, that the Lord may use them hereafter. Progress does not fall to the ground, but, on the contrary, the Master wants it for future application. The Bishop closed the meeting with prayer.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

Remarks by the Chairman.

SIR ARTHUR BLACKWOOD, in the course of a brief address, said: How important a subject is that of Progress. How little we understand of it! How little progress we have made! As one has said, and said truly, "A Christian man should never be found two days consecutively in the same place." Although it is not wise to be plucking up, as it were, our spiritual life every day to see whether it is taking root, yet should we not be more conscious of progress than we are from time to time? How little advance we have made, and how little many seem to care about making advance in life or in labour! I was thinking how strange it was in the days of old that those who had received such a splendid inheritance from the Lord never even cared to go and see it, and still less to possess and enjoy it. Several years after Israel had entered into the promised land, Joshua had to say to them, "How long are ye slack to go to possess the land which the Lord God of your fathers hath given you?" (Josh. xviii. 3). Why, they had not surveyed it; they had not mapped it out; they did not know where it lay—north, south, east, or west, of where they stood. So in verse 4 he says, "Let them describe it;" and in verse 6, "Bring the description to me;" and in verse 8, "Go and describe it;" then in verse 9, "They went and described it by their cities, and wrote it in a book." But all that time they had not cared even to get a map of the country that they were to inherit. Well, that was strange. Is it less strange than the conduct of believers in this dispensation, who, with all the inheritance that there is in Christ for them, described already in the Word of God, care not to go and search for themselves, and to walk through the land north and south, and east and west, and to see it with their eyes?

Further on we find, if we may take the chronology of our Bible, that though these people had gone up through the land, and made a map of it, and described it, and brought it back to headquarters, that twenty years more elapsed before the leading tribe agreed to go up and enjoy it. So we find at the beginning of the Book of Judges that then only, twenty years afterwards, did Judah say to Simeon, "Come up and help me to go to possess the lot which I have obtained." What a picture of ourselves! May it not be said to many of us, "How long are ye slack to go up to possess the land which the Lord thy God hath given you?" When there are such heights, and breadths, and lengths, and depths of the love, of the power, and the grace of our God, to be explored and to be enjoyed, and turned to account in service, why do we sit still? May this Conference give us a start; may it instil into us a holy desire and covetousness to explore and understand the hope of our calling and the riches of God's inheritance in the saints, and what is the exceeding greatness of his power to usward who believe!

We want a start forward in prayerfulness, too. How important it is in this searching, and describing, and exploring, and advancing, that it should be all in the spirit of dependence, of faith, of prayer! Let us pray more for one another, and pray more for the whole Church of God. We have unions for prayer for one another—let us turn them to better account. Many of us belong to these unions—how little do we use them! I thought that was a very touching request made to us at the close of this meeting by the Bishop of Nelson, in asking us to pray for the bishops at the Lambeth Conference. It is not often the bishops ask Mildmay for prayer; and it was an encouragement to us and a call to us that one should be here this morning pleading the case of his brethren with whom he will be assembled there—a meeting, doubtless, of great importance for the Church of England, at home and abroad—and he earnestly, pathetically, asks our prayers. Do not let us forget that petition. Let us pray for the Lambeth Conference, and pray for him who was with us, for we cannot suppose that all his episcopal brethren are quite of the same mind with himself, and he will stand, perhaps, sometimes in a difficult place there. Then how he reminded us so truly that upon our use of opportunities, and teaching, and service here, depend the use to which the Lord may put us through eternity. How little we think of service and discipline here as the preparation for more blessed service hereafter! Many are occupied with getting to heaven, instead of regarding the schooldays here, not only as the way to glory, but as a preparation for the service of eternity. May we not lose the precious opportunities that we have now, so rapidly passing away, but turn them to good account, that we may, indeed, be found worthy for the blessed sphere of service to which the Lord may call us in his grace hereafter. The Lord grant us the hearing ear, and the attentive, ready mind, and, to those who shall speak to us, the anointed lips, this evening, by the power of his Holy Spirit.

Proofs of Spiritual Progress.

REV. DR. H. M. PARSONS, TORONTO.

IN the opening of this Conference, our attention has been directed to the Kingdom, and also to the nature of that life which is referred to when we speak of progress in life—progress in the life of Christ within us. I will call attention, before taking up the theme itself, to the distinction, which I think has not been noted, between the Kingdom and the Church. We are apt to think that the Church is the Kingdom, and that progress consists in going forward in those enterprises and measures, in those ordinances and methods, which have been adopted in the Church of God (under the sanction of the Spirit, we believe), and that the more we advance in work and in missionary progress in the Church the more we are making progress in the Kingdom.

I would call attention to the fact that the Kingdom is different from the Church. As was well said in the morning, the law of the Kingdom, both in heaven and on earth, is one and the same—it is constantly advancing onward and upward towards the infinite One Himself. When we pray "Thy kingdom come," we mean that the kingdom, or rule of the Heavens, may be manifested on this earth, and may be supreme in every heart throughout the populations of the globe. In that sense the Kingdom of the Heavens is far greater and wider than the Church; and, in that sense, distinct from the Church of God, which is only one section in the Kingdom. Hence we need to note the distinction between the Church and the Kingdom.

LIFE FIRST, THEN PROGRESS.

We assume that no action, and no progress can exist in the individual believer without life. Life, being begun, it is ever advancing, and that life that is in us is the eternal life of God. Having read 1 John v. 10–13 inclusive, Dr. Parsons continued: We are considering the progress of eternal life in a believer as essential to progress in service and labour. The thought that lies in this passage is that every child of God may know that he now has eternal life. Unless a believer has that knowledge, how can he do anything for his Lord? Unless one is conscious of eternal life, similar to the way in which he is conscious of physical life, and mental life, of life in his affections, how can he do anything for the glory of that God who has given unto him this eternal life? Many of the children of God think it presumption to know that they have this life; to know that, being filled with eternal life, they are qualified by the Spirit of God to do the work of God, and that not till then are they qualified.

This is worth noting, because many are praying and many are longing, but they are not believing this word of God I have read. Young Christians in multitudes are offering themselves for service. Many churches are filled with very active young Christians in prayer-meetings, Bible distribution and reading, Sabbath-schools, and the like. One such said to me two or three years since, that if we only had the Holy Spirit, if we were only filled with the Spirit, what good would be done! He was every moment at work, but he did not know whether he was born again or not; he hoped so. He was trying to do as well as he could, and he thought that, in addition to believing on the Son of God for eternal life, if he did as well as he could he would be saved when he came to die.

It is astonishing how, throughout evangelical churches, that is often the sum and substance of Gospel impression that has been made upon professing Christians. An intelligent man, a banker, who had connected himself with the Christian Church, told me that to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and to do as well as he could, was what he need do to be saved when he died. "Well," said I, "have you always done as well as you could?" "Oh, no!" "Do you know anyone who ever did as well as he could? If that is the Gospel, then no soul can be saved. You put something in there which prevents salvation." That man had listened twenty-five years to so-called evangelical preaching, and that was the impression left on his mind as to what it was to be born of God.

LIFE IN CHRIST ONLY.

God's gift to us is eternal life. This eternal life is in his Son. "He that hath the Son, hath life." The Son in us is the life—"Christ Jesus formed in you (in me), the hope of glory." That image that is formed by the Holy Spirit, that likeness to the Lord Jesus Christ, is designed by the Spirit of God to show Christ through us to everyone who sees us. When our Lord came from heaven, He came to reveal the Father. He finished the work, and went back to his glory. He called his disciples, and sent them forth on the same errand concerning Himself, that they might reveal Him to men, and how could they reveal Him unless He could be seen in them? As He said to Philip, "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." So He commands and expects every disciple standing before a world lying in the arms of the wicked one, to say, "He that hath seen me hath seen Christ." "As Thou hast sent Me so have I sent them." As He revealed the Father, and finished the work, so He has given to his children, his members, his disciples, to reveal Him to the world, and it is the living witness that reveals the living Christ. The dead witness can do nothing. Without the testimony of the life the word is powerless.

For this progressive life in Christ we have (1) the exhortations of the Apostle, "Grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ" (2 Peter iii. 18). The Apostle commences his first epistle with this thought, "Grace and peace be multiplied unto you, through the knowledge of God and of Jesus our Lord." He ends the second with the same thought. One word about that knowledge. It seems to me we are continually learning something about Jesus Christ, and not knowing Him in the advance we make. I take it, the leading thought in that passage of the Divine Spirit is, that we are to become personally acquainted with the Lord Jesus Christ, as He is the Divine person, unveiled to us in his human body, and in his human nature, at the right hand of God in heaven. It makes a great difference whether we are looking at an abstraction, whether our conception of Jesus is a set of principles by which we mould and govern our lives, and, therefore, are living by rule and living by law. There is a limit in this injunction that we cannot fail to observe. It is acquaintance with a person, and acquaintance with a person is impossible without confidence in him, based upon knowledge of his real character, and existence, and standing, before us. Therefore, as we search the Word, every part of it is adapted to draw the believing child of God nigh to the person of the Lord in glory, and to personal acquaintance with Him, through the testimony of the Holy Spirit, who alone testifies of Him, and who will testify of nothing else. The Spirit testifies of Him as a person. He does not testify of an abstraction. He will not testify of a law, but He dwells in us to testify of Jesus. He does not speak of Himself, but of One who sent Him forth for the purpose of conveying to you and to me, not only his mind and his will, but the knowledge of his Divine person as now enthroned. He is here to minister to us in this way, and, through his intercession, to make us increasingly acquainted with Him every day.

Our Chairman has mentioned a saying that no believer could stay, or should stay, in the same spiritual state for two days. There is not a Christian in this house that can stay a day in the same place, because if he does not go forward he goes backward. There is no such thing as standing on a dead level. There is no such thing as obtaining what many have thought in the past, and what many think in the present—"If I can reach such a standard and retain it, all will be well." The putting of a limit is retrograding in the heart and in the life. The moment we put before ourselves an earthly limit, and say that to reach that will be sufficient, we then begin to subside in devotion, and to think that we can conduct the service of God, and maintain a reputation as his disciples, without advancing, without the momentary, hourly, and daily personal communion.

A TRANSFORMED CHARACTER.

But notice (2) that progress in the Christian life will show itself in a transformed character. It cannot be hid. We read in 2 Cor. iii. 18: "We all, with open face, beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory unto glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." The figure is a beautiful one—"with unveiled face." The reference is to Moses when he had been with Jehovah, when his face shone, and had such a celestial, supernatural brightness, that he was obliged to cover it with a veil in the presence of the children of Israel. Now the veil is upon Israel's face, but when it shall be taken away, then Israel shall return to the Lord. For every Israelite to-day that has turned to Jesus, and found in Him his Jehovah and Messiah—thank God, there are many of them—the veil has been withdrawn from his face, and he sees in that blessed Saviour his adorable King and Lord. So, as we gaze upon a risen Christ, do we not, alas! often feel that when our Lord said it was finished on the cross, that then his atonement ended? We are saved with redeeming blood. We are indeed covered with the robe of redeeming righteousness of another, and that other the Son of God.

But we have to pass through the grave with Christ, and be raised with Him, before we have any power for victory, either over self or over the foes around us. Therefore it is that this transformed character will show itself, and indicate a progress to others that it may not reveal to the possessor, while he is looking unto Jesus. It is a bad thing for Christians ever to be looking for marks of progress within them. I have known several who have come to me in great darkness, feeling that they were not children of God. The reason was that they neglected a marching order of the blessed Lord, who has told them to run with patience the race that is set before them, looking not into their dull, dark hearts, for the inspiring enthusiasm and power that should keep them pressing onward, looking to Jesus, at the right hand of God. Looking unto the risen Christ, our transformation is effected by the Holy Spirit who testifies of Him; and having the face always directed to the One that has risen, there is no danger of being disturbed and deceived by doubts and fears that come up in the mind or heart by the suggestions of wise men on earth who know nothing of the Lord, or by temptations of the evil one, the adversary, who, if possible, will remove us from that position, and destroy the peace the Gospel brings. Because our Lord has conquered Satan and overcome the world, and because He is victorious, are we looking unto Him, by the Spirit of God, transformed into that same image from glory to glory. We walk victorious, we overcome the enemy and every snare, obedient in faith and humble in heart. I have no fear that any Christian will ever be led away by the deceived heart, or by the deceiving adversary, whose eye is fixed on the risen Lord presented to him in these words, and whose heart is kept warm in that elevated presence and position by the Spirit of God dwelling in him by the Word.

(3) Under the moulding of the Holy Spirit upon the Divine model, we find progress in the Divine life. "For whom He did foreknow, He also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that He might be the firstborn amongst many brethren" (Rom. viii. 29). There we have the idea again of resurrection for the children of God. The Firstborn from the dead wants many brethren in the resurrection. When, by the Spirit of God, we are regenerated in heart, we are risen with Christ; then the moulding process is carried on by the Holy Spirit. "Whom He did foreknow, He also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son." There is a Divine model that is perfect, and the Divine Spirit is fulfilling the plan of God in each heart and life.

A STRIKING ILLUSTRATION.

The other day in Paris I went to see the weavers working on the Gobelin tapestry. I noticed that they had a model which they were copying. Constantly, as they were weaving in the loom, and placing the threads over that wonderful work, the eye would rest upon the picture which had been made for copying, and then they would be busy with the work. Every now and then I would see a workman take a little hand mirror, thrust it through the thread, and look upon the side he could not see, to ascertain whether he was faithful to the picture—whether he had the right colour, the right shade—whether, in fact, it was according to the pattern. It seems to me that our lives are like that. The Spirit of God is working upon them. He is moulding us upon a Divine pattern—the "image of his Son." As the Spirit knoweth the mind of God, so the Spirit dwelling in every single believer as in a temple, and working in us, moulds us, perfecting us by every kind of instrumentality that he can use or permit, into that glorious, Divine image which is ever before his eye and ever before our eye. Being in the Spirit we are working in love and glorifying God by the right use of his Word. This is for us the hand-mirror by which we may discern our likeness to the Divine pattern. So, as we follow that thought, that the Spirit of God is weaving in and through us from the Divine pattern, there comes the fact, the most important in our life, of present responsibility to God in each one of us.

(4) We progress also in the obedience of faith. Many are found resting and trusting on the Holy Spirit, and yet denying responsibility; willing to believe all that God has said and all that God desires, and to submit themselves to his work, and to suffer patiently, and yet not assuming, and not allowing, the individual responsibility for all matters in which the Spirit of God is increasing in them the Divine image, and conforming them, in all things, to the glorious pattern God has set forth. This was true in the old economy. We are enjoined by the Spirit of God to leave those things behind that as children we were wont to have.

David says in one of the Psalms that in his haste he said all men were liars. The Word of God has a good deal to say upon this subject, and it is not out of keeping that those words should be reckoned under this head of the obedience of faith, which we, as disciples, growing in the image of that Divine One, should consider specially in our personal obligations. We read in Zech. viii. 16, 17: "These are the things that ye shall do; speak ye every man the truth to his neighbour; execute the judgment of truth and peace in your gates: and let none of you imagine evil in your hearts against his neighbour; and love no false oath: for all these are things that I hate, saith the Lord." Again, in Eph. iv. 25: "Wherefore putting away lying, speak every man truth with his neighbour: for we are members one of another." So in 2 Cor. iv. 2: "But have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, nor handling the Word of God deceitfully; but by manifestation of the truth, commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God." "My little children," says the Apostle John, "let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but in deed, and in truth." I need not take up any other line of Christian obedience but this one, to show how possible it is, under the language of high spirituality, to be liars in the sight of God; to tell an experience that is famous for its beauty on paper, or in language, but which is not the actual experience of the heart.

How many times in prayer-meetings people will get up, and go through an experience that has no foundation—in fact, merely something to pass away the time, and fill up the meeting. If in every prayer-meeting, where the children of God assemble, every child of God were to be truthful, and tell out what there is within his heart, there would be such a shaking in such a prayer-meeting as has not been known before. Instead of saying, "I am happy, and enjoying my spiritual life," they would be rather apt to say, "I am cold and dead, and the truth is I have been so occupied with my business to-day that I have not had time to give a thought to God. I have just dropped in here because I know that somebody must fill up the time." Many say, "I cannot preach or pray," but if they would get up and tell the truth, it would be one of the best and warmest prayer-meetings that was ever attended.

There is a lying in good things as well as in bad. There is a speaking of that for the truth which is not the truth. There is a way of dealing with God's Word which is handling it deceitfully; pretending to preach that Word when it is only the vain offering of man concerning science, or rhetoric; or so to please man's taste in a way that is so deceitful that it becomes a falsehood, and the Spirit of God cannot use it. Oh! beloved friends, what cause there is here to notice that we need the grace of God to be in the obedience of faith all the time—when we are alone with God as truthfully as in those seasons when we are speaking to each other, for there are many who tell God what they think it proper to tell, and then go to sleep satisfied that they have done their duty. How deceitful is the human heart, and how deceiving is the adversary! He catches us under the infirmity, and weariness, and weakness of nature, and deceives the soul. May God open our eyes and hearts by his word to advance in obedience of faith and truthfulness before Him, and truthfulness before our fellow men.

SEPARATION AND CONSECRATION.

(5) The last point to which I will refer is that as progress in the Christian life is a result that will inevitably be seen in every child of God who is advancing, it will also be seen in separation and consecration—separation from the old, from the earthly, from that which is merely natural and human, and consecration in an enlarged devotedness and yielding up of the whole "spirit and soul and body" unto Him who has bought it with his precious blood. John gives us the key-note: "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, but it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is." (1 John iii. 2). What a blessed hope! Then the Spirit of God adds, "Every man that hath this hope in Him purifieth himself even as He is pure." As we are longing to see the glory of the Lord, as we are longing for Him to come and complete everything on this earth by the wondrous manifestation of Himself in the lines sketched out by God Himself in the Word, in the interests of the on-coming kingdom, while now we are waiting, our hearts should be so penetrated with the Divine love, our minds so illuminated with the illumination of his Spirit, our thoughts so clustered around Him in his glory, that that glory, as it were, takes up an abode in our hearts as a longing desire, and everything that is done, even as we eat and drink, is for the glory of the Lord.

This is not an abstraction—not a simple desire to be pleasing to the will of my Father, as a child loves to please its father; but for the manifestation of a glory that is supernatural over this earth, a glory that is brighter than the sun, a glory that heralds the entering of a new age, a glory that shall so impress the beholder as for ever to be remembered and honoured through eternity by all created beings of every grade. When He possesses our heart; when we are separated by the Spirit of God from all nature within us which is earthly and selfish; when we are so separated by the advancing of the heart and life upon the plan God has revealed, that earth has no power to distract and divide the attention, and call us away from Him; when we have so dwelt with the living Christ, abiding in Him, and his words in us, that prayer is a continual breath, and the answer a continuous reality—we are transformed so that the enemy ceases to vex; then we are separated unto Him.

That separation is paralleled, on the other hand, by a consecration, the result of the attracting power and glory and love of our Divine Redeemer. We sometimes hear of consecration by way of resolution, by way of strong desire, by efforts of the will, to lift the man over this stumbling block, and over that, higher and higher, to grasp that which is held out from heaven. I claim the consecration that is real and abiding, which admits of no retrograde step, is the steady gaze of faith upon the risen Lord in his body, and the outcoming of his very glory shining upon us, producing such loyalty of love, such intense admiration, so that self is utterly forgotten. We become so allied, united, blended into his living spirit, and will, and power, that the daily breath is, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" and the daily practice is to do it for his glory—that I say is consecration. It is not ascending the mountain height, and being transformed for a little, and then descending to the depths; but it is a steady, onward uprising, as with eagle's wings, from strength to strength, mounting upwards; and there is plenty of region above that we may traverse.

We shall never get where we can stop. It is onward and upward, through the infinities and through the eternities. May the Spirit of God so breathe upon his Word and transform it (even as bread is nourishing to these bodies), through his life-giving gracious power, into that spirit-tissue we need to give strength, and life, and power, for every member of Christ to take an onward step—to go forward in service, and then shall God be glorified; then soon and speedily shall the present dispensation be accomplished, the Gospel be preached to every creature as a witness, and our Lord Jesus Christ, from the air, summon his Bride from the grave and from the earth to Himself for ever.

The Conditions of Progress in Service.

REV. JAMES BRADLEY, LEAMINGTON.

In the world of nature everything is subject to a two-fold law of succession and progress. We see this in the succession of the seasons; we see it in the shining light which shineth more and more unto the perfect day. We see it in the growth of the harvest: first the blade, and then the ear, and then the full corn in the ear. We see it also in man himself. And so it is in the kingdom of grace. Progress is the law of the kingdom. You will remember how the Lord Jesus Christ has taught us this in that pair of parables following the parables of the sower and the tares. In the parable of the mustard seed, a man takes the seed, proverbially one of the smallest of seeds, and plants it, and it becomes one of the greatest of plants, so that the birds of the air shelter in its branches, thus setting forth the insignificant beginnings of the kingdom, and its subsequent growth and development as a visible church, one nation after another coming into it. And then the parable of the leaven. The woman takes the leaven, and hides it in three measures of meal till the whole is leavened, showing us how the principles of the kingdom were silently and gradually to work their way, spreading through the world, permeating all society, leavening all classes, and ultimately moulding all institutions and all nations.

Now the question is, How is this progress to be made? how is this extension to be realised? First consider Christ's call to his Church. As Jehovah gave the land of Canaan to his ancient people, so the Lord has given the world to his Church. You will remember that when Moses was dead, and Israel were encamped on the very borders of the Promised Land, Jehovah said to Joshua, "Arise now, therefore, go over this Jordan, and enter into the land which I have given unto them, even to the children of Israel; every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon, that have I given unto you, as I said unto Moses." How did the Lord give the land to his ancient people? He might have given them possession of it at once—in a day, in an hour, without any difficulty. But no; they must enter into the land marshalled as for war; they must advance step by step; they must get possession of their inheritance by conquest after conquest; and as they showed faith and obedience, so Jehovah went before them, subdued their enemies, and put them into possession. But many years after, when the sun of Joshua was setting, when he was old and stricken in years, Jehovah said to him, "There remaineth yet very much land to be possessed."

See how the antitype answers to the type. Our blessed Master, after his passion, before his glorious ascension, bade his disciples to wait for the promise of the Father, and then He told them that they should go and be witnesses for Him both in Jerusalem and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth—"Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." More than 1800 years have elapsed since that command was given; and what do we find to-day? Is the church in possession of its inheritance? Is the world won for Christianity? Has the Gospel been preached to every creature? Ah, surely we must say to-day that "there remaineth yet very much land to be possessed!" The greater part of the world in this nineteenth century is wrapped in the darkness of the grossest heathenism, or bound in the tyranny of the most grievous superstition.

A SURVEY OF CHRISTENDOM.

If we look at Christendom, what do we see? What is the religious condition of Christendom to-day? Must we not confess with one who said, "The condition of Christendom to-day is a sad satire upon Pentecost"? And if we look to our own land, our dear England, "God's England," as Milton used to call it, the land of churches, and Bibles, and privileges, and multiplied means of grace—what do we find in our own dear land? We find that there is a heathen England, as well as a heathen China. We find that in the circumstances of our land that proverb is illustrated, "Just under the lamp there is darkness."

Now, how comes this to pass? How is it that the state of things is such as we find it to-day? How is it that Christianity has made such slow progress both at home and abroad? How is it that its onward march has been so tardy? No doubt it is to be partly attributed to the apathy, to the indifference, to the unbelief, to the wilful neglect of the Church. No doubt it is to be attributed partly to the want of harmony, to the want of true love, among professing Christians. No doubt it is to be attributed partly to the dissensions, and the heart-burnings, and the jealousies, and antagonisms which exist between the different sections of the Church. Yes, the Christian Church has made hindrances for itself; the Church has put obstacles in the way. But is this a sufficient and complete answer to the question? There are obstacles and hindrances not of the Church's making. There are doors which have been long closed, and which God alone can open. Let me remind you, for instance, of the fanatical pride of the Mohammedan world, of the obstinate prejudice of the Jew, of the exclusiveness of great heathen nations like China and Japan, for centuries; let me remind you of the geographical mystery of Africa and the physical difficulties in the way of the missionary.

God might have moved all these barriers; He might have triumphed in a day by his almightiness against all oppositions and antagonisms of men, and might have brought at once all the nations to his footstool. And this is what the infidel says would have been the case if what we call the Gospel were the Gospel. The infidel says to us, "If God had given a message from heaven to mankind, surely He would not have put it into that Bible of yours, but would have written it in letters of fire across the sky that all might read it." But that is not God's way; it is increase, as in nature. Man is the chosen instrument for bringing the Gospel to his fellow-men, and progress is the law of the kingdom. There is an almighty purpose, and, notwithstanding all the wilfulness, all the unbelief, all the disobedience of men, God's almightiness will not fail of the fulfilment of its purpose. How these are to be reconciled—God's almighty purpose and man's wilful exercise of his power of free-will—it is not for me to say. The secret things belong unto the Lord our God; but those things which are revealed belong unto us and to our children for ever, that we may do all the words of this law.

THE DUTY OF THE CHURCH.

So I pass on to ask, What is the duty of the Christian Church? Yes, those things which God hath revealed are for us and for our children for ever, to do all the things of this law. The command remains, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." It is the duty of the Church to go forward. I remember reading somewhere this statement—that England alone might spare sufficient Christians to learn all the languages of the world, and to evangelise the world in ten years. Truly a great door, and an effectual, has been opened for us almost everywhere, by God's almightiness. How sad it is that the Church so often fails to enter in by those doors! How sad the want of men to go forth on this mission! How sad the want of means to carry on this missionary enterprise of the Church! Instead of the Church failing to enter by those open doors, there should be perpetual advance in every direction, to wait in readiness everywhere for those opportunities which God will certainly vouchsafe to a watching, praying, longing Church. To Israel it was said, "Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon, that shall be yours, even as I said unto Moses." There were to be no limits to their inheritance, no limits to their conquests, but such as they might place by their own unbelief and fears. As far as they trod, they were to possess.

Again, I say, has not God given the whole world to the Church? What has the Christian Church got to do with difficulties, with obstacles, with hindrances, with perils and dangers, except to meet them in invincible faith, waiting for the salvation of God? Yes, the Church only learns truly to go forward when it has learned to stand still. "Fear ye not," said Moses to Israel, "stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord." And then we hear Jehovah responding to Moses, and saying: "Wherefore criest thou unto Me? Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward." What, is the Lord Jehovah rebuking his servant for perseverance in prayer? The time had come for prayer to be merged in action, and the proper place for Moses now was not upon his knees, but at the head of the host, leading them forward, notwithstanding the sea that was before them; and when they went forward the waters of the sea divided, and they passed over dry shod. Such is the Church's duty, and such should be the Church's faith. Faith which laughs at impossibilities, and says, "It shall be done."

THE NEED OF THE CHURCH.

Lastly, What is the great need of the Church? In arranging the order of the subjects, those who were responsible took the true order—the life first, then labour; and progress in life the measure of progress in labour. It has been said, "Heap fuel upon a fire, and the light and heat of the fire will at once seek a wider sphere, a larger circumference." So increased life in the Church will make the Christian Church more intensely missionary. The Church will manifest its true life in our increasing desire and effort to preach the Gospel in the regions beyond. But what do we mean by increasing life? A fuller baptism of the Holy Spirit. The Church needs to believe more than ever in the Holy Ghost, and needs to honour the Holy Ghost more than the Holy Ghost has been honoured hitherto. The prophet cries, "Is the Spirit of the Lord straitened? Are these His doings?" The gift of Pentecost remains, and that gift is the same omnipotent Spirit as ever; but it is unbelief which checks the Divine influence. We hear in these days a pitiful cry from most of our missionary societies for increased funds; we hear a grievous lamentation over diminishing contributions. But is money the great want? Is gold the mighty power?

'Tis life of which our nerves are scant;
'Tis life, more life for which we pant;
More life, and fuller, that we want.

Men are needed, means are needed, but both will be forthcoming as the Christian Church is quickened by the Divine Spirit. For to whom belongs the wealth of the world? "The silver is mine; the gold also is mine, saith the Lord." And who controls the hearts of all men? "The king's heart is in the hand of the Lord as the rivers of water, and He turneth it whithersoever He will." I do not say, Let us cease to be prudent; but I say, Let us cease to be unbelieving. I do not say to our missionary societies, Cast prudence to the winds; but I do say, Cast unbelief to the winds. Let us pray that "I believe in the Holy Ghost" may become the creed of the Christian Church!

I have been speaking of the Church. What is the Church? Let me say to you, take care lest you lose the sense of your own individual and personal responsibility in this idea of the Christian Church. "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." Christ has said that to everyone of us, and each one of us is bound to obey it either in person or by deputy. It has been said that we live in days of social organisation, when everything must be done by a society. But there is a danger in this. These societies are very useful and very necessary, but there is this danger—lest by reason of them the sense of personal and individual responsibility should be swamped. Remember that this is not an imaginary danger. There are in every congregation—it may be that there are those here present—who have not the sense of their personal and individual responsibility, who have lost it in the idea of the society or the church to which they belong. Let me ask, What are you doing towards this progress of the kingdom of Christ? How are you denying yourselves for the glory of Christ, and for the success of his kingdom? What we want is deeds rather than words.

PROMISE AND PERFORMANCE.

Plutarch tells a story of two men who were invited by the Athenian authorities to undertake some great public work. One of them was full of tongue and slow of hand; the other was weak in speech, but an excellent workman. They were requested to state publicly how they would undertake the work. The man with the ready tongue stood up before the assembly, and made an eloquent speech, and described the work from point to point, and then he sat down. The other man then rose, and thus addressed the assembly: "Ye men of Athens, what that man has said in words I will make good in true performance." The wisdom of the men of Athens inclined them at once to the selection of this latter man. And so we want deeds, not words; fruit, not leaves. We want doing, not so much discussing, Christians. It has been said—I fear there is great truth in the saying—that religion too often stops where self-denial begins. Ah! and too often we may take up the words of the poet, and say—

I use my love of others for a gilding
To make myself look fair.

What we want is to learn to be nobly eccentric. I was struck with a remark in the memoir of Mr. Keith Falconer on this word "eccentric." He said that "the common centre is self; the true centre is God. If then I live for God I become out of centre (that is, eccentric) with respect to those who do not live for Him." Let us learn then to be nobly eccentric, and let us see to it that our work is fruit; all work is not fruit. Let us see to it that our labour is service; all labour is not service. What is it that makes work to be fruit and labour to be service? It is Christ in the work and Christ filling the labourer. And let us see to it that progress is the law of labour in our case. Let us never be contented with present attainments or with present efforts. I have read somewhere of one of the most renowned of modern sculptors, that, standing before a finished work, he was heard to lament, "My genius is decaying." When asked what he meant, he said, "I have never before been satisfied with any work which I have executed. Up to this time my idea has always been beyond what I could execute, but now I am satisfied, I know that I shall never have a grand idea again; my genius is decaying." And so it is an ill sign, it is, indeed, a symptom of spiritual decay, when we are contented with our spiritual position, our attainments, our efforts. Oh, my friends, let us cultivate a wise spirit of discontent. Let us cultivate a holy, spiritual ambition, not content with that low level which is popularly accepted. Let us walk, by the grace of God, on our high places, not for our own glory, but for the glory of Him who has called us to live and to labour for his glory; and for our encouragement let us take those grand words of the prophecy of Daniel, that "the people that do know their God shall be strong and do exploits."

Closing Appeals.

REV. F. B. MEYER.

THE time for speaking is done, the time for your personal action has come. When you came to the Lord Jesus—you may know the day or you may not—the moment of your conversion ought to have been the moment when you gave Jesus all of you that He bought when He died. How much of you did Jesus, our Lord, buy by his most precious blood? Will not your conscience answer my voice now? I probe it. I speak to you, living soul, of man or woman. Do you not know that when your Lord bought you by his most precious blood He bought everything that you are and everything that you have? He bought you to be his absolute chattel, and property, and slave; and the moment of your conversion ought to have been the moment when you looked up into the face of Him who bought you, and said, "Blessed Jesus, Thou hast bought me; Thine I am."

I believe that I am speaking to not a few here who did at the moment of their conversion give Jesus the whole of his purchased possession. But there are a great many, I think—and I judge simply by having gauged other audiences—who have accepted Jesus as their Saviour, but have not accepted Him as their Proprietor and Owner. Those who have not done so have been robbing Christ of that which He purchased. You have been appropriating your money, which is his money, for yourselves; you have not been holding it as his, you have been choosing your own way; you have been doing his work at the promptings of your own self-will; and, up to this moment, though you are quite prepared to be saved from eternal ruin through Jesus, yet you have not been living at all as one who can say with the Apostle, "Whose I am, and whom I serve." Now that is a great sin, and that is the reason why your life has been the miserable failure that you know it has been.

We want you to-night to stop all that, and to come to Jesus, and say, "Lord Jesus Christ, I am really sorry, I am broken-hearted, that I have been robbing Thee." I will tell you what you have been like—you have been just like Onesimus, who was the property of Philemon, but who ran away to Rome, and got stayed there through illness, and he had to be sent back again. I do not say that his illness came because he had run away, but your sickness has come because you have run away from Christ, your Master, and if you want to get right again you must go back to your owner. That is what we mean when we use the word "consecration." Consecration is giving Jesus his own; or I will put it simpler: You say to me, "I would like very much to be all for Christ, but I am like a little child, to whom its mother said, 'Give your heart to Jesus, my boy,' and he replied, 'Mother, my heart won't go.'" Now it may be that there are some of you who know you ought to be all for Christ, but it seems as if you cannot be all his.

Let me ask you this: Are you willing for Christ to come and take possession of his own property? Are you willing? Nay, I would put it simpler: Are you willing to be made willing for Jesus to have the government of your life? Will you let Him come and claim you to-night? Will you give Him the key of your heart, and let Him in, and say, "Blessed Master, every room in this house belongs to Thee, and I am prepared for Thee to have it, but thou wilt have to conquer it room by room. I cannot do much more than open the door; come in, and claim thine own." Are you willing for Christ to come, and take what you do not feel able to give? Come, that is simple. Can I not ask this great audience to let the Master who bought them have his own now? That is what I want you to do. I want you to let Jesus come and take what you know He ought to possess. Will you do it? You who have been robbing Him; will you do it to-night? I hope you may.

TO BACKSLIDERS.

But there are some here, another class, who took this step once: they took it last year, and perhaps they have gone back and have lost all hope. I want them to make the start again to-night, and I want them to do this—henceforth trust Jesus to keep them true. Put yourself into his hands, and say "Lord Christ, wilt thou not only take, but wilt thou keep?" Believe me that you have been trying to feel that you were his, and if you try to feel Christ you will at once get wrong. Will you do this? Look up into his dear face, and that morning that seems rather grey amid the London fogs, amid the depression of ill-health, look up to your Master, Christ, and say, "Lord, I do not feel the happy joy I had a little while ago, but in the central citadel of my nature I am all for Thee; I will to be thine; keep me, keep me." And the man who will throw the responsibility on to Christ will never find that Christ will shirk it. Come now; do not be discouraged brother. You made a grand start, like Peter, but you looked at the winds and waves. Now, never mind, start again! I always like to get people to climb up into the heights of yielding all to Christ, because they always know when they step down again; and to have stepped up once will have given them such clear, fresh, bright air, that it will make them restless until they step back again. Trust Christ to keep you trusting.

There is one other class here, and then I lead you quietly to God. This class is of those who are related to God, who understand all I am saying, but who have not been making progress lately; and I want to explain to them why. It is not enough to give ourselves to Christ, or to be taken by Christ; there is a something beyond that, for that, after all, is what I may call the negative. We can never get to heaven unless there is something positive in Christian living; and I want to lead you who, so far as you know, are yielded to Jesus, to claim with me to-night another feeling by the blessed Spirit. Do you not see that if you are always bending your thought upon your consecration you are not appropriating the fulness of Jesus, which we get by faith and through the Holy Ghost, in Christian living. This, I suppose is a fact—is it not? As the light grows we keep yielding again and again to God things that we once passed over, but which now we see that we must cast aside as weights; so that our progress in the Christian life is marked by the weights that we fling aside, and every time that any man is led to yield anything fresh up to the blessed Lord is a time when that man has a claim for another baptism of the Holy Ghost.

PRESENT SURRENDER.

Then, there are some of you to-night who have been rather concerned lately because there have been new things looming upon your heart which seem questionable. Ah! let them be surrendered, and let power now be sought from our Father, in this quiet, restful moment. Let us not leave this place until we have heard Jesus saying, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost." It will not take ten days of waiting. We are this side of Pentecost. It is only a matter of receiving. Receive the Holy Ghost, and inhale the ambrosial breath; from this moment go out of these doors and say, "I do not feel any different from what I did when I entered, but I have sought from my Father what I know He is waiting to give; and though I do not yet feel I have received the Holy Ghost, and though I go forth to my home not trying to feel anything, yet I know the blessing will come." If a soul comes to God as a little child comes for breakfast to its father, there is no longer time allowed by God to that soul intervening between the request and the reception of the Spirit than time is permitted by the father to intervene between the cry of a little child, "I want my breakfast, father," and the immediate response of the father, "There it is, my child." Now, men and women, let us receive from our Father the Holy Ghost.

THURSDAY MORNING, JUNE 28.

Hindrances to Progress.

THE opening hymn was, "How shall we praise thy name?" After prayer by Rev. J. B. Figgis, of Brighton, Psalm xcviii. was read by the entire company.

CHAIRMAN'S REMARKS.

Sir S. A. BLACKWOOD directed attention to Job xxii. 21 to end, and said: I hesitate to interpose before those who are selected to address us this morning; for it is a great responsibility to address this gathering, and I would not take it upon myself. And yet, in the place assigned to me in this conference, it is not, perhaps, unfitting that I should say a few words of a preliminary character before the main subject of the day is approached. May God grant his guidance and blessing. I feel that we are to-day approaching the heart of our subject—"Hindrances to Progress"—and that we have before us, if we are in earnest, serious work to-day, the success of which will depend, with God's blessing, upon our honesty of purpose, upon our reality of desire, upon our readiness to receive the word of God in the love of it. Our brethren may discourse to us sweetly and powerfully of the things which occupy attention to-day, but let me remind you, and myself, of that word which I will ask you to turn to, in Ezekiel xxxiii., which points out to us a serious danger when we come together to hear God's word. At verse 30 a state of things is thus described as occurring in Israel:—

> Also, thou son of man, the children of thy people still are talking against thee (or "of" or "about" thee, see the margin), by the walls and in the doors of the houses, and speak one to another, everyone to his brother, saying, Come, I pray you, and hear what is the word that cometh forth from the Lord.

They called each other to conferences and to the hearing of addresses.

> And they come unto thee as the people cometh, and they sit before thee as my people, and they hear my words, but they will not do them: for with their mouth they show much love, but their heart goeth after their covetousness. And, lo, thou art unto them as a very lovely song of one that hath a pleasant voice, and can play well on an instrument: for they hear thy words, but they do them not.

Their ears were tickled, but their hearts were untouched. They delighted in the eloquence of the speaker, but they paid no regard to God's messages through him. Is not this a danger in a day of many conferences and of much speaking and hearing? Do we really want to know to-day what are the hindrances to progress in sanctification and service, with the intention of putting away iniquity far from our tabernacle? For that is the condition on which the path of royal progress described in those verses in Job xxii., which I just now read, is alone attainable and ensurable. We are sometimes afraid to know the truth. I lately saw a colleague of mine trying to decipher some indistinct writing, and I said to him, "Is anything the matter with your eyes?" "Well," he said, "I don't know, but I am afraid there is." "Have you," I asked, "been to an oculist about them?" "Oh, no," he said. I went on to ask, "Will you not go?" "No," he said, "I am afraid to go. I had rather be in ignorance than to learn that there was serious danger to my eyes." Now, are we not sometimes like that? Are we not afraid to know the hindrances, lest God should put His finger upon them, and say to us individually, "Put that away from your life."

There is no progress possible, beloved friends, until hindrances are removed. And the hindrances are often very secret. Look at the fifteenth chapter of the book of Job, and notice two words there. In the eighth verse Eliphaz says to Job, ironically we know, "Hast thou heard the secret of God?" We may use this question without irony, and answer it by saying, "We have heard the secret of God." "All things that the Father hath made known to Him, He hath made known to us," says Jesus. We have heard wonderful secrets in these days. "Hast thou heard the secret of God?" "Yes," we may say, "undoubtedly we have. God has let us into his secret; He has shown us his covenant." In the eleventh verse we read: "Is there any secret thing with thee?" Have we, while hearing God's secrets, been hiding our secrets from Him, or seeking to do so? Have we been harbouring that which we know in our inmost soul hinders progress?

It is the hidden thing generally that prevents progress in the things of God. Was it not the wedge of gold and the Babylonish garment hidden in the tent of Achan that brought defeat upon the whole camp of Israel? One man hid those things, and the whole Church in the wilderness was practically defeated. Again, those little cutting envious words of Aaron and Miriam against their brother delayed the progress of the camp of God seven whole days. Oh, what a hindrance envious words among brethren are to the progress of the Church of God! The images hidden in Rachel's tent hindered the progress of Jacob's family and household up to Bethel. They could not start until the idols were buried. And it is for that purpose—that they may be buried—that God desires to reveal them to us this day. We may work, and we may pray, for favourable gales of God's Holy Spirit in our souls, and yet we may be like those sailors of whom I have read. Desiring to return to their ship late at night, they got into the boat, and rowed for a whole hour before they discovered, in the state of mind in which they were, that the anchor had not been pulled up. The anchor was out of sight, but it stopped progress. We, in like manner, may be holding fast to the ground, and yet seeking to work, and be praying for the power of the Holy Ghost to speed us onward!

Look at one other passage, 2 Corinthians vi. 1. The apostle says: "We beseech you that ye receive not the grace of God in vain." Is it possible to receive the grace of God, and to receive it in vain? Yea, brethren, it is—when that grace is not used, when we cleave to the dust, when we hide the secret things with us. And the apostle goes on to show how that grace of God may be indeed received in vain; at the end of the chapter he points out that the hindrance to the Corinthian church was alliance with the world that lay in wickedness. "Touch not the unclean thing," he says; "be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers. Come out, and be ye separate, and I will receive you, saith the Lord; and I will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters. Having, therefore, these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." May such be our attitude, beloved friends, to-day; may we be honest with God, and honest with ourselves—ready for God's inspection, determined to submit to it, praying "Search me, O God, and know my heart" (or, as the Prayer Book puts it, "the ground of my heart"); "try me, and know my thoughts, and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting."

Hindrances in relation to Walk.

REV. HUBERT BROOKE.

"CAN two walk together except they be agreed?" If we take it for granted that the Christian walk is a walk with God, that question of the prophet will tell us in a single expression what is really at the root of every hindrance that has ever held back any soul from continuous walk with God. It is lack of agreement with God that hinders progressive walk with God. Any two friends that mean to take a walk together must be agreed, either expressly or implicitly, about three things. They must agree about their start, or they wont begin the walk; they must agree about their goal, or they wont finish the walk; they must agree about their way, or they wont carry on the walk together. Earthly friends sometimes make compromises; if I take my friend's starting point, he will perhaps take my goal. But when we speak of ransomed souls and the Saviour who has redeemed them, when the "friends" are "the souls that are mine, saith the Lord, and I who have made them," there can be no compromise. You must take God's conditions of walk—choose God's start, God's goal, and God's way, or you cannot walk with Him. You need not wonder that oftentimes the question of submission to God stands at the outset of the Christian life. You need not wonder that God says, "If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land, for I am the Lord, I change not, saith Jehovah." And if He has unchanging principles on which He is willing to walk with his people, then his people must submit to those principles, and accept them, or God cannot walk with them.

THE BEGINNING OF WALK WITH GOD.

We have, then, only to ask what is God's start, God's goal, and God's way, and we shall see what are man's hindrances that prevent him from walking with God. What is God's start? First of all, God's starting place—where is it? In the days of old it was underneath the blood-sprinkled doors of the house of Israel. From there, and from there alone, could the walk be begun. With you and me God makes his starting place underneath the sprinkling of the blood of Jesus; those who were once afar off are made nigh by the blood of Christ. Let us be very definite and clear about that first of all, and if one single soul here to-day has not yet been brought nigh by the blood of Christ, let it be remembered that this is the first step. Let any such know that the blood has been shed, and that the deliverance is to be now realised: then the walk with God can be begun.

What is God's starting time? The moment you are born again, you are intended to begin walking with God. In the world it would be very strange for a new-born babe to begin to walk at once. But this is not strange in the kingdom of grace. What does our prototype tell us? In Psalm cv. we are informed that on the day that Israel went out "there was not one feeble person among their tribes." Will you, Church of the living God, rise up, and know that on the day on which you are born there should not be "one feeble person in all your tribes"? It may seem strange to the world that new-born babes may begin to walk. Yet the world may bark and growl, as dogs do, at strange things; but God will again make true what he did in days gone by, "against any of the children of Israel shall not a dog move his tongue."

That is God's ideal for time and place of starting for a walk. You see at once the hindrances; for some believers in Christ Jesus decide on some place and time other than that of God's appointment, and therefore they do not begin really to walk with God. Some propose to begin to walk when they have advanced a little in the knowledge of the Lord; others will start when they are more like Christ. Thus it comes to pass in the family of God here upon earth there are so many sickly babes, so many crippled babes, who are long past the time when they might be walking with their Father; they are helpless, and still need everything to be done for them. If we have any such in our households, it is right we should give them specially tender care and love; and doubtless God deals tenderly with such. But never say, and never think, that it is well that in God's household there should be crippled children who cannot walk. To any soul long past the time when it should consciously walk with Him the word is true—and of power to-day as well as in the days of the Apostles—"In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up and walk."

THE GLORY OF GOD, LIFE'S GOAL.

What is God's goal that He has chosen for Himself, and those who walk with Him? It was mentioned yesterday, and is a very simple and searching one—that God may in all things be glorified in Christ Jesus. The "glory of God" is a very common phrase with us, when we are talking of the Christian life, and, like many common phrases, it is very little understood. Having the glory of God always before us—its influence and effect on every step and action of life—that's what it means to have the glory of God as our goal. A young Christian was in the habit of solving questions of difficulty, and clearing cases of conscience by a very simple phrase. He used to say, "Now, soul, honour bright, is this for the glory of God?" That is what it means to take the glory of God as your goal. And how many questions of conscience, that lie yet troubling and hindering, chaining and fettering Christian souls here to-day, would be answered in a moment if you would say, "Is this for the glory of God?" How many doubtful things would never be touched, how many businesses would be cleansed and purified, how many recreations and amusements would be altered, if the glory of God were kept in view constantly! How many books would never come upon our tables, how many journals would never be seen lying in our houses, if over our booksellers' orders we wrote, "Send me these books for the glory of God!" To have the glory of God as your goal is to follow nothing, choose nothing, take no steps, undertake no business, follow no calling, that is not in the line of the glory of God.

Doubtless you have often noticed what is a customary arrangement for the safety of vessels, at nearly all the harbours round our coast. Somewhere near the mouth of the harbour there will be put up a signal post, with perhaps a square frame at the top, and away inland, on a little higher ground, there is another signal post just like the first. Now only that ship is certain to find a safe entrance that keeps these two signal posts as though they were one. In like manner your walk with God is quite certain only when the goal is clear before you; then every duty and recreation, whether you eat or drink, or whatsoever you do, is in a line with the glory of God. When your actions are not in the line, but to the right or left of it—when the glory of God is distinct and separate from your course, then there is something wrong. When the two are as one, the course is clear, and will "shine more and more unto the perfect day." That being God's ideal, you do well to see to hindrances that lie around the goal. Many are hindered because they take another goal altogether. They make their starting point their goal, and say, "I am saved; that is all I want." A man once said to me, "If I get on to the bottom step of heaven, that is all I want." I said, "But is that all God wants?" When Mr. Aitken, of Pendeen, once visited a place at which he had held a mission fourteen years before, after the sermon a man went up to him, and said, "I want to shake your hand, for I found Christ when you were here before." "And where are you now?" asked Mr. Aitken. The man replied, "Being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." "Tut, tut, tut, man," said Mr. Aitken, "you ought to have been past that long ago, and every day you have stood still there, you have been showing to the world a crippled, helpless child, which they have thought was the ideal of God's family." Is it not time to have done with that? Should we not see that God expects us to be as practical in dealing with Him as we are in the dealings of everyday life? A boy comes home from school on his holidays, and his father says to him, "It's time you made up your mind what you are going to be." The two talk the matter over, and ultimately the boy makes up his mind, and says, "I'll enter the army." The father approves the decision, and the boy goes back to school with a new goal before him. Some of the classics go off to make room for modern languages, natural science makes way for fortifications, and the boy's course is altogether changed consequent upon the new goal. Have you taken the glory of God as the goal of your life? Have you brought it in as the standard by which you judge and rule everything in life? I thought yesterday, as we were pleading for Mission work, "If the company would take the glory of God as their goal, they would be reduced to the absolute necessity of walking with God, and then doing just what He wants them to do."

PROGRESS IN PRACTICAL EXPERIENCE.

But does some soul say, "I have really found my start in Christ, and want to follow his glory, but don't know how? I have tried so often and have failed." Dear brother or sister, I sympathise with you with all my heart, and would say to you that perhaps you have failed just for this reason, that though you have seen and taken God's goal, you have not seen and taken God's way that leads to the goal. "We walk by faith, and not by sight." That is the only way to walk with God. Do you know what that means practically? What sort of progress is that along the way of faith? Progress in practical experience means this: as you are progressing you are constantly coming upon new difficulties, fresh hindrances, unexampled barriers, great walls, that you have never seen before. That is why it is progress; if they were all old things, it would not be progress. As you come to these new things, what are you to do? Bear in mind that for every new difficulty there is a new promise of the Lord Jesus Christ to meet your need. The wall is there before you, and you have never seen such a wall before; well, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, step out, and you will find, as Joshua did, that the wall goes down before you; or, like Gad, you will be able to say, "By my God have I leaped over a wall." If you have the promise, it must be fulfilled.

What does progress mean in practical experience? It means leaving old things behind, so that you see perfectly whether you have made progress. Here you are to-day, as many of you were a year ago. Are there any old habits that have dropped off since last year? any old opinions that you used to hold put away? any old weaknesses that have disappeared? If it is progress, the old milestones must be left behind. Or, have you been circling round and round a milestone, and still find yourself doing so? Every obstacle which God intends you to come to, He gives you new power to surmount, and He asks you to step out in faith upon his word. You look back, and see that it was HE who has brought you through; you confess that the Lord alone can lead you on and take you through. Why is it that souls do not walk by faith? Sometimes because they ignore God's power to take them through the difficulties, and substitute their own powers. Other people do not walk by faith because they limit God by their own unbelief. They say, in effect, He could take me through those difficulties, but not through these. A friend of mine urged a woman to throw all her care on the Lord. The reply was, "Ah! that's all very well for you, but I have eight children!" As if the Lord, with his thousands and thousands of children, could not look after her eight! Yet other people limit God by mentioning their big business and their decided infirmities. When shall we remove these hindrances, and not say, "We can, and God cannot," but rather say, "God can, and I shall"? Cease to limit the Almighty, and say that He is able to perform that which He says.

THE ROCK OF AGES v. EARTHLY PROPS.

Others are hindered from walking by faith because they deny God by their own ideas. They will say, "What, the Lord deliver you from your besetting sins; the Lord make lazy men get up in the morning; the Lord save the passionate man from his temper, and the uncharitable man from his unkind judgments? I don't believe in that. That would lead to sinlessness." Would it? What a curious reason for rejecting a remedy, because it is likely to turn out too efficient! I never heard of a man doing that in everyday things. If this is a hindrance, let us look at it honestly in the face. Is it true that to trust the Lord to take you through, will lead to a sinlessness of which God's Word knows nothing? Is it true? Well, there is a simple reason why this need not trouble us, and it is expressed in the saying, "Never jump your hedges before you reach them." Before you reach glory, my brethren, there are many obstacles and hindrances of which you know nothing yet. There are mighty barriers, dangerous fords, steep hills, and precipices, and you cannot jump all these until you come to them. If you try to, you will exhaust your powers, and come to grief before you get there. It is a perpetual trusting to the Lord; and if at any point you cease to trust, you cease to walk with God. Why should those forty years in the wilderness, which God never meant for his people, be repeated again in individual lives? Why should we be like children playing in their nursery, calling this point London and that point York, and going from one to the other without having quitted the room? The worst of it is, this sort of thing, which is not progress, brings reproach upon the name of Christ. It is not so bad if it hurts you; worse than that, it hurts Him, and the world looks on at the family of God, and says, "What a sickly lot of invalids," because it does not see you walk as you can walk. He has given you page after page of his word to tell you that nothing shall harm those who walk in Him—that every Red Sea and Jordan shall open out, every mountain and hill shall come down, and the Lord shall lead thee through, and keep thee from falling. And yet his people are groping about for earthly props, and will not lean upon the Rock of Ages! Is it not time that we began afresh? I shall never forget the remark of a friend to me about twelve years ago: "There are endless fresh beginnings in Christ." Will you make one to-day? A fresh beginning, a clear start—to have done with the old, to go out with the new—to prove that God means what He says, that He will make every word true for those who trust Him—to prove that we can walk together with God, just because we have begun to agree with God, and to believe in Him, through Jesus Christ our Lord!

Prayer having been offered by the Bishop of Nelson and Rev. Dr. A. A. Bonar,

Mr. J. E. Mathieson presented requests for prayer on behalf of the Queen and her widowed daughter, the Empress Victoria of Germany.—For the spread of true religion in the United States and Canada.—For blessing on Christian effort in Russia, Cyprus and Tyre.—For divine help and guidance at the Lambeth and the Pan-Presbyterian Conferences.—Also for blessing upon soldiers' homes, rescue work, children's services, and other evangelistic agencies.

Hindrances to Progress in Work.

REV. THEODORE MONOD.

IT is matter for rejoicing that the old Saxon monosyllable "work" is coming to the front as it is doing, more and more, from one year to another. This I take to be largely a meeting of workers, and we are invited to speak of work. Forgiveness, as we have been told, is the first gift of God; but it is a starting point. After forgiveness comes peace, and we have innumerable and beautiful hymns cherished by the Church on the blessedness of peace. That is as it should be. But we should not stop even at peace. With peace God gives Himself; it is a peace that comes from his presence, if it be true peace. He gives peace, and therefore He gives purity. He purifies the thoughts, and the desires of the heart, by his presence. But that is not enough. He gives power. Power, to what purpose? Power for work. So that, after all, work that may seem to some to be the simplest thing, and, as it were, on the first round of the ladder, stands at the top of the ladder, where the angels do the will of God. And that is work.

It is strange enough that at this very time the great literary Society of France, the Académie Française, that you all know about, has offered a prize for a poem to be written by any who may choose to write (the competition is open till December 31), and the poem is to be on one word—"Work." So they agree with us thus far. One of them has said a very naughty thing about work. He is a Roman Catholic, an earnest man, and, I think, a Christian at heart, in spite of his grievous mistakes. He has said that Protestants have so great fear of the merit of good works that they are disposed to find merit in the absence of them. We must show our Roman Catholic friends that that is altogether a mistake and a slander. Only, we want to put work in its right place. I need hardly remind you of the classic passage, as one might call it, on this subject, "Not of works, lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained, that we should walk in them." Here again, what God has put together let no man put asunder. "Not of works"; surely not. But "unto good works," just as surely. You remember the beautiful lines—the author of which, I think, is unknown:—

I will not work my soul to save,
  That labour Christ has done;
But I will work like any slave,
  For love of God's dear Son.

Our subject divides itself into three parts. First, What is work? Second, What is progress in work? Third, What are the hindrances to progress in work?

GOD'S WORK, NOT OURS.

What is work? Well, when one comes to think of it, perhaps the first idea is that work is taking care of the sick, opening Sunday-schools, having home and foreign missions, and so on. One thinks of the endless list—but not long enough yet—of Christian charities and Christian evangelisation. But, after all, that does not define work. What is it? First of all, the work we have to do is God's work. It is the work not only that God has prepared, but that God is carrying on across the ages, in every part of the world—of the universe, one may say; the work that God has ordained from all eternity; the work designed by his wisdom, and accomplished by his power; the fruit, the very object of his salvation; the expression of his will; the fulfilling of his purpose, to the glory of his name. It is his work. "Thy will be done," we are taught to say, as we ask for our daily bread; and before we ask for our daily bread. "Thy will be done"; and then comes immediately after "Thy kingdom come"—not the one clause without the other.

We read in the last verse of the Book of the Judges, "In those days there was no king in Israel: every man did that which was right in his own eyes." But, suppose there had been a king, and every man did what was right in his own eyes, what kind of a king would he have been? We say, "Thy kingdom come"—be Thou the King. And, therefore, let not our will be done, but thine. And not in heaven only; but "on earth as it is in heaven."

What, then, is work? Well, to each one of us it is just that small portion of God's work He has allotted to us, in our little corner of space, and short minute of time—that is our work. We have to find it out for ourselves, and God will show it. Christ had his work—surely a work with which none other can be compared for a moment; and yet it is true that, just as surely as Christ had his work, you have yours. "I have finished," He said, "the work which Thou gavest Me to do." He spoke of that work on several occasions; let me read only two passages. "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." What does He mean by that? That He had a work of his own, outside of the Father's work? Surely not. That there was a work the beginning of which was in Himself—in his will as a man, and not in the will of the Father? Surely not. This is what He says about the work: "Believest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in Me. The words that I speak unto you, I speak not of Myself, but the Father that dwelleth in Me, He doeth the works." That is the way Christ worked in this world; the Father did his work continually by Him.

Creation is the especial work of the Father; redemption is the especial work of the Son; regeneration and sanctification are the especial work of the Holy Ghost. And this whole work of our creation, redemption, and sanctification leads to our working by and in the Divine energy. That is the very expression used by the Apostle Paul in a passage that can hardly be literally translated, which is a pity: "It is God which worketh in you, both to will and to do." Anyway, they might have translated the same word twice, for it is twice in the original. He "worketh in you to do"; literally, it is, "He energises your energy," as it were—indeed, it is even stronger than that. It is God's energy that produces our energy, and God's energy energises us. That is the way that we work; and, therefore, saying that the work is of God does not mean that we are to fold our arms. It means, on the contrary, that we are to fight and to labour earnestly, and joyfully, and confidently, because it is God who works in us.

MANY KINDS OF WORK.

Now, this work, in which we have our little place and little share, is infinitely diversified; we have no need to dwell upon that point, though it is a very interesting one. Of course, God has appointed different work to different people, at different times and in different countries, in the history of the world and the Church, according to their age, their education, and their gifts. We are thankful to Professor Blaikie for having given us a letter from a great artist, a great singer, who was also a Christian—Jenny Lind. She wrote a letter saying she rejoiced that all things pure and honest and lovely could be used for the glory of God, and it was her purpose to glorify God by the gift she had received from Him. Whatever the gift is, if we truly receive it from Him, and if we use it for Him, then, in that measure, we are doing his work. Outside of that work, what is there that we can do? The answer is a very short one. If we are outside of fellowship with God, this is what we can do: "Without Me ye can do—nothing." Therefore, we may heap up what we call work upon work, founding institutions, and what not; if it is not from God, if it is not in God, He calls it "nothing"; that is his epitaph. And you may heap a thousand nothings together; the sum is still—nothing. Christ says again on the same point: "Every plant which my Heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up."

A friend pointed out to me the words in Isaiah liii.: "The pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand"; that is the theory, if one may call it so, of Christian work, and first of all of Christ's work. This then is the definition of work; it is what God is doing, what He wants us to do, and what He calls us to do for Him at the present moment—not some indefinite theoretical work, but the work He appoints and is doing now. It may not be the same kind of work, for instance, or done in the same way, as before Christ came; or three hundred years ago, when the world was not at all what it is now. There were not the same facilities for locomotion, for printing and so on. But He carries on his work; He moves on, of course, on the same great principles of grace; but if one dare say so, He also has in the path of his providence milestones, some of which are very glorious milestones. But there is a will of God that bears date this year, and this day; and that is the work that we must try to know and to do.

PROGRESS NOT ALWAYS SUCCESS.

Then, what is progress in work? Is it success—what we call success? Not at all. Progress in work is just—going on. As we were told just now, it is doing perseveringly the will and therefore the work of God. Did it look like success, after Christ had been received in Jerusalem with acclamation, when all, even his disciples, forsook Him and fled? No; not what we call success. It seemed an utter failure. Was it progress? Surely it was. And it was in the faith that He was fulfilling the will of his Father that He was, as we have it in Hebrews, "learning obedience by the things which He suffered." That is to say, He was going from one thing to another, always perfectly obedient, but that obedience costing Him more and more suffering, and He meeting more and more opposition. And, as we were told just now, that is the path that God would put before us. Progress, therefore, is going on in the path of obedience, in the path of that faith which worketh by love.

Now comes the main question: What are the hindrances to progress? Why are we not always going on? Why should we stop, or stand aside, or go back? I have not to speak of the outward hindrances; first, because they do not depend upon us, and next, because those apparent outward hindrances very often are not hindrances at all. God uses them, and turns the hindrances into helps. There was the Church at Jerusalem, persecuted. Well, that would seem to be a great hindrance, but God scattered his word abroad by that very persecution. When we look at the history of the Church in the olden times, or those of the Reformation in England, Scotland, France, and elsewhere, we see hindrances innumerable; but we constantly find God bringing glory to Himself out of those hindrances, and showing that, after all, nothing can stop his purpose.

The Apostle Paul had a thorn in the flesh that was a hindrance; anyway, he thought it was, and he asked the Lord three times to be delivered from it. But God told him, "No; it is not a hindrance, but a help, for my strength is made perfect in weakness."

THREE CAUSES OF HINDRANCE.

Neither have we to speak of spiritual hindrances; though I must confess that these two subjects, hindrances to life, and hindrances to work, are very close to each other. If a poor fellow had a broken leg, that would be a great hindrance to health; but I suppose he would mention the broken leg as a great hindrance to work as well. When you come to look at it, very little divides the two subjects, but it is the hindrances to the outer life to which we have to address ourselves. The question is, then, Why do we not go on in the practical service of God? Why are we not doing more, and doing better, service for God? The hindrances, I think, can be classified in this wise. The work we are doing is either not from God; or it is not for God; or, finally, it is not done in God.

First, I say the hindrance may be simply that the work we are doing is not from God. A great deal of good and Christian work may be not from God; it may be of our own devising, of our own choosing. We have not begun at the starting-point, as we were told; for here also there is a starting-point. This is it. At the very moment of the conversion of Saul the persecutor, who became Paul the Apostle, his question was, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" That is the starting-point, and this must be our question continually about every work that may present itself, and every detail of work. "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart, and lean not to thine own understanding. In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He shall direct thy paths." A great deal of work done is useless, empty work, because it is not from the Lord. "Oh, is it not a good work?" Very good in itself, it may be, and yet not the work appointed of God for you. Or it may be appointed for you; but not yet—not just at this time. Perhaps it may have been your work yesterday, or last year, but it has ceased to be your work now. Through it God has educated you for some other work. Or it may be your work now, but you are not carrying it on in the way God would have you do it. In one way or another it is not the work God would have you do now and in his way.

In the next place, the work may not be done for God. Oh how much of Christian work is not done at all for Christ. How much work is done mechanically; how much just that we may do it as others are doing it. How much is done simply for the glory of our religious party, of our Association, of our church, of our denomination, and not with the view of pleasing and glorifying Christ. How much is done to satisfy our spiritual pride, or to keep up our Christian reputation. How much may be done at most to pacify our conscience, or, perhaps, to make amends, as we fondly imagine, for some of the secret things that were spoken of just now.

But if it is not done for God it is not God's work, and God cannot help us in it. Can you imagine a Government sending ammunition to a party of rebels who would use it against that Government? Do you suppose God will give us grace and power that we may glorify ourselves, or glorify our church, or anything except Himself? Surely not. That is another reason why we fail to progress in work.

FAITH AND WORK.

Then, in the third place, work may not be done in God. That is a great hindrance. We forget what kind of work God's work is; and that it is often called a fruit. It is a work in a sense, because we have to work, but in a deeper sense it is a fruit. It is the fruit of the Spirit. Now on this point we often make a great mistake, or a series of mistakes. First, there is a time when we imagine we can do so many things; that we can do what we please; that we can make work for God. As if we could make fruit; we try, and, of course, we fail. That kind of fruit (as we had occasion to say in this place some time ago) is sapless and tasteless; it has no seed and no virtue in it of any kind.

Then somebody points out that this fruit must come from God. We say that is good news; and it is good news. But then we imagine that because the fruit comes from God, we have nothing in the world to do, but just to let it grow; that we are not to give ourselves any trouble about it. Then we find that the fruit withers after all. It is as if a farmer or the keeper of a vineyard were to say to himself that because his wheat or his grapes come from God, from Providence, from the sunshine and the rain, therefore he has nothing to do. So he gives himself no trouble about attending to his vines or his field. What would they come to? He would learn that, though he can make no grain or fruit, he can put his vine or his field into the condition where the life that will issue in the fruit can show itself. Just so, our work is to place ourselves in the condition where God can work through us. All the life comes from Him; but we must place ourselves in that condition. If we are outside of that condition, we are not able to work, and we need not wonder that our work comes to nothing. God is more than willing to work for us by working in us, and by causing us to work. Let Him have His way. If we will not place ourselves in that condition, if we will not abide in fellowship with Him, in this sense that we will enjoy the sweetness of His Spirit, and that we will let His Spirit work through us, then there can be no work done.

We are always expecting that we shall discover some process by which God's work is going to be done of itself. God will have no such process. And though we have gone through ten thousand Christian blessings and experiences, we never come to a point (it would be a great pity if we did) when we shall not have to give ourselves over and over again and entirely to God, that He may do His work. God does not want to work through machinery; He wants to work through living minds and hearts that belong to Himself, that respond to Him, that love Him, and that serve Him.

LAZINESS THE GREAT OBSTACLE.

After all, the chief obstacle to work, as I have found after much meditation on the Old and New Testaments, on the Greek and Latin fathers, on ecclesiastical and contemporary history, and after looking around and looking within—the great obstacle to work is—laziness. Calvin says—excuse his words; they were spoken in the sixteenth century—"We are all a set of lazy donkeys!" I wish we had many such donkeys as he was, and that there were none lazier; still, he felt that to be one of the strongest temptations that beset him. People complain of not progressing; the fact is they do not like to walk at all. They do not hear the word of which we were told a little ago: "Rise, take up thy bed and walk"; they remain on their bed, and dream about working. That is the point on which there must be a remedy applied, and at once. We must confess it to God, and not call it by the name of timidity, or humility, or anything else, but call it by its true name. There are those who are too slow; and that is a great hindrance. There are those again who may be too fast—may be a bit presumptuous; they think to do great things, but they are the very ones often to fall back for want of perseverance. They are like the man who began to build. He was not satisfied to build a little cottage; he wanted to build a cathedral: he never finished it. And nothing looks more like a ruin than an unfinished building.

Then again, a great obstacle to progress is what the Bible calls in one place "the lusts of other things." We want to do God's work and a great many other things besides. We will give God his share—it may be we make it a larger and larger item; but we have a little private office, as it were—a little corner for ourselves. That is enough to destroy our fellowship with God, and to mar our work. "Much rubbish" is one of the passages in the Conference programme. We must treat it as Nehemiah treated the household stuff of old Tobiah—cast it all out of the chamber.

"BARELY TIME."

Then, another great hindrance is fear—timidity. Fear of suffering, for instance. How many are afraid of the least suffering. That is in the parable of the sower. They have begun to work, when there comes—shall I call it persecution? Perhaps less than that—a little trouble, or mockery, or misunderstanding on the part of their friends; then they go back. They are like a certain soldier I was told of; he was a recruit, a young fellow, who had not acquired the habit of going to war. Someone reproached him with running away in battle. "Oh," said he, "it was barely time; the bullets were coming quite near me." So a great many workers run away, barely in time; just when it begins to be a little too hot. I have no doubt a great many turn back on that account. There are others who are afraid of going too far. I must confess I am afraid of not going far enough. I was instructed by the first thing I learned on coming to England this time. After I had landed (a very happy moment when you land!) I got a newspaper, and I learned this, that if you want your horse to win, you must not pull him back.* I suppose it is a very bad thing; I do not know much about it. Still, it was a good thing to learn that, if you want to reach the goal and win the race, you must not pull back. On the contrary, you require all the time to be running as fast as you can; with the Spirit of God to guide you, or you may run the wrong way, and break your head. But with the Spirit of wisdom and purity and power that God gives, we cannot go too far. The danger with most of us is that we do not go far enough.

And now, let us all ask God to show us first what He would have us to do, be it the plainest work—what we call "secular" work: there is no secular work if we do it for God; we may keep sheep for God, as Moses kept them for so many years. Be assured that even if God seems to withdraw you from what you call work, you are still working. Many of us knew that dear man who has now gone to his rest—Sillwood, of Keswick. He spent years and years unable to move at all. His bedclothes were fastened up to his lips. He said to me years ago (and he lived years after that), "God has only left me my tongue and my eyes." There he was. He used his tongue to praise God and to pray for work abroad, as well as at home; and in his eyes I may truly say the peace and joy of the Holy Ghost were beaming. He surely was working intensely for God and glorifying his Master.

MARY'S SPIRIT AND MARTHA'S ZEAL.

I asked a good lady to give me some advice and experience on this subject, and she said a great hindrance to work is want of quietness. That thought struck me very much, I confess. We do not take time enough to ask God for his direction; time enough to speak to Him, or time enough to listen to Him. You remember Martha and Mary. We must have the spirit of Mary with the busy hands of Martha. It has been well said that it is the spirit of Mary we must seek to have first. As a French pastor said (who has also gone to his reward), "If you have the spirit of work first, you will carry the fever of your work even into your closet at the time of prayer. If you have the spirit of prayer first, you will carry the peace of your fellowship with God into all your work." It was all summed up yesterday in one word, when we were told that we must not separate work from service. Remember your work is service; remember that the Master is there, and there will be progress in work. You will give prayer and the Bible their place, and that is a large place. But you will not give them (allow me to say also) a place that God does not give them. I am afraid there are some who make too much of devotion and of time spent merely in going over and over the same passages of the Bible, underscoring them, writing marginal notes, consulting the commentaries, and so on, without giving their study the commentary of obedience. That, after all, is the best commentary. I think it is Mrs. Booth who has said a very good thing on this subject—that many Christians ought to alter a hymn they are fond of singing to—

Oh! to do nothing, nothing!

And it is quite true that while we confess before God that we are nothing, and acknowledge that we are poor and blind and miserable and naked, yet Christ comes to us and says, "I counsel thee to buy of Me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich." The wrong kind of passivity and inertness and supineness does not at all make up for the wrong kind of activity. We want to learn of God the true passivity of spirit, the spirit that will lead us to true activity, where God can work through us. As we were told last night, the time has come for prayer to be merged in action.

DO NOT DISDAIN SMALL THINGS.

Therefore, brethren, do not seek for great things, nor keep back from them if God should call you to them. Do not disdain small things. Another French pastor, Adolphe Monod, said a word on that subject that you may like to hear. What he said was this: "Between the great things that we cannot do and the small things that we will not do, the danger is that we shall do nothing." On this subject also a great thinker and a great genius, who was also a humble Christian, Pascal, says: "We must do little things as being great things, because of the majesty of Jesus Christ, who does them in us; and we must do great things as being little things, because of his almighty power."

Besides, what is great, and what is little? Whom does God call first, and whom does God call last? The first is the nearest to Him. I read some time ago a beautiful fact in history. It was in the very olden time when there were kings in Ireland. I hope I am not going into politics; but there was an Irish king wandering about, and he came into the mansion of one of the lords of the land—a very rich man, who was giving a great feast that day. The king was unexpected, and, as he entered the banqueting hall, he took the place nearest the door, that was left empty—of course the very lowest place, and with the very lowest of those who took part in the feast. At once the head of the house and the lords with him rushed to the other end of the hall, and they said to the king, "Please let his Majesty come and sit at the head of the table." The king answered, "Where I sit, there is the head of the table." Is not that encouragement enough for us? Just get nearest to the King, if you want to be at the head of the table.

FORWARD, THE WATCHWORD.

And now with Him shall we not go forward? Shall we not cast aside every weight, and do away with every hindrance? Shall we let neither the burden of the past, which we cannot alter, nor the burden of the future, with which we have nothing to do, weigh upon us; and shall we let ourselves rest upon the word, upon the faithfulness, upon the love, of God? Shall we go on, not fearing to walk in the Saviour's path—willing to walk alone if necessary, and to be called singular? That really does not mean anything. You will never be alone if you walk with Him; and you will be one with all true-hearted children of God, whatever name they may bear, who are loyal to their Lord and yours. You will have no time left, if you are in earnest, for judging others who may be doing other work, and yet be doing also the Lord's work. Each will be fulfilling his appointed place and task, as in the Tabernacle of old each one had his appointed place and task. And then we shall be ready for every change. We shall go from milestone to milestone, ready for orders. Says one, "Ready for orders is a higher plane of Christian character than to be merely ready for work." Let me read you a few lines from a letter received by a young lady who intended to be a missionary in China. It was written by Mr. Hudson Taylor, who is now on the way to America, so that I may read it. He wrote: "I can join you in thanking God that the way seems closed to your going to China. When God clearly indicates his mind it is great cause for thankfulness. But it is not of so much moment that we are engaged in this or that service, as to be assured that we are where He would have us to be, and doing what He would have us to do. Knowing the Master's will, and assured that we are gladdening Him by cheerful acquiescence in it, is a joy, whether it involves our being laid on a bed of helpless weakness, or being employed in the high places of the field."

I close with one word from Christ Himself. Let us be of those disciples of whom He said, summing up the whole subject of work in that well-known passage: "He that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God." "Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you that which is well-pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen."

THURSDAY EVENING.

SIR ARTHUR BLACKWOOD,

in the course of his opening remarks, said: I was struck by the expression used at the great meeting we held the other night at Exeter Hall, by one who said that the great national sin of the opium traffic in China appeared to have lost its grip of the conscience of the nation, if it has one. And that is so with reference to these subjects that we have before us to-day. Is it not of importance that God's Word should really take hold of us as with a vice, that it should enter into us, and be in our hearts as a burning fire, constraining us so that we are compelled to go forward in the heat of our spirits? The Lord grant that instead of lamenting over lack of progress, we may be eagerly pressing forward into the unoccupied places!

Suffer just one word with regard to those particular subjects that were brought forward the other night. Are we exercised about them? We are meeting here to consider progress not only in our own souls, but as regards the work of the Lord around us and in foreign lands. Is it the case that national sins fail to touch the Lord's people? Is it the case that many of us, perhaps, here are callous and careless as to the crime of the opium traffic in China, the drink traffic in Africa, and unmentionable national crimes in India? Are we leaving these things to associations? Are we leaving untouched these hindrances to the progress of the work of God, unconfessed by us in private, unprayed about in the family, unprotested against in public? Though that was a grand, an unanimous, an enthusiastic gathering the other night, yet proportionately how few of the Christians of England seem to care whether these things are so or not. There was a word spoken the other night by one who spoke a true word when he said, though it is often forgotten, that nations are judged in this world. Nations, as such, cannot be judged hereafter. We believing people are part of this nation, and unless we play our part as Christians with regard to national sins, we bear our share of guilt involving national judgment; and when God permits national judgments to fall there is no distinction made, there can be none then, between individuals. When Nebuchadnezzar, king of the Chaldees, came upon Judah for national guilt, none were spared—old men, nor maidens, nor children; all were involved in it. If we think, then, of hindrances to progress, let us meditate upon this subject, and ask whether we have as yet awaked as Christians to our individual responsibility as constituting part of the nation, and as sharing national guilt, unless by prayer, by protest, by effort such as is in our power to make, we range ourselves on the side of God against the devil.

A Life of Endless Progress.

REV. EVAN H. HOPKINS.

The walk represents the practical conduct—the manner of life of the believer. It is the outward expression of his inner condition—the index of his real character. It is something more than the views he holds, or the doctrines he teaches, or the desires he feels: it is the tangible resultant of all those hidden forces that are at work within the man. We judge of a man's character by his walk, for there we see it translated into a language which every man can understand. Those truths that he has received secretly into his heart are there translated, and any man can read that language. Progress means a growing conformity to the mind of Him who has called us, and who has put before us an ideal of practical godliness. Progress means moving heavenward, approaching more closely to that ideal. True, it is not attainment, but it is movement. The hindrance to progress points to those impediments that lie in the way of the believer, the opposing forces that are continually assailing him on the road. He has to meet with contending influences—evil agencies, innumerable difficulties—and all these tend to retard him in his progress; but he need not be discouraged, and certainly he must not expect failure, because God has anticipated all these difficulties. He has provided for all his needs, and seeing the sufficiency of the Divine provision, we feel that there is abundant ground to expect victory, that there is every reason to expect progress in that path of humble obedience and simple trust into which God has called us.

Three things God has given the believer for this walk—a path, a presence, and a power. What is the path? What is it to be progressing in the path? Walking in the truth of God. I have no greater joy, said the aged apostle John, than to hear that my children walk in the truth, not simply that they walk sincerely and truthfully, but that they walk in the truth of this word. Progress, means increasing in the knowledge of the truth. Progress, means increasing in conformity to the truth and in the confession of the truth—getting to know it more perfectly, practising it more thoroughly, manifesting it more clearly. There can be no such thing as progress, if we get away from the truth of the revelation. If we turn aside from the Holy Scripture, we may be advancing, as some like to call it, but progress means something more than advancing. The train may be said to be advancing when it leaves the rails and flies off at full speed down the embankment, but the passengers would not call that progress, because the rails are as necessary to the true progress of the train as the steam; and so keeping close to the rails of Divine truth is as essential to the progress of the believer as the power of the Holy Ghost. But it means walking in the will of God. The walk of the Christian is not simply a stroll. It is a journey; not an aimless wander, but a course having a definite destination. You know when a man takes a stroll he intends to come back again after a while to the place from which he started; but when a Christian in right earnest starts upon the life of faith, no such notions can be in his mind He has commenced a journey which, starting from the City of Destruction, leads right on through the gates of Heaven.

TO EVERY MAN HIS WORK.

God has a special will for every one of His children, and He is ready to reveal that will to us every day. As we need daily bread, so we need the daily opening up of his will to us. It is a part of our spiritual food. "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent Me;" and one important element of all progress is to be able readily to detect what God's will is. Not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is. The faculty of spiritual perception and the readiness of immediate obedience, not only to see it, but to do it. If there is fear and suspicion in relation to the will of God, there is a hindrance. Oh! what a common hindrance this is. We ask the question: Give myself wholly to the will of God—where will it lead to? what will it involve? When we see that infinite love and freedom and power have all combined to mark out that path for us called "the will of God," at once we are ready to respond, "Yes, Lord, I am willing that Thou shouldest lead me blindfold." At once you are ready to put your hand into his hand, and to say: "Lord, Thou alone shalt lead me." You know that the path of the will of God is the path of freedom. It is not the will of our Heavenly Father that any of his children should be weighed down by care, hampered by besetting sin, or burdened by weights.

There are things that hinder progress, and we have been looking at some of them to-day. As we have been already reminded, it is not enough for us to know it and say, "Yes, that is true." Have we acted upon it? Laying aside every weight, have we known definitely, each one of us, so to deal with those things as to drop them? But it is walking in the love of God. Walking in love. The whole of our activity is to be in the atmosphere of love; you are to do nothing outside that atmosphere. Keep yourselves in the love of God. Never question the freeness and the fulness of His love to you, unworthy one, and see that you believe in that love by manifesting the same spirit to everyone around. Drink it into your souls as the plant drinks in the sunshine, and let it be seen that in every look, in every word, in every action, you are just steeped in love; that love radiates from your very countenance to every member.

Whatever hinders the love of God in the heart is a hindrance to the progress in the life. Now, beloved, you cannot manifest that which you do not possess. Trying to be living without having love is a hard and hopeless task; but if you are abiding in love, the Holy Ghost is filling you with love. It is a fruit of the Spirit, as we were reminded this morning, in the believer, and the very first thing that the Holy Spirit puts into the heart of the believer is love, then joy, and then peace; and, when your heart is filled with those three things—the first-fruits of the Spirit—you are in a right condition, and because in a right condition, is it not easy and natural that there should be right conduct—gentleness, meekness, and so forth? Remember that love does not seek limits, but outlets. Love is not like a stagnant lake; it is like a mighty, flowing river. It cannot be more or less. It must flow on. It must spend itself. This is progress in the truth of God, in the will of God, in the love of God. That is the path.

LIVING IN THE LIGHT.

But there is a presence. God has given us a presence. What shall we say about it? First, it is an illuminated presence. "I am the Light of the world. He that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." Is not that a beautiful thought? In simple life, that is the first thing. He showed them the light of life. Your life should be illuminated. All life needs light. Take the ivy; put it into a dark cellar, and what have you? A pale sickly thing. It lacks the light of life. Look at the Christian. Yes, there is spiritual life, but where is that Christian life? In the gloom, in the shadow, in the twilight, in the darkness. It lacks the light of life—that light which is appropriate to the Divine life which has quickened it. "He that followeth Me." It is because we do not follow we get into the darkness. There is the past, and here is the present. Here is the promise: "He that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." What hinders from following the Lord fully? Have you noticed the twenty-third Psalm—the connection between that thought in the beginning, and in the end? "He leadeth me." I am following if He leads; and if I follow Him, what will follow me?—goodness and mercy. If I do not follow Him, I shall miss both. It is following the Lord. It is communion with Him. It is not thinking of his blessings. You follow Him, and goodness and mercy will follow you.

Then, secondly, it is a separating presence. By separation we mean consecration; and, as you know, there are two signs of consecration. We are separated from something, and separated unto something—from the world, unto God. There are two ways by which we may press this truth—the negative side or the positive. We may be thinking of the hindrances, and the weights, and the besetting sins, that have to be laid aside. There is another way. We may be thinking of Him, and we may be realising to-day the attractive power of his presence, and we may be drawing nearer to Him. There are two ways by which I might separate a quantity of iron filings from a mass of sawdust. I might blow away the sawdust, or I might bring a powerful magnet to bear and leave the sawdust behind, and take away the filings. Here we have a separating presence because it is an attractive presence. How did God bring Israel out of Egypt? They had realised the blessedness of being safe under the shelter of the blood. They were still in Egypt. There were many things from which they needed to be separated. And now comes the manifestation of the Presence in that pillar of cloud and that pillar of fire. Oh, what a wondrous type!—all Israel coming down, and gathering round that pillar and gazing into the presence of God, realising the blessedness of being there. "In thy presence is fulness of joy." The pillar moves, and they are so happy in the Presence that they must follow on—there must be nothing between; and so the pillar of cloud and the pillar of fire bring all Israel out of Egypt. What a number of things they must have dropped upon the road. So it is with us. It is well sometimes to leave the negative side, and get a view of the Master. Has He not been manifesting Himself? Have we not seen fresh beauty? Have we not said, "Draw me nearer, still nearer?" and as we have gazed on his beauty, how all these other things have seemed as nothing, and we have let them drop!

AN APPROPRIATING PRESENCE.

Thirdly, it is an appropriating presence. Think of a citadel in the centre of a city, and the walls surrounding that city. Now, if you are a Christian, the Lord has taken possession of the citadel of your being and your spirit. You are his. Progress in the life, and then in the walk, means that having taken possession of your spirit, He now advances and takes possession of your soul—as we heard yesterday morning; and from the soul He goes on to the body. These are the walls of the city, and in the walls are five gates. Every sense is an avenue to the citadel; every sense is an inlet of temptation. Whatever you set apart to God is sanctified: whatever God appropriates to Himself is sanctified. You have been thinking about giving yourself wholly to Him; do not stop there. Look at the Divine side. God must sanctify you wholly. "I pray God your spirit, soul, and body be preserved blameless"—the Lord taking possession of the whole man. And now the city will be occupied; you have been keeping the walls and the gates yourselves. The Lord has had the citadel, but "except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain." It is not your watching—it is the Divine power that is to keep the city; but in order to keep the city, and in order that there shall be real progress, He must appropriate the whole man—spirit, soul, and body. You see, then, that the presence is an illuminating presence, a separating presence, an appropriating presence.

Now we come to the power. Power is absolutely necessary. It is not enough that the road should be prepared and the way laid open. It is not enough that we should be at liberty—every chain snapped, every weight rolled off that retards progress: we need power. Where is it? "To walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, being strengthened with all might according to his glorious power." You see the connection in that first chapter of the Epistle to the Colossians: "Walking worthily, strengthened with all might," according to his all-sufficiency and unfailing power—continuous power, available power. How is this power to be possessed? Let us try and be very simple here. There is the power provided. The road is open and there is the presence, but I am weak and helpless. How is this power to be had? How may I receive it? I ask, How is it? By effort? By faith? That is an important question. To say that there is no effort, that there should be no effort in the Christian life, is to say that which distinctly is not true; but the effort in the wrong place is a serious hindrance to progress, just as it is a serious hindrance to our salvation at the beginning. Divine power is not received by striving, but by trusting. Many of us are struggling to get the power we ought to be trusting to get. The activity will come when the power comes, or when you are in a right relationship to the power. You are only a vessel. What is a vessel? You say you have no power. Does that mean you have no responsibility to fulfil the conditions. Surely not! I say you are only an empty vessel, but what can you say of a vessel? It has no power. Yes, but it has capacity—capacity to receive. Christ has the ability to accomplish. We want the empty vessel and the full Christ to come together. Power belongeth unto God, but you are responsible—for what? Opening your heart to receive the power. Ah! that brings us to the will. Yes, there is a little door at the entrance, and they call it the will. You can open it or shut it. There is Divine power outside. "He is able to do exceeding abundantly." All power belongs to Him. You may keep the door shut, and fold your hands and say, "I have no power; I am waiting for the power." What a mistake you make! You can say, "Yes, Lord, I am utterly helpless, but I am willing; in my weakness I say 'Yes' to Thee." You can open it or shut it. You can say "I will," or "I won't." Remember, it may be to-night.

HOW TO GET POWER.

The way to get the power—that is the point. Activity when you are in a wrong condition is just like a man putting forth efforts when he is partially paralysed. He has just enough power to make him feel the pain those efforts produce, but not enough power to make those efforts effective. If it were possible to put into the physical being such a fulness of power and life that you restore him to vigour and soundness—what then? Then all his activity would be easy, happy, and effective. That is where the activity comes in. It is being strengthened. It is after you are strengthened according to his power; but first there must be the consecration and there must be the trusting. Now we come to another point. How is the power to be used? By acting rather than by praying. Oh! how subtle our hearts are. We are always praying. There is a time to ask and there is a time to take. There is a time to seek and there is a time to claim. And so there is a time to act, and if you trust Him why are you waiting? You say, "Surely I must wait for the consciousness." Consciousness, that is another word for feeling. Have you seen the distinction between conviction of a fact and consciousness of a fact? I may continually walk in the conviction and the truth of a thing without any consciousness of it. That is to walk by faith. "Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence, the conviction, of things not seen." Not realised, not felt, acting as if you felt, though you do not feel, being so fully persuaded that it is true because God has said that we are to step out into the dark. This is acting.

So, if you have really brought your souls into that attitude in relation to the power, the next thing that rests upon you is applying it in action, and then you discover, to your infinite joy, and you realise, that the Lord's word is truth, and that it is just as He said it would be, and you step out, the stream of his power flows in, and the life is triumphant. That is what we want to-night. Now deal with that point. It seems to me we may deal with two other points. We may be occupied with other things, but until that step is taken there is an impediment—a hindrance, and you can make no progress. I say the path is open—that is of Christ. The presence is here—that is Christ. The power is provided, and that is Christ, for it has pleased the Father that all the fulness should be in Christ. Do you believe it? Do you believe that Christ is God's answer to your every need, and that, having Christ, you have the conviction—not the consciousness—that you have the power? What follows? Obedience! Step out, beloved brother, and simply take God's word as your warrant. Keep your eye fixed upon Him, and now you begin to learn it is a life of faith, but it is a life of trial, of victory, of holy, blessed calmness and rest, a life of endless progress, following the Lamb whithersoever He goeth.

Hindrances Within and Without.

PASTOR RAPPARD.

When we speak of the "work of the Lord," we mean the glorious salvation wrought out by God in Christ Jesus, by which sinful and ruined men are rescued from perdition, and made partakers of his everlasting Kingdom. The great work of redemption was accomplished by the death and resurrection of our Lord Jesus. When He ascended up into heaven, He commissioned His disciples to carry forth into the world the blessed tidings of this great salvation. This is their work. We have to speak to-day of some of the hindrances which the servants of God are apt to meet in the carrying out of their commission.

There may be hindrances in the workers themselves, and hindrances in their fields of labour.

I.—IN THE WORKERS THEMSELVES.

(1) A divided heart.—"Judas Iscariot was numbered among us, says Peter, and received his portion in this ministry." Yet "he obtained a field with the reward of his iniquity." In the beginning of his discipleship he no doubt tried to give half his heart to the Lord, while giving half to Mammon. But since no man can serve two masters he was brought by the craft and subtlety of the devil to hate the Lord Jesus, and to cleave to Mammon. Thus he lost his habitation, and his bishopric was given to another (Acts i. 17-20). Some time ago, in one of our Swiss villages, a woman lay dying. She could not find rest or peace. At length she was visited by a child of God to whom she could unburden herself. And what was her complaint? "Ah, my divided heart! my divided heart!" was all that she could say "This," said she, "has been a hindrance to myself and to others in the work of the Lord."

(2) Pride, and an unbroken spirit.—Jesus was meek and lowly in heart. When his disciples had been reasoning one with another in the way who was the greatest, our Lord at once rebuked the dangerous spirit which was thus made manifest. Calling a little child, He set it in the midst of these men, saying, "Except ye turn, and become as little children, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven." Immediately after this, when speaking of work done for Him, He says, "Whoso shall receive one such little child in my name, receiveth Me;" thereby showing them how important it is, with true humility, to be willing to do the little things. Gebrochen werden thut weh; gebrochen sein ist selig!" says a countryman of mine; which means, "The being broken is painful; to be broken is bliss." Or, as Count Zinzendorf puts it, "As long as I wished to be something, I had nothing but misery; since I have become a nothing (worm), I am happy and content." Ah! pride, the fruit of the fatal seed sown by our enemy, when he said, "Ye shall be as God"; pride, which causes God to withdraw his help, for He resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble; pride is a great hindrance to work for Him.

(3) Closely connected with this is a certain sensitiveness, which causes us to be easily wounded, and may lead us to have feelings of bitterness against another. Alas, too often such bitter feelings are found in the hearts of men who yet serve the same Master! Let us not shrink from calling this sensitiveness by its proper name. It is envy. Joseph's brethren were moved with envy against him (Acts vii. 9). Pilate knew that for envy the Jews had delivered Jesus unto him (Matt. xxvi. 18). Much strength is wasted by such evil thoughts. They must and they can be overcome in the strength of the Overcomer. Tersteegen's testimony in his last will was this, "Nor do I feel anything towards any man, save only unconditional pardon, sincere humiliation, and hearty affection."

(4) The want of the love of God, of which it is said that it is shed abroad in our hearts through the Holy Ghost, is one of the greatest hindrances to progress in the work of the Lord. Love towards a perishing world caused God to give what was most precious to Him, his only beloved Son. Jesus, having loved his own which were in the world, and loving them even unto the end, washed his disciples' feet, and then went forth to suffer and die. Paul says that all his faith and self-denying zeal would be of no avail without love. Words spoken in the service of the Gospel are useless unless they come from a heart which knows the love of God; indeed, they are worse than useless. Love of the brethren, and in the love of the brethren: love to every soul (2 Pet. i. 7, R.V.) is the great commandment. He who does not love is not fit for the service of God.

(5.) Restlessness and excitability is a further hindrance to progress in work. God has the fulness of rest in Himself, and He works in majestic repose from the beginning until now. Our Lord Jesus bequeathed to his followers a power of restfulness which He calls "my peace" (John xiv. 27). It was in the strength of this peace that He Himself always spoke, and did the right thing, even in the most difficult and trying surroundings. We often hear people complain that they can do nothing well, because they never find time for inward rest and concentration of spirit. Dear friends, if any of you really cannot find time to read your Bible with earnest purpose and prayer; if you can no longer collect your thoughts, and plunge your spirit into the heart of God in earnest supplication; if you find it impossible to perform your great duties as well as your little ones, especially those in your own family circle, in a spirit of calm, deep, inward peace—then something is wrong. It is time to awake, to repent of this inward unrest and disorder, and to turn to God, who has said, "In quietness and confidence shall be your strength." In our busy bustling time it may often be needful to take days of rest, not mere physical or mental rest and change, but days of real, inward concentration of soul in God.

(6) Unfaithfulness in small things hinders progress. If ye have not been faithful in that which is less, who will commit to your trust the true riches? (Luke xvi. 10, 11.) He that is faithful in a very little, is faithful also in much. What is meant by these little things? No doubt, our nearest and simplest duties; such as, for instance, the employment of our time. Sins of disobedience, in the matter of reading the newspaper or in other reading at undue times, are far more frequent than many would like to admit. Again, time is too often squandered in useless conversations, or even in positive idleness. If you would be faithful, let your mind, your thoughts, your tongue, at all times be under the control of the Spirit of God. A French proverb says, "When you are in the family circle, watch over your temper. When you are alone, watch over your thoughts. When you are in company, watch over your tongue."

If we pass lightly over these items of trust which God lays in the way of each one of us, then He must withhold from us a larger share of work. God will not take his scholars into a higher class, until they have learned the lessons of the lower. "For whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have abundance; but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that which he hath" (Matt. xiii. 12).

(7) Discouragement is a dangerous thing, and often proves a great hindrance to progress in work; for it is nothing less than want of trust in the power and faithfulness of God. It was an assault of this enemy which made David say, "I shall one day fall into the hands of Saul;" and eventually led him to use such a shameful disguise in the presence of King Achish. Hear the voice of faith: "Who art thou, O great mountain? Before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain" (Zech. iv. 7). And again our Lord says, "Have faith in God. Verily, I say unto you, whosoever shall say unto this mountain, Be thou taken up and cast into the sea, he shall have it" (Mark xi. 23). Such mighty words are given us, in order that none of us may lose heart or give way to discouragement, when placed under circumstances of difficulty, or exercised in the school of patience.

And now, how shall the Christian worker overcome all these hindrances? The Book of truth gives us an unmistakeable answer. The believer in Jesus Christ has received the promise of the Holy Ghost as an abiding presence and power. In the eighth chapter of Romans the word Spirit occurs over and over again, as a testimony to the whole Church that, after justification by faith, there begins for the believer the life and work of the Spirit. If any man hath not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his (Rom. viii. 9). In his last discourses our Saviour constantly referred to this supreme gift, the Comforter—the promise of the Father. The disciples waited, according to their Lord's command, until the promised Spirit came. Would you learn what progress in the work of the Lord is? Turn to the Acts of the Apostles: they are the acts of men filled and moved by the Spirit.

Without this Spirit none of our doings are worthy to be called the Lord's work. Works done without the Spirit of God are in themselves hindrances to God's work. They cumber the ground. They are occasions of stumbling to the world. How often do we find the expression, "Peter, Paul, full of the Holy Ghost?" ...This is the standard for the true workman of the Lord Jesus Christ, for one who would have no hindrance in himself, nor be a hindrance to others.

II.—HINDRANCES IN THE FIELDS OF LABOUR.

Our Lord tells us in the parable of the sower that there is diversity in the field in which the seed of the kingdom is sown. Of Jesus Himself it is said (Matth. xiii. 54): "He could not do many mighty works there because of their unbelief." The Thessalonians were more open for the preaching of the Gospel than the Athenians. We do not see that the Lord or his apostles used a diversity of methods; methods are not the chief thing to suit the different fields. They preached the simple Gospel in power and in the Holy Ghost; they had conversations with individuals (John iv.; Acts xxi. 31), and they took care that those who had become obedient to the faith should be gathered into a church, placed under the oversight of bishops and elders, and fed with the sincere milk of the Word. Looking into our own fields of labour, we ask, "What are the hindrances that we chiefly meet with there?" The answer is manifold.

(1) The strong attraction of the things of earth on the minds of the people.—This is the first consequence of the Fall of man. The bond of holy fellowship which united our first parents with their glorious God was rent asunder by their wilful act of disobedience and distrust. They died. Death is a severance of that which belongs together. Man was severed from God. The bond, loosened Godward, was now bound earthward. Hence the cleaving of the natural man to that which is seen; the tendency to love and serve the creature more than the Creator (Rom. i. 25). None but the second Adam, the crucified and risen Lord, could bring help. His death sets the earth-bound soul free; his resurrection restores it to the communion of God, binding it unto Himself.

(2) In many countries Rationalism has held its sway for years among a population that calls itself Christian, and has exerted a deadening influence on all around. The people not only have no conception as to what the plan of salvation is, but they have been led systematically into infidelity and unbelief. When the evangelist comes to them with his message of salvation, they have a ready answer: "We are in advance of all that sort of thing," they say; "it is the invention of priests. We have learned to believe only what we can see and understand."

(3) But mere Formalism, where the church has, like Sardis, the name that it liveth whereas it is dead, is likewise a terrible hindrance to all development and progress in work. Our Lord Jesus Christ had no more inveterate opponents than the Scribes and Pharisees; and in our days worldly churches and dead forms set up embankments, as it were, against the spreading and overflowing of divine life. Words of truth without the realised truth of the words, and without the verifying influence of the Spirit, fall like mildew on the garden of God.

(4) Amongst the hindrances to the progress of the Lord's work we must reckon that dreadful array of the sins of the flesh which, like a murderous pestilence, destroys the life of many. Drunkenness is slaying its thousands; therefore do we welcome the temperance societies that are doing their noble work courageously and with zeal. The voice of the rescued drunkard telling of past misery and present liberty through Christ is not heard in vain. (Ours is a day of unions, societies, clubs of all kinds, which nurture worldliness and levity. Our young men and boys are in constant danger of being caught in some one or other of these snares, and when the voice of the Good Shepherd reaches their ear, they are already bound to another master.) In rural districts the sin of sorcery, under a variety of forms and names, is doing a work of destruction, and holding souls aloof from Christ. This sin shows itself chiefly in times of disease, when people seek their refuge in amulets and certain superstitious rites, instead of fleeing for refuge to Him who is the true and only Helper.

Glancing at the foreign mission field, we might mention caste distinction and many fearful customs and superstitions, which form a mighty barrier to the spread of the pure religion of the lowly Jesus.

But enough. Scripture tells us of the state of disorder and rebellion into which sin has hurled mankind. But where sin abounded, grace did abound more exceedingly. The two kingdoms between which the Lord has from the beginning "put enmity," are still standing face to face, and the war is declared on the whole line. We know, my beloved brethren, on whose side shall be the victory; yea, on whose side is the victory. Much has been done since the day when a company of a hundred and twenty men and women were gathered together in that upper chamber of Jerusalem, and prayed with one accord, waiting to be endued with power from on high. If the hindrances to the progress of God's work are great and manifold, let our faith be all the greater, all the more purified by the fire. If human props fail, let our faith be grounded all the more firmly on the Almighty God. Man's extremity shall be God's opportunity of making bare his arm, which has never yet been shortened. A single man with God is always in the majority. In the name of God, he can leap over walls and can overcome the Goliaths of his foes. Yes, the Lord has done great things; we will repeat it with praise. He is doing great things in our days. He will do greater things still. They that sow in tears shall reap in joy. He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him.

Launch out into the Deep.

REV. CHAS. A. FOX.

The few words that I would speak this evening are addressed to you as Christian workers. I would throw out very humbly a few words on the great service to which you and I are called. How good it was of our blessed Master to say, "No man ever yet hated his own flesh." Christ will not be the first man to do this. Thank God, though we are utter failures, He will not hate us—his own flesh; but He will have mercy upon us, and He will recover us, for He has redeemed us wholly; body, soul, and spirit. And it is for this purpose that you wait this evening, just to make sure once again that the covenant abides between us and Him—that we present unto Him body, soul, and spirit, and that He accepts, and will keep henceforth, body, soul, and spirit for Himself. Blessed Lord, do this, we beseech thee!

First of all, let me say that, as Christian workers, it seems to me this is the chief thing—always to be conscious of the presence of the Lord. Let us always see Him with us. Put not forth thy presence in the sight of the King. There will immediately follow a losing of self, an abandoning of our own resources and power. "Mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of Hosts." We shall be humbled to the dust. Like Isaiah of old, we shall indeed cry out, "Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of Hosts." Like John of old, we shall fall as dead at his feet, because our eyes have seen the great High Priest, as it was in his case; and, like Job, this permanent and continual sight of the King shall empty us and humble us, that we shall say, "I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear: but now my eye seeth Thee. Wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes." Servants of God, ever in the presence of the Master, I beseech you, abhor yourselves. Let us all always be in that conscious abhorrence of ourselves, that the glory may be of God alone, and to Him.

THE EFFECT OF SEEING SELF.

This will keep us in our right place. We cannot, we dare not put ourselves forward in the presence, the realised presence, of a king; and this will affect us in all that we do or say. There will be a power in which we speak, there will be a power in our very presence, because we are conscious of the presence of the King—the saving, the keeping, the awful King Himself. This, I believe, is what we need as workers for Him—that we should grow in acquaintance with our dear Lord, that we may know Him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, and be made conformable unto his death. Oh, that there were more of the spirit of death amongst the servants of the Lord! Oh, that we recognised that we have indeed died with Christ on the cross; that we have left behind us on the cross our own life, and we have only his life! Henceforth, it is not I, but Christ that liveth in me. May this be an increasing reality in the soul! May we be growing in that sense, that we are under sentence of death—yea, that we are crucified with Christ!

And with these inspirations I am sure will come such a blessed sense of rest that we shall indeed enter into the calm of God—the Sabbath rest of our God. "Come unto Me, and I will give you rest," said Christ; and we have come, and been justified through his precious blood. But "Come under Me, and ye shall find rest, take my yoke upon you, and learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls." Unto Christ first; but under Him immediately. Are we accepting Christ's will at home, in the crossing time, in the thorn in the flesh, which you and I perhaps suffer from? Do we gather grapes of thorns? God can; and God does. Oh, how fruitful was that thorn in the flesh that St. Paul had! What a marvellous produce it brought in! What further grace he knew through it! How he could say: "For this thing I besought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me. And He said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee: for my strength is made perfect in weakness. Most gladly, therefore, will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me." Have we nothing of this sort, servants of the living God? And are we constantly in that holy rest? Many of God's servants, I fear, bring an unrest with them. They do not seem to hallow the place where they are. The place where we stand should be holy ground, because Jesus is with us; and wherever He stands it is holy ground. If you and I, children of God, would exemplify this by the power of the Holy Ghost, wherever we go we should be preaching; whether we uttered any single word or not, we should be servants of Christ. Oh, shall we not enter into that rest? Shall we not find that rest by accepting his will and his yoke?

UNTRIMMED LAMPS.

Further, I believe that the servants of Christ fail often in their great ministry because they are untrimmed lamps. They are burning the charred wick of the Word, instead of the fresh word, fresh from his own lips. You know the power of a fresh word from God Himself. There is a marvellous power in it; and we need to have a fresh word from God every day, and this word must be steeped in fresh oil every day—the oil of the Holy Ghost. We cannot burn Scripture alone; it will not give a true light; it will flicker and die out. We may heap passage upon passage, but it is not a true light until it is steeped in the oil of the Holy Ghost. Workers of the Lord, see to it, I beseech you, that we trim these lamps of ours, and keep the fresh wick of the word still in the lamp, and steeped in the oil of the Holy Ghost continually.

Let me say this further word—I feel sure you realise it—that we need three things for this blessed service. First, a veil that we may be hidden, like the cherubim who veiled their faces and veiled their feet. Ours must be a hidden ministry—hidden, I mean, from outward show and display. We live in dangerous times. Everything is displayed immediately. We need to be living more and more in the presence of the Lord. We need to be veiled, face and feet, and to lie simply thus. And having this veil, we need a fleece, Gideon's fleece. You remember how he spread it out in the evening, and asked God to fill it with dew, and he would then have a sign, or assurance, that God was his God. We need, too, in private to spread the fleece—our own weakness, our own unworthiness, our own utter prostration of body and soul. An empty skin is just what we are until we are filled afresh with the dew of the Holy Ghost. And we need this every day—fresh dews of the Holy Ghost in our fleece. When you look upon this fleece as a spotless fleece of the blessed Lamb of God, oh, how full it can be, and it is with the dew of the Holy Ghost! And when you have been satisfied yourself, spread it out again for others, that you, having been satisfied, should have this blessed power of drawing the dew of God all around you, until, wherever you tread, you walk upon the dew of God, and people are prepared to receive you, because you have already prepared your way by bringing down the dew of God by his infinite grace.

CLOTHED WITH POWER.

Every servant of God needs not only a veil, not only Gideon's fleece, but also needs Elijah's mantle, that we may not be satisfied with merely receiving and absorbing, but that when we come to our Jordan—to our difficulty, whatever it is before us—we may smite the Jordan, and calling out, "Where is the Lord God of Elijah?"—or, rather, "Where is the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ?"—that we shall cleave every obstacle before us, that we shall go forward in his strength, that we shall do exploits indeed, that we shall do definite acts of faith. And we must not only believe and trust, but do acts of faith, definite and determined. Thus we shall prove God, thus we shall glorify Him. But, as you will remember, before Elisha smote the Jordan he rent his own clothes. We must have done with all our own; it must be only the Spirit of the Lord; it must be only the power of the Holy Ghost — supernatural power. Are you willing for this, children of God? Shall we have the veil, and always be hidden? Shall we have the fleece, and always spread it out? Shall we have Elijah's mantle of spiritual power, and smite, calling upon the Lord, having rent our own clothes? Shall we this evening give ourselves right over to the Lord?

Child of God, can you trust Jesus? Do you think He will bring you to some fearful hardship and snare? Nay, it is your own saying, He is so tender and compassionate. I am sure each one of us who is a real child of God can bear witness to the tenderness of God, how He heeds us, shields us, educates us, clothes us, watches us Himself. We have everything from Him. Will you this evening give yourselves just wholly over unto Him, ere you launch out into the deep? "Master, we have toiled all the night, and have taken nothing; nevertheless, at thy word we will let down the net." "Nevertheless"—oh! out with that blessed word! It is like a grand pier, running out amongst the billows of the deep. Go out upon it if you have toiled all the dark night, and though you are a failure in yourself, though you are weary of your own powers, and your doings, and sayings, go forth with the Master, launch out on the deep—the deep of his true, affectionate heart, the deep of his promises, the deep of his immediate presence—launch out into the deep, and let down your net for a draught. A child may let down the net. Shall we not do it? Shall we now do it? Launch out into the deep.

FRIDAY MORNING, JUNE 29.

Helps to Sanctification.

REV. DR. A. J. GORDON, BOSTON, U.S.

WITH the whole of the New Testament before us, it seems to me that the truest definition of sanctification is this: It is a twofold process, consisting of mortification and vivification—the repressing and subduing and deadening of the old nature; the strengthening, developing, and perfecting of the new nature. From the beginning to the end of our Christian life every aid and incitement to holy living will be found to be along one or other of these two lines.

I have said that sanctification is a twofold process: it is this because it is the image and reproduction of our justification. It is the making true in us that which is already true for us in Jesus Christ. Our justification rests upon these two grounds, the death of Christ and the resurrection of Christ. Yet these are not merely historic facts to be believed; they are spiritual facts to be experienced. We are wont to say that Christ died that we might not die; we should speak more correctly if we said Christ died that we might die. He died for sin that we might die to sin. He died for the world that we might become dead to the world. Hence Peter says: "Forasmuch then as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh"—not rejoice that you are exempt from suffering, but—"arm yourselves likewise with the same mind." The crucifixion was not finished on Calvary; it has continued through all the ages, and will continue unto the end. Jesus Christ has gone before, bearing the cross; but there are great companies who have heard his word: "Except a man deny himself and take up his cross daily, he cannot be my disciple." So also is the resurrection prolonged. The Church keeps perpetual Easter. Every regeneration is a pulse-beat of our risen Lord on the throne, and will be to the end of time.

The two grounds of our justification are the death and resurrection of the Lord Jesus, and on these two lines our sanctification is to progress. The human body furnishes a remarkable analogy to this truth. They tell us that death is constantly going on in the human system. Every day a certain amount of living tissue dies, and has to be borne out to burial; and every day new tissue is formed. This is not only a physiological fact, but a universal law of nature.

> "Life evermore replaces death
> In earth, and sea, and sky;
> And, that a rose may breathe its breath,
> Something must die."

Let us see how perfectly this agrees with the foundation and superstructure of the Christian life. In 1 Cor. xv. Paul sets forth the Gospel he had received and was to preach in these two particulars. "How that Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures...and that He rose again the third day, according to the Scriptures." These are the foundation facts, and we find from these two facts, two doctrinal inferences: First, "if one died for all, then all died." If the substitute died, those for whom He died have become judicially dead to the law by the body of Christ. Again, if Christ rose again from the dead, we have been "quickened together with Him, and raised up together with Him." Then there are these two practical conclusions which we find in Col. iii.: "Ye are dead"... "mortify, therefore, your members which are upon the earth"—make your death in Christ real in yourself. Secondly, "since ye are risen with Christ, seek those things which are above;" make Christ's resurrection real in yourself.

DEATH RETREATS BEFORE LIFE.

Let us remember, at the outset, that neither mortification nor vivification is possible without the gracious aid of the Holy Spirit. Says the Apostle Paul, in Rom. viii.: "If ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live." The flesh is not sufficient for the flesh. Old Adam is still too strong for young Melancthon, as the great Reformer said, and as we must all allow. For human nature to try to lift and rescue itself, is like a drowning man seizing his right hand with his left hand, to save himself, when both these hands are the members of the same sinking body. Even our blessed Lord, when He accomplished his sacrificial death on the cross, did it in the Holy Ghost: "Who through the Eternal Spirit offered Himself without spot unto God." How much more necessary that we, who would realise his death in ourselves, should do it through the Holy Ghost.

I have seen in the autumn, when the trees had shed all their leaves, that two or three leaves have stuck fast on the branches, and have clung to them all the winter through. Storms have beaten them; frosts have bitten them; snow and rain have blackened them: yet they have clung to the tree. But when the springtime has come, and the sap has began to ascend and push its way through every branch and every twig, the leaves have disappeared—pushed off by the rising tide of new life: for death can never stand before life. So it is with us. Those old, inveterate habits that belong to our fallen nature, are very hard to get rid of. We battle with them, and try to beat them off, but again and again we are defeated, so that we cry out, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" But when the Spirit of the Lord fills and possesses us, then these habits disappear almost unconsciously, because death cannot stand before life; then we are able to rise up and say, "The law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death."

Out of many passages of Scripture in which these two ideas of life and death, quickening and mortification, are presented side by side, I select but one as an illustration. It is that well-known passage, Rom. xii. 2, "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God."

VICTORY THROUGH DEFEAT.

"Be not conformed to this age"—for that is the word that most exactly represents the meaning. Jesus Christ came into this world, not to reconcile the times and the age to us, but to make us to be estranged from the age; to become dissimilar with it at every point. This thought is brought out by the writer who, through the Holy Ghost, wrote those words, in a marvellous illustration of what it is to be not conformed to this age. Have you not been struck with the singular statement in that oft-repeated text: "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by which the world is crucified to me, and I unto the world"? He had a double crucifixion. Most of us would rejoice if we had a single one, and yet he rejoiced in a twofold crucifixion which was very real in his own case. There are a great many persons who are dead to the world, while the world is alive to them. That is to say, they may, through sickness or the loss of some sense, be incapacitated for enjoying the world, yet the world is there; wealth, friends, social rank, a thousand things that allure them, and they are ready to go back to these if ever they should become alive again. There are others to whom the world is dead, while they are alive. There are those who have lost property, or station, or friends, everything that goes to make life happy; but, so far as they are concerned, there are five hungry senses which cry out for the world if it should ever come back to them. Paul was both dead to the world and the world was dead to him. He had lost his standing as a Jew, and never expected to regain anything that belonged to that old condition; and, looking to the cross, he could say, "I have been crucified with Christ." So he was dead to the world, and the world was dead to him.

How victorious this made him. I have been struck in observing the various attempts to explain a certain phrase that Paul uses: "In all these things we are more than conquerors." Yet how simple it is when taken in its connection. He sums up all the things he is enduring, the sword, peril, nakedness, dying all the day long for Christ, led daily like a sheep to the slaughter. And then he says, "In all these things we are more than conquerors." How? Plainly thus. The man who is victorious through victory is a conqueror; but he who is victorious through defeat is more than conqueror; and that was his case. So mark that other expression which our early translators seem not to have apprehended, or hardly dared to put into English. The Apostle thanks God, for what? His purpose was to bring these Christians from Damascus back, bound to his chariot, and to lead them into the city of Jerusalem like a Roman conqueror rejoicing over them as his slaves, and thus to have a triumphal entry. But instead of that the Lord met him, and he was chained to Messiah's chariot. So he says, "Thanks be to God who always leadeth us in triumph." His great joy was not only to be defeated, but to be led as a captive chained to Immanuel's chariot.

We are, therefore, to be not conformed to this age. But notice the other expression, "Be ye transfigured"—for that is what it really is. It is said of Christians, that they have "tasted of the powers of the age to come." We are between two ages—the present age and the age to come. What is to be our relation to this age? We are to be in a constantly progressive non-conformity to it; and also to be like our Lord when He was transfigured. Then He was taken for a moment and carried over into the age to come. He was bathed in its glory: He was surrounded by its blessed companionships. He was taken out of this present evil age, from which He came to deliver us, and was carried into the age that is to be, the Millennial age, and was transfigured. In other words, before He tasted the cup of his passion, He tasted for a little while "the powers of the age to come." And that is what the Lord would have us do, by entering into the life of the age to come. From our defeats, and sorrows, and trials, and heart-breakings here,

Towards the skyey future turn,
And from Hope's unseen to-morrow
Fill to-day's exhausted urn.

An incident has been told which struck me very much. A shipload of cattle recently arrived on the New England coast, after a long and stormy voyage. When they came within fifty miles of New England, these poor storm-tossed animals began to scent the clover, and to show signs of exceeding joy and delight. They began to taste the powers of a new world. This is what the Apostle would have us do—now and then to smell the clover of those sweet fields, arrayed in living green beyond the flood. We are to be not conformed to this age, but we are to look into the age that is to be, so that we may be exulting, and victorious, and strong. It is death and life—dead to the present, and living in the life that is to be.

FOUR AIDS TO PROGRESS.

Having thus introduced my theme, I want to give you four aids to progress in sanctification, all of them taken from Holy Scripture. Since it is written that Jesus Christ is of God "made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption," we may see in these, four means by which we may appropriate the Lord Jesus Christ, who is our sanctification, and therefore they become the best aids to our progressive sanctification. First, there is the contemplation of Christ; second, the feeding upon Christ; third, abiding in Christ; fourth, looking for Christ.

First, contemplation of Christ. The passage of Scripture on this point has been quoted frequently in this Convention: "We all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord" (2 Cor. iii. 18). That is what I call the contemplation of Christ. An evangelical faith does not consist simply in a glance, but also in a gaze. Thank God, a glance is enough to save a soul, but it takes a prolonged gaze to sanctify a soul. That is what we are invited to here. I am sorry to believe that nineteenth century Christianity, with its bloodshot eyes and its fevered pulse, has lost the art of contemplation. We need to re-learn it. It is perhaps the most difficult of all exercises—meditation upon the Lord Jesus Christ. We need sometimes to come into his presence and say, "Lord, I come not to-day to ask; I come not to-day to give; I come simply to look upon thy face, to gaze into thy glorified countenance, if perchance I may be permitted to catch and reproduce some of the lineaments of thy face."

As the Scripture was read at the opening of this meeting, my mind instantly brought up the comment which St. Augustine makes upon the passage where we are told by God that no man can see his face and live: "Then let me die, if only I may see thy face." Well, we must die in order to see his face. In proportion as we become dead to self, we are able to see his countenance. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." I notice that a learned man in commenting upon this text said it was a perfectly natural process which here goes on. Just as association with a friend reproduces the likeness of that friend, and just as intimacy with another makes you to be assimilated to that other, so if you associate much with Christ you will inevitably become like Him. It is no doubt in a sense natural, and yet if you read the whole passage, you will see that it is supernatural, "even as by the Spirit of the Lord." We are dependent here, as everywhere, upon the operation of the Holy Ghost. It is only the Spirit of the Lord within us that can reproduce the image of the Lord that is set before us.

HOW SHALL I MAKE IT PLAIN?

Let us suppose that you have the original picture of Raphael's "Transfiguration." You desire to reproduce it; just as so many people talk about copying or imitating Jesus Christ. You bring out your brushes, your paints, your pencils, and your easel, and set to work. When you have worked at it for a day you will probably find what miserable work you are making of it. You try again and again, but by-and-by you become the laughing stock of your neighbours, and see very plainly that you are not an artist. Then you begin to be in despair, and are ready to give it up. But let us suppose, if it were possible, that the spirit of Raphael should enter into you. Well, I do not say that he would produce the picture at once. It would take that spirit some time to get the mastery of your fingers; to train your eye to the delicate perceptions of proportion and perspective. But if Raphael's spirit were in you, he would more and more train your faculties to this use, until by-and-by he would perfectly reproduce Raphael's picture. So exactly does the Lord deign to set the portrait of Himself before us, and tells us to reproduce it, since He puts His own spirit within us. It is only Christ who can produce Christ. It is only Christ within who can reproduce the Christ who is set before us. This, therefore, brings us into the likeness of Jesus Christ, looking into His face, and dying that we may live.

Take another aid—feeding upon Christ. You recollect in John's Gospel, chap. vi., how, after that marvellous discourse about eating the flesh and drinking the blood of the Son of Man, some of those who heard seem to have been stumbled at the seeming grossness and carnality of the thought. At the end of the discourse, our Lord appears to relieve them from the difficulty by explaining his deep meaning. He says: "It is the Spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing. The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." Now, we understand what He meant. "He that eateth Me shall live by Me." Well, we believe it. This Scripture not only was inspired, but is inspired. And as blood is in every part of the body, in all the veins and arteries, so that wherever you prick the body blood will come out, so the life and spirit of Jesus Christ is in every sentence, and word, and letter of this Word. It is indwelt by the Holy Ghost. "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life."

LETTER AND SPIRIT.

Therefore, do you not see how we shall constantly progress in sanctification, if we are feeding upon his Word? I need not remind you of so trite a fact. But let me remind you of this which is not so trite, that there is the twofold process still of life and death. Have we not misinterpreted these words, "The letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life." Men say, "The letter killeth; then let us kill the letter; we do not want it." No; I say, rather, with all humility, if the letter killeth, then let it kill me, that the Spirit may give me life. I open the words of the letter, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart," and I recollect that I love Him only with a little part of my heart—only at best with a little corner of it. I am slain by the law; I find myself dead before it; the letter has killed me. Then I turn to the words of the Spirit, "Herein is love, not that we loved Him, but that He loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins." "We have known and believed the love that God hath toward us." In other words, we find that, after being slain by the law, when we could not love God with all our hearts, He loved us with all his heart. So we submit to the law, and rejoice in it. Again, we read the letter: "Cursed is everyone that continueth not in all things that are written in the law to do them." That slays me again; I have not done a hundredth part of them. I turn over to the words of the Spirit once more: "Christ has become the end of the law for righteousness to everyone that believeth." So the word kills, and the word makes alive again by the Spirit. The word is the sword of the Spirit, and what for but to slay? But it is also the laver of regeneration; and it is also the oil, which binds up the wounds that the sword has made.

BIRTH THE PASSPORT TO BEAUTY.

I can only briefly sketch these helps. Here is the third, abiding in Christ. "Abide in Me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself; neither can ye, except ye abide in Me." You see there is the twofold fact here—union and communion—"I in you, and you in Me." It is not only necessary that we should be in Christ, but that his fulness should be imparted to us. It is a twofold blessing. I would remind you again that the imitation of Christ is utterly impossible, apart from incorporation into Christ. The wild olive sinner may desire to be like the purple grape Christian, but he never can if he still remains a branch of the wild olive tree. But if the sinner is grafted into Jesus Christ, He will then begin to pour his life into him, and he will become like Him inevitably. Birth is the only passport to beauty, not only in human life, but especially in the Divine. We may sit down before the portrait of Jesus Christ, who is the express image of the Father's person, and say: "Let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us"; but it will not be upon us until the birth-life of God be in us. "Without Me, ye can do nothing"—a word which I find to be the hardest saying you can utter to the majority of men. They ask: "Is it not too sweeping a statement?" Not at all, in reference to the thing we are talking about—holiness. I confess that morality may resemble holiness. Yet I remind you of the fact that morality is simply the religion of the natural man; holiness is the religion of the renewed man. Morality says, "Love thy neighbour as thyself"; holiness says, "Love thy neighbour so much better than thyself that thou shalt be willing to lay down thy life for him." Morality says, "Be honest"; holiness says, "Be merciful." Morality says, "Pay your debts"; holiness says, "Forgive your debtors." There is a great gulf between the two. Holiness is something that comes from God, and unless we are grafted into the life of God we cannot reproduce it. So if we are to become like Christ we must be incorporated into Him. Then we find out that we are branches of the true vine; and here death comes in, for it is the branch that is fruitful that has to be pruned. Old habits, old preferences, old natural instincts are given up or rooted out. There is death in order that life may be perfected in us.

Lastly, there is the help that comes from looking for Christ. Says John in his First Epistle iii. 2: "We know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is. And every man that hath this hope in him" (that is, the hope of Christ's appearing) "purifieth himself, as He is pure." There you see is progressive sanctification. I find that the mass of men speak as though the coming of Christ were too remote an event to have any powerful influence on our present daily life. On the contrary, I remind you of the fact, which I believe can be demonstrated, that it is the remote, far-off motives that are the most effective upon daily life. You who are near-sighted Christians, and think you must shape your lives by looking at the things nearest to you, need to catch the meaning of Peter's words, "He that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off." We want far-sighted Christians. Abraham was such a one; he saw the day of Christ afar off, and was glad. All the patriarchs were such; not having received the promises, they saw them afar off, and these had a great influence on their lives.

PAYMENT BY THE DAY.

Have you ever marked the distinction that Jesus Christ makes between the servant and the son as touching this point? "The servant abideth not in the house for ever, but the son abideth for ever." What is the influence of that fact? The servant wants his pay every night. Job says that "the hireling looketh for the reward of his work, and earnestly desireth the shadow." He longs for the evening to come that he may get his wages. He is working by the day. But the son knows that he is a son, for he has heard the father say, "Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine." He will be content to wait till the inheritance is divided; he does not expect to be paid by the day. That is the difference between them. It is the bane of Christian living for a disciple and servant of Jesus Christ to expect to be rewarded now. Present applause; present promotion; present honour; present exaltation—I say that looking at these present rewards is most fatal to our spiritual life, because we are very likely to get the thing we want. What a solemn meaning attaches to the words of Jesus: "Verily I say unto you, they have their reward." Oh, the contrast between those concerning whom He could say that, and such as, looking up to Him, can hear Him say, "Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with Me."

Our great American philosopher, as we call him, Mr. Emerson, used an expression which has become a proverb, "Hitch your waggon to a star." Oh, Thou Star of Bethlehem, who hast become now the bright and morning Star, help us to fasten our souls on Thee. Then shall we be lifted out of this present evil world; out of these low and unsanctified motives, into that serene, blessed, triumphant life in which we shall be citizens of heaven.

A PARABLE.

And now I must close. In the part of New England where I spend my summer holiday, I have seen a parable of nature that sets forth what I have said. It is an example of natural grafting, if you have ever seen such an instance. Two little saplings grew up side by side. Through the action of the wind they crossed each other; by-and-by the bark of each became wounded, and the sap began to mingle, until in some still day they became united together. This process went on more and more, and by-and-by they were firmly compacted. Then the stronger began to absorb the life from the weaker. It grew larger and larger; while the other grew smaller and smaller; then it began to wither and decline, till finally it dropped away and disappeared. And now there are two trunks at the bottom, and only one at the top. Death has taken away the one; life has triumphed in the other.

There was a time when you and Jesus Christ met. The wounds of your penitent heart began to knit up with the wounds of his broken heart, and you were united to Christ. Where are you now? Are the two lives running parallel, or has the word been accomplished in you, "He must increase, but I must decrease"? Has that old life been growing less, and less, and less? More and more have you been mortifying it, until at last it seems almost to have disappeared? Blessed are ye, if such is the case. Then you can say, "I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live not of myself, but by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave Himself for me." Henceforth "for me to live is Christ"—not two, but one.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER

were presented by Mr. J. E. Mathieson, as follows: For blessing to attend a call to union and unity which has been circulated in England, Scotland, and Ireland, among clergymen and ministers, that they may be awakened to a deeper sense of their privileges and responsibilities as members of the Body of Christ. —That, if it be the Lord's will, Mr. Denham Smith, who is now slowly recovering from a long and painful illness, may be restored to his wonted health and much-loved work.—For blessing upon the Australian œcumenical mission now in progress, having for its object the celebration of the first Australian centenary by a combined and simultaneous effort, on the part of all the evangelical churches, to take the Gospel to every person in the land.—That the Church may see her opportunity in Japan; that labour in Portugal, Brazil, the Azores, and Ireland may be owned of God. —For blessing upon the Y.M.C.A., and the Y.W.C.A.; upon work in Nova Scotia, by Captain Moreton and family; and on services in Barnet, by Revs. W. Hay-Aitken, in the church of which the late Rev. W. Pennefather was incumbent.

THE CONGO.

The Chairman said: It must gladden the hearts of many, and give cause for much praise to God, when I tell you that Mr. Grattan Guinness, and Dr. Murdock, members of the deputation to the King of the Belgians, had an interview with His Majesty last evening. They were very cordially received, and were assured of the King's most sincere thanks to the Missionary Conference for their resolution. His Majesty said he esteemed it his most Christian duty to do all in his power to protect his Congo subjects from the evil of strong drink. For this let us thank God.

Helps to Service.

REV. SYDNEY A. SELWYN.

I SHOULD say that most people who have been here this morning, and have heard the glorious message which has been given to us, and who have seen the enthusiasm of the meeting, will be saying to themselves: "How wonderful How glorious! Indeed, Christianity is not dead yet, as folks have been trying to persuade us would be the case these many years!" No, our risen Christ is full of power still, and there is life to be got daily by looking at Him. "Look and live" was the first message that we got. "Live looking" is the next message; the next process—the continuous process of our lives. No, Christianity is not dead yet, thanks be to God!

We have come this morning to speak of helps to sanctification and helps to service. Well, there never was a time, I suppose, when the power of the Evil One was more rampant; never has there been a time when those evils of that triune sort which have been laid before us by a very able man—infidelity, intemperance, and impurity—were so prevalent; never has there been a time when those great evils were so active amongst us. But never has there been a time when people have been brought together more gladly, and have been more thirsty for the Word of God than the present. Never has there been a time when there has been more enthusiasm, more power, and more eagerness in our meetings, to get blessing, and to look up into the face of God, and, as our brother has been telling us, to die. The way in which he told us we were to die this death is found in Rev. i. 18: "When I saw Him, I fell at his feet as dead." I believe that to be the secret of it—seeing Jesus.

But now, after all this enthusiasm, after all this power, after all this eagerness, after this glorious singing, these earnest prayers, and messages from God Himself, what is to be the outcome? There was one who once wrote me a letter saying that her religion seemed to be a series of good impressions. Is that to be the outcome—another good impression, and a very good impression? Oh no, says one, with such a meeting as this, we ought to have many conversions; there ought not to be a soul go out of this hall unconverted. But, says another, we ought to know of many not only giving Christ their hearts but their wills also. Ah, many would like to take Him on board ship, but they are not so ready to give Him the tiller; consecration ought to follow Christian faith—more definite, more real. Yes, all this ought to follow, but more than this, surely. These blessed experiences, this glorious power of the Holy Ghost upon us, is meant as a means to an end, as cause to an effect. There must be some greater outcome than a good impression, a happy feeling; there must be not only a changed heart, but a consecrated will: "Lo, I come to do thy will, O my God."

POWER IS NEEDED.

Does that give us any help? That is what the Master came for; that is why He died, why He rose again, why He ascended, why He will come again. It is "to do thy will, O my God." This must be the outcome of our meeting to-day: that we may learn the better to do his will. What is the great need of our church at this moment—the Christian Church in our land? Some folks, when they look at their newspapers, or when they hear reports of various societies, say: "That man starving at his post! Times are bad! Surely the great need of the Church must be more wealth." We say, "No; all the wealth in the world will not win a soul to God." But look at yonder church and see the high-class men and women who attend it. Certainly that must be the most useful church in the district. Nay, that cannot be, for position, wealth, and social status, though they may be helps in God's use, are only helps. Another says, we want organisation and methods. Nay, there may be much method and organisation, and no winning of souls. What is it then that is needed? It is power.

Many people come here and hear of power for service, and say, "How wonderful; that man or woman has got it, but it is not for me." And they go and think that the power is not for them. Yet all the while we pray, "Thine is the power," and God the Holy Ghost is beseeching us to let Him take such a possession of our whole being that his own wondrous power shall belong to the weakest, the most infirm, and the youngest of us all. It is meant for you! How are we to get this power? We say that the great need of the Church is men and women who have got the power to do God's will. But let me stay and ask, To do God's will where? It is easy to do God's will here while we are on the mountain top, or while we are at our work in the Sunday-school or district; but it is in the little details of the home life that we have to do God's will, and He will give us power to do this, if we trust Him. In the business life with its competition, in trade activity, in the market, and the office, we must do God's will. It is there that I and you have to live the Christianity of Christ, and not the Christianity of the Christian, which are far, far apart. Let us say: "O God, wilt Thou give me a consecrated will to fear and to live Thee wherever Thou shalt be pleased to send me? O God, wilt Thou show me thy glory, and show me how to live that Thou mayest be glorified?"

And whence can we get this blessed gift of power? for there are men and women craving it. They say that one and another have got it, and they have it not. Their tongues are dumb, when they ought to speak boldly for Christ. We want no new methods. We have Christ and the Word, and what we want is to be able to use the Word and rely upon God. Some may say, "But we want to make our churches as attractive as possible, and they should be painted up here and painted up there; we will also have new music and a gorgeous ritual." All very well, but this will not win one soul to God by itself. Indeed, our churches must be as attractive as you can make them, but in a different way. God's word will make them attractive, when it is fairly preached. But surely, says some one, the old story is getting a little bit old! Is it? I have not found it so yet. We want, it is said, something better than the old story, something more scientific, in longer words, in deeper thoughts. I don't believe it, but rather I believe that the old story was never so popular as it is to-day. That is, the story of my Lord's death never touched more hearts, and touched them more effectually, than to-day; and the glorious resurrection and ascension, as well as the truth concerning his coming again, has never been the means of delivering more people from the penalty and the power of sin than it has been, and is, delivering at the present day. It is not a new story, nor is it new doctrines, that we want. Well, you will say, what do we want? Again, we come to the same point—power is what we want. What sort of power?

ADJUSTMENT IS ESSENTIAL.

Some folks tell us that in days gone by we began with manual labour for the work of the world, and then we changed our way, and took on horse power, then steam power, then electric power; and now even the powers of the air are being made to help us. But there is only one power that the Church has wanted, and has had and will have, and that is the power of God the Holy Spirit—Christ dwelling in our hearts by faith, and the power of the Holy Spirit being given just according to our faith. Jesus Christ is to you what he is to your faith. What are the helps to getting this power—the helps to making us more full of it, to make us do God's will better, and to live Christ's life, instead of the Christian's life? There is just one great help which we cannot forget, and that is adjustment. There must be a more careful adjustment, if there is to be a greater progress in our service.

And where must there be adjustment? In the Church and in the heart. There is another word for adjustment in the Bible, where the Apostle prays that the God of peace will "make perfect" those who are called unto his eternal glory in Christ. Again the word comes in when, in the Gospels, we read of "mending" nets. And one reason why our Church has failed—and I am sure that even those who are proudest of its members must confess that it has failed very much in winning souls—is that there is not proper adjustment. I recollect, years ago, at Douglas, in the Isle of Man, watching several fishermen as they battled with some dog-fish that had got into their nets. I ascertained that these fish break the nets, and hence the effort to keep them at a distance. Now there is the dog-fish of worldliness that gets into the net of our churches sometimes, and makes awful holes—cruel holes. We throw out the net to catch living souls, but out they go through that great hole, for the Church is apt to get worldly. We must have the net mended. In order to this, there must be a more definite and more careful separation—a coming out much more real and definite than any we have so far learned of. It must be a practical coming out. Are you willing in your heart? because on what you do depends the condition of the Church. Are you willing to give up, for instance, the dance, the theatre, the raffling, the little gamblings, and things of that sort, which, when mentioned, people shake their heads about, and say, "There is no harm in them"? Let us be practical. It is all very well for you to get all you can from the Holy Ghost, but you must give more to Him. Are you willing to do as well as say what you believe?

There is another great difficulty, another reason why the net does not sometimes catch fish. Sometimes you get the net so tied up round the mouth that there is no room for the fish to go in. How the red tape of respectability often pulls in the mouths of our nets, so that they can catch no fish! We throw the net out and draw it in, but there is no fish. We must be willing to throw away our reputation a little. I was so glad to see in the newspaper the other day, that a bishop had stood on a chair and preached in the open-air outside his church. I thought "How grand this was—a bishop on a chair!" This was a throwing away of the feelings of "my lord," and disregarding reputation, in order to try to win souls to Christ. This respectability, this formalism, must be thrown on one side. Some one said to me the other day, "I don't like to see a clergyman preaching in the open air." In my heart of hearts I could not help thinking, "God save you!" I say, we must throw away this reputation of ours, which we gain for extreme respectability, if we would come and win more souls out of the gutter of sin and death.

DEFINITE CONSECRATION REQUIRED.

These are two great hindrances to our progress in service. We must—and may God grant it!—be more definite in our consecration to God, as well as more separate from sin and the world. We must say, not only "my Beloved is mine," but also "I am his"; we must take Him into the vessel, and not make Him one of the under officers, but let Him take the tiller, ourselves holding "hands off." We heard, years ago, that expression "hands off," and that must represent our position in the Christian life. Let Christ hold the tiller and no one else; we must act more and more on the "hands-off" policy, if we would progress in Christian service.

The result of this closer and more careful adjustment will be a more definite blessing. Will you now go home and say, I have not got to look out upon my life as if it were a tremendously long straight course with its various milestones of age, but I have to look just at the present moment, and do what I can in the present to make my Lord more glorious, and bring Him more honour, and make people look at Him more often and more constantly. What can I do just for the present? I will look at Thee, Jesus; I will trust Thee. Thou shalt have my heart—Thou hadst it long ago—but now Thou shalt also have my will. Lord, wilt Thou take my lips? I hear Him say, "Yes, and I will speak through thee." Wilt Thou take my mind? "Yes, and I will give thee thoughts which come from my own heart." And we will also say to Him, Lord Jesus, in order to get this gift of power, I will give myself more fully unto Thee for ever, and not only "look and live," but I will come and "live looking."

FRIDAY AFTERNOON.

The Lord's Supper.

REV. DR. ADOLPH SAPHIR

presided, and read Heb. x. 11—25. He also delivered an address on Heb. i. 1—4, which he described as a summary of the whole Epistle. He said: The language of our hearts at this time is, "We would see Jesus." Christ is all. Such is the testimony of Scripture, and such is the growing experience of every believer. Beholding Jesus in the firmament of the Father's love, as He is now exalted in glory, and looking forward in hope to his return, is the constant endeavour and occupation of those who believe in his name. The Apostles of our blessed Lord, although their great and urgent work was the evangelisation of the world, spent much of their time and their strength in instructing those who by their testimony had been brought unto a knowledge of Christ, and in all their Epistles their one great theme is Jesus, and their one great exhortation is, "Consider the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Jesus." For the source of every error, all our diseases, and all our sins, is that we do not think sufficiently of Jesus, and that we do not regard Him with sufficient constancy and energy of purpose. And so have we all experienced in our lives that to have our minds filled with Jesus, and to dwell continually on his perfection, and fulness, and glory, is our only safety, and our only strength. This is not merely salutary, but it is essential; it is not merely edifying, but it is the only thing that is truly profitable and practical, for Christ is the foundation of our salvation, the source of our life, the model, and standard, and strength of all our obediences, and therefore was it the constant desire of the Apostle Paul, after he had come to a knowledge of Jesus, that he might "know" Him.

We desire to obey God and Christ, but obedience without love would have no value, and love without faith is impossible, and faith can only be fed and nourished by entering more deeply into that which is set before us in Christ Jesus, by our vision becoming brighter, and our knowledge of Jesus Christ being enlarged. And of this there is no better illustration than the Epistle to the Hebrews. Never was there a congregation that had sunk more low, and was more near to the precipice of apostasy, than those Jewish believers at that time. And not upon exhortations and warnings does the Apostle rely, but he unfolds the full glory of Jesus in his exaltation, and he shows Him to be the Son of God, who is now the

PRIEST AFTER THE ORDER OF MELCHIZEDEK.

See how the Apostle begins the Epistle—without any introduction or preface. Out of the abundance of the heart he speaks, and at once of Jesus. He reminds them that although their unbelieving countrymen despised and rejected Him, and they were excluded from the beautiful services and Divinely appointed ordinances of the sanctuary, they have indeed a great High Priest. He tells them that the same God who had spoken to their fathers by the prophets had, in glorious fulfilment of his promises, and in consummation of all his dealings with them, sent his Son to his people. He says: God has spoken. From the beginning He spoke in the Garden of Eden, before Adam and Eve were banished; at every period of your history messengers of God have been declaring to you his love and his purposes. He spoke by the prophets. What wonderful men they were! Not because they were wiser than others, not because they were anxious to communicate unto others the intuitions of their own minds, or the high ideals which were before their own souls. Often against their will they were thrust forth by God with the message of God. But with fear and trembling they stood before the holiness and majesty of the Most High, and they received from above the oracles of God. With great diligence they searched what the Spirit of the Messiah that was in them did signify. They beheld the dark clouds of judgment in the future, and stood in awe; they also saw the bright morning of peace, and their hearts were filled with jubilant joy.

JESUS SUPERIOR TO THE PROPHETS.

But what were the prophets, when we compare them with Jesus? In the first place, they were many, and this in itself shows that no one of them was perfect or sufficient. Abraham had to be supplemented by Moses, and after him came David, and what was given in type by David had to be expounded by the other prophets. But Jesus is One who is all-sufficient. The prophets were, indeed, wonderful teachers of God, yet not one of them, nor all of them together, were able adequately to declare unto us the whole mind of God. Here, however, is one who is the Son, "in the bosom of the Father," "Light of light," who "knoweth the Father as the Father knoweth Him." The prophets were servants; He is the Lord. The prophets received the Holy Ghost from time to time; but of Jesus we never read that the Spirit "came upon Him," for to Him the Spirit was "given without measure."

After all, Jesus only said what Moses and the prophets showed. He was the echo of what God had before announced through his messengers. But the very fact that Jesus said it, that it was uttered by Him unto whom all things are known, and who was from eternity with the Father, fills us with the greatest assurance, and affords us strong consolation. There is nothing in the depths of the Godhead, in the secret realms of eternity, nothing unexplored in the vast regions of heaven which need for a moment disturb us, for Christ has told us that the might and mind of the Father is nothing but love. Jesus said, "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." He is the Word. Not merely is that which Jesus uttered the word; but the life, the person, the death of Jesus, the resurrection, ascension, and intercession of Jesus, form one great perfect, complete, ultimate, and ever blessed word, which God speaks unto us. Oh, what a blessed and wonderful thing it is to live in these last days, to hear God, and see Him—for God to be audible and visible to man as Jesus! What a consolation is it that He is called the Word. What word? Why, the Gospel. Thus the Gospel to poor sinners is linked with eternity—with the person of Him who is called the Word. That which was from the beginning, that eternal life which was with the Father, and became man, we declare unto you. We preach Jesus when we preach the Gospel, for Jesus is the Word, and the Gospel is the Word.

The Jews were taught two great lessons: first, that God is the Creator of heaven and earth. And is it not a marvellous thing that, in these days of ours, in which men—on account of their great discoveries in natural science—are often inclined to doubt that fundamental truth that God is the Creator, there should be in almost every country of the world those who rest every seventh day of the week, because "in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and rested on the seventh day," and called it holy? Another great lesson which the Jews were taught is this: that all things were created for the glory of God and for his praise. And now the Apostle says of Jesus that He is appointed "heir of all things," for "by Him were all things created." Marvellous person, the end of all time! Heir of all things at the beginning of all time! Mediator of the creation before all time! Light of light, and God of God, and during all time the pillar upon which the universe rests, who "upholdeth all things by the word of his power." "The power of God" not merely in salvation, but in everything, so that all things "consist" in Him, and all ages go on because He moves and propels them.

And what brought Him down to us? Why did He who "is in the bosom of the Father" not "abhor the Virgin's womb"? What was the end of that marvellous journey from eternity into time, from heaven to earth? It was to die upon Calvary that He came. He "purged our sins by Himself." Only in words of Scripture do we dare to express what fills our minds when we think of this. God made Him who knew no sin to be sin for us. He was made a curse for us. He was wounded for our transgressions, bruised for our iniquities, and the chastisement of our peace was upon Him, and through his stripes we are healed. It was hardly necessary to add that this was "by Himself." But the Apostles glory in this, and Peter says, "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body." Having borne our sins "by Himself," He went up, and sat down at the right hand of the Majesty on high. Not merely that, but because, and not merely because, but with, his own blood He entered in, for ever to be identified with Jesus who was lifted up upon the cross—the Lamb that was slain, and to be a High Priest, after the power of an endless life, according to the order of Melchisedek.

SON OF GOD AND SON OF MAN.

What is implied in this great work of our blessed Saviour? In the eternal counsels of the Godhead are rooted the incarnation and the crucifixion of Jesus. For when God saw that no sacrifice of burnt offering would be sufficient and pleasing unto Him, He prepared for Himself a body; and the Son of God responded, "Lo, I come; in the volume of the book it is written of Me." And since the children whom God wished to bring to glory were partakers of flesh and blood, Jesus likewise Himself took part of the same. He took not hold of the nature of angels, but of the seed of Abraham; and in all things He became like unto his brethren, sin excepted; He went through all the experiences of life, its sufferings and its trials, in order that He might become a merciful High Priest, and be able to succour them that are tempted. Sinless He was, and not the slightest tendency to sin was in Him, spirit, or soul, or body; for such a High Priest became us, holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners. If He cannot have any sympathy with us in our enticements to sin, He can have sympathy with us in our weaknesses; and of the consequences that have come into humanity in the form of suffering and grief, He also tasted, in strong cryings and tears, offering up supplications to the Father. Such was Jesus, Son of God and Son of Man, loyal unto the Father, and most loyal unto us; holy before God, and filled with grace and deepest compassion for us who do sin. By the eternal Spirit, of his own accord, He offered Himself, without spot, unto God, and by one sacrifice put away sin. He entered into the holy of holies, not by reason of his divinity, not by reason of his obedience here on earth, but by reason of his having been identified with sinners on the Cross, and He is made higher than the angels, as the Son of Man who died for us.

THE MEDIATOR OF THE NEW COVENANT.

And what is all this to us who by the grace of God are believers in Jesus? It was my experience in my childhood to feel the burden of sin, and to know God as revealed in the Old Testament, and yet not to have knowledge of a mediator. Man wishes to come to God, and wishes to bring himself nearer by degrees, by prayers, tears, sufferings, and works. He hopes, he trembles; he wishes to transact with God. Poor man! He does not even understand the requirements of God, nor does he know the depths of his sin and the true nature of his transgression. And what can he offer—he who is himself unholy and defiled? Stand aside, and see the salvation of God! There is one who will transact with God instead of us. The word "mediator" is a weak word to express what Jesus is, for there is nothing in the world that corresponds with the reality. He does not merely stand between God and the sinner, but He is rooted in God and rooted in the sinner. He is both God and Man. He is the echo of the law of God and the substitute for the transgressor. The Father says, "This is my Son"; and Jesus says, "I am the Son of Man." The Father says, "This is my Shepherd"; we who believe in Him say, "He is our Shepherd." He is the Father's, and He is ours. Let all human language be silent, and blush because it is not able to express the perfection of this Mediator.

Jesus has obtained everlasting redemption; not merely has He made it possible for us to be saved, but He has actually saved his people by the shedding of his precious blood. In the Lord, in Jehovah, shall all the seed of Israel be justified. As He is our righteousness, so He is also our sanctification. When He died on the cross, Jesus invested us with holiness, and took us out of the region of unholiness; into this condition God has brought us by the perfection of his Son and of his work. God calls all those who believe "saints," but the manifestation of holiness is another thing. Christ has been made unto us wisdom, sanctification, righteousness, and redemption. God is a Judge, and in justification we are pardoned. God is a Father, and in sanctification we are brought nigh unto Him.

Let us feed on Christ. We have to bewail our failures and negligences; but we are able, by God's grace, to say with the Apostle Paul, "as unknown, yet well known; as chastened, but not killed; as dying, yet behold we live; as sorrowful, yet alway rejoicing; as poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all things." For Christ is All. And Christ, by the will of the Father and the power of the Holy Ghost, is ours.

FRIDAY EVENING.

The Science of Saintliness.

REV. F. B. MEYER.

In speaking on "Helps to Progress in Sanctification," I would premise that we are not the best judges of our progress in holiness; for very often we are making the best progress when we think we are standing still or going back. Growth is always unconscious. Moses wist not that his face shone; and in all true saintliness of character there is a wholesome unconsciousness of self. The true gauge of growth in grace and progress in holiness is not increase of emotion, nor yet any further intellectual apprehension of a method; but it is a growing sense of one's own sinnership and unworthiness. The higher the view you get of the Holy One, the deeper your own conception of your sinfulness. It was Newton, who knew all science, who said he was but a child picking up pebbles on the sea-shore, while the great ocean of truth lay before him undiscovered; and it was Paul, the noblest of saints, who said he was "the least of all saints." It is in proportion very often as we get further and yet further towards the ideal for which Christ apprehended us, that we are the more conscious we have hardly started.

I cannot think of teaching many here about this mysterious and sublime theme. There are those who know very much better about it than I do. Yet God may use me to speak some simple words to the babes here, who are desiring the first principles of this science of saintliness, and it is to these I speak. I want you to understand what holiness is. Please remember that it is not an entity, but a person; it is not an it, but "He"; it is not some set of qualities that shall be put into your nature, but it is the reception into a human heart of the Holy One—the Christ of God. If I might so state it, holiness is the reproduction in man's heart, by the Holy Spirit, of that nature which in its origin, and source, and essence, is in the Eternal God, and which has been embodied in human form in the Second Person of the Holy Trinity—our Lord Jesus Christ. If you would truly understand the method of holiness, I would wish that you might catch to-night the threefold chant of heaven, and that that might be reproduced in your own experience. In proportion as you enter into the meaning of it you will understand something of the method of holiness, of saintliness of character.

We have, in two passages of the Word of God, this chant of heaven twice mentioned to us. First, in Isa. vi. 3: "One cried unto another" (antiphonal music is the music of heaven), "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of Hosts." In Rev. iv. 8, John heard the same chant, and he said, "They rest not day and night saying, Holy, holy, holy." In that thrice "Holy" we are accustomed to find the Trinity—the holiness of the Father, the holiness of the Son, and the holiness of the Holy Ghost. The holiness of the Father is holiness in its essence and source; the holiness of the Son is holiness embodied in human phase; and the holiness of the Holy Ghost is holiness in its communication to human hearts.

A SUMMONS AND AN IDEAL.

We have, then, holiness in its essence and source. In 1 Pet. i. 16, you have a majestic declaration of God: "I am holy!" Eight times does God repeat those words in Leviticus, and if we reverently to-day ask our Father what He means when He says, "I am holy," I know not that our ears can catch, or can decipher the whole meaning; but is not the holiness of God the symmetry of the Divine nature, the harmony of his attributes, the glory and the beauty of his person? Out of that nature of God there comes down to us a summons; and more—an ideal. Look again into those words. There is a summons: "Be ye holy, for I am holy." And there is an ideal: "As He which hath called you is holy, be ye holy." Now light is the same, whether it flashes from the sun, or shines from the torch or glow-worm. Water is the same, whether it rolls in Niagara, or trembles in the dewdrop on the rose-leaf. And, marvellous as it is to say it, yet it must be true, that the holiness of the infinite God is that which is to be the standard and model to which every saint is to be conformed.

When you hear that, it seems to be an utter impossibility that there should be reproduced in your mean life, ennobling and dignifying it, that holiness which is in the Holy God. Yet it shall be so, because of that second "holy," the holiness which is embodied in Jesus Christ. Turn to John xvii. 9: "For their sakes I sanctify Myself, that they may be sanctified." Now, we know and believe that in his human life our Lord Jesus, so to speak, coined into spending-money the nuggets of the holiness of the Divine nature. He showed us how it was possible that the holiness of God could be reproduced in the human life; and when He died, He surely made it possible that that holiness which had been within his own nature could be communicated, and spread through all the world. The corn of wheat split itself, as it were, that it might reproduce itself; and the alabaster box of his nature was broken that the aroma of his character might be spread throughout all the Church. And as to-day we seem for the moment staggered at the thought of how the holiness of God can be ours, we are encouraged to know that it has already walked our world in human flesh, spoken by human lips, wept over human graves, known the care, the sorrow, the woe of earth; and, having ascended to his throne, He wears it still, and, his deity being married in eternal union with his manhood, He is able to reproduce it, filling all in all with Himself.

SANCTIFIED THROUGH THE SPIRIT.

But still, does it not seem to you as if the light in which the Divine holiness is, as it were, incarcerated, to-night is far away from us; and as if we want some vehicle, some means of communication, by which that which is in Christ may come into us? We have that need met by the third "holy" of the cry—the holiness of the Holy Ghost; for, as you have it in 1 Pet. i. 2, it is "through sanctification of the Spirit" that we become what we would be. The Holy Spirit is the means by which the holiness of God, which is incarnated in Jesus, is reproduced in us; because, by the Holy Ghost, the holy Saviour takes up his abode in human spirits. In Ephesians iii. 16, 17 we read, "That He would grant you, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith." If, then, you want to be holy, the Holy One of God must live in you again, repeating in you his own lovely life; and if the Holy One of God is to live in your heart, it can only be by the grace of the Holy Ghost filling you. For there are not two indwellings—the indwelling of Christ, and the indwelling of the Spirit; there is but one indwelling—the indwelling of Christ in and by the Holy Spirit filling the heart. Just as the blood is able to carry the life from the heart to the extremities, as the sap is able to carry the force of the vine to the branches, so the Holy Spirit is the medium of communication in the mystical body of Christ, bringing the living Christ into human hearts; and they become holy because Christ lives in and through them ever. The less you have of the Spirit, the less you have of holiness, because the less you have of the Holy One. The more you have of the Spirit, the more you have of holiness, because the more you have of the holy Christ. And if you could be to-night filled with the Spirit, you would then become filled up to the measure of your being with holiness, because you would be filled with Christ.

This surely is what we need to come to in this last meeting of our Conference. We seem to have forgotten that Pentecost has broken upon the world, and that the meaning of Pentecost was this: that just as before Pentecost the Spirit only came upon or moved the few, so, directly Pentecost broke, it became possible that anyone and everyone, the servant and the handmaiden, the young and the old, the literate and the unlearned—that anyone and everyone might be filled. The churches in the highlands of Galatia were filled, and every Christian person who stepped into the kingdom was challenged by the inquiry, "Have you been filled up to the measure of your capacity with the Holy Ghost?" Do you know what it is to-night to be filled with the Spirit? That you have the Spirit is evident, or you would be no Christian; but there is a marvellous difference between having the Spirit as a tiny streak, and being filled by the Spirit as the ocean fills its bed. There is a marvellous difference between having the Spirit as a single stray beam of light, and being filled with the Spirit as the azure sky is filled with the glory of the sun. Have you ever known—do you know to-night—anything about what the Apostle meant when he said, "Be filled with the Spirit"? Until you have learned that, you have not learned the elements of the science of saintliness. What you need now is that you gather up the sacred impressions of this Conference, by not resting, till at the feet of Christ you have sought and received that which He is longing to give you—viz., the fulness of the Holy Spirit. You may have it, if only you will obey the conditions of it; you may have it, if you want the Holy Spirit only for the glory of God. If you want to have Him for any lower motive, methinks you will not receive Him; but if, so far as you know, you want to have Him that you may be holy, and that by your holiness you may glorify God, you have good hope of receiving Him.

Once more I say: Do not try to feel the Holy Ghost, but be content to receive Him by faith. If, kneeling in some quiet oratory, you shall receive into a waiting and yielding heart the blessed Spirit; if you can claim Him to fill you, He will fill you. If you can believe that He is filling you, He does fill you; nay, wait with every blind and shutter open, with your window open, with the door ajar, with your whole nature receptive, and as you wait, though there be no sound of rushing wind, or coronet of flame, your nature shall quietly receive the Spirit, and you shall rise up and go your way, crying, "Glory be to God, though I feel nought, I know that He has kept his word with his child." When the Holy Ghost fills you once, seek a filling repeatedly. Those who were filled in the second chapter of Acts were filled again in the fourth. Remember that there is many a leakage in this world, and therefore you need to keep your spirit always under the flow of the Spirit.

FIVE PRACTICAL POINTS.

One or two hints ere I close. In connection with the work of the Spirit in reproducing Christ in the heart, we may help or we may hinder. I will briefly indicate five hints by which you may facilitate, so to speak, the work of the Spirit in your life. My first hint you will find in Philippians iii. 13: "One thing I do." St. Paul was a specialist. The men with one purpose are invincible. In all life a man who has one purpose, who does one thing, is the man who attains to success. But how could Paul do one thing when he was floating day and night in the deep? He was doing one thing. And in the stocks at Philippi, and away in the mob at Jerusalem, and whilst writing his epistles or preaching his sermons, he was always doing one thing. That one thing was not doing, but being and becoming. If you understand that saintliness is not a doing, but a becoming, you may become saintly as the one purpose and passion of your life amid all the incidents in it. Yea, it will link them together as the string links the beads.

The second thing is cease from self. To have true rest is to cease from self. "God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it," because on it He rested. And if you are content to rest from your own doing and striving, and renounce as ineffectual your own efforts—into your restful heart God will come. You have been trying to make yourself saintly. But, alas! all the past is full of ruin, wreck, and failure. Go down into the grave of Joseph, and on the seventh day, where you find your Saviour sleeping, be content to be one with Him in his death. Let there be a period put to your own ineffectual striving, and yield yourself to the power that raised Christ from the dead and placed Him at the right hand of God; and let that power day by day operate in you.

Thirdly, "Lay aside every weight" (Heb. xii. 1). For we have weights which are not sins. A sin is that which always and everywhere and by whomsoever committed is wrong, but there are things in all lives which may not in themselves be harmful, but which are harmful in impeding our saintliness. You know what they are. Things that crop up in your holiest moments, that accost you in your hours of prayer, that waylay you when you come to the Supper of the Lord. These things may not be weights to others, but they are weights to you, and you must lay them aside equally with sin. You tell me you do not know what they are. You have an indistinct feeling you are all wrong; that is the work of the devil. God's Spirit is always pacific. The devil raises a fog around us—a general feeling of wrongness—but God's Spirit always attacks one thing at a time, and He points out that as being the cause of failure. Lay aside the weight to-night. It is no use listening to these addresses, unless, while we speak, you are prepared in the solemnity of this meeting, and in the light of God, to judge, and be prepared to have it put away, any one thing which may be coming between you and your ideal.

Again, absorb the Word of God in your heart. "Sanctify them through thy truth" (John xvii. 19). Not the truth without the Spirit, and not the Spirit without the truth. Alas! in these days, how many divorce the Spirit from the truth. Let us understand that as the electric spark travels along the line prepared for it, so does the Holy Spirit come to us through the holy Word. Remember that any impulse, any spasm, any thought that may come for a moment into your heart, may or may not be the Holy Spirit. You cannot tell that it is the Holy Spirit, until you have tested it by his own holy Word. Be sanctified by the truth.

Lastly, obedience. "If ye will obey, ye shall be to Me a holy nation" (Exod. xix. 5, 6). "Whatsoever He saith to you, do it." What God works in you work out. If to-day you feel a holy impulse rising, which is tested and found true by the Word, then, at whatever cost, and by the grace that God will give you, step out of the boat on to the yielding ocean. Christ says—come; and in the strength of Christ, obey. Away there in some distant spot, hidden from human eye, you have been lying for thirty or forty years in this state, lame and afflicted, longing to be what others are, and yet finding your life a perpetual disappointment. Jesus knows that you have been long in the place. The one question to-night is, "Wilt thou?" Not whether you feel it, not how much you wish it, but whether you are willing for Him to make a saint of you. If, however feebly, you lift your eye to Him to-night and say "I will," instantly He says, "This is the will of God, even your sanctification." "I will, be thou whole." So may God help us to live day by day in sympathy with heaven, and may that chant of heaven be repeated in an undertone by our whole life, as the sea-shell repeats the murmur of the ocean from which it came: "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty."

The Christian's Motto.

REV. DR. PIERSON, PHILADELPHIA.

THE responsibility of taking part in the closing exercises of such a Conference as this is one which, perhaps, no one of us would seek to evade, but which no one of us would dare to assume. I remember the opening remarks of Dr. Burns Thompson in the preliminary meetings to the Conference, when he reminded us that the very conditions favourable to growth where life exists—light, heat, moisture, and nutrition — also favour rapid decay where life does not exist. I remember also that in those remarkable illustrations to Faust which were executed by Wiertz, he has given us a pictorial illustration of the danger of receiving blessing. The demons in the lower world are contending for the soul of Faust, and the angels, interested in the struggle, are desirous of participating in it, and defending him. They have no weapons at hand, but they pluck the roses from the bowers of Paradise, and fling them down on the heads of the demons. As the roses touch the atmosphere of the pit they turn to blistering and burning coal. There are many roses that God rains down from heaven that turn to burning coals because they touch an ungrateful and disobedient heart.

I should be very loth if I should say a word to mar the blessed impressions that have been made by this Conference, and I ask you now to join me in a moment's prayer that such may not be the case. (After prayer the speaker proceeded):—This is the land of escutcheons, and coats of arms. Let me give you the motto for the Christian's escutcheon to-night, from Acts xxvii. 23, "Whose I am, and whom I serve." The first part of the motto recognises the property of Christ in us: the second part recognises our responsibility and privilege to Christ. You remember that Paul told the Corinthians that he feared lest their minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ. Sometimes at a Conference like this, subtle reason and philosophy, that are intended to illustrate and explain truth, have rather the effect of obscuring it. Sometimes in such gatherings I confess myself to have felt as though I were in the swell of a whirlpool; as though my conceptions of things were confused by the very multitude of representations and illustrations and forms of treatment. There are some things that we learn in the clinical laboratory that will not endure the process of analysis; the substance is destroyed in the process. There are things in the Divine life that will not endure the analytic process. It is in vain to attempt to define faith: it is undefinable. A child can understand it, but a philosopher cannot define it; and the more we talk about faith in the attempt to explain it, the more mysterious it becomes practically to those who have heard us. So it is with regard to service. It is so exceeding simple that we may cumber its simplicity by an abundance of attempt at explanation. Suffer me to-night, following entirely a line of Scriptural exposition, to bring before you service, or work, in the simplest possible form. We shall naturally ask, Who is the worker? then, What is the work? then, What is the workshop? then, What is the working tool? then, What is the power? and, finally, What are the wages?

AN AXIOM OF THE CHRISTIAN LIFE.

At the bottom of the whole subject there lies the necessity for a conception of service; and it may seem like an axiom to state, what is not an axiom in its practical form, that every believing child of God is by virtue of his believing condition God's worker. There are three great themes of which the Bible treats pertaining to the believer. First, simple salvation — the acceptance of Jesus Christ by faith; and that salvation is full, free, and immediate. There is next sanctification, which is gradual, and increasing conformity to Christ; also by faith, and never by works, and still in Christ. There is service, which is the offering of self, and of substance, and all our powers to the Saviour, in grateful recognition of what He has done in freely saving and sanctifying us. Now we need to get a conception of the fact that service is a part of God's plan concerning us; that God does not simply propose to save us, or even to sanctify us, but to make us from beginning to end his servants. If we leave out the conception of service, we have left out the goal towards which salvation and sanctification point and tend. And so the question arises,

WHAT IS THE WORK?

Amid all other Biblical definitions of work, I select, for simplicity's sake, these two. In Acts i., Christ says, "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me"; and in Matt. iv. 20 He says, "Follow Me, and I will make you fishers of men." Take those two simple facts—witnessing, and fishing for men. There are two qualifications for a witness—first, that he shall know something; and, second, that he shall have the power to say what he knows—that is all. Experience and testimony united make a witness. In a court of law, they desire no witness who does not know something. Your hearsay, or your impressions, are of no use, and they are ruled out at once. But what you have seen and are able to tell—that is your witness. I have only to say here that every disciple is a witness, but the witness is limited by the experience he has. You can say no more than you know; hence the necessity of knowing a good deal, that you may have a good deal to say. Hence the necessity of a deep experience of the love and grace of God, in order that there may be abundant testimony to his grace.

Again, with regard to fishing for men—it is one of the commonest and simplest employments of men in a very primitive condition that they should engage in fishing. All that is absolutely necessary to the skilful fisher for men is, in the first place, that he should make a business of it; and, secondly, that he should adapt his means to the end. "Follow Me, and I will make you fishers of men." Not, if you follow Me, you shall now and then fish for men; but follow Me, and I will make you, not preachers of sermons, not occupants of some high position, not wielders of some great social influence, but fishers of men. Whatever may be your ordinary business, there is only one vocation, one Divine calling, and that is fishing for men. If you want to be a fisher of men, all you have to do is to accept that vocation in the name of God, and then adapt your means to your end.

What would you think of a fisherman who proposed to make fishing his life-business, who was very particular about the colour of his boat; the precise shape of it; that it should be very delicate; that it should be built of a certain material; that it should be ornamented with brass, silver, or gold; who was very particular that his net should be made of silk, in two or three flaring or conspicuous colours, and blended about with all manner of ornamentation; and who himself would get into the boat and push off from the shore in a dress suit? You may laugh at the illustration, but that is just what some professed fishers of men are doing in these days. Above all, what would you think of a fisherman who did not go where there were fish? Just think of the men who are jealous about the church building in which they preach, and about the man-millinery in which they array themselves, and about the gentility of all their surroundings, and who locate their church with reference to beauty of site, whether there is anybody in the neighbourhood who needs to be fished for or not. Oh! for a holy earnestness for God that should make us fishers of men by making everything subservient and subordinate to the great desire that from henceforth we should catch men.

WHAT IS THE WORKSHOP?

But you will ask, What is the workshop? It is easy to say the field is the world; that does not help us very much; it perhaps rather embarrasses by the great extent of the field and our own incapacity to fill it. Notice, again, what the Bible says about the workshop—your place, your sphere for work. I have no more sacred passage in the Word of God for my own help than in 1 Cor. vii: "Let every man abide in the same calling wherein he was called" (ver. 20). "Brethren, let every man wherein he is called, therein abide with God" (ver. 24). Here is a fundamental principle of the utmost importance. Many people when they are brought to the Lord Jesus Christ begin to ask what work they should do for Christ, where they should do it; and they immediately suppose that they must change the sphere of their ordinary occupation. Now the Word of God lays down as an essential principle that it is not necessary for you to change your sphere, but only to change your spirit in your sphere.

There may, of course, be exceptions. If your work is not honourable and honest, then your consecration to Christ and your reception of his salvation implies that you at once give it up. In the second place, if there be any direct and providential call to a separate work, as was the case with the fishermen who were called to be fishers of men, you would have no hesitation; but the presumption is that a man shall abide in the calling wherein he is found by the converting grace of God. The change is not to be in his sphere and calling, but he is to take God into partnership; he is to abide in his calling with God. What a blessed and helpful thought that is!

When Moses was called by God, the Lord said to him, "What is that thou hast in thy hand? And he said, A rod. And He said, Cast it on the ground. And he cast it on the ground, and it became a serpent." With the rod that was in his hand when God met him, he performed all the great wonders and signs which were wrought by him. In Exod. xxxv. there is another hint on the same subject: "And Moses said unto the children of Israel, See, the Lord hath called by name Bezaleel, the son of Uri, the son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah; and He hath filled him with the Spirit of God, in wisdom, in understanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of workmanship; and to devise curious works, to work in gold, and in silver, and in brass, and in the cutting of stones, to set them, and in carving of wood, to make every manner of cunning work." Here are ordinary mechanics whom God set apart, and filled with his blessed Spirit to do skilful and faithful mechanical work.

In Nehemiah there is also a hint of great value on the same subject. We are told with regard to the repairers of the wall in the city of Jerusalem (iii. 20): "After him Baruch the son of Zabbai earnestly repaired the other piece, from the turning of the wall unto the door of the house of Eliashib the high priest." I believe it is the only case in which he is mentioned. He earnestly repaired the wall. Here was a man acting as mason, and he had no original building to do: it was nothing but repairing the wall; but the Holy Ghost has chosen to give the biography of that man in one sentence, that "Baruch the son of Zabbai earnestly repaired the other piece." Do you think that is an insignificant biography? I think that more than ministers in the pulpit, more than missionaries in foreign lands, today we need men in the ordinary walks of life who will earnestly and faithfully do their work as the servants of God. Carpenters who will build a house, and give you well-seasoned timber; masons who will build a wall, and make good cement, and lay the stones well, and fill in the chinks; tailors who will make you cloth clothes, and not shoddy; and shoemakers who have their shoes done at the time promised, as a matter of faithfulness to God. It is no small thing that when the Holy Ghost teaches us what sanctified service is, He should tell us about a man of whom we know nothing more than this, that he earnestly repaired a little piece of wall. He put his piety into brick, and stone, and mortar, and that is his encomium.

It is to me a great help that even when God calls me to his service, He calls me to the duty that lies next to me; to go about the work I have been doing as a godless man, when a child of God. Though it be nothing but ploughing the field, it is ploughing in the sight of God; it is the ploughing of the righteous; it is his service. So the Lord permits you, without changing your sphere, or looking about with a telescope to see if there is some distant place of the earth to go to and work for Christ, just to begin where you are, and to bring the Spirit of God into your daily work.

THE WORKING TOOLS.

Let us now look a moment at the working tools. I pass by all others, but expend a few moments on the greatest tool of all, which is the Word of God. Whether it be a work you are doing, for which you need an instrument or implement, or a war that you are carrying on for which you need a weapon, here it is at once—instrument, implement, weapon. Marvellous are the various figures by which the Word of God suggests its various uses. Suppose you want to see yourselves as you are, and help other people to see themselves as they are, here is the perfect law of liberty, from James i. 25: "But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth looking, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed." You want to see yourselves and others; bring them to the Word of God, and it is a polished, burnished mirror. It is not in convex form, to scatter the light; it is not a concave, to concentrate it, but it is a plain mirror, and gives you your image exactly as you are.

Suppose you want to feed yourselves or others; this precious Word of God is milk, if you are a babe, and cannot stand any stronger diet, or if you are feeding some little babe in Christ, who is weak and feeble. It is strong meat, if you are able to digest it, and assimilate it, and are bringing nearer to the Word of God some believer who is also strong. If you want a little fruit now and then that is delicious to the taste, and nourishing to the body, it is honey from the honeycomb. And so you have all the food you want, abundance of food, and adapted to everyone, and to every circumstance.

You want to sow a field for God: here is a seed which is the Word of God, and you may scatter it as widely as you please, and there is none the less left to supply the next sower, and to sow the next field. Do you want a mighty implement with which to do a great work for God? Jeremiah says, "Is not thy Word a fire and a hammer?" Did you ever consider the junction of those two things? Did you ever consider what fire and hammer can do together? Come into the blacksmith's shop; see him take the stubborn iron, and put it into the furnace, and put the blast to the furnace until the iron is brought to a white heat; then quickly bring it on to the anvil, and bring down the great hammer upon it. By fire and hammer all the smithing of the world is done to-day. God's Word is both fire and hammer:- to melt, or fuse, or subdue, or burn, or purge; and a hammer to put into shape what the fire has made capable of receiving from the hammer.

Are you a warrior? Are you going to war for God? If you fight the battle against infidels, sceptics, immorality, the opium traffic, the drink traffic, and licensed vice, here is the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God. I would like you to understand its quality, temper, and character. It is not like a Damascus scimitar, with only one edge, with which you can hew, but cannot thrust; it has two edges, and they meet at the end in one sharp point. So I might go on to show how this blessed Word of God represents itself all that the disciple needs wherewith to do his work. Why, it is a whole chest of tools in one.

Now, let me say in passing that it is of immense importance that the workmen of God should have a mastery of the Word of God. What a shame it is that so few disciples understand this precious Bible; that so many should even be doubtful as to whether it is the Word of God, when God himself has put his express seal and sanction upon it in prophecy. This Book carries its attestation, the portable evidence of Christianity here written on its pages. If you have any doubt upon it, you must doubt that Christ is what He is. Take the 666 prophecies in the Old Testament, and 333 of the prophecies that all centre about the person of our Lord. You have, therefore, the double attestation—first, this must be the Word of God, or otherwise it never could have anticipated the future events as it has done; second, this must be the Son of God to whom the centuries themselves bend in homage, lifting their plumed helmets as warriors bow as in the presence of a sovereign.

Then we ought to understand what is in the Word of God. How shall we guide others to spiritual health, if we know not this pharmacopœia and dispensary in one? Here is a remedy for every human ill—a medicine for every human disease. He who is to be the guide of souls must understand the medicine-shop, the remedies in it, and how to apply them.

THE WORKING POWER.

I must say a few words about the working power. Perhaps I need scarcely say a word about this, because it has been so grandly painted before. Blessed be God, the power is of the Holy Ghost, and of Him alone. Suffer me to remind you that we must not overlook the threefold office of the Holy Ghost. It is regenerative, communicating the new nature; it is sanctifying, expanding the new nature; and it is anointing, qualifying us specially for service. That question which Paul addressed to the Ephesians, "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed," had reference to this anointing for service; for when he laid his hands upon them, and the Holy Ghost fell upon them, they were qualified for special service for the Lord Jesus Christ.

Let me remind you of what that anointing of the Holy Ghost is. The holy oil used by the apothecary, after the Divine prescription, was poured upon Aaron's head, and it ran down even to the skirts of his garment. What a beautiful suggestion of the power given to the believer by the Holy Ghost. It anoints him with eye-salve, and he begins to see as he never saw before. The believer sees the depravity of the sinner, the certainty of retribution, and the glory and the beauty of the celestial life to which Christ lifts the sinner, by faith in the Holy Ghost. I remember that my teacher in theology, Dr. Skinner, used to say to me, "In the Church you may have any type of piety that can be conceived, save one, and souls will not be converted; but, as surely as the man in the pulpit and the disciple in the pew have a sense of the powers of the world to come, conversions will surely follow." What we need is to have this anointing of God; that, first of all, touches our eyes and removes all the film of carnality and scepticism, and gives us the clear conception of the power of a godly life and the powers of the world to come. Then this anointing touches the ears and makes them understand the slightest whisper of God. Then it touches the tongue, and the tongue speaks anointed words. Then it touches the shoulders and they are able in strength to bear burdens. Then it runs on to the hands, which are the symbols of skill, and makes them skilful in handling the weapons and instruments of God's work. It goes down to the skirts of his garments, and makes the whole man fragrant with God. It is very easily understood, and that is the Biblical figure of the anointing of disciples by the power of the Holy Ghost.

CONDITIONS OF POWER.

Let me say a word with regard to the conditions for the reception of this power. I can only stop to indicate two. The first is faith. I think there is a great deal more of the passive element about faith than we are wont to think. We call it sometimes the hand reaching out and laying hold of Jesus. I do not think I ever laid hold of Jesus; I think He laid hold of me. It seems to me that faith is, more than anything, falling into the open arms of Christ, that He may receive and take hold upon me. The way to increase faith is to stop looking inside, and to look outside. Do you remember the dream of Mrs. Fletcher's convert? He dreamt he was down in a dark deep well, sinking in the midst of water and mire. He looked up, and there was a narrow circle at the top, and he could just see a star far above shining down, and the star seemed to let down lines of light, and take hold of him, and lift him up; but he noticed that when he looked down he went down, and when he looked up he went up. He continued to look up until he actually rose out of the darkness, and once more found himself on firm ground. That is a parable, but it conveys a truth. If you look down you go down, and if you look up you go up. The way is to stop looking inside, and to be looking unto Jesus.

Notice another figure—it is taken from the Olympic games. The stadium was once a straight line, but it was made oval, so that the place of the start was the goal, and it seems this is the thought of the Apostle when he says, "Looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith." Let me give you a motto in this connection from Psalm ix. 10: "They that know thy name will put their trust in Thee." Come to know God better, and you cannot help trusting Him. The way to trust Him is to know Him more. Get into closer fellowship. I was going to speak of humility, but I hasten on.

THE REWARD OF SERVICE.

Let me say, first of all, about wages, that they are never connected once in the Word of God with eternal life. I know that some will dispute this statement, but I challenge investigation. "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life." You never find eternal life associated with your reward. It is Christ's reward for his obedience, and is transferred to you as a free gift. Whenever wages are referred to, it is in connection with service. If we put the wages in the wrong place, we upset the whole philosophy of redemption. If I have eternal life, I have it as a free gift. The Gospel presents eternal life as a free gift, and all I have to do is to accept. Having done so, I take my place as a disciple and servant of God. Then God says to me, Thou shalt have thy wages for work. Notice in the Sermon on the Mount Christ says: "Except your righteousness exceed that of the Scribes and Pharises, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven." Then He also says, 'Whosoever shall do and teach these commandments, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven." You see the difference. Look at 1 Cor. iii., "Other foundation hath no man laid," &c. Paul wrote that letter in Ephesus, as he stood, doubtless, before the temple of Diana. Outside were the hovels of the poor, made of straw and stubble; and, when a conflagration swept over the city, they were destroyed, whilst the temple was left standing. The fire is going to try every man's work of what sort it is. If a man's work be of God, he shall receive his reward; but if it be of stubble, it shall be burned with fire. He shall suffer loss; but he himself shall be saved so as by fire. In John iv., when Christ represents eternal life to the woman at the well, He says, "If thou knewest who it is that saith unto thee, Give Me to drink, thou wouldst have asked of Him, and He would have given thee." But when in verse 36 He speaks of the subject of wages for service, He says, "He that reapeth receiveth wages, and gathereth fruit unto life eternal." Having eternal life, he gathers fruit.

PRINCIPLES OF DIVINE GOVERNMENT.

Now I want to call your attention to three matters of importance connected with this subject. God's law of work with his servants is that there should be Divine community between them. "He that planteth, and He that watereth, are one." Notice the force of it. The idea is, that however lowly may be the place you occupy in the service, if you are rendering service to God in the name of Jesus Christ, it is all counted as one. When Eddystone Lighthouse was being built, they could not lay the foundation for more than two and a half hours at a time, and then only at the lowest state of the tide. But the man who laid the top stone had no more glory in building that structure than he who laid the first stone. God would have us understand that all his work is one. You may lay only a stone in the foundation, or you may bring forth the topstone, and lay it amidst shouts of "Grace, grace unto it"; but the man who lays the topstone in the hearing of the shouts of assembled thousands is not of more account in the eyes of God than the man who, in the same spirit of consecration, laid the first stone of the foundation.

You see, by the way, that there are two symbols to represent this. In the Old Testament we have the symbol of the trumpet; in the New that of the candlestick. When Aaron would call the assembly or communicate the time of their journey, he took the trumpet made of a ram's horn, and put it to his mouth. The sound could only reach a few, but when the tones of that trumpet were made to reverberate through the camp from other mouths as well, they could be heard by twenty thousand people. The candlestick is the symbol of the Church of God. The minister of Christ is the light, and every atom that enters into the candlestick contributes to the elevation of the light, and has its part in the enlightening of the world. Look at Matt. x: "He that receiveth a prophet in the name of a prophet shall receive a prophet's reward." The Jews thought a prophet was the nearest to God—nearer even than the priest. It is not so ordered in human government. If you simply receive a prophet in the name of a prophet you shall have a part of the prophet's reward. Should there be one little atom that gives to the voice of the preacher greater compass and volume, you shall have a part in the preacher's reward. If you are content to do anything to increase the light of the candlestick, you will have a part in the reward of the minister of Christ, just as truly as He has his reward.

Another principle in the Divine government is that God measures gifts differently from the way in which we measure them. Look again at Matt. x.: "Whosoever shall give to drink to one of these little ones a cup of cold water only, he shall in no wise lose his reward." What is the thought? That God values the smallest act done out of a spirit and motive of loyalty to Christ equally with the greatest act that can be performed. Look at 2 Cor. viii.: "If there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not." The ordinary interpretation is that, if a man be willing, God accepts the little he would give, and also the much that he would like to give. That is true; but there is a deeper truth. If a man have a willing mind, it is accepted according to that willing mind. He may not have a farthing to give, but he has the willing mind. God takes the will for the deed. If you in your heart would give a million dollars to missions, or anything else, for God, you have given it. I know that there is no such principle of administration in human government, but it is the first principle with God.

All this recompense is to come at the Lord's second appearing. "Behold, I come quickly, and give to every man according as his work shall be." There are five words in the New Testament very much alike, that all are associated with this subject—restitution, regeneration, redemption, resurrection, and revelation. "For the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ." That is what makes the coming of the Lord so dear to many, because we understand that that is the time of restitution, of the revelation of grace, of the resurrection from among the dead, and of the regeneration—that is the time of the completed reward.

I shall probably never have the pleasure of speaking to a Mildmay Conference again, but I want to invite you to the privilege of peace in God, and in his blessed service. I would not have you think of his service as a burden, but as a sweet and blessed privilege. Archbishop Usher used to have his chair wheeled to a window that opened towards the south. From the time the sun rose to its setting, that dear old man just dwelt in the sunshine. Beloved, keep yourselves in the love of God; rest in peace, and let his light break on you. I have said the service of God is not bondage—it is perfect freedom.

There is a fable about the birds, with which I will close. When created, it is said God made them without wings. Gorgeous with plumage, they knew not how to soar. Then, it is said, God made them wings, and laid these as burdens on their backs, and told the birds to bear them up. At first they seemed a heavy load, but as they folded them over their heart and bore them on their shoulders, lo! the wings grew to their bodies, and the wings which once they bore now bore them up to the realms of cloudless day. We are the birds, and our duties are the pinions. When we first assume them, they seem heavy; but if we are cheerful, and constantly bear them, they become less and less a load, until by and by we realise that we are the Lord's free men, to mount with wings as eagles, as well as to run and not be weary, to walk and not faint.

Waiting for Orders.

REV. EDWARD W. MOORE.

"A LIVE COAL!" Our brother, from America, has told us to-night of heavenly roses, which, when they touch disobedient hearts, become blistering coals. I want, for a few moments only, to speak of a heavenly coal, which, when it touches the moral wilderness of a desolate and disobedient heart, can make it rejoice and blossom as the rose. In Isa. vi. 6, this expression, "a live coal," is found. When I saw it among the texts selected in illustration of the subject, "Helps to Service," which has been occupying us to-night, my mind went at once to an utterance of a venerable servant of God, now gone to his rest, who said to me, some years ago, "Remember, the live coal is the soul-preparation for Divine service." I did not follow him fully then; God be thanked, if in any measure, however feeble, He has given me to know more of its meaning since! What was the need for this live coal? What was its meaning? What were the marks of its reception?

To answer the first question we must glance for a moment at the chapter from which the verse is taken. "In the year that king Uzziah died," we read in the first verse, "Isaiah saw the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up." Observe, he knew the time. That was a day never to be forgotten. We may not always know dates and times and seasons of spiritual blessing; but, if upon our soul has ever dawned a day like this, be well assured the day, the time, the place can never be forgotten. Moreover, the date serves another and an important purpose. A comparison with chapter xiv. 28, will show that this expression is the equivalent of "After the death of king Uzziah." Not an unimportant matter; because, if you look at the opening verse of this book, you will find that the prophet exercised his ministry in the days of Uzziah. Another passage shows that he was the historian of Uzziah's acts first and last, showing that he exercised his ministry before this vision was granted unto him. This was not, as is sometimes supposed, Isaiah's first introduction to his Master's service: in all probability, for some six years previous he had exercised the prophetic office. But he needed something—and who is there who names the name of Christ, and who calls himself the servant of God, who has not felt his need of a deeper and yet mightier preparation for the service to which the children of God are called?

We had a moment since from our brother (Mr. Meyer) a reference to the Pentecostal day, which he told us in the earlier dispensation did but touch some of the summits among the saints with its ruddy glow, but now it has reached its zenith, and it throws its light down upon every soul, even the feeblest and meanest child of God, who is willing to receive it. This was an Old Testament Pentecost.

THE SENSE OF NEED.

What was the need of this live coal? Isaiah saw the King. We often speak of going in to see the King; we often cry, "Sir, we would see Jesus." It may be that at this time, like Paul in later days, who also had a vision of the Lord when he was praying in the Temple, we may catch a glimpse of Him. The earthly Temple seemed to expand, and as the veil lifted there was seen the glorious figure of a Priest King. In the year that King Uzziah died and passed away—in that year was the King, the King of kings, a Priest upon his throne. His robe filled the Temple, and above it stood the seraphim. Though the earthly temple had been defiled and profaned, in the heavenly temple the worship went on undimmed and uninterrupted—an antiphonal chant, as we have heard to-night, the thrice-echoing, "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord God Almighty." Before the glory of that vision all Isaiah's soul quailed in that ineffable and unutterable light. He was convinced of his need.

Oh, if we draw near to see the King, what is the first effect of it? The first effect of a nearer approach to Him is an overwhelming sense of our own uncleanness and unfitness. The first overpowering effect upon Isaiah's soul was a sense of uncleanness. Mark the definiteness of his confession. He cried, "Woe is me, for I am a man of unclean lips." He was a prophet. Through his lips there was to pour a stream of revelation to the people, and his unfitness and uncleanness as a channel between God and the people came upon him. "I am a man of unclean lips!" was his cry. Oh, lip sins! Are they not the sins which those of us who have to speak need most to deplore? It is said by doctors that the health of a patient can generally be pretty well determined by the state of his tongue. I believe that that is as true in spiritual health as it is in physical health. The lips are the door of the heart, and "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." It was for this purpose that the live coal was needed.

What was the meaning of the coal? Surely if we would know, we must ask whence this flame is taken. There are different sorts of fire in the world; but this was heavenly in its origin. You will notice (Leviticus ix. 24) that the fire which consumed the burnt offering upon the altar, came from the Lord Himself. "Our God is a consuming fire." This fire is heavenly fire. It is known by its properties, its effects; it grows and kindles in the soul a flame of heavenly love and zeal. It is known by its purifying and purging power; by its melting and liquefying power. It comes from heaven, and speaks its source in the wondrous work it does.

Then, see what was done. "Above it stood the seraphim; each one had six wings." Observe that of these six wings, four were used to hide himself, and two for service. That is a pattern for heavenly service. Brethren, are we willing to be hidden? Are we willing to be nothing? What did John the Baptist say when they came to him and asked, "Who art thou? Give an account to us?" He said, "I am nothing: I am only a voice, a mere vibration of the air; think not of me, but of Him of whom I testify; behold the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world." "Then flew one of the seraphim unto me, having a live coal in his hand, which he had taken with the tongs from off the altar: and he laid it upon my mouth, and said, Lo, this hath touched thy lips; and thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin purged." Oh what a purification that was! a purification of the lips!

THREE MARKS OF PURIFICATION.

What are its marks? First, he heard; second, he volunteered; third, he waited. First, he heard. Why is it that we have not, perhaps, heard the Master's voice? Why is it that we have not heard the still small voice in our ear? Is it not because the spiritual senses have not been quickened; because the film of carnality has crept over the soul? Our state has been too dull spiritually to catch the accents of that voice. Why is it that the Red Indian in the forest has senses acute to a wondrous pitch, and can hear sounds that the ordinary ear fails to catch? How is it that his eye can trace in the jungle marks in the pathway which the ordinary traveller cannot discern? Why is it but that life, and life more abundantly, is forcing its way through his veins? And if we want to hear the voice of the Lord speaking to us, pointing out to us his will and our path of service, we, too, must be cleansed with this heavenly flame, that can burn through obstacles which nothing else can touch. We must have that heavenly fire that purifies the heart, and opens the avenues of the spiritual senses, and then we shall hear what we have never heard before.

Then I said he volunteered. The rebellion is gone. How often God speaks, but man is not willing to obey, and he says he has not heard the message. The man must be willing to obey—willing to go yonder into the mission field, if need be. I think Mr. Spurgeon has said that there are some dear servants of Christ engaged in his work who are only "militia Christians." They seem to make a point never to go outside the country. It may be that some of you are called to go to distant service, and others to tread some ordinary path of duty in the home, or in the shop. The question is, Are we willing to bear reproach for Jesus Christ, and suffer for his sake? Methinks there is no reason truer, no reason deeper, for the little progress of the Church of Christ, than the unwillingness to suffer in his name, and for his sake. In the days of the Apostles we read of Paul and Barnabas as men who had hazarded their lives for Jesus Christ. Have you hazarded anything?—your reputation, or something that you hold dear? What have you done for Him, and suffered for Him? Or have you held back when suffering began? An unwillingness to suffer lies at the root of the little progress that we mourn over in the Christian Church. Oh, for that heavenly flame that will lift us out of ourselves into the life of God, so that we shall be able to say, "Lord, I am poor and weak flesh and blood, and flesh and blood must shrink from pain; but I can bear all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." Thus we may rise in the strength of a risen and glorified Saviour, and our service will be effectual in a measure that we have never yet known.

Once more, he waited for orders; He did not go unsent. "Lord, here am I, send me." There is a calmness about it; it was not wild fire; not rash enthusiasm. A man is never so self-possessed as when he is God-possessed. A man is never so completely himself as when God is in full possession of him. "Lord, here am I, send me." Blessed attitude of the soul! May the heavenly flame do for us what it did for Isaiah of old, and thus quicken us for the service to which we are called, and send us forth to serve and to suffer at our Master's will!

[We are obliged to withhold our report of the smaller gatherings till next week.]

AMERICAN Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

The Secretaries employed by our American Young Men's Christian Associations have just held a remarkable Conference at Grand Rapids, Michigan. Of the 730 secretaries, assistants, and gymnasium superintendents in the States and provinces of Canada, about one half were present. Among these were Mr. Robert R. McBurney, of New York, who has been twenty-six years in the work; Richard C. Morse, secretary of the international committee; D. A. Budge, of Montreal; Robert A. Orr, of Pittsburgh; State Secretaries Taggart, of Pennsylvania; Hall, of New York; Lewis, of Wisconsin; Brown, of Illinois, and a host of others regarded as leaders in the work.

The sessions were held for five days, and were filled with fervour and zeal, each anxious to learn how best to win young men for Christ. Even in the discussion of the most secular topics, the physical and social departments of the work, the greatest eagerness was apparent to learn how to utilise each one for the Master's cause. The reports from all sides showed most conclusively that the Associations were never reaching so many as to-day, and were adding to the Church daily such as should be saved. The increase in the number of Bible classes and special evangelistic services for young men was very gratifying.

The World's Conference of Young Men's Christian Associations at Stockholm, Sweden, August 15—19, is attracting considerable attention among Association men. Dr. Pierson, of Philadelphia, is to give one of the addresses. Over sixty delegates from the various Associations in America have already been appointed. Rev. George A. Hall, State secretary for New York, is arranging for a party of twenty-five or thirty, who reach London, July 31, and make a special tour about the coast of Norway previous to the Conference. Our readers are asked to pray that this Conference may be one of great spiritual power and blessing in connection with this special work for young men.

SOUL-WINNING AND PRAYER UNION.—Text for July 10 (Isaiah xli. 17):—"When the poor and needy seek water, and their is none, and their tongue faileth for thirst, I the Lord will hear them, I the God of Israel will not forsake them.'

WEST AFRICA.—On Monday at the noonday prayer-meeting, at the Young Men's Christian Association, 186, Aldersgate-street, deeply interesting addresses were delivered by Rev. Carl Ludwig and Mrs. Ludwig, missionaries at Old Calabar, West Africa. The great needs of the people and their intense desire for Christian teachers were powerfully set forth, and an earnest appeal was made for whole-hearted labourers. Referring to the evil sanatory reputation of the region, Mrs. Ludwig said that, with proper care, health may generally be preserved by those who are prudent and disposed to trust the Lord for help. Certainly both she and Mr. Ludwig seemed to enjoy good health, and their story was one full of encouragement.

THE EVANGELISATION OF ARABIA.

AN ECHO OF THE CONFERENCE.

Dear Sir,—A speaker at the recent Missionary Conference said that "As a business man he knew many workers who longed to go to foreign lands, but preferred to abide in their calling. When there is an open door abroad for a business man, let us search for and send out a Christian." I wish to draw attention to a country which can at present be reached only in some such way as this, and where there is not a single missionary. I refer to the western coast of Arabia, from the Gulf of Akaba down to the Straits of Bab-el-Mandeb. This, with the exception of the upper 200 miles, is under the power of Turkey, and that constitutes the one almost insuperable obstacle to its evangelisation. The Turkish Government has recently been taking very decided measures to prevent Gospel preaching or teaching in its dominions. In Palestine many of the Christian schools have been closed by the authorities, and Mohammedans prohibited by proclamation from sending their children to such places.

I do not think an agent of any missionary society would get a footing anywhere along the part of the Arabian coast which I have mentioned. He would be interrogated, and, as soon as his connection was known, would find the British Consul joining with the Turkish authorities in recommending, probably compelling, his removal. But the position of a professional man, or of a merchant carrying on business on his own account, and living at his own charges, would be quite different. To the residence of such men in the country no valid objection could be offered, and they would find plenty of opportunities, when they have learnt the language, of doing work for the Lord. To any inquiries a man ought to be able to reply, "I am not connected with any missionary society whatever. I am here on my own account, carrying on business and living at my own expense, as you see." His position would then be unassailable.

But there is a serious difficulty in the way of a medical man establishing himself in Turkish Arabia on this basis, viz., that the Government will not recognise an English diploma, and will allow no one to practise who has not obtained a diploma at Constantinople, which requires that a man should go there and pass an examination (I believe in Turkish, but upon this point I am not certain), before the medical board. This would practically exclude most, and has doubtless been devised for that very purpose. A merchant would have no such difficulty. In the Hedjaz, the country of the sacred cities of Mecca and Medina, there is but little trade, but at Jeddah (the port of Mecca, where most of the pilgrims land), I found an Austrian gentleman engaged in the mother-o'-pearl business, and one or two of the consuls also, I think, do a little in the way of trade. But in the magnificent mountain country of Yemen to the south, a merchant would find business enough. At Hodeida, which is the port of Sanaa (the capital), from whence all the coffee, hides, &c., are exported, there are three or four European gentlemen engaged in business, and at Sanaa itself there are two Italians similarly occupied, from whom I received the most hearty kindness and hospitality during my stay, and from whom I heard last week. Sanaa is a city of 30,000 inhabitants, situated at an elevation of 7000 ft. above the sea, in the midst of a large population living in settled towns and villages, and with quite a temperate climate. Here a Christian man of business might establish himself, and trade either with his own capital, or as the agent of a Christian capitalist at home, and would find plenty to do by testimony and by life for Christ. The population generally are Mohammedan, but there are also many Jews, 5000 in Sanaa, and 60,000 in all Yemen.

I could give much more information, but caution is necessary, and there are some things which it would be unwise to publish, even if you could afford space for them. I have long been crying to the Lord to send labourers to Arabia—men called and equipped by Himself for this difficult but most interesting part of the great mission field. A minister in one of the far away Western States of America has also, with his people, and without any knowledge that I was stirring in the matter, been waiting upon God for the same purpose for some years. If any of your readers, Christian business men, or capitalists more especially, should feel interested in what I have written, and will communicate with me, I shall be happy to furnish them with any further information in my power.

F. T. Haig, Major-General.

NATIONAL VIGILANCE ASSOCIATION.

On Wednesday afternoon, last week, Mrs. Frank Morrison received a numerous company, at her residence, 8, Cromwell-houses, South Kensington, the invitations being issued on behalf of this Association. Mr. H. C. Wilson, M.P. (Hull), was announced to take the chair, but telegraphed from the House of Commons that he was detained by a division. The hostess, therefore, herself presided. A telegram was read from Mrs. Josephine Butler, expressing her regret that a severe cold prevented her coming to London; and also a very interesting communication from Mrs. Henry Fawcett, referring to that part of the work of the Association connected with the employment of young children in theatres. She stated that the plea being made rested on the broad basis, that a national injury was inflicted whenever anything was allowed that injured the health of the young, and that it was the duty of parents to support their children, not children their parents. There was ample proof that those children who were engaged in theatres at a very early age were deprived of education to a very great extent.

Mr. Percy Bunting gave a comprehensive survey of the origin, objects, and work of the Association. It was necessary that the law should be enforced, and the work of the Association would only be done when relieving officers, policemen, district visitors, and everyone who went among the poor, knew that the law was not to be infringed. The Society only did what was necessary, and what the police could not do. There was a legal committee, which conducted the prosecutions, and it did not refuse a case because the evidence seemed weak—a method which the police could not, of course, follow. The committee have branches in all parts of the country. The second part of the work is preventive. A special committee deals with the traffic in young girls between London and Paris; and another committee inquires into the registry offices. There is also an organising committee. As to the pantomime children, the time will come when the Factory Acts will be extended to theatres. Mr. Bunting gave an illustration of the work being done by the Association, which occurred in a low court in Holborn, in which the girl was only fourteen, and the man got nine months' imprisonment. His neighbours were up in arms, and subscribed for his defence, but, as Mr. Coote said, it was an object lesson in morality for the court.

Mrs. Ormiston Chant said she had just returned from a three months' visit to America. She went first to the Great Council at Washington, where she had been brought heart to heart with those women, who, like their sisters in England, are seeking the enlightenment of the masses by raising the individuals of the nation. In America she had felt her courage raised, and her spirit strengthened by the thought of what the friends at home were doing. It seemed to her, then, that men and women were brothers and sisters all the world over. Yet sometimes the outlook seemed very sad as to teaching even the elementary object-lessons of morality. Mrs. Chant made a touching appeal to those who live amid surroundings of beauty and culture to do what they can to raise others to their standard, and to cultivate such a frame of mind that they would not be able to turn away from the cry of pain.

Mrs. Charles Mallet urged that the work of the Association was too little known, and paid a tribute to those legal gentlemen who gave such valuable gratuitous aid. She dwelt on Cafés Chantants as a great source of peril, and showed what traps they were to virtue. The Association freely distributed leaflets, containing a long list of places, with names and addresses of persons in various English and foreign towns, to whom a young woman could go and inquire about a situation if she were not perfectly sure it was a safe one. The speaker gave one glaring instance of a German girl being decoyed to England by agents, who were ultimately fined £15.

Mr. Coote having spoken, Miss Lidgett referred to the work of the foreign committee, and detailed how letters had been written to Dutch and German papers, and the co-operation of the Consuls secured in various ports. Much work has also been done in Switzerland and Austria. Miss Frances Power Cobbe added a few words on behalf of the Association, expressing her warm sympathy with what is being done.

ARTILLERY-LANE MISSION.

It is just sixteen years since this Mission was commenced by distributing tracts among the inmates of some of the common lodging-houses in the neighbourhood of Spitalfields. Thirteen lodging-houses are now visited. In the common kitchens of these, "Christ crucified" has been preached to numbers of the most depraved men and women, varying from 300 to 600, according to the time of year. Very many of these persons are constantly leaving and fresh arrivals taking their places, so that the same audience is seldom addressed on two successive Sundays. During the winter months a free breakfast is given to the absolutely destitute, gathered in from the streets after midnight.

During the week meetings for mothers, children, &c., are held in the Mission-room, Artillery-street, Bishopsgate-street, E. On Sunday evenings, there is a meeting for children, and afterwards for adults. The work of the Mission has increased so much that larger premises are needed. Were sufficient funds forthcoming, a suitable place could easily be acquired. Further information may be had from Mrs. Finn, 14, Talbot-place, St. Ann's-road, Stamford Hill, N.

MEMENTOES OF THE MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.—In our report of the reception by Lord and Lady Aberdeen, at Dollis Hill, we mentioned that photographic groups were taken. We have seen specimens of the photographs, taken by the artists, Messrs. Lombardi & Co., 13, Pall Mall East; they are most excellent reproductions of the two large groups of delegates. In the centre of one group are the noble host and hostess, with their three children. Those who wish to possess an interesting memento of a truly historic gathering will do well to secure copies of these photographs. Many of those present at Dollis Hill may like to know that Messrs. Lombardi & Co. were also favoured with sittings for groups, consisting of Lord and Lady Aberdeen, Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone, and Professor Drummond. The artists have also secured photographic portraits of several of the representative members of the Conference, such as Dr. Pierson, Dr. Post, Dr. Murdock, Principal Brown (Aberdeen), Dr. Schreiber, and others. We learn that Messrs. Lombardi were commissioned to photograph the members of the Pan-Presbyterian Council at the Duke of Argyll's residence, Campden Hill, on Tuesday last.

FAITH.

"What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter."—John xiii. 7.

O for a perfect faith in God,
A calm, submissive will;
That I with patience here may learn
To suffer and be still.

A faith that, when I weary grow
Of lying here so long,
Will waft the music from above,
And fill my heart with song.

A faith which in the thickest fight
An outstretched hand can see;
A faith which tells this mighty hand
Can save eternally.

A faith which strengthens in the hour
That I may come to die;
A faith which says, "I will not fear,
For Thou, O Lord, art nigh."

THE BIBLE AND EDUCATION.

Count Tolstoï, the Russian novelist, in a book called "The School of Yasnaia Poliana," introduces his readers to a school founded, and often directed, by himself, in which he experimented on the best methods of education. The homage which he does to the Bible as a reading book is the more significant because he does not take his stand as a believer in Christianity.

He says: "Of all the literature I have tried for three years with children, nothing is more suited to their capacity than the Bible. To replace this Book would seem to me impossible. ...An abridgment might be learnt by heart, but the Bible presents a living majestic picture. which can never be forgotten....I cannot imagine how instruction would be possible without this Book. To open to the pupil a new world, and without science lead him to love science, there is but one book—the Bible. All the natural phenomena are explained in this Book; the primitive relations of men, families, society, religion appear here. Those who think the Bible has no educational value, let them produce a book whose recitals of nature, history, and imagination will impress like those of the Bible, and then we may believe the Bible has had its day. The development of the child and of the man is impossible without the Bible, and I say this after much experience."—Le Christianisme.

UNIVERSAL MERCY BAND MOVEMENT.—The second annual meeting of the British Empire division of this movement was held on Saturday last, Lord Mount-Temple presiding. Over 110,000 members, in some 520 mercy bands of the division, have taken the promise to try (hourly and daily) to be kind, just, and merciful to all human and dumb creatures, and to try and protect them from cruel treatment. The bands are connected with schools, missions, churches, and associations of various kinds. Resolutions were passed expressing the opinion that the movement deserves the support and sympathy of all interested in the welfare of children.

THE OPIUM CURSE IN CHINA.—Mr. George B. Studd, who left England recently to attend Mr. Moody's meetings at Northfield, sends us a letter, dated from Ninghsia, Kansuh Province, from Mr. C. Horobin, of the China Inland Mission, in which he states that thirty-six patients have come into the Opium Refuge at Ninghsia up to date; fifteen have gone out. "Some we have sorrowfully had to refuse admission for want of room. Of the fifteen who have gone out healed ten attend our meetings regularly, and sometimes engage in prayer; three come occasionally, two of whom pray; and I regret to say the other two went out steeled against the truth. I have a meeting with the men every night, and occasionally pray with them in their rooms. The Lord has graciously undertaken in extreme cases of sickness. Last evening (March 1) five men who have passed through the Refuge joined Mr. Burnett's class as candidates for baptism."

MR. GEORGE MÜLLER.

This veteran evangelist has proved a great blessing in New Zealand. His name was known to many of the old people, but he was "an unknown quantity" to the young. His energy and experience have given a wonderful stimulus to all the Christians in Invercargill, Dunedin, Wellington, and Wanganui—he is now in Auckland—and it is impossible to record the effects that will follow. We feel that the Christians who held the walk of faith, and the power of faith, and the power of prayer, have in a few days left their mere doctrinal platform, and taken much higher and holier ground. The dear old pastor has been trimming all the Christian lamps in his route—his mission has been a glorious one, thanks be to the Lord.

Mr. Müller's sympathy with all saints has been productive of great good. In some places a particular denomination arranged so as to separate him, if possible, from other Christians, but God's grace enabled him to see the danger, and avoid it. His love to all saints, to all Godly loving leaders or pastors has given us an Apostolic lesson. Truly he is a father in Christ, not a mere denominational guide; why do not Christians who are sound in the faith show to Romanists and Ritualists that they are only one Bible-Protestant army although meeting in different places?

SEVEN DIALS.—The many agencies of the Tower-street Mission School continue to be vigorously worked. The report for the past two years shows that, consequent upon the demolition of many houses by the Metropolitan Board of Works, a number of families have, for a time, left the neighbourhood. This has reduced the attendance of the children at the school, but the need for the efforts of the Mission is yet very great. More funds, and a larger teaching staff, are required. The hon. sec. is Mr. W. L. Tweedie, 72, Oxford-street, W.C.

HOMES FOR WORKING-GIRLS IN LONDON.—"Anonymous" has given a donation of two thousand guineas towards founding the ninth Home, to be called "Domgay House," situate at 11, Fitzroy-street, Fitzroy-square. When completed, it will accommodate seventy young work-women. Owing to the intended demolition of 38, Lincoln's Inn-fields, Mr. John Shrimpton begs to acquaint the many friends of the above Homes that it has been necessary to find other Offices. He, therefore, asks that all communications may, for the future, kindly be sent to him at the new address—2, Westminster Chambers, London, S.W.

DEATH OF "QUEEN ESTHER."—Considerable stir has been caused at Chatham by the death of Mrs. Esther Jezreel (alias White), the leader of the "New and Latter House of Israel." She assumed the leadership of the body of people mentioned about three years ago, when her husband died. Seeing that, according to the central doctrine of the sect, the "elect" should not taste of death, but remain until the second appearing of Christ, the death of "the Queen," so soon after that of "the Prophet," threatens to precipitate the collapse of the organisation, for the members of which ("the 144,000 of the Book of Revelation") a "temple" is being erected at Chatham. On this large building nearly £30,000 has already been spent.

THE TREATMENT OF PRISONERS.—In a recent issue we reprinted from The Pall Mall Gazette the substance of an interview with a young woman who had suffered several years' penal servitude in English prisons. The horrors of solitary confinement were depicted, and the general treatment was declared to be by no means calculated to lead prisoners to contrition. A correspondent who has for many years visited prisoners in their cells, writes to say that the picture was, in some respects, overdrawn, and that too much association is frequently allowed to the inmates of gaols. We have also received a communication from a woman who has served a period of penal servitude. She says that after the first nine months' silence, prisoners are permitted to talk for three hours a day. While in prison she learned laundry work, at which she is now able to get a good living. She adds that, instead of being injured, her mind was sharpened by prison discipline.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Hawick, N.B.—Mr. Arch. Turnbull, evangelist, has conducted meetings here for two weeks, with increased interest and power.

Chelston, Torquay.—Mr. Henry Bray, of the Evangelisation Society, has been conducting a mission in Chelston Mission Hall. The Gospel message has been blessed to many. The Chelston Mission is mainly supported by the Dowager Countess of Castlestuart, who is also at the present time building a Convalescent Home for women. In this work she is assisted by friends.

Mr. Charles Cook's Hyde Park Mission this season has already borne good fruit. A few weeks ago thirty-four were baptized, and last week nineteen more; and a number besides these have confessed Christ as their Saviour and Lord. Most, if not all of these, are the fruit of the preaching in Hyde Park of Mr. Cook and his helpers, who regularly occupy a stand not from the Marble Arch, and attract the people by their excellent singing of the Gospel, as well as preaching it.

Messrs. Fullerton and Smith have arranged a year's work in London, at some important centres. In September and October they will hold a mission in Bayswater; November will be given to Rev. Newman Hall's church and the Metropolitan Tabernacle; December, Bloomsbury Chapel; January, 1889, Exeter Hall; February, Shoreditch Tabernacle and Dalston Junction; March, Stoke Newington; April, Mildmay Hall. Other missions will be arranged for May and June. The evangelists look for a rich blessing, and will be glad of the aid and prayers of all Christians.

Village Mission Work.—"A Helper" writes:—Some time ago our attention was directed to village mission work. In this quiet village (Langley, Essex) it is refreshing to see the attention manifest at the out-door services. The eagerness with which these simple country folk come to the meetings held afterwards in the little chapel, the fervour of their praises to God for sending someone to tell them more about Himself, and the anxiety of many unsaved ones, are most touching. Surely many whose holidays are spent simply in enjoyment, and in localities where Gospel teaching abounds, would like to taste the happiness and share the privilege of communicating some spiritual blessings to hungry souls to be found in hundreds of our small but by no means uninteresting villages.

Framsden, Suffolk.—Most interesting services were held in this parish from June 3 to 22. Mr. J. Johnson, a well-known veteran of the London Evangelisation Society, conducted the mission, assisted by several clergy and Christian laymen. The tent, accommodating 300, was placed at the juncture of three parishes, and the attendance was good throughout. Besides farmers and tradesmen, many rough men and poor women appeared, and in several cases definite blessing was received. After a fortnight, the tent moved to the vicarage field, where the congregations, though not so large, were good. The after-meetings for prayer were very blessed seasons, and the afternoon Bible-readings, conducted by experienced Christians, attracted friends for ten miles round. The tent is now at Petlaugh, about four miles from Framsden, attracting large numbers, and the prayers of friends are earnestly requested.

Prayer is asked for blessing on open-air work at Largs, N.B., during the summer.

NORTH AFRICA.—In the Quarterly Record of the North Africa Mission for July, there in an earnest "plea for more labourers." The number of missionaries in North Africa is still very few compared with its vast extent and its population. Little groups of workers are to be found two or three hundred miles apart in a line from east to west from Tunis to Tangiers, but further south there are none for from 1200 to 2000 miles. In between these groups are large stretches of country with millions of souls, who, though within less than a week's journey of London, have never yet heard the Gospel. About twenty-five additional labourers are needed to maintain the work in the places where it has been already begun, and twenty or thirty more should be preparing, by study of the language, to go forward to carry the Gospel to cities, towns, and villages where as yet it is unknown. Prayer is requested that the Lord will supply at least twenty-five workers to be sent out during next cool season, to be followed by as many more a few months later. Towards this number five have been accepted.

Letters to the Editor.

CONSECRATION OF TALENTS.

SIR,—In "Notes and Comments," in THE CHRISTIAN for June 15, I observe a little paragraph devoted to the work of Miss Charlotte Yonge, the well-known novelist of Ritualism. I should not have noticed the paragraph so far as to trouble you with a letter about it, did not I know the weight it will carry with it in influencing your evangelical readers who know nothing of this writer to spread what she herself calls "catholic truth."

Let me, then, briefly, quote from one or two of the works of the author, in reference to whose "consecration of talents" you say "there would be less ground for complaint in regard to modern fiction, if more of our writers were under the influence of motives such as moved Miss Yonge, for the object would sanctify the labour."

First, then, Miss Yonge teaches baptismal regeneration, priestly "direction," auricular confession, priestly absolution, prayers for the dead, the meritoriousness of personal holiness, constant and early "eucharists," vocation and discipline for women, and, with all this, adds a spicing which leaves a distaste for evangelical doctrine, and a craving only to be satisfied by the highly flavoured diet provided by the Church of Rome. In "Womankind" is to be found this passage: "When, after a course of evil, their conversion takes place, it is a rousing of baptismal grace, and not a new birth of itself." Again, "the sacraments are assuredly the great means of giving," as well as sustaining, the spiritual life! Miss Yonge regards Confirmation as a sacrament in which "the grace then imparted is spiritual strength to those who have the will to use it, and the access to the holy eucharist brings a continuation of higher help." In "The Castle-Builders," which sets forth "the dangers of deferred Confirmation," we have a young lady who puts off Confirmation, and who is very miserable through lack of "sacramental grace." Her dying brother says to her and her sister: "Emmie and Kate, you promise me—the Confirmation and Communion."

"Oh, we promise!" said Kate, and her brother dies. But Emmeline procrastinates. Her priest addresses her: "You are a Christian. Each right action and feeling, each act of faith or prayer, through your whole life, have they not been fruits of your baptismal grace?" Emmeline supposes so, and groans. "Emmeline, our religion holds out to us a means of receiving the strength of the Holy Ghost." "Confirmation! O Herbert, would it do that for me? I believe it would be peace at last." "Emmeline, I am sure it would. It is the promise of God through his Church" (though Miss Yonge does not quote the text). These girls are confirmed, "the Apostolic hand is on their heads, that unspeakable gift is imparted." We read, "When a young girl is really penitent, there is absolution for her in the Church." The writer of "Womankind," says that Confession is objected to only "for want of understanding the system," and "How infinite the comfort of the authoritative absolution in the name of Him who gave power to bind and loose!"

But when once Miss Yonge's creations have the "unspeakable gift" of sacramental grace, they may do pretty much as they like in reference to amusements. She says: "Amusement depends on the spirit, not on the kind, or quantity. In fact, whatever is not of faith is sin." In the lessons on the Catechism in the Monthly Packet, she approves of crossing oneself, "but secretly, for fear of offending weak brethren." As to prayers for the dead, she says, "No doubt, the final lot of each person is irrevocably fixed at death—he is either in a state of salvation, or he is not, but in that unseen world surely, as our prayers help them here, they may brighten the joy and purification, and aid in the washing and cleansing. Such has been the belief of the Church in all ages." Has it? When Miss Yonge speaks of the Church she means "the whole Church, Eastern and Western alike."

Now, Sir, what does all this lead to? When a popular writer like Miss Yonge says, speaking of monastic life, that it was "the dim idea of pure dedicated creatures in the ancient days of Rome" that "suggested the order of vestal virgins," what can be expected of her feminine readers but a practical acquiescence in her belief of "the absolute need of the feminine nature for discipline and obedience," in the immolation of themselves upon that altar of mistaken sacrifice—the nunnery?

I will say no more; but I feel I have quoted enough to warn your readers against the clever, and, to some (especially the young and ardent), seductive writings of one who speaks of the evangelical party in a pitying strain, as those who "expected that the Infinite Merits would hide all their sin."

Thank God for the infinite merit of an infinite Saviour! and may He save us all from the deadly errors of a false teaching which would tempt the young into a sentimental, bigoted, superstitious religiousness, dead to all that is comprehended in the words of our Lord, "the way, the truth, and the life."—I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

Red Hill, June 22. M. BUTLER GERDS.

ANOTHER correspondent writes:—

Can there be any doubt that the writings of that authoress, High Church in the extreme as they are in teaching, and, as regards the characters introduced, peculiarly fitted to entrance girls' minds, have given a bias during school life which has influenced for ill many an after course, and prepared an easy way for ritualistic errors, or worse? This being so, do you think it wise to express gratification—for surely so the words used can only be understood—at money gained in so costly a manner being used in aid of missions?

That, so far as Miss Yonge is concerned, the intention was good, I do not for a moment question; but is it not matter far more for regret than rejoicing that such teaching should have had a sufficiently wide circulation to bring in such profit; and may we not be only too certain that the authoress must have been well assured that those whom she desired to assist were of her own way of thinking before she so devoted her money?

The concluding sentence in your paragraph is, to a certain extent, ambiguous. I suppose that what is intended to be conveyed is this, that were all writers of fiction as much interested in religious undertakings as Miss Yonge is, they would find themselves unable to descend to the low level of morality in plot and sentiment only too common in our day; but I fear that many hasty readers would take it that, while in the abstract disapproving of fiction, the writer of the paragraph does not wholly deny the doctrine of the end justifying the means.

[We are glad to publish the above criticisms upon the note in question, the insertion of which we regret.—ED.]

BRITISH CONVENT PRISONS.

SIR,—With many of your readers, I feel deeply interested in the subject of the letter of "A Layman," which you re-published in a recent issue.

Permit me to point out that the important facts referred to in the fourth paragraph of that letter are related, along with others, in a tract published last year by Mr. John Kensit, 18, Paternoster-row, and by Messrs. Samuel Harris & Co., 5, Bishopsgate-street Without, E.C. The tract is entitled, "The Priest in the Family, the Peril of the Fatherland: a Tract for the Times."

I rejoice that you call attention from time to time to the iniquities of the Convent System and the Confessional of the so-called "Church" of Rome. In my opinion, one of the most alarming "signs of the times" is the silence of our leading men on this momentous topic. So far as I am aware, the recent Protestant Demonstration in Exeter Hall conveyed no adequate note of warning to English fathers and mothers as to the distinctly Satanic influence of the two Romish institutions to which I allude.

There was a time when the present Bishop of Peterborough raised a protest of indignant eloquence against the unspeakably impure questions which unmarried "priests" are directed to put to men, women, and children in the Confessional. Is this not a time for him to speak out, when many of his Episcopal brethren are doing their best to force a system of diluted Popery upon the people of England?

As to our leading daily newspapers, some of them openly advocate Romish error. Under the heading, "A Boy Preacher," I read in to-day's Daily Telegraph a sympathetic account of a "sermon" in honour of "St. Aloysius, who, according to the teaching of the Roman Catholic Church, is the especial patron of youth and childhood." After a ceremonial well adapted to any pagan temple in the world, and during which that purely heathen composition, called the "Litany of the Virgin," was sung by "the well-trained choir," the Editor informs his readers that "the children went home to their respective schools with music in their ears and seeds of wisdom in their hearts, that no earnest thinker of any creed, or any school of philosophy, could dare to take dogmatic or critical exception to."

Sir, I believe that it is the proper function of every "earnest" Christian to "witness for" the truth. So much is implied by the very name of Protestant. The most solemn warnings of God's Word are directed against that very system of which the above flattering picture is given! Has England no eye and no ear for the universal historic testimony which proves and proclaims in a tone of thunder that the religious system which is illustrated by the Spanish Armada, the gunpowder plot, the "Holy" Inquisition, the unholy Confessional, and the cruel convent prison, is one and the same with that God-defying power which is photographed by St. Paul as the great "apostasy," and by St. John as "Mystery, Babylon the Great, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth." I pray that in these critical days everyone who glories in the name of "Christian" may remember that it was in connection with this very subject that the inspired Apostle said: "If thou put the brethren in remembrance of these things, thou shalt be a good minister of Jesus Christ."

Yours faithfully,

June 25. A LAYMAN.

THE SALVATION ARMY AND BAPTISM.

DEAR SIR,—Without disparaging any portion of the correspondence regarding the Salvation Army and Baptism, yet to me the letter of Mr. F. I. Thompson, Bridgwater, has the greatest interest, and I trust you will kindly allow me a little space to comment on the same.

He says: "As regards obedience to the command of Christ, why not carry out the very explicit command recorded in John xiii. 15: 'I have given you an example that ye should do as I have done unto you'?" The reference is to the Lord Jesus washing the disciples' feet, and the inference drawn from F. I. Thompson's quotation is: "If you that are baptized believers place so much stress upon the Lord's command in regard to believers' water baptism, why not follow out his example and command in regard to the washing of the saints' feet?" Well, as I have read the New Testament, I have always looked upon this act of feet washing as a representative act; and as a practical lesson to all believers that they should love one another; and as the practical outcome of such love they be considerate of one another's circumstances, and, even though high in social position, be ready, if necessary, to do humble acts of kindness to their brethren in Christ, or to others. That while the washing of feet was a prominent mark of attention and kindness in the days of long journeys by foot and the wearing of sandals, yet in these days of fast trains, and wearing of stockings and shoes, the practice of washing the feet of guests or visitors has necessarily become obsolete. So far as my own experience is concerned, while willing to fulfil all Christian obligations, I have never essayed to wash the saints' feet, believing that, under ordinary circumstances, they could do that more comfortably or conveniently themselves. But, while I have never washed the saints' feet, I have frequently cleaned the saints' boots, and trust that F. I. Thompson is willing to go and do likewise.

He writes that "Salvationists wisely drop a custom which now has no standing." In answer to this I am happy to say that here in Scotland the subject of believers' baptism is becoming more prominent every day, and that the Baptists are getting accessions to their membership every week. But that is not all; there are many Christians being baptized at their own spontaneous request, and are all the happier for attending to the Lord's ordinance, and for following his example, who have not left the denominations to which they previously belonged. True, the question has been raised, Should this procedure be encouraged, as the first result of baptism is to separate the saved from the unsaved, and to unite them more closely to each other? but it is considered that, especially in the present scattered state of the Church, it is not wise to hinder the children of God from going forward in a right direction; and that when one command of God is followed in its order, it is to be expected that other commands which follow will be read in a clearer light. As regards Christian baptism being "in a fair way to become an idol to many minds," I do not think there is much danger of that, as I have frequently observed, with sorrow, that it is the ordinances and traditions of men which are made idols of, while the ordinances and appointments of God are prone to be treated with indifference or contempt.

I am glad to see that F. I. Thompson refers to 1 Cor. x., and trust that he will give the teachings there a still further consideration. What, it may be inquired, is the scope of Paul's teaching in that chapter? Is it not that the Jewish system is primarily a picture of Christianity? and that we are to look to the former for patterns of Christian life and duties? "They are written for our admonition." What, then, are the outlines of Jewish experience? They were saved by blood They were led out of Egypt (type of the world) by the Holy Spirit in the pillar of cloud and fire. By this guiding influence they were led to the water of the Red Sea, which was their baptistry, and by their baptism there they were stamped as the peculiar, separated people of God (see Joshua ii. 10). After baptism they worshipped God; they got rules for their guidance in the moral and ceremonial law; they had perpetual communion, the daily manna was their communion bread, while the water from the smitten rock (Christ) was their communion drink. They continued to be led by the cloudy pillar till they crossed the Jordan (type of death), and entered the promised land. Now, if we turn to chap. ii. of the Acts of the Apostles, we have the New Testament outline nearly all put before us in a few words: "They, then, that received his word were baptized...and they continued stedfastly in the Apostles' teaching and fellowship, in the breaking of bread, and in prayers."

Dear Sir, as it is in connection with or at the point of baptism that all the divisions among Christians begin, I trust that this correspondence will do much good. Also that those who have urged for faithfulness to God's order, instead of being influenced by exaggerated sentiment or convenience, will have a good reward.—I am, dear Sir, yours truly, PETER FLEMING.

Y.M.C.A. Bible Lessons.

OUTLINES PREPARED BY HENRY THORNE.

Sunday Afternoon, July 15.

THE LOWLY KING.—Ps. viii.; MATT. xxi. 15, 16.

WE have in Psalm viii. a reflection of the first chapter of Genesis. Dr. Andrew Bonar calls it "The Genesis i. of the new earth." Some regard the reference to the honour put upon man as relating to the original dignity and glory of man in a state of innocence. Others suppose they refer to the mercy which has been shown to fallen man; and others regard them as relating to man as renewed by Divine grace. All these views seem to be Scriptural, and in agreement with the language of the Psalm itself, and of the quotations made from it in the New Testament. At the first God made man to have dominion (Gen. i. 26, 27). David uses the present tense when he says, "Thou art mindful of him" (ver. 4), and he anticipates the work of the Messiah in words which are applied to our Lord in the New Testament (1 Cor. xv. 27; Heb. ii. 6—9; Luke i. 68). The second verse of this Psalm was quoted by our Lord upon the occasion of his triumphal entry into Jerusalem, and, therefore, forms part of our lesson. We have in the lesson:—

(1) THE HOSANNAS OF THE CHILDREN.—Matthew is pre-eminently the children's evangelist. Healone has told us how the children cried "Hosanna to the Son of David." Note that this utterance was (a) In honour of Jesus.—The Son of David was their theme. "Had I a thousand tongues," said Peter Bohler, "I would praise Jesus with them all." (b) Vigorous.—"Cried." No song can be too hearty when Jesus is the theme (Ps. cxi. 1). (c) A prayer.—Hosanna means, "Save now" (Ps. cxviii. 25). They who honour the Lord much must ask much at his hands. Great homage and large petitions go well together. (d) Messianic.—"Son of David." Christ was of the royal lineage (Luke xix. 38). The Gospel of Matthew, which is the Gospel of the King, traces his genealogy as the Son of David (chap. i. 1). (e) An echo.—Comp. Ps. cxviii. 25. It is well when our Bible reading inspires our songs of praise (comp. Mary's song, Luke i. 46—55). The children echoed the cry of the older people (Matt. xxi. 9). One song of praise inspires another. (f) A shout of joy.—The Jews recited Psalm cxviii. at the Feast of Tabernacles, and the boughs used upon those occasions were called hosannas. The songs of those who know Jesus ought to be songs of joy (Luke i. 46, 47; Ps. xcviii. 4).

(2) THE FROWN OF THE PHARISEES.—Saul did not care to hear the praises of David (1 Sam. xviii. 7, 8), and the Pharisees were sore displeased when they heard the praises of the Son of David. The Pharisees were the enemies of Christ—"the enemy (Ps. viii. 2)—and therefore could not bear to hear his praises,

(3) THE TESTIMONY OF THE PSALMIST.—In the words quoted from the eighth Psalm there is (a) A probable reflection of David's youth.—He probably, as a youth, showed forth the praises of God.

(b) An instructive revelation of the Divine procedure.—God uses the feeblest instruments for the highest purposes (1 Cor. i. 27—29). David "stilled the enemy," and "the babe of Bethlehem," as Faussett says, "perfected strength to still Satan" (Rev. xii. 10: 1 Peter v. 8; Job xix. 25).

International S. S. Lesson.

Sunday Afternoon, July 15.

EXOD. xxxiii. 12—23; GOLDEN TEXT, Matt. xxviii. 20.

INTRODUCTION.—Our last lesson told of Israel's sin—their great turning away from God; also of the terrible anger of Moses. Immediately following that lesson comes the story of the punishment of the 3000 who were obstinately rebellious (Exod. xxxii. 27, 28), of a marvellous intercession (22, 31, and 32), and of God's acceptance, in part at least, of that intercession (33—35). In all this, and in the chapter that follows, Moses prefigures Jesus Christ. "The persistent way in which he used all the advantages arising out of his personal relations with God for their advantage; his persistence in associating the people with himself, and refusal to have anything for himself that was not likewise to be shared with the people," reminds us of our Lord's prayer (John xvii. 22—26).

Chapter xxxiii. begins with a continuation of the Lord's answer to the prayer of Moses. Moses is to lead the people forward to the land of promise, and He will send "an angel" before him to drive out the enemy. This is terrible news; no more God with them, but only "an angel." Hearing this the people mourned, and stripped off their ornaments; while Moses removed the tabernacle of the congregation (not the Tabernacle, which was not yet built) without the camp, signifying thereby the separation which sin had made between them and their God. That was a sublime and awful moment when Moses, in full view of the alarmed and anxious people, entered through the Tabernacle door into the presence of God. As he passed into that presence, the cloudy pillar came down and stood at the door. Then the people rose up and worshipped, every man in his tent door. Meanwhile, "the Lord spake unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend" (xxii. 1—11).

Then comes our lesson, which tells us what Moses asked of God during that time of most solemn and momentous mediation. There were two leading petitions in this prayer, and God's answer to these is also given. The first (12—17), though nominally for himself (18—23), is really for the people; and the second, "I beseech Thee, show me thy glory," is for himself. How gloriously unselfish he is! His first thought is for this wicked and ungrateful people—that they may "find grace in his sight," and that God's presence may go with them. Not till he is assured of this does he ask for himself the splendid vision of God for which his heart yearned.

(1) The prayer of Moses for the people (vv. 12—17).—SEE, THOU SAYEST UNTO ME, BRING UP THIS PEOPLE, &c.—With what holy boldness he opens his case! God had commanded him to lead up the people, but had not told him how to go or with whom. Instead of puzzling this question out for himself, he, like a dutiful servant, goes back to his Lord, and simply asks Him to make his own orders plain. YET THOU HAST SAID, I KNOW THEE BY NAME, &c.—He is about to ask great things; so he strengthens himself by stating the ground of his petition. This is not his goodness, but God's free love. To know—i.e., to acknowledge and call—one by name was a sign of great intimacy and friendship. Thus Moses took hold of God's former declarations of tender personal interest and love as the ground of all his hope and prayer, and pleads: IF (OR SINCE) I HAVE FOUND GRACE IN THY SIGHT, SHOW ME THY WAY, &c.—This is a bold request for more of God's confidence. He would be in God's secret, not for mere curiosity's sake, but that he might be wise to plan and act. He would know more clearly how he was to lead God's people. THAT I MAY KNOW THEE.—Learning his plans, he would know his character better. See how this man of God pants "to know God." This passage reminds us of Ps. xxv. 14; Amos iii. 7; John xv. 15; and Gen. xviii. 17. AND CONSIDER THAT THIS NATION IS THY PEOPLE.—God had said (ver. 1) "the people," but Moses, with humble boldness, says "thy people."

The answer to all these petitions is given in the promise that follows. MY PRESENCE SHALL GO WITH THEE, &c. My own presence, not an angel's merely. I WILL GIVE THEE REST—i.e., in Canaan—the journey ended, the victory gained. There is here promised (1) Safe guidance, (2) Sure Protection, (3) Victory, and (4) Glorious Rest. Those who enjoy God's presence in their life secure all these. IF THY PRESENCE GO NOT WITH ME, CARRY US NOT UP HENCE. Better be in the very wilderness with God, than in Canaan without Him. Why does Moses, here and in the next verse, seem to ask over again, that which God had just promised him? Probably because he was not quite sure if it was given to the people as well as to himself. His words are: I AND THY PEOPLE; he must have them included with himself. He cannot rest till he knows they are pardoned.

The answer repeated.—I WILL DO THIS THING ALSO.—The prayer of Moses, repeated, and made more definite, shows forth a repeated and more definite answer. What a triumph of intercession!

(2) The Prayer of Moses for himself.—I BESEECH THEE, SHOW ME THY GLORY.—It is remarkable that Moses, who had enjoyed unspeakable visions of God, dwelling in his presence within the fiery cloud for forty days, should ask this boon. It reminds us that so good, and wonderful, and beautiful is God that they who know Him best hunger most to know Him better.

I WILL MAKE ALL MY GOODNESS PASS BEFORE THEE.—The most wonderful and glorious thing in our wonderful and glorious God is his goodness. His glory is his goodness.

THOU SHALT SEE MY BACK PARTS.—The lesser glories; all that man can see and live. "The glory beheld was unquestionably the glory of Christ. Nor are we prepared to deny that a resplendent human form, pre-intimative of the Divine Man, Christ Jesus, was vaguely presented to his view. Consider carefully Numb. xii. 6—8: 'And He said ...and the similitude of the Lord shall he behold.' What can be meant by Moses beholding 'the similitude of the Lord' but his being favoured with the display here recorded? And what is the similitude of the Lord but He who is the brightness of 'the Father's glory, and the express image of his person'?"—Bush. See also the Transfiguration (Matt. xvii. 1—13, and John's vision (Rev. i. 13—18).

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(1) God's presence everything.—The ancient city of St. Andrews, Scotland, used to number among its inhabitants three sisters, who lived together in one house, and of whom one was somewhat shaken and weak in mind. Yet sometimes these "simple" folk are wiser than their betters, and this was often the case with her. For example:—A young man called one day to bid the sisters good-bye, before leaving home for Australia. After the others had talked together for some time about his prospects, and hopes, &c., Miss A., the "simple" one, broke in on their talk, asking abruptly: "And will you have the same God there, Alec, that we have here?" "Yes, the very same." "You'll have the same God! That's fine, Alec! That's fine!" They thought her half-witted; but she saw more clearly than others how all true success depended on God's presence and blessing.

(2) The glorious vision of God.—We heard a missionary from Ceylon tell, only a short time since, of a dying Cingalese woman. He had baptized her as a recent convert from Buddhism, along with his own daughter, only twelve months or so before. Her last words were, "How beautiful God is!" Charles Kingsley's daughter heard her father use these very words during one of the last nights of his life. We see how there was that in God which delighted and astonished the highly-cultured, gifted Englishman and his simple, unlettered Cingalese sister. God's goodness and character satisfy all alike.

THE KING OF SIAM is well disposed towards evangelical missionaries. He has decided to establish public schools in his country, that shall be under the superintendence of Christian masters.

SIR CHARLES AITCHISON, speaking at a meeting of the Church Missionary Society at Simla, said that Christianity was advancing 5 per cent. faster than the growth of the population, and was making greater progress than at any time since the Apostolic epoch.

MELBOURNE.—An interesting "conference" betwix the representatives of capital and labour was lately held upon the invitation of Dr. Bevan. Its object was "to find a mode for changing antagonism betwixt labour and wealth into co-operation," and some excellent common sense was talked upon the whole subject. Industrial co-operation and the substitution of Boards of Conciliation for strikes in the settlement of labour disputes were the chief themes of the Conference. Dr. Bevan has done well in thus, as a Christian minister, undertaking to mediate betwixt labour and capital.—Southern Cross.

OBITUARY.

MISS HAIRE.

This energetic lady worker died on Monday week after a few days' illness. For some years she had been actively engaged in evangelistic work, especially in the West of England—aiding Rev. Walter Bradbury in evangelistic efforts at Weston-super-Mare, and rendering similar service on various occasions at Mr. Wintle's mission, Pontymoile; Miss Perk's Soldiers' Home, Winchester; at Cardiff, Aberdare, and also at Miss Steer's Bridge of Hope, in the East End. During the last four years, Miss Haire's time had been very fully occupied in conducting special missions. She had been visiting South Wales, where she complained of a cold, and, returning to Weston, passed away on the third day.

THE CITY AND THE SAILORS.—The Corporation of the City of London has again shown its interest in mission work among seamen by recently contributing fifty guineas in aid of the "Seamen's Christian Friend Society," whose operations are not only extending, but also being attended with much blessing.

LITTLE THEATRICALS AT THE SEA.—Two parties of the delicate and youthful members of the Theatrical Mission Institute have just enjoyed a delightful "Seaside Holiday," each lasting a fortnight. They have been cared for in every way during their sojourn at Pakefield, Lowestoft. Services on the beach, Bible-searching competitions at home, and the open-air and other meetings of Rev. Lewis Price, have all ministered to their spiritual improvement, and several of the little girls have yielded their hearts to the Saviour.

YORK.—On Wednesday, June 27, at the invitation of the Lord and Lady Mayoress, there was an influential meeting in aid of the Missions to Seamen's Society, which is seeking to extend its work abroad, as well as at home. What better way, said one speaker, of celebrating the tercentenary commemoration of the destruction of the Spanish Armada than by seeking, with increased zeal, the spiritual welfare of our seamen of to-day? Another speaker said we must not only seek for sober seamen, but seamen, who will be living witnesses for Jesus among the nations of the earth.

SOLDIERS' CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—The branch of this Association at York held its first public meeting last week, in the Soldiers' Institute. Rev. A. S. Commeline presided, and addresses were given by Revs. H. Vyvyan, H. G. Hopkins, A. Stirling, and Sergeant-Major Morris, of the 10th Hussars. In twelve months branches of this Association have been established in many parts of the United Kingdom, in India, Gibraltar, and Malta. The object is to bind Christians of all denominations together, both in barracks as well as out, and it is hoped soon to have a branch in every regiment of Her Majesty's army.

EMIGRANTS' INFORMATION OFFICE.—This quarter's circulars, relating to Canada, the Australian and South African Colonies, have been issued by this office, under the supervision of the Colonial Office; and a poster, giving a summary, is exhibited in every Post Office. The committee wish to point out that great mischief may be caused by the emigration of unsuitable persons, and to urge the need of careful selection and of providing those who go out with money to keep them on arrival. The circulars may be obtained, free of cost, from the Office—31, Broadway, Westminster, S.W.; and ten separate handbooks, new issues, with maps, for each Colony, at 1d. each, post free.

FRENCH PROTESTANT CHURCH.—On Monday, the twenty-sixth anniversary of the French Protestant Church and Mission was held at the Church, Monmouth-road, Westbourne-grove. The chair was taken by Sir H. Verney, Bart. Details of the work during the past year showed that the services in the church and in the schoolroom near Fitzroy-square had drawn an average of 300 foreigners a week within the sound of the Gospel. The Medical Mission had been of service to 1433 poor and sick foreigners. Nearly 900 families and schools had applied for the services of foreigners in various capacities, and 262 engagements had been effected. Mention was also made of the work done by the Bible-women and two lady missionaries. Various addresses were delivered, one by the chairman, who stated that he had spent a good deal of time in France, and had found that among the Protestants there were the most earnest Christians in the world.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The rector of Keighley recently invited all the Nonconformist ministers and clergymen of the borough to tea at the rectory.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has vetoed the proceedings against the Bishop of Lincoln, thereby virtually claiming, says The English Churchman, that Bishops are above the law.

The Archbishop of York, finding the work of the diocese too exacting for his time and strength, is to have the assistance of a suffragan, who will take his title as Bishop of Beverley.

Preaching at Islington, on Sunday week, the Bishop of Liverpool said that the great want of the Church of England of the present is preachers of a strong, earnest character. Men are wanted who can simplify the truth to those they preach to, and put doctrines before them in a way likely to be understood.

The following offers of service have recently been accepted by the Church Missionary Society:—Rev. T. H. Harvey, curate of Portsea, for China; Mr. C. S. Edwards, for the Niger, and Mr. Marcus Eustace, as medical missionaries; Miss A. K. Hamper, for China; Miss A. M. Tapson, for Japan; Miss A. Wardlaw Ramsay, for East Africa. Mr. Carlile Fraser, a mechanical engineer, has been appointed to assist Mr. Mackay at the south end of the Victoria Nyanza.

The building of a large mission hall for the parish of Christ Church, Dover, of which Rev. George Everard is the vicar, was commenced on Monday week. The premises include the house upon the land which is used as a working men's club, and also for a depôt of religious books. The hall will hold from three to four hundred persons. It is intended to be used for various evangelistic meetings, also for temperance gatherings, and addresses on various Christian objects. It will be a great assistance in the work of the parish, which consists of about 5000 in population.

BAPTIST.

The national meeting of Dunkards (German Baptists) in America has decided that persons wishing to unite with that denomination must discontinue the use of tobacco before they receive baptism.

Rev. W. Scriven, late of Nottingham, has removed to High-street, New Southgate, N., and will be glad to render aid to pastors and churches by accepting preaching engagements, without a view to settlement.

Rev. C. B. Sawday, late of Vernon Chapel, London, commenced his ministry in Melbourne Hall, Leicester, on Sunday, June 17, when there were crowded and overflowing congregations. On the following Tuesday a most enthusiastic meeting was held in Melbourne Hall to welcome the new pastor.

At the quarterly meeting of the London Baptist Association last week, a resolution was carried expressing regret at the reply of Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, accepting it as for the time final, but expressing a hope that Mr. Spurgeon would be led in the not distant future to renew his connection with the Association. The committee reported adversely to the proposition for a discussion on a credal basis "unless the Association on a review of the whole position require it." A resolution was, however, adopted, on the motion of Rev. F. B. Meyer, requesting the committee to arrange for such a discussion.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. James Sprunt has conducted a week's mission at Fairford, Gloucestershire. Members of the Established, Baptist, and Primitive Methodist Churches, and Salvation Army officers, have taken part.

Under the ministry of Rev. Henry Simon, Harecourt Chapel, Canonbury, is regaining strength; the congregations have more than doubled, while the school, Bible-classes, and other agencies are in a prosperous state.

Mr. John Knox, senior student of Rotherham College, was ordained, in Masborough Chapel, as missionary of the London Missionary Society to Vizagapatam, South India. It was stated that his resolve to devote himself to mission work arose from hearing an address by Dr. Moffat some years ago, at Brighton.

The evening service at Tolmer-square Church on Sunday week was of a somewhat international character. The pastor gave out the hymns, &c.; a minister from New Brunswick led the devotions; and Rev. Dr. Appleton, rector of an episcopal church at Philadelphia, preached. The pastor expressed a hope that the absurd and damaging division between sects in England might be broken down.

Rev. J. Crosby Roberts, the new pastor of Prince's-street Church, Northampton, preaching to young men from the text, "He went down, and slew a lion in a pit on a snowy day," said the first lion it was necessary to destroy was selfishness—that which made a man a parasite and a sponge, an unsqueezeable one; other lions were indecision, want of thoroughness, speaking evil of others, bad company, intemperance, impurity. Lion-killing was a business that must be done, or there would soon be man-killing. Either the lion must go down or we should.

Since December last Mr. A. E. Sidford, evangelist, has been acting as pastor of the church at Great Chesterford, Saffron Walden, and he has now accepted the pastorate. The report read at the anniversary gathering last week, stated that the Band of Hope has very considerably increased since Christmas, and meetings for lads and women have been held every week. The weekly prayer-meeting has been attended by very largely-increased numbers, and several fresh members have been admitted to the church. In the villages round about there is large scope for Christian work.

SALVATION ARMY.

In four weeks thirty persons have professed to find peace with God at Trichinopoly, Madras.

As the result of the first year's work in Holland, the Army have 11 corps, 35 officers and 11 cadets in training. 3000 souls have knelt at the penitent form, of whom over 1000 have been enrolled as soldiers.

The Limehouse Food and Shelter Home for the poor is a distinct success. Since its establishment 165,000 persons have been fed. Encouraged by these facts, a similar Home is being started in Edinburgh.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. J. E. Somerville, son of the venerable Dr. A. N. Somerville, is occupying Dr. Saphir's old pulpit at Belgrave.

The students of the Presbyterian College in London, who have a missionary society of their own, and take up some definite object each year, are now engaged in raising £500 for the Medical Mission in Formosa.

The congregation at Islington, Liverpool, have extended their mission premises, in a district where Gospel influence is sadly lacking. The work does not greatly prosper on account of the lack of workers.

Many tokens of blessing have attended the ministry of Rev. J. W. Rodger, at Bournemouth, during the last three years. The church on Sundays is always well filled, and Mr. Rodger's pulpit services and other labours continue to meet with manifest success.

Mr. J. A. Beith, of Manchester, when travelling in China, made it his business to visit the mission stations of the English Presbyterian Church. He has been describing his tour in The Presbyterian Messenger, and reports very favourably of the work that is being done.

The Irish Presbyterian Church, besides sustaining its own Missionary College and mission schools, and other evangelistic agencies in Spain, assists the Evangelical Society of France, the Central Society of Evangelisation, the Evangelical Society of Geneva, and the Waldensian Church in its missionary enterprises in Italy.

METHODIST.

City-road Chapel is to be separated from a circuit, and to be made the Cathedral of Methodism; leading ministers are from time to time to occupy the pulpit.

In last week's Methodist Times, Rev. W. H. Findlay, Wesleyan missionary, of Negapatam, South India, has an article entitled, "Wanted, a Foreign Missionary Policy," the opening sentence of which is, "There is undeniably something amiss with our foreign missions."

The debt of the Wesleyan Missionary Society is growing at the rate of £12,000 a year, and, unless something is done to reduce it, by the end of next year it will have mounted to more than £40,000. Arrangements are being made by which it is hoped to arrest this serious financial deficit.

Friends of the London Wesleyan Mission will note that Rev. Mark Guy Pearse's Friday morning service, and Rev. Hugh Price Hughes's Sunday afternoon Conference, are now suspended until the autumn. Mr. Hughes's Friday evening service will go on for two weeks longer.

Rev. W. H. During, Methodist Free Church missionary, of Golbanti, East Africa, has had a narrow escape from being drowned. When near Kipini, at the mouth of the Ozi river, his boat was upset, and himself and a companion were saved by grasping the handles of a floating box, which was a part of their luggage.

On Saturday last the corner-stones of a model dairy, workshops, and swimming-bath, in connection with the Children's Home, Edgworth, Bolton, were laid. The buildings are being erected at a cost of £2700 as a memorial of the late Mr. James Barlow. The Home has been in existence nineteen years, and has clothed and educated 2500 desitute children.

At Leeds there is an adult Bible-class, which meets in the Brunswick Chapel, and has a membership of 350 persons. Additions to the class are a weekly occurrence, and already it has begun to feed the church. Efforts are being made—not without success—to attract the wanderer and sceptic and drunkard to this place of worship, and to convert the destroyers of good into factors for good.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The second Belfast Convention for the Deepening of Spiritual Life is fixed for October 1 to 6.

Rev. John Hall, D.D., of New York, has arrived at Belfast, and intends to take a short holiday in the North of Ireland.

The Methodist Mission tent has been pitched for some time at Pettigo, and has been attended by large congregations, several of whom have decided for Christ.

The Belfast Seaman's Friend Society, which is of an undenominational character, is carrying on a successful work. It has flourishing day schools attended by 310 children. The chaplain and mission agent are assisted by a devoted band of teachers and of young men, who week by week board the vessels in the harbour, introduce strange seamen to suitable lodgings, and, when possible, lead them to the sanctuary.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. William Thomas, Cwmavon, Glam., the oldest Congregational minister in Wales; he had been in the ministry forty-five years.—Mr. Francis Tait, mayor of Goulburn, New South Wales; he was once a Wesleyan missionary in the Fiji Islands, where he acquired a great influence with King Thakombau.—Rev. George Mather, Wesleyan minister, of Southport.—Rev. Richard Butler, rector of St. Silas's Ardwick, Manchester.

The Book World.

* Publishers will greatly oblige by always marking prices in books which they send us for review.*

A New Edition.

Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton have published a new and cheap edition of Mr. Paxton Hood's admirable life of CHRISTMAS EVANS, the preacher of Wild Wales. May the mantle of this God-inspired evangelist fall on some of our British youth as they read these stirring pages.

Two Weighty Little Books.

We cannot over-praise two neat little books issued by Messrs. Funk & Wagnalls. A BUNDLE OF LETTERS TO BUSY GIRLS, by Grace H. Dodge, ought to be more than worth its weight in gold to young women in all ranks of life. BETTER NOT, by Rev. Dr. J. H. (now Bishop) Vincent, is a vigorous and wise discussion of "certain social customs." (2s. each.)

JULY MAGAZINES.

THE QUIVER

has an article on "The Childhood of the Chinese Boy," which comes in appropriately just now, when we are hearing so much of that wonderful people. English boys and girls who read it may gather something for their own profit. Among many other readable contributions are Prof. Blaikie's missionary narrative of Terra del Fuego, and the Special Commissioner's sketch of Dean Spence, of Gloucester, late of St. Pancras.

RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY.

THE GIRL'S OWN PAPER contains a very interesting narrative of the "Struggles of a lady journalist." The Summer Number of this popular and attractive serial, entitled, ROSEBUD GARDEN, has much seasonable literature, one of the sketches describing "How two girls spent their Summer Holiday." The Summer Number of THE BOY'S OWN PAPER contains also many articles relating to the holiday season. One by Rev. George Herbert, on "Touring," will be specially appreciated by cyclists.

SUNDAY AT HOME AND LEISURE HOUR.

The Spanish Armada finds a place in both these excellent monthlies, either in prose or verse. In THE SUNDAY AT HOME is an account of Miss Stirling's Edinburgh Homes for Poor Children that ought to awaken much sympathy for that noble Institution. "An Indian Recollection" ought to be read and treasured as a striking instance of Gospel fruit from lowly effort. The frontispiece picture to THE LEISURE HOUR, "The First Cloud," reproduced from Mr. Orchardson's painting, carries its lesson on its face.

GOOD WORDS AND SUNDAY MAGAZINE.

In the former there is a somewhat striking and realistic Bible study on "Jonah," by the late Mr. Charles Reade. He fully accepts the narrative of the swallowing and disgorging of the runaway by the great fish, moralises on the lessons of the prophet's life, and declares that the story is "the most beautiful ever written in so small a compass." In the same magazine is a very attractive and seasonable paper by Dr. Gordon Stables on "Caravan Life." In THE SUNDAY MAGAZINE, Rev. E. J. Hardy sketches graphically the life of the late Bishop Patteson; and Annie Beale gives an appreciative account of the Hospital for Women in Marylebone-road.

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE.

This American serial easily holds its foremost place among the pictorial monthlies. The profusely and beautifully illustrated paper on "Sinai and the Wilderness" throws a deeply interesting light on the Exodus narrative, and also describes this classic ground as it now is. Mr. Kennan proceeds with his Siberian sketches, which promise to be of tragic present-day interest in their bearing on the internal economy of Russian rule. The story of President Lincoln's Life reaches the point when the great Western Republic had severely strained relations with this country, through our national attitude as to the Civil War. In the "Open Letters" department, Rev. Washington Gladden writes powerfully and sensibly on "The Ethics of Copyright," contending that individual property in brain products is as real and tangible as any other sort of property. The companion serial for the young, ST. NICHOLAS, is crammed full of entertaining and informing reading, cleverly illustrated.

Mr. D. Leslie, 20, St. John-street, Perth, N.B., has issued a truly admirable penny pocket "Tourists' Guide to the Scottish Highlands," with maps and plenty of illustrations; surely it is the cheapest of its kind.

We have received the current issue of The Reporter's Magazine (4d. 3, New Bridge-street, E.C.), written in Mr. Nankivell's exquisitely neat and symmetric phonographic characters; and full of matter specially interesting to the devotees of the beautiful art that is such a boon to the world.

THE NEW BUILDINGS of the Irish Church Missions Society IN DUBLIN

Are about to be commenced on a most suitable site, a short distance from where the old Mission Hall stood nearly forty years in Townsend-street, 14,000 square feet of the ground on which the Royal Theatre was burnt down having been secured at a cost of £750 for the lease. The compensation granted by the Railway Company for the old buildings is only sufficient to erect the necessary premises. This amount had therefore to be collected, and to complete the purchase money.

£190 is still wanted

CHURCH ASSOCIATION.

SPECIAL APPEAL FOR FUNDS.

THE present very grave position of the Church of England calls for the serious and prayerful consideration of its members, and we therefore ask your special attention to the steps the Church Association is taking with the view of upholding scriptural truth, and of arresting the wave of Sacerdotalism which threatens to overthrow that Church as an Establishment.

The law has been authoritatively declared on no less than sixty points, and the Protestant character of the Church of England thereby vindicated; but the earnest hope once entertained by the Council, and by the general body of the Church Association, that Judicial decisions would be respected by the Clergy generally, has proved fallacious.

The law has been deliberately defied, and the authority of the Queen's Courts explicitly denied, while all action on the part of aggrieved laymen and the presentments of Churchwardens have alike been treated with studied and systematic neglect. The aggressive activity of the Ritualistic Clergy, carried on under the ægis of the English Church Union, the encouragement given to them not only by the Bishops, but even by successive Prime Ministers of the Crown, and inadequately resisted by the Protestant laity, has resulted in the rapid advance of practices which are alien to the spirit of the Church of England, and unless effectually repressed can have but one result, to wit, its disestablishment.

Requiem Masses for the dead, celebrated on the Romish festival of All Souls, and at the funerals of Mr. Mackonochie and others, have failed to elicit any censure on the part of the Bishops; whereas any innovation in a Protestant direction, however harmless, is at once severely checked, thus showing unmistakably the strength of the Episcopal leaning towards Sacerdotalism.

The Bishop of London's Veto of the St. Paul's Reredos Case, in the face of a Memorial bearing about nine thousand signatures readily obtained within the Diocese at very short notice, is only one amongst many instances of the substitution of the personal will of a Bishop for the administration of justice. Bishop Temple forbids any appeal to the Law Courts on the part of loyal members of the Church, though they honestly believe that the crucifix is illegal, and, being used in Roman Catholic Churches as a necessary adjunct to the service of the Mass, constitutes (with the accompanying images of the Madonna and Child) a direct and ever-present incentive to idolatry.

These facts sufficiently prove that a "lying spirit" is at work within the National Church, threatening to transform all her agencies for good into a vast machinery for the destruction of those vital truths which our Reformers died to vindicate, and which will involve in their overthrow those civil and religious liberties and that social and material progress which have made England the mother of freed men throughout the world.

The voice of the Church has been substituted for the authority of Holy Scripture, and an administration of the Lord's Supper has been illegally introduced, which is not merely at variance with the plain Order of the Book of Common Prayer, but with the purport of the original institution of our Saviour. These are not questions of mere ecclesiastical or antiquarian interest. While they are vital to the spurious claims of "sacrificing priests," they are equally of importance to ourselves as affecting the office and work of the Lord Jesus Christ as the one mediating Priest in His Church, the character and efficacy of His Atonement, and that covenant freedom of access to God which under the Gospel dispensation is the precious heritage of each individual sinner.

The question, therefore, is forced upon us—Are the Laity of England to be left without a remedy? Are the laws of England to be ostentatiously broken, and the authority of the Queen's Courts to be defied? Are the distinctive doctrines and practices of Rome to be re-introduced into the worship of a Church from which they were publicly cast out by the unanimous consent of the Sovereign, the Parliament, and the people of England? Shall the Mass with its obscuration of truth, its "blasphemous fables" and "dangerous deceits," be restored in our parish Churches?

The Council of the Church Association share the belief, strongly expressed in many quarters, that another appeal to the courts of law is imperatively demanded. Proceedings have accordingly been commenced against the Bishop of Lincoln for illegal practices in his own cathedral and at St. Peter's-at-Gowts in the city of Lincoln. Action has also been taken to compel the Bishop of London to allow the case against the Reredos in his cathedral to go forward.

The Association is already committed to considerable outlay, and its success must depend on whether the means placed at the disposal of the Council are sufficient to enable them to carry out with vigour any proceedings which the progress of events may render necessary. A Guarantee Fund of at least £10,000 is required, to which contributions are earnestly invited. Payments to be distributed over five years, and made yearly in equal proportions.

Increased activity in the ordinary work of the Association also calls for an increased income, and the Council trust that the necessities of the General Fund will be remembered, and additional means provided for the work, which is constantly growing.

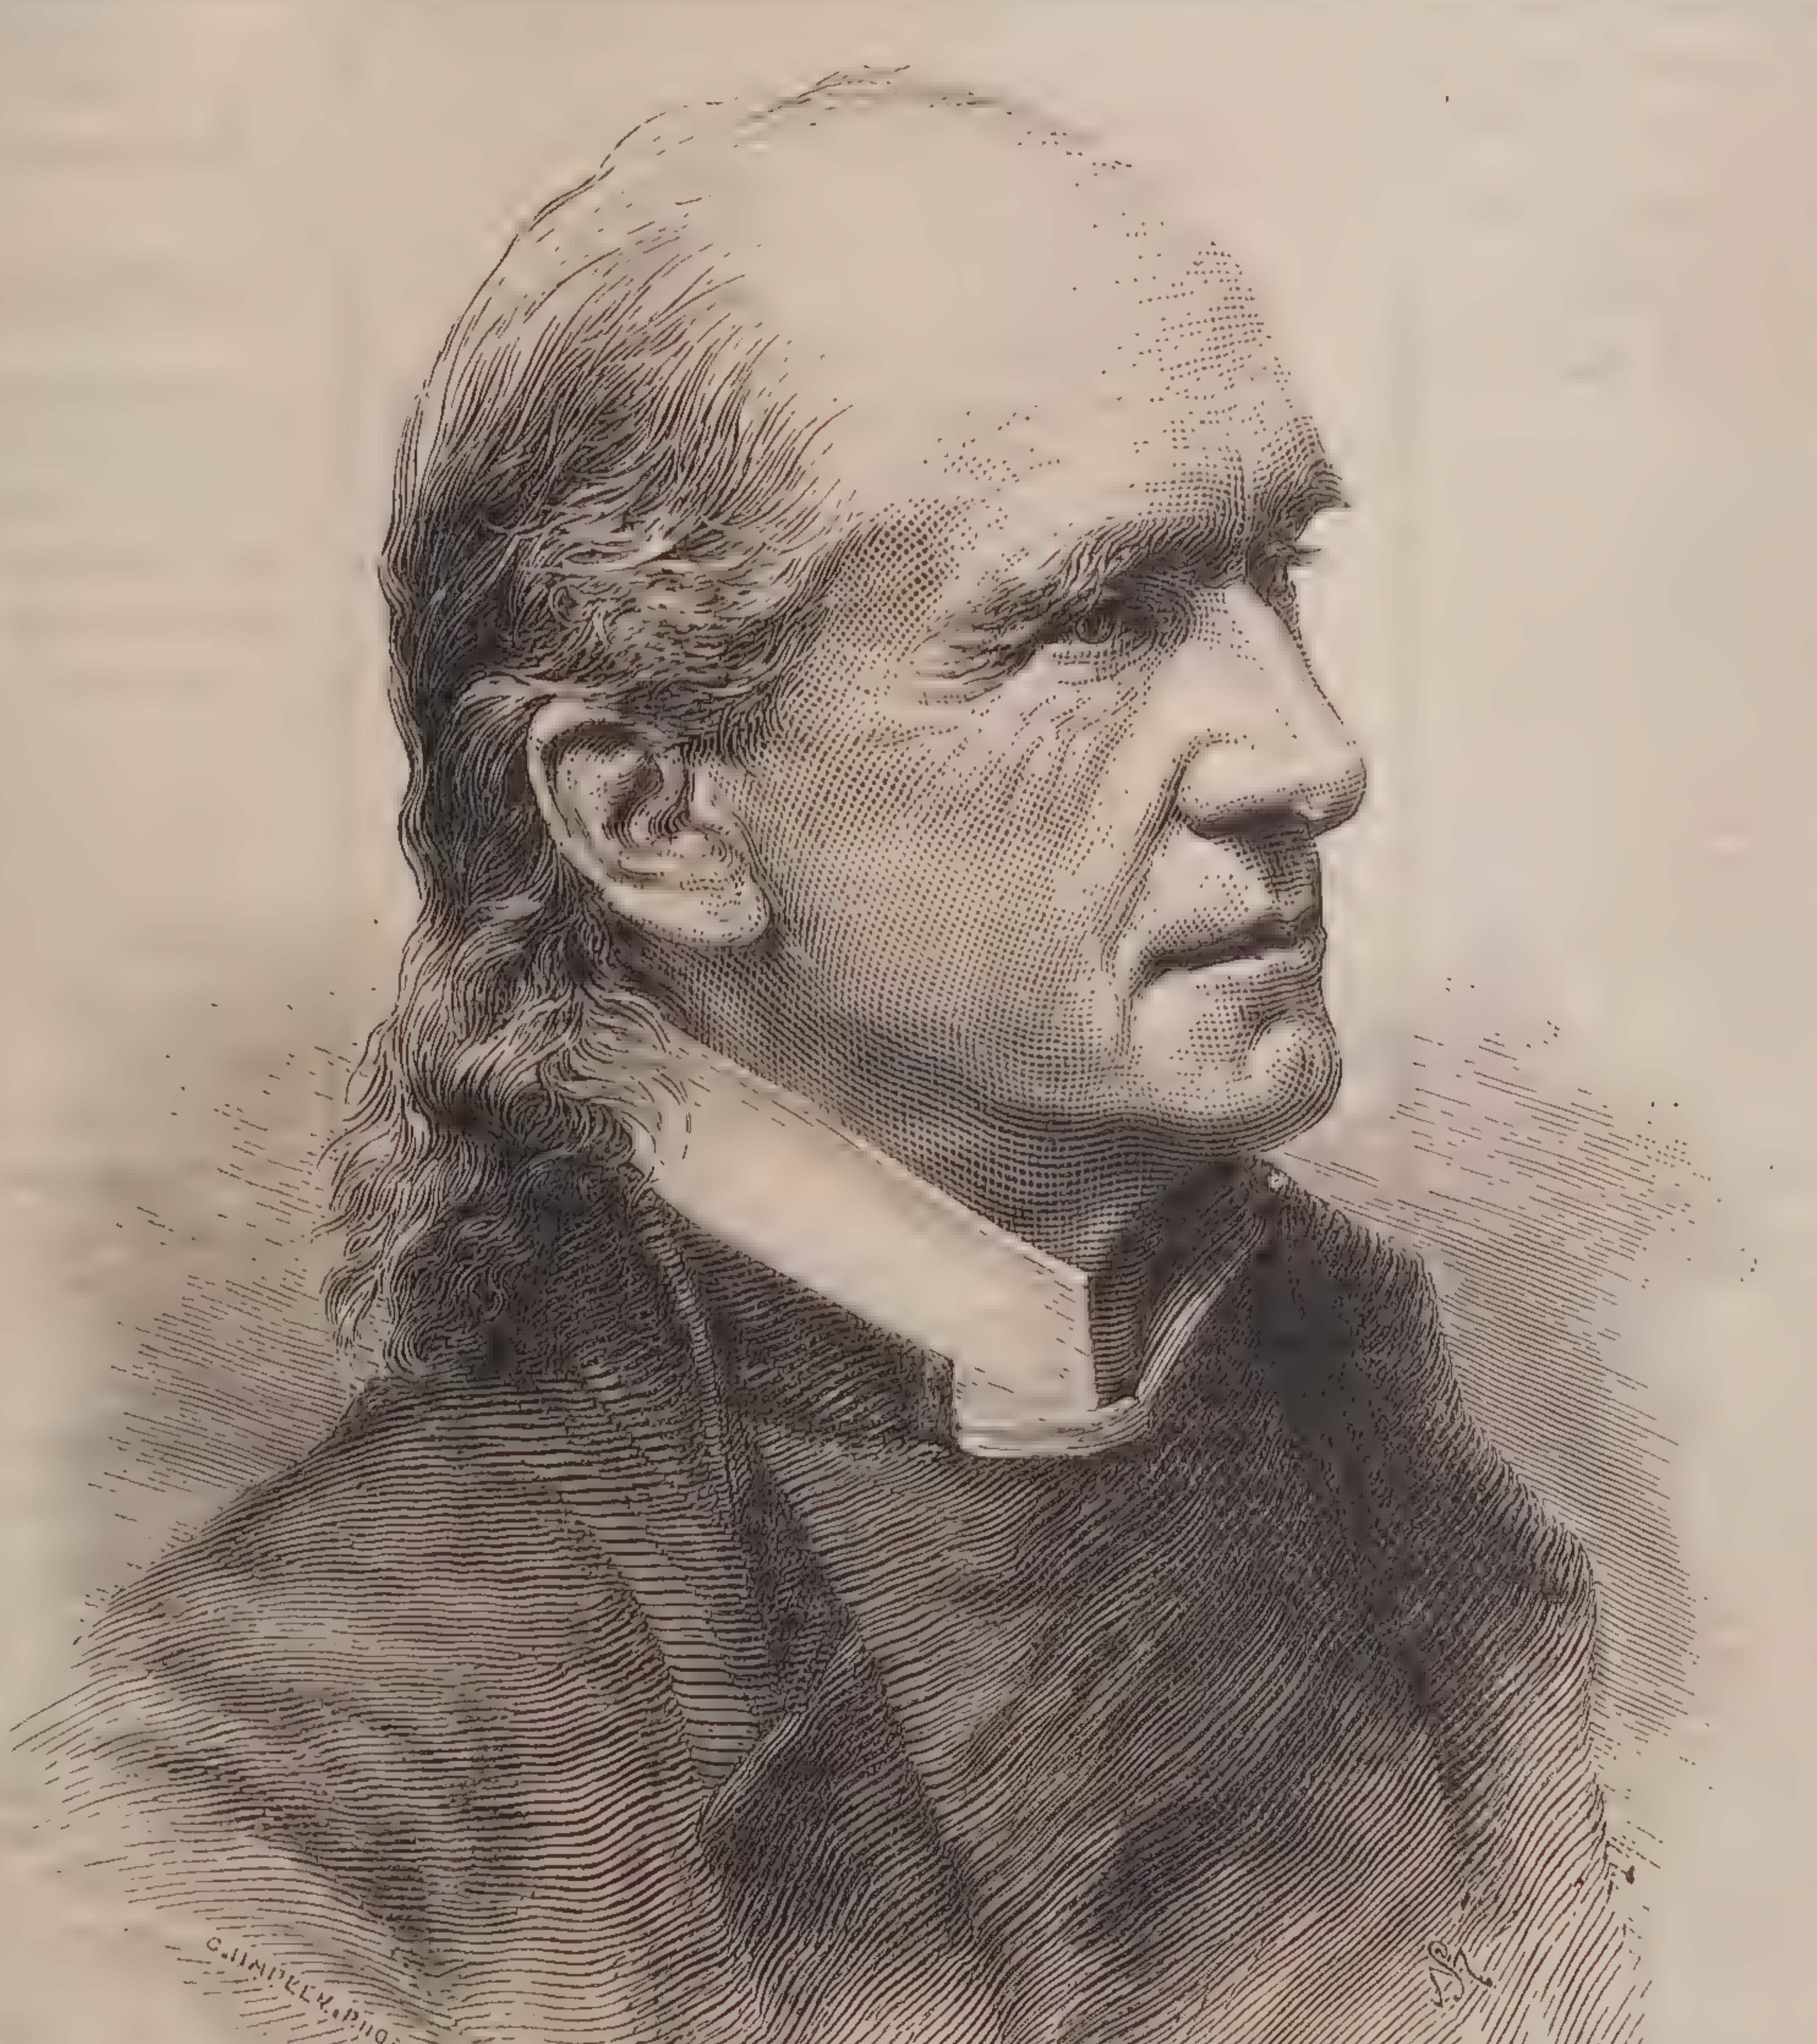
THE RIGHT REV. H. B. WHIPPLE, D.D.,

Bishop of Minnesota.

IF rightdown hard work in spreading the knowledge of Christ and promoting the cause of education entitles a man to honour and praise, then Bishop Whipple, of Minnesota, United States of America, deserves recognition for his eminent services to religion and civilisation, under conditions of a peculiarly trying character. Almost in spite of himself he was made bishop of a large diocese, but no sooner did he find himself put in authority than he cheerfully assumed the responsibilities and duties of his office. For twenty-nine years he has brought sound judgment and manly vigour to bear upon important administrative and aggressive work. He is now in England attending the Lambeth Conference.

Born in the month of February, 1822, at Adams, Jefferson County, New York, the subject of this sketch was designed for a profession; but, his health failing, he entered upon mercantile life. When a married man with four children, he felt himself called to active work for God, and became a candidate for orders in the Protestant Episcopal Church. After a short period of labour in New York State, he took a charge in Chicago, and in 1859, while putting heart and soul into the performance of his duties in that city, he was informed that he had been elected Bishop of Minnesota. The news came to him as a great surprise, and at first he did not quite see his way to accept the post. Replying to the clergyman who informed him of his election, he said: "I cannot go. It is a mistake. I am not a scholar, theologian, or preacher. I am not even a graduate of college. I was trained up a merchant. I gave up my business to tell the story of the love of Jesus. I know that I can do that, and I can be a shepherd to the poor; but a bishop I can never be." There was, however, no mistake about the appointment; the election was made in due form, the choice of the clergy being fully confirmed by the laymen. The advice of fathers in God was very properly sought, and in the result the post was accepted and its duties heartily undertaken. Consecrated on October 13, 1859, at Richmond, Virginia, the Bishop went westward without delay, and took up his residence at Faribault. This place had been the centre of some educational effort, and an earnest religious spirit had manifested itself among the residents, who right cordially welcomed the Bishop in their midst.



(From Copyright Photograph by Mr. G. Hadley, Lincoln.)

In 1859 there were nearly 20,000 Indians in Minnesota, and they were in some measure reached by missions. But the white man had set the natives a bad example, and the deadly fire-water flowed freely. Holding that red skins as well as white were in his care, the Bishop raised his voice vigorously against the brutality of the civilised race, as well as extended a kindly hand to those who through ignorance were sunk in barbarism, degradation, and misery. In his administration of the diocese, the Bishop has been careful to overlook no class of the community, and has endeavoured to secure the future as well as improve the present. Success has crowned his efforts, and his policy has been amply justified. A truly wonderful work has been done among those who most needed elevating influences, and, as a consequence, the Bishop has been styled the "Apostle to the Indians."

Many ready helpers have co-operated with the Bishop from the beginning. In the days before there were railways in the State, progress could only be made in proportion as active efforts were seconded by hearty assistance. There were hardships and sometimes perils to encounter during winter storms on the prairie; but, being well understood and highly appreciated by his people, the Bishop had a very happy life, although his energies were much taxed at times. In 1862 the corner stone was laid of a cathedral for the diocese. A large educational establishment—a hall named after Rev. Dr. Seabury, first Bishop of the American Church—was begun the same year. On the day when the foundation-stone was laid, some incredulous looks were cast at Bishop Whipple, as he declared that the time would come when the bluffs of the region would be crowned with Christian schools, and the name of Faribault would be a household word throughout the West.

The circumstances were not reassuring, for the times were troublous. The country was desolated by civil war, and the building work was hardly begun when Minnesota was the scene of what has since been known as "The Indian Massacre." In this terrible affair some 800 persons perished. In one week the Indian missions, which were so near to the Bishop's heart, were destroyed, and the labour of years was blasted.

Referring to this sad matter in 1884, the Bishop said:—

> The times grew worse. Many said, as of old, "in the morning, Would God it were evening," and "in the evening, Would God it were morning." Our schools and missions were crippled for lack of means. It is a miracle of God's goodness that we did not give up in despair. I only remember once that my heart failed me. One day I sat in my study, the unbidden tears stealing down my cheeks; one of our professors entered the door. I saw in his tell-tale face despair. I sprang to my feet, and said, "Don't tell me, brother; let us kneel in prayer." We did pray; we arose; without one word he threw his arms around my neck and kissed me, and went away. That was the nearest to failure of any event in the history of Faribault. In the fall of 1863 Seabury Hall was finished.

In 1872 Seabury Hall was burned, whereupon several new buildings were raised for male and female students. These undertakings were large and important, providing for divinity and general education. During Bishop Whipple's administration of the diocese over a hundred churches and chapels have been erected in the State, over thirty parsonages, and four church hospitals.

As we have already hinted, the Bishop's love for the Indians was not long in showing itself. When he first went among them the Dakotahs and Ojibways were at war. To use the Bishop's description:—

> Disease and death held carnival in every Indian village. I shall never forget the awful sights which met my eyes at my first visit to Gull Lake. A dead Indian was lying by the roadside. A few miles from the agency I saw bruised and bleeding men suffering from the wounds received in a drunken fight. An Indian mother was scraping the inner bark of the pine tree to satisfy the gnawing of the hunger of her starving babes. We found at the mission a crowd of squalid wretches, whose rags did not cover their nakedness, and yet in their helplessness and woe they listened to my words as if I was a messenger from heaven. A few months later I visited the lower Sioux agency. The outlook for Indian missions was very dark. Other religious bodies had established missions among the Chippeways, but all had been abandoned. Friends advised me not to have anything to do with Indian missions. A brother Bishop urged me not to speak of this work in any missionary address. Dark as it was, I knew that He who died for me died for them. I resolved, God being my helper, that it should never be said that the first Bishop of Minnesota had turned his back on the heathen whom God had placed at his door. For years there was much irritation and hatred of the Indians. I was compelled to antagonise this feeling in their defence. They poured their tale of sorrows into my ears. The knowledge of the wrongs which lay behind our Indian wars forced me to be their defender. Our Indian system has not been reformed, but there is the difference between daylight and midnight in its administration. God has raised up many noble men and women to battle for the Indian's rights. Many whom I first met as painted savages are to-day civilised Christian men.

As a fact colonies of Christian Indians have sprung up on every Reservation, and the thriftless habits of wandering tribes have been abandoned for fixed habitations and cultivated farms. Clothed in the white man's garb, the native savage now subsists upon the proceeds of his honest labour. Chiefs have sent their sons to college to be educated, and many flourishing missions are now in charge of fully equipped Indian ministers.

While loving his own Church, Bishop Whipple has ever maintained a friendly attitude in relation to all who love the Lord Jesus in sincerity and truth; and in his many religious and philanthropic works he has received valuable help from members of various evangelical communions. On the twenty-fifth anniversary of his episcopate the citizens of Faribault gave him a public ovation, and in other ways expressed their high esteem for him. Without respect of party, sect, or nationality, they acknowledged his excellence, and rehearsed his many good qualities and works.

The Bishop's liberality of mind is well illustrated by the following incident:—A deputation waited upon him on one occasion from an Indian settlement, asking him to send them a missionary to the Reserve. Finding that another evangelical society had an agent on the spot, the Bishop declined to entertain the request, saying that he did not wish to interfere with other people's work for Christ. The Indians replied that if an Episcopal missionary were not sent, they would invite the Roman Catholics into the settlement. The threat placed the Bishop in an awkward position, and he wrote and explained matters to the Society which was then in the field. With a good sense corresponding to that which the Bishop had shown, the Society at once undertook to transfer its agent to another station, so that a Protestant Episcopal missionary might be sent into that dissatisfied settlement. The incident not only exhibits the Bishop in a generous light, but demonstrates the confidence which Protestants in general have reposed in him.

During recent years the Bishop has been broken in health. The people of Faribault thank him for the activity which has secured for their city the title of "The Athens of the North-West." The Bishop, in turn, acknowledges the generosity of the people and the fidelity of the pastors. To the other good causes which have been mentioned as flourishing in the diocese must be added that of temperance. It is to be hoped that Bishop Whipple's influence and vigour will long be enjoyed in Minnesota.

CHRISTIAN OFFICERS KILLED.—Colonel Battye, 5th Goorkas, and Captain Urmston, 6th Punjab Infantry, who recently fell in conflict with a hostile tribe on the Afghan frontier, were men of high Christian character. Captain Urmston was the eldest son of Colonel H. B. Urmston, of Ardenlee, Maidstone, and was a devoted friend of Colonel Battye, with whom he fell. Both had passed through many dangers on the frontier, and, though in different regiments, they were knit together by the closest bonds of mutual love and piety. Both were good soldiers of the Cross, as well as of the State. Together they might have been found studying the Greek Testament in their quiet evenings in a tent, and learning these great truths from the greatest of all teachers, which enabled them to "endure hardness as good soldiers."

GOD'S TIME NOW.

Choose I must, and soon must choose
Holiness, or heaven lose.
While what heaven loves I hate,
Shut for me is heaven's gate.

Endless sin means endless woe,
Into endless sin I go,
If my soul, from reason rent,
Takes from sin its final bent.

Balance lost, but not regained,
Final bent is soon attained.
Fate is choice in fullest flower,
Man is flexile—for an hour!

As the stream its channel grooves,
And within that channel moves,
So doth habit's deepest tide
Groove its bed, and there abide.

Light obeyed increaseth Light,
Light resisted bringeth night.
Who shall give me will to choose,
If the love of Light I lose?

Speed, my soul; this instant yield;
Let the Light its sceptre wield.
While thy God prolongeth grace,
Haste thee toward his holy face!

BEFRIENDING THE FRIENDLESS.

A Home for helping young women who had been lured into a life of open sin to fight their way back to virtuous paths was opened some two years ago at 35, Oakley-crescent, Chelsea, with Miss E. A. Tournier as honorary resident and superintendent. The report of the second year's work lately issued states that during that period sixty-six of these unhappy and much-wronged sisters have been received into the Home, and dealt with in various ways. Everything is arranged so as to increase the home feeling of the place, and bring the best influences to bear on the inmates. The entire housework is done by the girls. Most of them are trained for domestic service, but all cannot be so trained, through weakness in physique. They come from all ranks of life. Orders for ladies', children's, business, and servants' dresses are very thankfully received, and executed at very moderate prices.

When we think of the many difficulties connected with this work, we are filled with gratitude that the power of Christ's love has constrained so many refined and cultured women to labour in it year after year. The least that society can do for these noble women is to see that their burdens shall not be increased by anxieties from want of adequate support. We trust many of our readers will send for a report of this Home. The hon. treasurer of which is Mrs. J. Shedden Scrimgeour, 38, Hyde Park-gardens, W.

A NEW HOSPITAL FOR MADAGASCAR.—Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, foreign secretary of the London Missionary Society, calls attention to the hospital in connection with the Medical Mission at Antananarivo, which has been condemned on sanitary and other grounds as no longer fit for use. It has become imperatively necessary to erect another in a more convenient situation, and an appeal is made for a new hospital by the members of the Friends' Foreign Mission Association. The responsibility of maintaining and managing the Medical Mission in Madagascar devolves on the Friends' Foreign Mission Committee; but so great is the value of the Medical Mission to the missionaries of the London Missionary Society, and to the people under their care, that the Society regularly contributes one-third of the annual cost of maintaining it, and urge their friends to assist in providing the funds for the new hospital.

"O MUH-IU KONG-FU."

ONE Sunday morning, at one of our native services, a crowd of Chinese collected outside our chapel (which is close to the India-road), attracted by hearing the "foreign doctrine" being preached within. One of the windows being open, two or three more inquisitive than the rest had succeeded in climbing up, to have a good view of how things were going on. Whereupon, the preacher kindly asked them to come in and sit with the rest, but one replied, "O Muh-iu Kong-fu"—"I have no time," or leisure.

Here in China, we often hear this excuse when our brethren urge the people to give heed to the study of higher and nobler things than merchandise and cash. Thank God, there are not a few who do find time and leisure, and in these Northern provinces many are burning their idols and following Jesus, the Mighty to save and keep.

After the Chinaman had gone his way, I began to think of the hundreds of Christians in privileged England, who, when asked to satisfy the soul-thirst of Christ, by given themselves, or, their interest to the dark heathen, practically say, as did this one—"I have no time"—"O Muh-iu Kong-fu."

If there are any such reading these words, let me entreat them to consider their personal responsibility in the matter, and read very carefully those searching words in Prov. xxiv. 11,12: "If thou forbear to deliver them that are drawn unto death, and those that are ready to be slain; if thou sayest, Behold, we knew it not; doth not He that pondereth the heart consider it? and He that keepeth thy soul, doth not He know it? and shall not He render to every man according to his works?" There are two or three things we all would do well to remember concerning such an excuse:—

(1) No time means no desire to rescue the heathen world from its darkness and sin. In China to-day the all-absorbing topic on street or road is ts'ien, ts'ien, ts'ien—money, money, money. Can we blame these Chinese for this? when in our home churches to-day Christ's claims have to give way to the craving for gold and silver, which perish with the very using. May the Lord wake us up from the terrible enchantment, ere it be too late.

(2) No time means no love. To be told straight that you did not love Christ would be hard perhaps to bear, yet the fact remains; you have no time for the consideration of Christ's desires about these millions He loved to die for, and loves to seek for. My brother, where is thy love?

(3) No time means no blessing. Think of what is missed in not being in truest sympathy with our Divine Lord; our time, all absorbed with SELF. No fellowship, no blessing. The Lord stir us all up.

THE CONVALESCENT AND HOLIDAY HOME, Lichfield House, Royal Parade, Eastbourne, is a very useful institution, lately transferred from Bayswater, where for many years it was carried on in conjunction with a similar home for young women. The Home offers to youths up to twenty years of age, and lads engaged in business, the advantage of sea air, as well as board and lodging, under Christian influence, at a very nominal cost. It is under the direction of Miss Kennedy, who has the advice of well-known Christian workers in the management. Letters of introduction are obtainable from subscribers, and the Home may be inspected by friends

OPEN-AIR PREACHERS.

WITH his usual acumen and wide-awakeness, Mr. Kirkham secured for his fellow open-air preachers a rare treat the other evening in Exeter Hall, when they were addressed by Pastor Theodore Monod, and Rev. Dr. Gordon, of Boston. We regret that the pressure of Conference matter will not allow of our giving full notes of the wise exhortations of the one speaker, and the stirring recitals of the other.

Pastor Monod, in addressing the open-air preachers from the words, "Take heed unto thyself," reminded them that before evangelising others they must evangelise themselves. Let them see to it that they had taken the degree of S.S., chosen by that good man Huntingdon—meaning "Sinner saved." Proceeding to state and unfold his points, the Pastor said:—My first advice is, Be yourself. Be simple, be natural. Do not try to be somebody else: God does not want you to. It has been very truly and beautifully said, that in one sense a man needs to be converted in two ways—he must pass from the natural man to the spiritual, and then the spiritual man has to learn to be natural. The chief thing is not so much what you know or believe or say, but what you are, by the grace of God; that is the hidden source of your influence. Though it is not the meaning of the text, a very good piece of advice is to take heed to your body, your health. The body is for the Lord, and the Lord for the body; therefore care for it in every way as for the Lord. Take heed also to your mind. Keep it well informed and instructed. There is no reason, because God has our heart, why we should neglect our mind. Besides, He has given us our mind, and we have to answer for it, as well as for our body and our affections. Learn to think as clearly, as strongly, and as deeply as you can. It may take some trouble, but the trouble will be well repaid. With the view to getting right thoughts, read, but not too much. Digest what you read. Read little, think much, pray always. Above all, take heed to your heart. If you have times of exultation let them be in secret rather than in public. See if there be any secret thing, or any other thing, that separates you from God. Seek to do the will of God not only in public but at home, among your neighbours, in your own family, at your own table, and when you are alone with God most of all. He is a man of God who seeks not his own glory, or the glory of his church or his society, but the glory of his God and Saviour. Take heed thus to yourselves in times of adversity, and more than all in times of prosperity. Read and study the Word of God for the feeding of your own soul as well as for the feeding of others. Do not neglect secret prayer. Take your needed rest or relaxation "in the Lord," and you will get the full blessing out of it. Take heed to what happens around you, and you may find many instructive incidents and illustrations that will be of use to you in your work.

The foregoing is but a skeleton of the Pastor's helpful address. He was followed by Dr. GORDON, who spoke of the great privilege he felt in standing before so many witnesses for God in the open air. He proceeded to refer to the difficulties thrown in the way of open-air preaching in Boston, U.S., by the local authorities. One reason they urge is that if freedom of utterance were given, agitators and atheists would take advantage of it, to the detriment of public order. Dr. Gordon said that on the previous Sunday he had an opportunity of seeing and hearing some street preachers who were left unmolested by the police. In Boston that would be deemed a marvellous thing. Mrs. Gordon ("who," said the doctor, "is as much a preacher as I am") was present at one place where the Gospel preacher, the socialist, the sceptic, and others were all busy propagating their views in close proximity. Yet there was no disturbance, and no danger to the public peace. The infidel orator gave permission for anybody to speak for ten minutes. Mrs. Gordon took the stand for that time, and preached the Gospel to a very attentive audience. In the remaining part of his interesting address, Dr. Gordon related some very striking cases, from experience or observation, of spiritual results that had happened from preaching in the open air. Some of these incidents were in connection with the remarkable career of "Uncle John Vassar," with whom Dr. Gordon had the privilege of being associated in his younger days.

SOWING TARES.

SIR,—Many of your readers have lately been enjoying the Conference at Mildmay upon the subject of "Progress"; but it is well we should note the terrible progress that is being made on every hand by the wicked one, who well knows how to use the printing press for insidiously and effectively "sowing tares."

We have just received a letter from the colporteur in charge of our Bible-carriage, at present stationed in a busy market town in the Midlands, which shows how infidel tracts are being disseminated in a way that it behoves Christian heads of families to be very watchful of what comes into their houses. He writes:—"We have had a very trying time of it this week; we have for once known what it is to stand in front of men who are in earnest in spreading infidel literature. Enclosed is a copy of a kind that is sold here in thousands. There is a shop here devoted to the sale of these papers and bad books, and I hear from the people that the shopkeeper puts one or more of these papers inside every book and newspaper he sells. In this way he has got them into homes which would otherwise have been impossible for him to get them. Young men stand round his window in numbers, eager to see if any new production is exhibited, and we have seen these young men go in two and three at a time and purchase them, and turn to devour them as they walk along the streets. It does seem so sad, and the effects they are having on the minds of the people is simply astonishing. I have never before come into contact with the like of it. In large cities it exists, of course, quite as bad, but their the evil is somewhat stemmed; but here it is barefaced and unchecked."

We hope soon to be able to put on a colporteur to labour in this town and the surrounding villages; but the evil exists throughout the whole country. Would that the Lord's people were stirred up in this matter.

For some years back we have sent some of our experienced colporteurs to visit remote outlying villages with very blessed results. We are trusting we may be enabled to do so again this year, although, as yet, we have no funds for it. I should be glad to receive from any of your readers information concerning any such village districts, where little or no Gospel work is being down.—Yours, &c., H. D. BROWN, Sec.,

AMLWCH.—Even in this small place, in the island of Anglesea, there are neglected and destitute children, and last winter Mr. Richard Morgan opened a Ragged School for them. Indirectly the more thriftless of the parents have thus been got at, and, as the school has an attendance of fifty, it is hoped that much good will be done. Mr. Morgan has also opened a Sailors' Reading-room, which is highly appreciated. Friends keep him supplied with books and tracts, but he would welcome more assistance towards meeting other expenses of his work.

XVIII.—ANGEL WORK IN A BAD TOWN.—PART 2.
GEN. xix.

IT seems marvellous that God should employ sons of men to win men to Himself. Surely angels could do it better! Nay, did they not save Lot with a pertinacity, and a holy ingenuity, which are full of teaching and stimulus to ourselves, as workers for the Lord? The world is full of Sodoms still; and Lots, whom we have known and loved, or who have a claim on us, are sitting at their gates. Oh, why are we behind the angels in eagerness to pluck them as brands from the burning? Bright spirits, ye shall read us some holy lessons as to methods of Christian work; and we will try and emulate you, lest the time should come when we should be dismissed from our posts; and heaven's doors flung wide open every day, to let out your rejoicing crowds, to take our place in class, or pulpit, or squalid court!

They went to where Lot was.—"There came two angels to Sodom at even." What, did angels go to Sodom? Yes, to Sodom, and yet angels. And as a ray of light may pass through the fœtid atmosphere of some squalid court, and emerge without a stain on its pure texture, so may angels spend a night in Sodom, surrounded by crowds of sinners, and yet be untainted angels still. If you go to Sodom for your gains, as Lot did, you will soon show signs of moral pollution. But if you go to save men, as these angels did, you may go into a very hell of evil, where the air is laden with impurity and blasphemy, but you will not be befouled. No grain of mud shall stick. "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper; and every tongue that shall rise in judgment against thee, thou shalt condemn."

This is the spirit of Christ's Gospel. "When He came where he was." "He goeth after that which is lost, until He find it." "He put forth his hand and touched him." We must not wait for sinners to come to us; we must go to them. To the banks of the stream, where the fish hide in the dark, cool depths. To the highways of the town, where men congregate. In public-houses, music-halls, stews of crime, and homes of poverty. Yea, and to the distant parts of the world, anywhere and everywhere that men are to be found, we must go to them, to preach the Gospel. The most unlikely places will yield Lots, who would have died in their sins, if they had not been sought out.

They were content to work for very few.—We are in danger of overlooking hand-picked fruit. We prefer to go into the orchard and shake down from the trees the abundant crops until the ground is littered with them far and near. But we forget how much waste there is in the process, and how many are bruised, whilst others are torn prematurely from the parent bough.

So far as we can gather, all our Lord's choicest followers were the result of his personal ministry. To one and another He said, "Follow me." His life was full of personal interviews. He sought out individual souls (John v. 14). He would spend much time and thought to win one solitary woman, her character none too good (John iv.). He believed in going after one sheep that was lost. And the steadfastness of their characters vindicated his methods. And it is most beautiful to trace the same characteristic in the Apostle Paul, who says that "he warned every man, and taught every man, that he might present every man perfect in Christ Jesus."

It is a question whether more men are not saved by individual appeal than by all our preaching. It is not the sermon which wins them, but the quiet talk with a worker at an after-meeting, or the letter of a parent, or the words of a friend. When Christ said, "Preach the Gospel to every creature," did He not suggest that we were to set ourselves to the work of leaving the proclamation of heaven's love at every door, and to every child of Adam, throughout the world?

We never know what we do when we win one soul for God. Is not the following instance, culled from the biography of James Brainerd Taylor, called home to God too early, and yet not before he had won hundreds of souls by his personal appeals, a fair specimen of myriads more?

On one occasion he reined up his horse to drink of a roadside well. Another horseman at the same moment did the same. The servant of God, as the horses were eagerly quenching their thirst, turned to the stranger, and spoke some burning words concerning the duty and honour of Christian discipleship. In a moment more they had parted, and were riding in different directions. But the word of God remained as incorruptible seed, and led to the conversion of that wayside hearer. He became a Christian and a missionary. Often he wondered who had been the instrument of his conversion, and sought for him in vain. But he did not succeed in identifying him till years after, when, in a packet of books, sent him from his native land, he opened the story of that devoted life, and in the frontispiece beheld the face which had haunted him, in sleeping and waking hours, ever since that slight but memorable interview.

It has been said that the true method of soul-winning is to set the heart on some one soul, and to pursue it, until it has either definitely accepted, or finally rejected, the Gospel of the grace of God. We should not hear so many cries for larger spheres, if Christians only realised the possibilities of the humblest life. Christ found work enough in a village to keep Him there for thirty years. Philip was torn from the great revival in Samaria to go into the desert to win one seeker after God.

Have you ever spoken to your servant, your shoeblack, your postman, your companion, your neighbour? Ah, it would not take long to evangelise the world, if every man would teach his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, "Know the Lord."

They told Lot plainly of his danger.—"Hast thou here any besides?...bring them out of this place: for we will destroy this place, because the cry of them is waxen great before the face of the Lord; and He has sent us to destroy it." We are rather squeamish nowadays of talking to men thus. We have lined our lips with velvet. We aim to be gentler than Christ. He did not hesitate to speak of an undying worm and a quenchless flame. The gnashing of teeth, the wail of despair, the knock to which no door would open, were arguments which came more than once from his lips. He seemed to think that men might make a mistake which they could not possibly repair. If certain elements are wanting in food, the children will grow up boneless and unhealthy; and if we do not take care, the deficiency of our modern teaching will have disastrous results. Whether we talk about it or not, it is yet as true as the nature of God, that those who obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ "shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power" (2 Thes. i. 9, 10). And "if we sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment and of fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries" (Heb. x. 26, 27).

It may be that the day of grace is nearer to its close than we think. The clock of destiny may have struck; the avalanche may have commenced to roll forward its overwhelming mass; and the storm-clouds brood heavily over a godless age, for which, in the day of judgment, it shall be worse than for Sodom and Gomorrah. There may be nothing to portend this momentous fact. "The sun was risen upon the earth when Lot entered into Zoar." Nature keeps God's secrets well. No portent in heaven, no tremor on earth, but the axe suddenly driven home to the heart of the doomed tree. Escape, my reader, for thy life; look not behind thee, neither stay thou anywhere short of the cleft side of Jesus, where only we may hide from the just judgment of sin. Rest not till thou hast put the Lord Jesus between thyself and the footsteps of pursuing justice.

They hastened him.—"When the morning arose, then the angels hastened Lot." They had been reluctant to stay in his house, unlike the alacrity with which they accepted Abraham's hospitality, and they spent the short sultry night in urging on him the certainty and terror of the approaching destruction. So much so that they actually got him to go to arouse his sons-in-law. But an inconsistent life cannot arrest the wanderer, or startle the sleeper into wide-awakeness about his soul. People say that we must conform a little to the manners of our time, if we would exert a saving influence over men. It is a fatal mistake. If we live in Sodom, we shall have no power to save the people of Sodom. You must stand outside of them, if you would save them from the gurgling rapids. Yes, dwellers in Sodom, you cannot level Sodom up, but it will certainly level you down, and laugh at you, when you try to speak.

But when he came back from his ineffectual mission, Lot seemed infected by the scepticism which had ridiculed his warnings. "He lingered." How could he leave his children, and household goods, and property, on what seemed to be a fool's errand? Surely all things would continue as they had been from the beginning of the world. "And while he lingered, the men laid hold upon his hand."

It was hand-help. It was the urgency of a love that would take no denial. The two angels had but four hands, but each hand was full, and each clasped the hand of a procrastinating sinner. Would that we knew more fully this divine enthusiasm, which pulls men out of the fire (Jude 23).

Nor were they satisfied, till their protégés were safe without the city; and were speeding towards the rampart of the distant hills. So Lot was saved from the overthrow, but though he was sent out of Sodom, he took Sodom with him, and over the remainder of his history we must draw a veil. Still, it is a marvellous testimony to the power of intercessory prayer, to learn that a man so low in the moral scale, together with his daughters, was saved for Abraham's sake; and if he had finally settled at the little city of Zoar, that too would have been spared for his sake.

Let us hasten sinners. Escape for thy life; better lose all than lose your soul. Look not behind to past attainments or failures. Linger nowhere outside the city of refuge, which is Jesus Christ, Himself. Haste; habits of indecision strengthen; opportunities are closing in; the arrow of destruction has already left the bow of justice; now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation.

PAN-PRESBYTERIAN COUNCIL.

THE fourth international gathering of delegates representing the Presbyterian bodies throughout the world commenced in London last week, all the regular meetings being held in Exeter Hall. The Conference extended over ten days, and was attended by three hundred delegates, representing 20,000,000 members and adherents.

OPENING SERMON.

On Tuesday, last week, the opening sermon was preached in Regent-square Church by Rev. Principal Dykes, D.D., Moderator of the Presbyterian Church of England. The text was Matt. xxiii. 8—12: "But be not ye called Rabbi: for one is your Teacher, and all ye are brethren," &c. Superficially read, said the preacher, this utterance of Christ expresses a revolt against Rabbinism; fundamentally, it is nothing short of a charter of the kingdom of God on earth. Having shown that the principle of individual freedom lies at the base of Christ's spiritual commonwealth, which is, in fact, a fraternity of the equal and the free, Principal Dykes pointed out that our Lord reckoned upon bringing each human being, thus set free in the awful loneliness and grandeur of his spiritual personality, into direct and commanding relations with the Eternal Author of his being. The soul is bound to God by a threefold link:—(1) "One is your Teacher"; each soul that needs and craves the light has, in Christ, a separate and equal claim on that Divine Person, whose office it is to lead into truth. (2) "One is your Father"; through Christ the way lies open for every man's return to the common Father's love, and that restored favour of his, which is life. (3) "One is your Master," that is, your Guide in conduct, "even the Christ." These points were lucidly explained and practically enforced, and illustrated by references to the history of Presbyterian principles. The discourse was listened to with great interest.

PUBLIC RECEPTION.

In the afternoon a reception meeting was held in the grounds of the pleasant town residence of the Duke of Argyll at Campden Hill. His Grace was prevented from presiding, and his place was taken by Lord Balfour of Burleigh. After a season of fraternal intercourse, a meeting was held in the large tent, when addresses of welcome were spoken by Dr. Donald Fraser and Dr. Donald Macleod, and excellent responsive speeches came from Rev. J. E. Szalatnay, of Bohemia; Rev. E. Bersier, of Paris; Rev. Dr. Welch, United States; Rev. Dr. Burns, of Halifax, Nova Scotia, and Rev. R. J. Lynd, of Belfast; the last-named gentleman was both witty and pathetic in his references to the present position and needs of his native land—that ill-fated isle of the sea.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 4.

After some business had been transacted on Wednesday morning, at the first meeting in Exeter Hall, there was a discussion on "How best to work the Presbyterian system," papers being read by Rev. Drs. Thomson (Edinburgh) and Drury (New York), and Principals Rainy (Edinburgh) and Cavan (Toronto).

Congregational Life and Work.

In the evening a large assemblage listened to addresses on this subject. Mr. Warner Van Norden, of New York, presided, and opened the proceedings with some thoughtful remarks. He maintained that, to be prosperous, a church must have the missionary spirit. The people must, each and all, go to work to take the Gospel to those who have it not. Wherever there is activity of this kind there is true spiritual life. No Christian would, he said, think of ignoring one of the ten commandments, and yet there has been very much neglect of the Lord's command for the Gospel to be preached to every creature.

PASTOR THEODORE MONOD ON PRAYER.

The popular pastor's subject was prayerfulness as an essential element of Church life. He said he was afraid that men and women of prayer are few; there is more zeal, far more activity, and a much wider sphere of work in hand, but there are fewer of those who give hours to prayer, and are emphatically men and women of prayer. Ministers should not only be leaders of public prayer, but patterns in private prayer. Where are our Abrahams, pleading with God in all humility and boldness? Where are our Daniels, who, with their hands full of important business, yet go in three times a day and pray, so that it is notable that they have an "excellent spirit" in them? Where are those who follow Paul, who wondered that he had not received that for which he had prayed three times? Where are the Luthers, giving up three hours a day to earnest prayer to God? Between all true Christians there is one great bond, additional to that of Christ, and that is the bond of prayer. In this, as in all things, the Lord Himself is the great example. Christ took from his needful rest for prayer, and lived in unbroken fellowship with the Father, not only as being the eternal Son, but as being the Son of Man, praying to "his Father, and our Father, to his God, and our God," thus being the perfect and ideal man, living by and in prayer.

So far from there being any conflict between God's purposes and man's cries to Him, the truth is that God's plan takes account of man's petitions, so that if we are to have his blessings, we must ask for them first. God has said, "Ask, and ye shall receive." He has revealed Himself not as a despot, but as a sovereign Father. Who is to pray? Every soul is to pray—whether in adversity or prosperity. When? At all times. So said the Apostle, and the Master before him. To what purpose? Not for our own pleasure, our own progress; not for our own work, our own church, our own glory, personal or collective, but for the glory and the work of God. Where are we to pray? First of all in our closet, having shut to the door. Nothing in the world can take the place of that. Then we have to pray at the family altar. Again, we must pray in the public worship of the church. And then, also, in the special meetings for prayer. The subject of the prayer-meeting is an eminently practical subject; in many places much difficulty is experienced in keeping such meetings up. Might not other arrangements be made, whereby four and five persons should agree on their demands, and come together and pour out their souls to God? Congregational prayer is the union of hearts before God. How are we to pray? In faith. In Mark xi. 24 we are told (R.V.) to believe that we "have received" the things we ask for.

SELF-SACRIFICE.

Rev. Dr. Craven, of Philadelphia, in speaking of "self-sacrifice in behalf of Christ," said that men of the world regard wealth, position, and high reputation as the chief elements in Church prosperity; but not one of these, nor all combined are essential to spiritual well-being. On the contrary, they are frequently hindrances to religious life. The church at Laodicea was rich, and increased in goods, in a worldly sense, but in reality it was wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked. Smyrna, on the other hand, was persecuted and poor, but the unerring Judge accounted her rich, because she was "faithful unto death." The Spirit of Christ dwelling in the individual is the real motive power. This Spirit in the members of a church makes the entire body what the individual members are. The gift of service is the only certain manifestation of love. To this service we are constrained by the love of Christ, who was, indeed, given for us by God, who thereby "commended his love" toward men. Every act of self-denial is a hymn of praise to Christ, and part of the light we send into the darkness. He redeemed us, and then made us fellow-workers with Him in the collection of the jewels of the earth. To labour and pour out ourselves is, in fact, a grace given unto us to bring in the souls for which Christ died.

HOW TO REACH THE MASSES.

Rev. Dr. Pierson referred to the two crises now agitating many minds in the Church—the crisis of missions and the crisis in the cities—the reaching of the masses who are not connected with the churches, but are rather alienated from them. He dwelt upon the latter crisis. There are three ways in which men have tried to solve the problem. The first method is to send out selected workmen to labour as evangelists in the midst of the masses of the people. The second is to erect mission churches or chapels for the special use of the poor, and those who are designated the labouring classes. The third way has been by bringing about a contact and co-operation in the actual life and work of the churches. The last is the only true and Scriptural method by which the problem can be solved. It was not to a selected few, but to all believers that the work of evangelising the world was committed, not to a select class of men. God never meant caste distinctions to find a place in the Christian Church, but rather that the Church should include rich and poor, cultured and unlearned alike; therefore, for the rich and cultured to go to church and send the poor and unlearned to a mission chapel is a plan opposed to the Spirit of the Gospel.

The need is a congregational life and work modelled on the basis of democracy. We often hear that the masses need the churches, but do not the churches need the masses? By the coming together of high and low a mutual acquaintance and co-operation will be promoted; on being brought together, each would understand the other better, and it would soon be found that there are many noblemen who wear neither stars nor garters, and also that many a man of wealth has in him the true democratic spirit of the child of God. The working man often makes the most efficient church member; his interests are fewer than are those of busier people, and his co-operation is often more to be relied upon. To bring about the state of things which is so much desired, it is essential that the Church be identified with the people. Contact is required—and not a kid-glove contact. I am, said the speaker, satisfied that the Church needs to go back to the days of pure Apostolic co-operation, and must send her best men to the garrets and cellars to present the Gospel to the people, and bring them into the churches. No church member is without his share of responsibility in this important matter.

Principal Cairns expressed his entire concurrence in the views advanced by Dr. Pierson. The blessing of God will certainly rest upon any efforts in the direction indicated, if faithful men address themselves to the work. The right hand of fellowship must be given to the people—nothing less can be done. Wisdom as well as zeal and fervour will be required in thus going after the masses, but it ought to be done, and must be done. Dr. Cairns also spoke on Christian liberality, urging that an appreciation of the central doctrine of Christianity should constrain men to show their love for God by dealing conscientiously with that of which at present they are stewards.

THURSDAY, JULY 5.

Present Intellectual Tendencies.

THIS morning the chair was occupied by Rev. Dr. CHAMBERS, of New York, who briefly introduced the subject. From the very beginning, he said, Christianity has had to encounter a hostile philosophy. He was sure, however, that it never can be called to meet foes more powerful or desperate than it has already overcome.

MODERN APOLOGETICS.

Rev. Dr. PRESSENSÉ, of Paris, spoke in French on this subject, a résumé of his address being afterwards read in English by M. de Faye, of Geneva. Dr. Pressensé showed with great force of argument and vigour of expression that Christianity is not the product of religions which have preceded it. What do we mean by Christianity? Christianity is not essentially either a doctrine, or a church, or a book, but a great fact—the manifestation in a person of the love of God reaching out to save a lost world. Christianity is Jesus Christ. This is the witness of its authentic doctrines; herein consists its originality, its essential difference from all the religions of the past. Judaism was a preparation for the Gospel, its institutions being designed for the education of a particular people. All that was exclusively national and sacerdotal in Judaism was destined to disappear with the accomplishment of the work of redemption. It is impossible, therefore, to identify the Judaism of the decline with primitive Christianity. Between the two rises the cross with the Apostolate of St. Paul. The religions of the Gentile world only very dimly foreshadowed the religion of Christ. The heathen only succeeded in raising an altar to the unknown God, a symbol at once of their aspirations after Him who was to come, and of their powerlessness to evolve a salvation for themselves. A moral consciousness bore an unwavering testimony through all the ages to the reality of evil and the necessity for redemption. Hence the attitude of expectancy in all religions. But this inward prophecy never fulfilled itself. In spite of all the burning desire for reparation and salvation, the moral decadence went on in the ancient world. The more we study the religions, the more shall we see that Christianity alone meets the needs of the human soul. Christ living in us is the master thought of the Gospel, which thus becomes a living experience.

DESTRUCTIVE CRITICISM.

Rev. Dr. ELLINWOOD, of New York, read a paper dealing with intellectual tendencies in regard to scientific assumptions, destructive criticism, the theories of those who account for Christianity by historical development, and the disquieting tactics of the Secularist. In the face of bold scoffers the Church has been invigorated; the Spirit of God has followed the preaching of winnowed truth, and Christians have been established. He maintained that the present generation has had no equal in the past; there is greater unity, and a higher conception of brotherhood in Christ, and these are real fruits of the Spirit. What is needed now? First, that the Church shall accept all truth, and shall in some measure take the lead in scientific studies. Above all, she should be foremost in the critical study of the holy records, and her scholars should not on this head be dependent upon rationalistic teachers. In the subsoil of all ministerial training there should be an acquaintance at least with the results of modern science. While searching out all truth the Church should be careful not to accept theories which are set forth with great assurance, and accepted with blind bewilderment. Paradoxical as it may seem, most of the scepticism of this age is received by faith, men and schools being followed without reason. It must be borne in mind, also, that scientific training does not qualify a man to sit in judgment on religious truth. It is incumbent upon the Church to prepossess the youth, teach them the Scriptures, and write God's name upon them. In the person and character of Christ there is a great argument for the truth. Less and less do candid sceptics know what to think of Jesus. Moreover the Church must never forget the power that lies in the manifestation of the truth, that Christ's disciples must be "epistles known and read of all men."

THE CHURCH AND UNBELIEF.

Dr. MARCUS DODS, Glasgow, read a paper on "How far is the Church responsible for present unbelief?" Scepticism, he said, is the price which each generation has to pay for growth in knowledge. It is the duty of the Church to receive all truths, to welcome every truth as centring in and leading up to Him who said, "I am the truth." Men crave definite and immediate knowledge, and they are prone to accept it however shallow it may be. Definite knowledge is, in fact, our snare. By literary criticism and historical research much has been brought to light to modify our views. We understand better than formerly what the Bible is, and we have different notions of the world of nature. The Church might have given a more distinct idea than it has of what Christianity is, and what the true Christian is. Not only among freethinkers, but among writers of culture, there is too often an utter want of acquaintance with Christian truth. In so far as the Church has not produced a type of Christians who have not made this misunderstanding impossible, and in so far as she has made faith needlessly difficult, not to say impossible, she is to blame. Christ required that men should follow Him, not accept a number of propositions about Him. We have no right to ask more, no right to put bars on the doors of his fold which He did not put there. "He that is not against us is on our part." If a man lacks doctrinal knowledge, he is more likely to get it by following Christ than by not doing so.

The question which really separates men into two classes, Christians and non-Christians, is: Did Christ rise from the dead? By that event we are put in possession of God and immortality. If Christ is still in his tomb, the religion of the Apostles and martyrs is no more, and we have no brighter outlook than those who regard nature as God. The Church ought to have a formulated doctrine of the progress of revelation, taking full account of Biblical facts, and showing thoughtful people that their fears and doubts do not all stand in the way of faith. The Old Testament does not depict a perfect knowledge of righteousness, and that fact should be made clear. Our attitude towards sceptics might also be improved. There is a scepticism which deserves our sympathy and tender respect, for in some minds questions will arise. A man may passionately desire to believe, and yet, with the evidence before him, he may be doubtful; but that man's scepticism is faith in the making. It is the unbelief within the Church that is mainly responsible for the unbelief outside. Were the supreme living power of Christ manifested in the life of his people, it would be as impossible for men to deny Christ's power as it is to deny the power of the sun or the tides. Sceptics are made chiefly by the worldliness and unreformed, poor lives of professed believers. Men acknowledge success, but despise whatever makes loud professions and does little. Therefore it is that religion is despised. This also it is that makes Christians shame-faced about religion, for there is a latent consciousness that it has not proved itself "mighty to the pulling down of strongholds."

DISCUSSION.

Pastor THEODORE MONOD said that in France there are very few young men in the churches. They must, however, be met and asked whether they are after truth, righteousness, and God. Agreed in the pursuit of the truth, Christians should not be in so great a hurry as some are to classify each other.

The CHAIRMAN followed with some remarks in which he claimed a supreme place for the Holy Scriptures. Holding up the Bible, he said, "This is the Book of God. We cannot mend it; we cannot do without it; we must take it as it is." These words were loudly cheered.

Professor WELCH, of Auburn, New York, impressed the fact of the constant presence of the Spirit of Truth in the Church, and said that all other apologetics are of inferior importance.

HISTORICAL RESEARCH.

Rev. Dr. G. F. MOORE, Andover, U.S.A., read a paper on "Historical Research and Christian Faith." He pointed out the confirmation given to Old Testament history by modern discoveries in the East. Having indicated the prevalence of questions as to the Pentateuch and other portions of Scripture, he maintained that the Church must vindicate the truth intelligently, and to that end she must face the facts. As revelation has been progressive, historical criticism is inevitable, and, unless by the fault of the Church itself, this criticism is not calculated to minister to unbelief but rather to assist faith.

RELIGIOUS LIFE IN WALES.

Principal EDWARDS, of Aberystwyth, read a paper on "The Present Condition of Theological Thought and Religious Life in Wales." Until recently theology has been almost exclusively Puritanic, in which form Protestantism mainly affected the country at the Reformation. Referring to the Arian movement of the last century, the speaker said that there is to-day in South Wales a patch of country about twenty miles across which is almost entirely Socinian. For a long time among the Welsh people theological discussion was confined within a very narrow range, and was fast degenerating into a war of words; but knowledge and literature were introduced, and the latter has proved the father of orthodoxy. Theology has always been connected with preaching in Wales; theology is, in fact, studied in order that it may be used in preaching, and the people know nothing of sermons having no theological backbone. Therefore young men are instructed on these lines. The greatest danger in Wales to-day is that the sense of sin is not keen enough, and, to make the matter more serious, the conscience of the people has been blunted by the repeated reiteration of spiritual truth. But the infinite greatness of Jesus Christ is firmly grasped and held aloft, and is a great power among the people. It was not the hyper-Calvinism of Christmas Evans that made his preaching so fruitful, but rather the fact that he proclaimed an infinite Christ. The Welsh people are being carefully taught the Scriptures, especially the New Testament, and particularly the Gospels; and it is hoped that they will be prepared to face error from any quarter.

PROFESSOR WATTS, BELFAST, maintained that Atheists, Agnostics, Positivists, and Pantheists are all unscientific and unphilosophical in their attitude to the highest truths. The business of the scientist is to trace phenomena to their causes, but this principle is constantly ignored.

Principal BROWN, of Aberdeen, in a few remarks, suggested that sometimes too much importance is attached to the utterances of the opponents of Christianity.

Social Tendencies of the Time.

There was a goodly concourse of delegates and spectators on Thursday evening to take part in the consideration of this practical topic. The addresses were all marked by great intensity of feeling and vigour of expression; but the palm, for forceful elegance of diction and comprehensiveness of intellectual grasp, must without question be awarded to Professor Elmslie, of London. He exceeded his time, but the enthusiasm of the audience carried him safely past the repeated hints of the Chairman.

PRESSURE OF COMMERCIAL LIFE.

Dr. MARSHALL LANG, the well-known minister of the Barony Church, Glasgow, in dealing with this subject, premised that business pressure is not incompatible with spirituality of life. As an instance, he cited the case of the late Mr. Samuel Morley. At the same time, the portentous ramifications and engrossments of modern commerce must have a serious effect on the religious life of the age. A ruling feature of the time is the tendency towards the acquisition and worship of wealth—a blind and wretched fetish, when divorced from the noble ends to which wealth may be applied. Where this spirit predominates, the worth of a man is estimated by the length of his purse. "Beauty" has no objection to marry "the Beast" when he represents worldly prosperity. Woe worth the day when the plutocracy of gold rules any nation. All that is beautiful, and lofty, and pure in character is engulphed in the maelstrom of Mammonism. Too often the heart follows the treasure. It is a great hallucination to think that non-church going is confined to the poorer classes. We bewail the lack of helpers for Christian work, and we are met with the plea that business men have "no time" to engage in such work. So this Mammonism robs the churches of their life. What is the Church to do? It must beware lest it catch the infection itself, and lower its standard. There is great need for the preaching of eternal righteousness. Some strong things must be said about many of our business devices and methods. The spirit of gambling that has crept into genuine trade is filtering down to the lowest ranks of workers in the industrial hive. There is a danger of the Church becoming too commercial in its methods, to the loss and detriment of its spiritual constitution and character. The Church must be sympathetic in its attitude towards the poorer and honest members of the community. Let us think of the young men workers more than we do. There are plenty "At Homes" for the rich, but few for the humbler workers. The Christian word is "Brotherhood," not democracy or aristocracy. What a grand antidote to the avarice of the time would be the spirit of self-sacrifice that animated the early Christian community! We are told that all this is impossible; that Midas is king, not Christ. I deny it. He has not abdicated; and with God nothing is impossible.

RICH AND POOR.

This was the subject allotted to Principal MACVICAR, of Montreal. It is no crime, he said, to be rich, any more than it is to be poor. It is foolish and unjust to lay the blame for the existing conditions on any one class; both may be to blame. One of the great problems of the day is how to end the conflict between the two. With many of the suggested solutions we can have no sympathy. It would be both absurd and unjust to attempt an equal distribution of wealth. Strikes and dynamite are no remedy, and must be strongly deprecated. Acts of Parliament may be well enough, but they fall far short of the necessities of the case. To solve the difficulty we must go back to first principles and have proper training in our households. Failure in this respect sets at nought all our speeches and conventions. Out of neglected homes, where the Bible is not taught, there come the anarchists, the sceptics, and the scoffers. What is needed is that we should turn every home into a place of Christian nurture, so that parents, like Abraham, may command their children after them. Further, we must not blot out the broadly marked distinction between the Church and the world. We cannot unite Christ and Belial. Then we must offer the strongest resistance to the practice of exalting the "secular," which leaves the spiritual and the eternal to take care of themselves. "Christian" nations have corrupted even heathen peoples, by planting among them evil and ruinous traffics in order to swell their ill-gotten gains. Great corporations, too, and capitalists, have deprived the poor of their fair share of earthly goods and of Sabbatic rest. Such greed too surely breeds the social strife that we have to mourn. It is right that, so far as we can, we should invoke the help of law in securing for men their natural and inviolable rights. Happily, Christian thought and sentiment are being more and more incorporated into the jurisprudence of the world. We must demand that the spiritual factor shall have a larger place in our systems of education. It is greatly to be deplored that Pagan philosophies and Pagan classics still hold the foremost place in the education of our youth. Why should the Greatest Teacher the world has ever known be excluded from our universities, so that our youth are led to suppose that the ethics of Jesus Christ can be rejected or ignored. We make ample provision for the spiritual well-being of the rich sinners, but the poor sinners are allowed to become the prey of the devil and the rum-hole. Let the Church be impartial, and tell the truth to the avaricious rich, while proclaiming that Jesus Christ allied Himself with the poor and the outcast, and is the friend of all. If the Church will imbibe the spirit of her Master she can soon end the strife.

A SPEECH WITHOUT A TEXT.

Professor ELMSLIE, on coming to the front, was greeted with very hearty applause. He said he had chosen no text, and therefore would not be guilty of departing from it. Our time is marked by the prominence given to social and economical questions. It is somewhat difficult to determine what position the Church ought to take up with respect to these. Whether she ought to stop at the expression of general opinions, he would not determine; but he did not think that practical statesmanship has been greatly helped by such an attitude. It is a significant fact that intellectual scepticism does not now obtrude itself so much as formerly among the industrial classes. This may be due to the greater sympathy shown towards their practical well-being by some leaders in the churches. Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., lately remarked to him, on walking across Hyde Park, the debating-ground of the workman, that ministers of Christ might be wrong in taking up with Socialism, but such an excess of heart carries with it its own atonement. Above all things, a minister ought not to be without heart. The Professor entered on an exceedingly eloquent description of the drift of the past centuries in producing "individualism" as opposed to the social idea. But it is the tendency of human nature to go to extremes, and our individualised Christian civilisation has given us no social repose, and little real religion. "Every man for himself and the weakest to the wall" has been our motto.

It works well, apparently, for those who succeed; but are we beasts only? Surely that is not the whole story of the web of God's design for humanity. This relentless rivalry of man with man evolves the most merciless cruelty. The outcome of it all is "cheapness"; "dirt cheap," we say; yes, it is "dirt." This motto, "Every man for himself," is the echo of the old selfish whine, "Am I my brother's keeper?" It has on it the stamp of Cain, and the brand of murder. God made the human social fabric to go smoothly and easily, on the condition that every joint should be amply supplied with the oil of love—that love which makes a man look not on his own things, but on the things of others. A man cannot contract himself out of his primal obligation to try and raise others to the highest level that can be reached. Every selfish monopoly of the good things of life is an outrage on our common humanity. Privilege is the heritage of no man for himself. The greatest is he who is servant of all. The eternal principles of truth, justice, and mercy are the only base on which we can permanently build. These things are not mere ideas or theories. Surely God is educating us through the sorrows and sadnesses of our time to cope with the problems of vice, ignorance, and crime, and is calling on us to solve them. Are we too sanguine? Can we ever do anything without enthusiasm? The Church in the enthusiasm of a fresh discovery has resumed its true mission. That mission is to incarnate and give to man a real redemption, not to dogmatise and to theorise about it. Instead of discussing and defining "saving faith," we must demonstrate it, on all the planes of our social life. This change of attitude on the part of the Church has produced a corresponding change in the attitude of unbelief. Most of it is not now flippant and ribald; it even looks upon and calls Christ "the Good Master"; if it goes away from Him, it goes, like the rich young man, sorrowfully. Modern unbelief cannot but recognise that the demolition of the Christian faith would not solve any of the great problems of humanity. If unbelief is going to abolish Christianity, it must give the world something in the place of Christ. The world has got to know too much of Christ, and it will never suffer Him to be taken away unless He can be replaced with something better. That is an impossible task. As Alfred de Musset has asked, "Can that which Jesus did ever be done again? Which of us can become the world's God?"

CHRIST THE GREAT RECONCILER.

Dr. MOSES HOGE, of Richmond, Virginia, a fiery son of the South, concluded the speaking with an address showing that Christ and his Gospel are the great reconcilers of social antagonisms. One of these, alas! is the intestine strife among the Christian Churches. The world is greatly perplexed on this point, and rightly condemns such strife. At the same time, a little theological thunder often clears the air of religious supineness or indifferentism. The Spirit of the Gospel of Christ is the only cure. Touching on another antagonism, that of international or civil wars, Dr. Hoge told some pathetic incidents of the late feud between North and South, showing how the power of Christian love broke down the barriers of deadly hate. The Christian spirit has largely abated, if it has not yet abolished, the horrors of war. That saying of Christ, already quoted, "He that is greatest among you, let him be servant of all," has revolutionised the world.

FRIDAY, JULY 6.

Foreign Missions.

A CONFERENCE on Foreign Missions took place on Friday morning, Rev. Dr. MURKLAND, of Baltimore, presiding. It was decided to hold the next general meeting of the council, in 1892, at Toronto. In some earnest remarks the Chairman advocated renewed energy in missionary activity.

Rev. Dr. MURRAY MITCHELL read a report of the committee on co-operation in foreign missions, which included some practical recommendations to native churches. It is important that such churches should, as soon as possible, become independent, self-supporting, and self-governing, the foreign missionaries being associated with the Presbyteries as advisers or otherwise. Union has taken place among Presbyterians in some places, and it is hoped that by an extension of this union much will be done towards bringing nearer the time when evangelical Christians shall unite to act on the command of the Lord to preach the Gospel to every creature. The report called upon the twenty millions of Presbyterians to exert themselves greatly in the enlightenment of the world.

Rev. Dr. J. R. Taylor, of Newark, read the report of the American Committee on the same subject. It also strongly advocated the formation of native organisations, and favoured friendly co-operation among the churches at home and the missions abroad, so that conflict may be avoided, harmony secured, and waste of money, labour, and other agencies on the field may be prevented. A desire was expressed that there should in future be more frequent conference among missionaries in foreign lands and the officers and members of Mission Boards and churches at home; also that steps shall be taken to increase the interest of the people in the cause. The report likewise recommended a more general union of reformed churches holding the Presbyterian order.

Rev. Dr. Ellinwood, of New York, spoke against any policy or methods which shall denationalise the people among whom the missionaries labour. Churches must be native and patriotic, and not reflect a foreign influence.

Rev. James Buchanan maintained that a church which is not a missionary Church has only one side of its spiritual life developed. No church has reached the true ideal until it devotes as much thought, and sympathy, and money, to extending the knowledge of the Gospel as it does to its own support. It is not any more the duty of the Church to honour the last command of the Saviour before his death, "This do in remembrance of Me," than it is our privilege and duty to honour the last command of the Saviour before He ascended, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." It is only when the one takes a place along side the other that the blessing of the once crucified but now exalted Saviour can be expected to rest upon a church. Leaving behind us our narrow denominational distinctions, it is, said the speaker, our sacred duty as a church to show the converts from heathenism that they must gather themselves together into a Christian society, and observe the ordinances of Christ, so as to shed the light round them.

Rev. W. S. Swanson, late of China, spoke on the organisation of native churches. He pointed out that the expression "evangelisation of the world" fails to describe the missionary's work, as it is incumbent upon him not only to preach the Gospel, but to "make disciples of all nations." Our work, said the speaker, is only accomplished when we have raised up a native Church — self-supporting, self-governing, and self-propagating. We must not plant an exotic in the mission fields, but we must adapt the Presbyterian order to the peculiar needs of the people. As to the missionary, his only relation to the home church should be that of love. No other relation could possibly exist, for if a mission church is connected with one at home, then it is not a native church. What is required is that the native churches shall stand on their own feet, and do their own work.

Rev. Dr. Maclaren, of Toronto, urged the importance of care being taken that native churches shall not be Americanised or Europeanised. The native teachers should have a good training, especially in Scripture knowledge; but converts must not be allowed to get a notion that they are employés of the mission.

Rev. Professor Lindsay, of the Free Church of Scotland, spoke of affairs in India. There are fourteen Presbyterian Churches in that country. It is deeply to be regretted that so many differences should exist over a mission field. India has more Presbyterians than there were in America when a separate Church government was formed there; but the divisions stand in the way of progress. Great care should be exercised that native pastors be not moulded after a Scottish or American pattern.

The discussion having been continued by Rev. W. M. Alexander, of Victoria, Australia, and Rev. Dr. Chambers, of New York, Rev. John Ross, of China, spoke of the need of able men in China, not to become pastors, but to found churches that will provide their own pastors in time. Rev. Dr. Phraner, of New York, pointed to divisions on the foreign mission field as a serious obstacle to the progress of the Gospel. Dr. Kalopothakes, of Athens, maintained that if native churches are to be independent and self-supporting, native helpers must be first suitably trained and then given in charge of the work.

Rev. John McMurtrie, speaking on behalf of the Established Church of Scotland, expressed a hope that union on the mission field would not long be delayed. In the meantime there is much co-operation in many parts. Rev. W. MacGregor, of Amoy, emphasised the importance of co-operation. What is there to prevent the union of all Presbyterians, and indeed Congregationalists as well, abroad, where the object is one, and the method of working practically the same?

Rev. G. Smith, of Swatow, China, thought that native ministers ought always to be supported by their own countrymen. The system is both Scriptural and practicable. The people give quite liberally towards a minister of their own.

A resolution was carried adopting the reports, and rejoicing that the principle of organic union and independence of churches in the mission field may be considered as universally accepted. It was decided to arrange for continued observance of a season of united prayer for missions, during the month of November, in all the churches of the Alliance.

Missionary Meeting.

In the evening a great missionary meeting was held. Mr. H. M. Matheson presided, and in the course of a brief speech said that he rejoiced greatly that all the churches have now taken the work of world-wide evangelisation in hand. The many barriers that once existed have been broken down, and, as a consequence, a greatly increased responsibility rests upon the church. He expressed a sincere hope that at the present crisis in missions, the churches will rise to a high sense and appreciation of their duties and privileges.

Dr. Shoolbred, of India, emphasised the great importance of the raising of native churches, and knitting them together for united effort. In India there is great need for Presbyterian unity. The thing which most of all puzzles the natives of Rajputana, where he has laboured, is the multitude of religious denominations, and they are still less able to understand why in their very midst there should be several bodies of Presbyterians. Although assured that some of these divisions are of territorial origin, the poor people see no reason why in circumstances where the territorial reasons do not exist the distinctions should be maintained. The enemy, moreover, uses these differences with mischievous effect, and therefore it is of the greatest importance that something should speedily be done to remove the cause of offence. Why should there be denominational names in India? Why should there be missions bearing the name of Irish, American, English, and Scottish? In conclusion, the speaker recommended combined action against the common foe.

Rev. Dr. Whitton, of Nagpoor, spoke first of educational work. A recent official report showed that the only successful schools in India are those in which there is a free hand for the teaching of religion, and those schools are the mission schools. Speaking, secondly, of evangelistic work in the central provinces, he said that the natives are very desirous of hearing Christianity. This work must, however, be largely left to native preachers. In conclusion, the speaker said that the Hindus are now going back upon their old records, the Vedas, but there is certainly nothing for them there. It is, moreover, being daily perceived that the religion of Christ is going to hold the field. Therefore, now is the time for the Church to present the living Saviour to the millions of that great country.

Rev. George Smith, of Swatow, alluded to the great improvement that has been effected by Christianity in some parts of China during the past thirty years. There are about 32,000 adult members of the Christian Church in China, and about 1000 missionaries. Eight Presbyterian societies—four belonging to the old and four to the new world—are labouring there, and about a fifth part of the labourers and a fourth part of the converts in the country are connected with them. There are seventy-eight different churches in the Alliance. What, he asked, are the seventy doing that they have no labourers in China, which has a fourth of the population of the world? There is not a country of importance in the world that is not recognising the Empire of China, the people of which are pouring over the islands of the South Sea as well as into Australasia. The people are a mighty power in the world, and all the churches of Christ ought to do something for them. He suggested that the churches of the Alliance should combine and take possession of the provinces of China for Christ, erect there one undenominational Presbyterian Church. The country is fully open to Western science, and the opportunity should be embraced to offer the people the truth as it is in Jesus.

Rev. H. Stout, of Japan, gave some details of the union of Presbyterian bodies in that country. Three missions combined to form a united church, and a fourth mission has always sympathised with the union. In some departments there is joint interest, but in other respects the missions are distinct.

Rev. J. Ross, from Manchuria, spoke of the Corean people. Grown-up natives can learn the alphabet in about an hour, and as the language is written phonetically, anyone knowing the alphabet can easily read any book. The New Testament has been translated into the language, and been well received by the people. He had more than once visited Corea, and had welcomed many members into the Christian Church. Inquiry has shown that the light of the Gospel extended along many of the valleys of the country, as a consequence of the visit of a humble but faithful colporteur many years ago.

Rev. William McGregor, from Amoy, made some remarks on the progress of the Gospel in China. Looking at statistics covering the period of twenty-four years during which he had laboured in the country, he found that while there had been a four-fold increase in the number of missionaries, the congregations have increased twelve-fold; further, the communicants have increased twenty-fold, and the amount of contributions a hundred and twenty fold. Like other speakers from China, Mr. McGregor rejoiced at the fact that he stood in the Council as the representative of the Chinese Presbyterian Church, which had that day been received into the Alliance.

Rev. Dr. Grant (late of Calcutta) spoke of the advance of education in India. There are thousands of Hindus who believe in God, and many, also, believe in Jesus as the Saviour of the world; but they hesitate to confess their faith. Their position was thus expressed by an educated Hindu: "Do you believe, Mr. Grant, that it is the will of the Lord Jesus Christ, my Master—to say nothing more, the tenderest man the world ever saw—that I should, by the mere outward action of being baptized, have my wife taught to curse the day that she saw me; also my daughters to curse the day that I was born; my sons (who are too well educated to curse me) compelled to disown me, and my friends, likewise, compelled to pass me in the street ?" It required, said Dr. Grant, a great deal of courage for me to say to that poor man, "Yes, it is God's way to require sacrifice. The greatest good of all has come to us by sacrifice, and you, also, must endure something." In conclusion, the speaker declared Christ to be the need of India.

Rev. W. Stevenson, late of Madras, brought under notice women's work in India. He maintained that the great importance of the work has yet to be realised. Women support general missions, and men should not neglect the missions which women have charge of. Only by women can the family life of India be penetrated, for the home is the citadel of Hinduism. Enlightened young men are afraid to confess Christ, and thus to incur the curse of their mothers, and sisters, and fathers, and brothers. If, said the speaker, you would reach the men, you must first secure the women. Go to their mothers, touch the hearts of their wives, and then from the inside you will open the door of that great citadel of Hinduism, and lead father and mother, son and daughter, out into the freedom wherewith Christ makes free.

Rev. M. Gring, from Japan, remarked that much confusion has been occasioned in that country through the fact that there are some twenty-four different societies and denominations represented by the missionaries. The union of the Presbyterian bodies, however, is leading other communities closer together. Not only is the Japanese Church self-supporting, but she has also organised an Inland Mission Society.

Rev. Dr. Post, of Beyrout, referred to the reasonableness of mission work. He mentioned some of the triumphs of the Gospel in heathen lands. There is plenty of room for more missionaries, but it must not be thought that in that way the evangelisation of the world is to be effected. The duty of the missionary is to plant the Gospel in a region, and to leave its dissemination in the hands of the natives themselves. Englishmen, Germans, and Frenchmen must not be made pastors in the mission field. They are not fitted for the work. The people want men of their own blood, and language, and sympathies, and having their own national sentiments, to preside over them when organised into churches; and the missionaries exert themselves to raise up such men. Speaking of Turkey, Dr. Post said he believed that if the missionaries were forthwith removed, and every foreign help and agency were withdrawn, the work would still go on, for it had taken deep root in the soil.

MONDAY, JULY 9.

There was great interest in to-day's proceedings. The chair was occupied by Rev. Dr. Bell, of St. Louis, U.S.A.

Women's Work.

Professor Charteris, of Edinburgh, read an abstract of a report on woman's work in the Church. The document was very exhaustive, and its salient points were well explained. At the outset it was shown that woman's work is recognised in Scripture, and then its place in church history was pointed out. While, at the present time, woman's work is acceptable and general, it is not properly organised. Both organisation and training of workers are required, and it is believed that the time has fully come for efforts to be made in this special direction. The committee proposed that in every congregation there should be a complete organisation of the women workers belonging to it, and that the Church should have, by representation and otherwise, each of these organisations under its supervision and guidance. After noticing what has already been done in the direction of training deaconesses—pointing out, however, that these are disconnected with the churches—the report stated that the Committee thought that the female members and adherents of the congregation should be enrolled, with a view to the experienced acting as guides and helpers to the inexperienced, and in order that those who are willing to give their lives, or the best of their lives, to Christian work, may, by sanction of the Church, be set apart as deaconesses. No life vow will be asked, or accepted, but, while serving as deaconesses, women will be expected to make their work the chief object and function of their life. Already the principal suggestions of the scheme have been adopted in substance in the Church of Scotland, and a motion was submitted asking the Council's approval of the proposals.

Rev. Dr. Hall, of New York, could hardly speak too strongly of the work which good women have done in America in many directions. Intelligent sympathy and intelligent co-operation are greatly needed in aggressive evangelisation, and if young women can be induced to deny themselves for the Lord, great good must result to the Church and community at large. Rev. Dr. Phraner, of New York, remarked that the women of the churches may be organised, but the men cannot be. Constantly immersed in business, men cannot be got at; but women find a way of devoting time to work for Christ.

Rev. Dr. Schaff, of New York, urged that earnest endeavours should be made to turn to account this important agency, congregational deaconesses, after the example of Phœbe in Apostolic times; training schools for deaconesses, such as that at Kaisersburg, are greatly needed, and the want ought to be promptly supplied now that it is fully recognised.

After some remarks by Rev. Dr. Craven, of Philadelphia, Mr. J. Balfour, of Edinburgh, pointed out that there is no fear about women being given authority to "rule in the Church;" rather, the purpose is to make the most of woman's proper work in her own sphere.

Pastor Theodore Monod gave particulars of deaconess institutions in Paris, some of which have been in operation for many years. He thought the effect of deaconesses' activity on the general body of women in the churches is good, for it provokes to jealousy in Christian and charitable work. Rev. Dr. Waddel, of Clarkville, Tennessee, eulogised the work of women in America; and Rev. William J. R. Taylor, of Newark, New Jersey, emphasised the importance of native women being trained for work on the mission fields. The resolution was adopted with unanimity.

Church Worship.

A paper on this subject was read by Pasteur Eugene Bersier, of Paris. Having noticed in considerable detail many points of Presbyterian history, he discussed the question of free and liturgical forms of worship. He held that every effort ought to be made to promote the devotions of the people. Therefore, the service of praise and prayer should be the great concern of the minister, although not to the exclusion of due attention to his other duties.

Rev. Dr. Apple, of Lancaster, Ohio, spoke of liturgical and non-liturgical forms of worship. The Reformed Church has never condemned liturgical forms, and there have always been sections that have used a liturgy.

Rev. Dr. Donald Fraser was inclined to the method of a directory, and was of opinion that if something is not soon done there will be a growing tendency towards a liturgy. Among other things he recommended that praise and prayer should no longer be talked of as "preliminaries to the sermon," that the people should be encouraged to utter responses at public prayer, and join audibly in whatever approved forms are recited, such as the Lord's Prayer and the Creed; that more heed be given to posture of the body in prayer, so that the people either stand or kneel; and that in all improvements, the aim should be not to humour the choir, please the young, fill the gallery, or attract unspiritual persons, but only and always to aid and strengthen the devotion of the worshipping assembly as the priesthood serving God in and through Jesus Christ the Lord.

Rev. H. Osborne, of Holywood, Ireland, read a practical paper on the same subject. Rev. John McEwan, of Edinburgh, maintained that the Church has no right to judge for itself, apart from the teaching of the Gospel, as to the mode of religious worship. He warned the Council against approving innovations.

Professor Pettigrew, of London, said that, as to Christmas and other holydays, the Church has nothing to do with them, as the Word of of God is silent upon their observance. He maintained that the preaching of the Gospel should be emphasised above all other forms or parts of worship.

Rev. Dr. Hall spoke strongly in favour of free prayer. He asked that the ministry be educated intellectually and biblically; also that they be taught to ascertain, and give expression in prayer to, the common wants of the people in dependence upon the Spirit of God.

Temperance.

The evening meeting of the Council was presided over by Lord Dalrymple.

Mr. Charles J. Guthrie, of Edinburgh, speaking on this subject, maintained that the Church must address itself to rescuing those who have fallen into the vice of intemperance, and must also do its utmost to protect those who are in danger. Most of the very pressing work of reform will certainly have to be done by the total-abstaining portion of the community. On the ground of Christian expediency, those who desire to help the weak must adopt the principle and practice of total abstinence. The people are not impressed by the talent or learning of their ministers, but rather by their self-sacrifice—by their walking in the footsteps of Christ. Worldly people may become teetotallers on the grounds of health or economy, but the Christian, whether minister or elder, or member, must apply another test—namely, What practice will give me greatest influence in bringing to an end the greatest obstacle to the triumph of the cause of Christ?

Aggressive Work in Large Cities.

Rev. Dr. Drummond, of Glasgow, spoke on this subject. He detailed in forcible terms the evils of city life, and made several suggestions as to remedying them. These were, generally speaking, on lines which are already more or less on exhibition in most large towns. The work is for the Church, and it will have to be done by Christian truth, sympathy, and love coming into contact with the prevailing sin and wretchedness. There are means enough, churches enough, and Christians enough for the undertaking, and by orderly organisation and co-operation, exertions may be put forth with promise of glorious results. There must be a high tone of Christian conduct on the part of those engaged in the work, for character speaks over our heads, and louder than our tongues.

Rev. Dr. Gill, of Kentucky, spoke of helps and hindrances to aggressive work. Rev. R. J. Lynd, of Belfast, read a paper on the evangelisation of Ireland. There are missionaries and colporteurs who look after the scattered Presbyterians and other believers, and, as opportunity affords, they place the Gospel before other classes of the community. Agencies of this kind ought to be greatly multiplied, but at the same time much sympathy and help might reasonably be expected from England and America. The people need personal contact with Christ, and a knowledge of God's mind as revealed in the Bible, for the Roman Catholic population know little or nothing of the Word of God. Again, Irish Protestants must live the Gospel, and then the dullest will not fail to comprehend the truth. Further, the cause of Ireland must be remembered at the throne of grace. The object is, said the speaker, not to bring the people to any special form of religion, but to bring them to Christ. He believed that the old missionary spirit will yet return, and that from Ireland will go forth many to proclaim the Gospel and hasten the glorious coming of Emmanuel.

Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson urged to hopefulness. He maintained that the Church is astir as she never was before, and the national conscience is also awake. We have got beyond the idea of self-sustenance to that of self-sacrifice, as indicating true Church prosperity. Moreover, there is a growing tendency to harmony and co-operation in aggressive work. Referring to the success of the Missionary Conference, he said he believed that such a conference could be held with reference to home work; unless difficulty might arise through the magnitude and number of the organisations. Having noticed other gratifying indications of an improved condition of society, the speaker held that much good would result by decentralisation through colonies of Christian people being planted, or settling themselves in districts where aggressive work is greatly needed. Some congregations are alive to this; he knew of one congregation in the West-end that has for six months past been stretching out a helping hand to a congregation in the East-end, and sending helpers periodically.

SQUALID LIVERPOOL.

Mr. J. Barnabas Bain has accepted the position of superintendent of the Liverpool City Mission. He writes:—

Visiting with one of our men a house only a few minutes' walk from our "Art Galleries," I found a woman hiding, with her ten children, from her drunken husband, who, after beating her with the poker, drove them out on the streets late on a Sunday night. One's heart grows sick with the many tales of woe brought on by the drink.

The plan of the Mission is to visit every house on the missionary's district. Few doors are shut against us. Again and again, during the short time I have been here, I have seen the tears run down the face of some who, humanly speaking, were hopeless. During the past few weeks some desperate characters have been converted.

My missionary staff is a good one, but we are too few. I would be thankful if some Christian or Christians would enable me to add one more missionary for work among the public-houses we can get in. £100 a year would meet salary and cover expenses.

Above all, I would ask your prayers for myself and missionaries. A new spirit has taken hold upon some, and we seek to go forward to save the lost.

THE FEMALE ORPHAN HOME, at Tangley Park, Hampton, Middlesex, is a well-conducted institution, which deserves support such as will ensure its utmost efficiency and utility. There is accommodation for sixty children, but through want of funds the inmates only number forty. The children that were admitted last year were extremely needy. The secretary is Mr. J. Cooper, 75, Finsbury-pavement, E.C. Gifts in kind may be sent to Miss Riddick, superintendent, at the Home.

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION IN PARIS and at Rouen, Elbeuf, Le Hâvre, and St. Servan conducted, under the direction of the Wesleyan Missionary Committee, by Rev. William Gibson, B.A., is an agency of great value. The ninth annual report, just published, gives much information of important spheres of effort, and records much faithful labour. The Mission has sixteen stations, and last year over two thousand religious meetings were held, attended by 45,000 persons. A good work is being done among the children. The office of the Mission is 4, Rue Roquépine, Paris.

THE BIBLE FOR ITALY.

Rome has been making great advances in England and America of late, while she has been losing ground in Italy, and France, and Spain. A correspondent of The Times at Milan communicates to that paper the following noteworthy piece of intelligence, the effect of which will be still further to weaken the Romish superstition in its home, for Rome and the Bible are natural enemies:—

A NOVEL ALLY FOR THE BIBLE SOCIETY.

An ally for the Bible Society has just arisen in a most unlikely quarter—namely, in the publishing office of a leading daily newspaper of this city. Signor Sonzogno, the proprietor and able editor of the Secolo, announces that he is about to issue a popular edition of the Bible in halfpenny numbers, so as to bring the book within the reach of all. In the face of the fact that the Church of Rome spares no pains to prevent the Bible from getting into the hands of the people, and in view of the difficulty Bible societies and evangelical agencies encounter in their endeavour to circulate the Word of God, and looked at in connection with the new Penal Code, which makes the priest directly responsible to the State for his speech and behaviour in the pulpit and the pastorate, this announcement of the Secolo is weighted with great significance. This also must be noted, that Signor Sonzogno has not undertaken this work in the interests of religion, nor simply out of hostility to the Church, but as a commercial speculation, which, while putting money into his pocket, will also promote the good of Italy. I have known this editor through his journal for many years, and, judging from his liberalism and patriotism, and readiness at all times to advance the welfare of his countrymen, even though it involves a sacrifice, I am justified in saying that he speaks sincerely when he declares his intention in this publication to be what I have said.

The statements which he makes in giving publicity in the pages of the Secolo to his enterprise are so strange and striking that I translate a few of them. He says:—

> There is one book which gathers up the poetry and the science of humanity, and that book is the Bible, and with this book no other work in any literature can be compared. It is a book that Newton read continually, that Cromwell carried at his saddle, and that Voltaire kept always on his study table. It is a book that believers and unbelievers should alike study, and that ought to be found in every house. The text will be that of Martini, translated from the Vulgate, and care will be takan to insure accuracy.

He then concludes, "This artistic, useful, and popular edition, the first of its kind in Italy, is destined to have an extraordinary success, equal only to the marvel of its cheap production."

The Secolo has hitherto been successful in its publications, and I have no doubt that the editor's prophecy will be realised. Colporteurs and Bible societies will now have their labours lightened and helped. For when once this edition finds its way into the hands and homes of the people, and is read and studied, the Bible will no longer be looked upon as the wicked production of the "Protestanti," or as a foreign importation to be shunned. The timeliness of this enterprise is to be noted. It comes on the back of the adoption of the new Penal Code by the Chamber of Deputies. Had it appeared earlier the Church could have suppressed it, or used its influence in that direction. Now any interference with the liberty of the subject of that nature is a breach of law, and renders the transgressor liable to fine, imprisonment, and dismissal from his ecclesiastical office. Surely happier days are in store for Italy. "The darkness is past and the true light now shineth."

The specimen parts which I have lying beside me on my table are admirably got up in every respect. The paper is folio size, of excellent quality, and the type is large and clear. About one-fifth of each page is text, arranged in two columns at the top, the rest of the page being filled up with notes and illustrations. These latter are an attractive feature of the work and will render it popular. Some of them have a special value, as, for example, two in the first part, which show how the Egyptians were accustomed to represent the universe, and also heaven and earth. On the cover of the parts the editor prints his name, and again commends the sale of his work as "Il libro per eccellenza, ed anche il libro dei libri."

The Times has a leader on the subject, in which some things are stated which are certainly incorrect, amongst others which are true. For example, it is asserted that "In the form and order, and with the interpretation they append, the priests sincerely believe that Biblical truth keeps all its intrinsic value without the danger of radical perversion. From the purest as well as selfish motives they seek to retain the direct custody of the muniments of the faith…A supply of healthy literature to the new reading public is absolutely necessary for Italy, if its moral health is not to be poisoned at the source. A contribution like Signor Sonzogno's to the store of popular literature generally available will naturally create fresh interests, and, thereby, fresh wants. In the first place it helps to satisfy a want.

"Signor Sonzogno disclaims the intention of an attack on the national Church by his popularisation of a book over which it asserts a species of copyright. The Church of Rome cannot be expected to regard his experiment with friendly eyes. It will put no amiable construction on his professions of neutrality. But if the publication meet with the reception he anticipates, the Catholic authorities will have to alter their own policy in respect of the circulation of the Scriptures in an Italian shape. They are probably conscious of the error they committed in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries in attempting to shut out from access to the Bible populations which were resolved to study it. They will remember that the result was that a volume they appeared so eager to close was assumed to be altogether against them. In a country like England, where the Bible is, and cannot but be, for all classes a popular manual, they do not try to lock it up from their own lay brethren. When Signor Sonzogno's edition, and others which will follow it, have imbued Italians with a taste for the reading of the Bible, and a determination to resort to it, the Church of Rome is certain to license and encourage a habit it now discountenances. Its chiefs must have the sense to see, under the impulse of the gentle pressure Signor Sonzogno is applying, that artisans had better read the Bible than lewd and profane rubbish. As in any case the Bible is to be published and bought in an Italian dress, they will choose to be among the purveyors. With a little experience they will discover that the usage of popular familiarity with the book is capable of being made no less gainful to theirs than it has been to competing Christian churches."

It is a cause of the deepest thankfulness that the Bible should thus be given to the Italians; but that it is capable of being made gainful to Romanism in any other way than by destroying it, we distinctly disbelieve.

INDIA AND ENGLAND.—A correspondent who is interested in a Home for poor women in the East of London has received from a zenana missionary in India a letter containing the following statement:—"I am sending you by next post an order for £2, a little offering from our native assistants and pupils for your Fresh-air Home. Every year they give something at Easter to some special object, the result of self-denial during Lent."

For the Young.

AN INCIDENT OF THE McALL MISSION.

At Kensington Presbyterian Church last Sunday morning, Pastor Theodore Monod, of Paris, preached a sermon on behalf of the Mission to French people, conducted by Rev. R. W. McAll, and his many helpers. Before commencing his sermon, the Pastor briefly addressed the children present, and read the following pathetic incident, taken from the last report of the Mission:—

THE YOUNG CONVERT AND HIS BABY-SISTER.

"In a poor lodging in the east of Paris, a little girl, four years old, lay dying of a malignant fever. Ill as she was, she was fully conscious of the great event so near at hand. She called to her each member of the family—her widowed mother, her brother, fourteen years old, her elder sister, her little brothers—to bid them farewell. Then she added, 'Now I go to our home.' 'Where is that home?' they asked. 'With my father,' she replied; meaning, with her poor father, who had died two or three years before. Then she made a sign to them all to retire; she desired to spend her last moments on earth alone with her God. After a little time, observing her from the other extremity of the room, they perceived that the end was near. All came around her bed. She lifted her eyes, and raised her little arm towards heaven, and in a moment passed away.

"Who was it that had taught to this child of four years—this baby, one might say—a Saviour's love, so that death was to her as the gate of her Father's house? Her little brother, the boy of fourteen. Led to believe in Christ by his sister, a year or two older than himself, who likewise had received the Saviour in our neighbouring mission school, he had sought to direct the earliest thoughts of his beloved little sister to the Good Shepherd who 'carries the lambs in his bosom.' More than this, he and his eldest sister had succeeded in leading their father and mother, previously quite without religion, to attend our mission-room, and there they were brought to believe in Christ. Already from that family the father and two children have gone to heaven, and we believe that all the survivors are on the way."

Continuing his remarks Pastor Monod said: So you see that even a very little child may be brought to know the Saviour, to love Him, and to pass away in perfect peace. Even a little child, did I say? I ought not to have said that, for Christ does not speak after this wise. He does not say, "Even a little child may know Me, and enter the kingdom of heaven." But He does say to grown-up people, "Unless ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall in no wise enter the kingdom of heaven." If Christ made an exception concerning the little ones it would be this: that the little ones are the most welcome. You remember when the disciples would have prevented the fathers and mothers from bringing their little ones to Christ, how He rebuked, not the children, but the disciples who wanted to turn them away; and how He said, "Suffer the little ones to come unto Me."

I would occupy the remaining two minutes by telling you two wishes that are in my heart for the children that may be within hearing of my voice. The first is that you may grow, as the child Jesus grew, in grace, in wisdom, and in stature; that you become strong and healthy, and that you become wise. Be as well instructed as possible, in as many things as you can. Most of all, grow in grace: that is, learn to know your Father in heaven, and your Saviour more and more.

The other thing is, that you may be kept as little children all your life long, according to the words of Christ that we have just read. When it is a question of knowledge or of stature, of course we must always wish you to grow. But growing in grace does not mean that you will be in your own eyes any greater or wiser or stronger than you are; but in the spirit of a little child, which is the spirit of simplicity and humility, and perfect trust in their parents, you will learn daily more and more to trust your Father in heaven; to love your Saviour who gave Himself for you; and to believe that God does give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him, quite as freely, yea more freely and gladly than a father gives bread to his children. God give us all the heart of a little child, and then He can make us grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord, and make us truly strong in Him.

PRIZE DAY AT CATERHAM.

Travellers from London to Brighton cannot fail to notice the fine building that caps one of the Surrey hills, just at the entrance to the beautiful vale of Caterham. It is the healthy habitat of the Warehousemen, Clerks, and Drapers' Schools, established for educating the orphaned children of those who have been connected with these important branches of trade. The institution has, since its foundation, supported, educated, and fitted for active life over 800 such orphans, and is doing a really splendid work.

Saturday last was Prize-day, and a great company of the friends of the Schools gathered on the occasion, when H.R.H. the Duchess of Albany kindly attended to distribute the prizes earned for proficiency in study during the year. After luncheon, the children and the visitors assembled in the dining-hall, and gave a hearty welcome to the Royal lady. One item of the interesting programme was an examination of the boys in mental arithmetic by the head master, Mr. A. G. Ayles, when some most surprising results were seen in rapid and intricate mental calculation. Mr. J. Wells Thatcher, the active and enterprising secretary, read a resumé of the Examiner's report, which was, on the whole, extremely favourable as to the methods of training, and the acquirements of the pupils.

The prizes, handed to the boys and girls with much grace of manner by Her Royal Highness, embraced many useful volumes, as well as articles suitable for young people about to enter on the duties of life. A gold and a silver watch were presented to the best girl and the best boy in the school respectively. In addition to the usual classes, girls got prizes for cookery, needlework, and athletics, while boys were rewarded for skill in shorthand, swimming, cricket, &c. Mr. J. D. Allcroft, who presided, read a loyal address to the Duchess, and several other friends made congratulatory speeches. The Royal visitor made an inspection of the Schools, and appeared to be much interested. The weather was kind, and all went merry as a marriage bell. When the royal cortège had departed, and tea was partaken of, the children left for their homes, many laden with prizes, and all looking forward with happy anticipation to a six weeks' holiday.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sunday, July 15, Acts xxvii. 30—44; Monday, July 16, Acts xxviii. 1—16; Tuesday, July 17, Acts xxviii. 17—31; Wednesday, July 18, Zech. i. 1—16; Thursday, July 19, Zech. iii. 1—10; Friday, July 20, Zech. iv. 1—14; Saturday, July 21, Zech. viii. 1—12.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. Josiah Spiers, Skating Rink, Croydon, to July 13. Mr. Martin J. Hall, Salisbury, to July 8. Mr. G. L. Pilkington, Clifton, July 8—15; Cheltenham, July 15—22.

Seaside Services.—The following are the arrangements for July:—Mr. Spiers, Blackpool, 25 to August 20; afterwards at Dover. Mr. G. Banaster, in the yacht Kingfisher, and Mr. Martin Hall, Llandudno. Mr. W. H. Roberts, Hoylake and West Kirby. Mr. H. Hutchinson, Spittal, Berwick-on-Tweed, 14—28. Mr. G. H. Chaplin, Dunoon, N.B., 15—24. Mr. W. Huckett, Cleethorpes.

A BOAT SONG.

Oh, I could not go,
If I had to row
To the shores of the other side;
If his saving grace,
Give me only a place
In the boat that his hands must guide.

It must be his power
In the stormy hour
That carries me o'er the wave;
For the calm is more
Than my feeble oar
And my puny strength can brave.

But his arm is strong;
So with gladsome song
I take my seat at his side;
And I sometimes sleep
On the tossing deep,
Where the skirts of his mantle hide.

And we merrily skim,
While I leave to Him
The toil of his own fair bark;
For my meddling will
Would but thwart his skill,
And sink me in waters dark.

Oh, fancy not, soul,
As the billows roll,
That thou must the rower be;
His infinite grace
Gives thee freely a place,
Then rows thee Himself o'er the sea.

William Luff,
Author of "Wave Whispers."

EAST-END MOTHERS.

The Lying-in Home, Shadwell, E., was established four years ago by Lady Greville, and Mrs. Ashton Warner, the latter of whom is honorary superintendent and secretary. The urgent need for such an institution was forcibly pressed home to the heart of Mrs. Ashton Warner while practising among the poor of the East-end. The house, which is situated almost directly opposite the East London Hospital for Sick Children, accommodates seven patients at a time. The apartments are models of cleanliness, neatness, and comfort, and this, coupled with the advice and Godly counsel of the staff, reveals to the inmates a new idea of what home life should be.

The annual court of the governors of the Institution was held last week at the West-end mansion of the Marchioness of Waterford, under the presidency of the Earl of Meath, who maintained that the work being accomplished constituted one of the most commendable and practical forms of charity that could be imagined, and that it only required to be better known to be more widely supported. Among those who addressed the meeting were Mrs. J. Stuart Wortley, Mr. Edward S. Norris, M.P., Dr. Dundas Grant, Canon McColl, and several East-end clergymen. It was stated that during the past year 103 patients had been treated with most satisfactory results. The narrow accommodation afforded in the present small building is out of all proportion to the large number of applicants. The committee earnestly hope that the friends of an institution so valuable to poor women will aid in extending its benefits.

MISS LEIGH'S WORK IN PARIS.—As many of the friends of Miss Leigh's work and Homes have been prevented by the inclement weather from attending the sale, held in the Ranger's Lodge and grounds, Greenwich Park, parcels of good value from £3 3s. and upwards will be forwarded upon application. Boxes to the amount to £10 to £20 will be supplied at half-price to friends who may desire to hold drawing-room sales at their own homes on behalf of Miss Leigh's work. A description of goods, which include many useful articles from Paris, will be sent, on early application to Mrs. Marten, Combe Lodge, Blackheath, S.E.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. Donald Fraser, D.D., Marylebone Presbyterian Church.

We are glad to know that our friends of the Children's Special Service Mission are making large arrangements for seaside services. We trust that our readers will remember this work in prayer, and render such help as is in their power, at any places they may visit.

Our good friend, Miss Steer, is enlarging her borders. The "Bridge of Hope," at Ratcliff, has done good service in the rescue of young women, and there is every reason to believe that the new laundry, night shelter, and house for workers will prove valuable adjuncts to the work.

Cardinal Lavigerie, "Archbishop of Algiers and Carthage," "Apostolic Delegate for the Missions of Equatorial Africa, the Sahara, and the Soudan," and "Primate of Africa," who has been engaged for more than twenty years in mission work among the Arabs of Algeria and Tunis, preached to a vast audience in Paris on a recent Sunday afternoon, taking for his subject "The Northern and Central African Slave Trade."

> The horrors of the trade, he said, are little known in Europe, and are difficult even to imagine. The poor wretches, who have souls like our own, are hunted like wild beasts, and far more are destroyed than are sold. When caught, the unmarketable ones are either killed or left to die of hunger. The women are usually violated and then burnt. The number of slaves sold annually he declared to be not less than 400,000; and to capture these at least 2,000,000 are massacred. If this is allowed to go on the Continent of Africa will soon be depopulated. There is a regular "human flesh market," he said, at Morocco, and another in Egypt on the north of the Red Sea. A great empire in South America has just set a noble example by shutting up a market to which these poor wretches were sent. The whole trade is only the effect of a terrible thirst for gold.

Much remains yet to be done before this scourge is abolished. But, with our own hands as a nation so deeply stained with the opium and drink trades, how can we pluck the mote out of our brother's eye before we have cast the beam out of our own?

Sir William Hunter's paper on "Our Missionaries," in the current Nineteenth Century, is very valuable, although we could have desired that one or two criticisms in it had been somewhat different. The testimony of an official Indian administrator for a quarter of a century, who has watched the work of Protestant missionaries, is timely and important. He says he knows no class of men who have done so much to make the name of England respected; to make the better side of English character understood; to awaken the Indian intellect; and who at their death are more regretted, or receive such honours of affection from the native press.

The article testifies, further, that in relation to slavery, to education, to the exposure of social evils, and to all national wrongdoing in India, and elsewhere, missionaries have marched in the van of the noblest movements of England. Men of birth and scholarship, from the Universities, are living in common a life of apostolic simplicity and self-sacrifice. Equally emphatic is the witness borne by the writer as to success. In one great province of India the native Christians are increasing six times more rapidly than the general population. A new life and civilisation are everywhere coming into India from missionary work. Such a testimony ought to shame the uninstructed criticism of missions with which we have been too familiar in the past.

The paper in the July Contemporary on "The Future of Religion," ought to have the effect of curing the shallowness among many sincere though mistaken Christian persons, who are always demanding of writers and speakers that they shall look on the bright side of things. The author of the article, M. Emile de Laveleye, is one of the first Christian philosophers in Europe. He sets forth three causes that are undermining true religion in our day. (1) Darwinism, which on the Continent is penetrating all classes, and threatening the essential principles of all spiritualism; (2) the passion for the things of this world which leave no place for the spiritual life; and (3) the socialism which is everywhere sowing the seeds of Atheism. When such a writer declares that civilisation itself must perish with the progress of modern doubts and negations, there is a call to faithful men to look at this side of things, and to be earnest as to the effectual remedy.

"Curses come home to roost." We quote the following from The Daily News:—

> Indian opium, which the Chinese in other days fought so hard to keep out of their country, is now reported to have become a very small and still diminishing article of import at the Chinese ports; but, unhappily, this is only because the Chinese have taken to growing this pernicious drug themselves. Mr. Holland, Acting-Consul at Newchwang, a Chinese port in the extreme north of the Gulf of Pe-chili, states that the cultivation of the native opium appears to be a profitable labour among the poorer classes, and pays as well again as millet, their chief staple of food, or any other grain. It was the extra tax of 80 taels per chest on foreign opium that gave to the native drug such an impetus. Mr. Holland thinks it may safely be prophesied that not only will the foreign drug cease ere long to figure as an import, but the native drug will soon appear as an export.

Thus the poisonous plant which we forced upon China degrades and ruins the Chinese who use it; we derive no permanent advantage, even in money; and China will export to other nations, including England, her dependencies and colonies, that mischievous drug with which England obliged China to curse herself. Can we for a moment doubt that, under the righteous government of God, a terrible penalty will fall to the lot of England?

At the annual meeting, on the 27th ult., of the Congregational Western College, Plymouth, Dr. Fairbairn, in addressing the students, is reported to have said—

> No man ought to attempt to speak on theology until he had mastered the essential elements of a liberal education. The problems theology handled were the greatest problems of human thought, and he hoped the time had come for the Western and other colleges to say no man who had not had a distinct and definite education, cultivated and cultered, should enter there.

To decry an educated ministry is to make a great mistake; but to say that no young man shall enter a ministerial training college who is not first "cultivated and cultured" is to announce a principle against which we venture to utter a protest. The history of Congregationalists themselves must surely offer a warning against such a new departure. Scores of the ministers who have been used of God to give to Congregationalism its strength would have been shut out of training colleges by such a dictum. William Jay, went to Mr. Winter's academy, at Marlborough, from a stonemason's yard, after an illiterate village education, and John Angell James went to a college at Gosport from a linendraper's shop, at Poole, with most meagre attainments in learning.

A Bill has been introduced into Parliament, which is aimed at those numerous so-called "clubs" which are mere drinking and gambling shops. It provides, inter alia, that all clubs shall be registered with the Registrar of Friendly Societies, a fee of £5 being paid, and a copy of the rules and regulations lodged. Such a measure, however, does but touch the fringe of the subject; for many of the bonâ fide working men's clubs which have sprung up in such numbers do much harm. The whole question requires to be grappled with vigorously, and with even-handed justice, for there is no reason why the luxurious haunts of Pall Mall and St. James-street should be exempt from control. The matter is too wide and complicated to be adequately dealt with in a private Bill, and it ought to be taken up by the Government. Meantime, the present Bill is a step in the right direction.

In so far as the Lambeth Conference, now assembled, renders solid and practical assistance towards the solution of the pressing social and religious problems of the day (e.g., purity, intemperance, care of emigration, and socialism, which appear on the programme), it may be productive of good results. But, in view of the present current of affairs in the Church of England, there is reason for fear lest it should conduce to ecclesiastical exclusiveness, and to the exaltation of a grand visible organisation above the true catholic and invisible Church of Christ. The time occupied by the bishops in discussing the relation of the Church of England to the Eastern and Romish Churches and to the "Old Catholics," might be better employed in considering its relations to Wesleyans, Methodists, or Presbyterians. Episcopal energies might also with greater advantage be directed towards restraining the growing lawlessness and sacerdotalism among their clergy, and, as becomes "faithful overseers," in defending Protestant parishioners and laymen generally against the stealthy inroads of Romish doctrine and practice.

Apropos of this question, we note that The Morning Post speaks of the Archbishop of Canterbury as "the successor of St. Augustine, who in everything but name enjoys the dignity of the early Christian patriarchs, and Canterbury may almost claim to rank with Rome as a universal episcopate!"

It is pleasant to read, if only as a set-off against the disgraceful frequency of vivisection, that an "Animal's Institute" has been established at Wilton-place, London, S.W. Our admirable contemporary, The Hospital, states that the objects are the humane treatment of domesticated animals, the study of comparative pathology without vivisection, and the alleviation of pain and suffering in the lower animals. Gratuitous advice as to treating animals will be given, and operations will be conducted under chloroform; and there will be an anæsthetic chamber for the painless destruction of aged and incurably diseased animals. There are other good features in connection with the Institution, and we are sure that all our readers who love animals will join our contemporary in the hope that the movement will be of benefit to "our poor relations of the dumb creation."

The Indian Spectator, with reference to the recent revolt of students at the Madras Christian College, says:—

> Missionary efforts in the country have done more for it than probably any other single influence from outside. To decry such efforts, even if there be an instance of arbitrary or unworthy dictation, is a wrong to the people of India; and the evil can hardly be exaggerated when we see that the cry of an anti-Christian Englishman is apt to be taken up by ill-informed native writers, who are then denounced as atheistic and disloyal, sometimes by their English guide himself. We believe Mr. Miller's reputation to be above all cavillings.

The patriotic publicans, who are anxious not to "rob a poor man of his beer," had a demonstration in London on Sunday afternoon, against the proposed closing of public-houses on the Lord's Day. It would have been more conclusive as an indication of the popular wish if the working men themselves had moved in the matter; as it was, one cannot but conclude that the publicans were thinking more of their own pockets than of the real or fancied wants of the working man. The resolution submitted to the conclave in Hyde Park avers that Sunday closing would be "subversive of the cause of temperance." The meagre reports in the daily papers do not enable us to learn what arguments were advanced in support of this extraordinary proposition.

We are glad to see that the expectations with regard to the Report of the Select Committee on the Irish Sunday Closing Acts have been fulfilled, and, in some respects, exceeded. The Report recommends the extension of the Acts to the five cities now exempted, thus making their operation universal. It also suggests that Mr. T. W. Russell's Bill for closing at nine on Saturday nights should apply to the provinces as well as to the towns, and that the distance to be travelled, in order to constitute a bonâ fide traveller should be increased to six miles. It has been amply proved during the inquiry that there is more lawlessness on Saturday nights than on any other in the week, and with the early closing of public-houses the most potent cause of this will be removed. The new bonâ fide traveller proviso would be a great boon in many parts of England.

There has of late years been a lamentable desecration of the Sabbath in Ireland, due to the establishment of athletic and other unions for outdoor sports, and the selection of Sunday for the amusements. In some cases the grounds are near to places of worship, and complaints of the noise and disturbance have gone unheeded, the unpleasantness of noisy bands of music having been added in some cases. It has been found, however, that the sports are proving more attractive than the Mass; and, at length, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Armagh has sent out a protest against the growing scandal. A Dublin dignitary is credited with going not quite so far, and with only suggesting that the sports should commence at 2 p.m. instead of 11 a.m., as "the boys would then have time to get instruction in the Christian doctrine." A little education in the direction of the fourth commandment apparently also is pressingly called for.

A somewhat remarkable publication, seeing that it is intended for the use of those who, at any rate nominally, are Protestants, has just been issued under the title of a "Children's Mass: in Rhyme for Singing," and, as it is sold at four shillings per hundred, it evidently is intended to have a wide circulation. With this class of literature being scattered broadcast, and with the doctrines of Rome being taught from hundreds of pulpits, in what ought to be Protestant places of worship, it is not surprising to read, as we do in the Roman Catholic journals for the current week, of the success of the missions of the Passionist and other Romanist Fathers. One journal, referring to such a mission at Evesham, states that the chapel is so crowded on Sunday evenings that many have to remain outside in the garden, the great attendance being "the more creditable to the priests in that there are but few Catholics in the neighbourhood." An attractive peculiarity is stated to be the singing of vespers in English. It is added that "many are now being instructed, and will, no doubt, eventually be received." If these reports are not exaggerated, there appears to be ground for inquiry as to what the Protestant ministers of Evesham are about while all this is going on in their midst.

Romanism is spreading among the coloured people of the American Continent, and it is said that several negroes are now in training in Rome and elsewhere to become priests. The American Roman Catholic papers say that the cause is not far to seek, the Roman Catholic Church being "the only one on this Continent offering the negro communion on terms of equality." If this is not true all round, it certainly is the fact that outbreaks of the so-called "colour prejudice" have been of but rare occurrence among the Romanists, and that they are apparently reaping the result in a large accession of numbers.

The appeal of the two Protestant professors who were condemned to imprisonment and to pay heavy costs for having refused to salute a Catholic priest bearing the Viaticum to a sick person in Madrid last April has been dismissed by the Supreme Court of Justice. Its finding is that the inferior Court rightly interpreted the existing penal code enactments against persons committing acts of disrespect to the State religion. Commenting upon this The Daily News says:—

> It is only fair to say that the same Supreme Court decided some time ago that the Public Prosecutor in Corunna must bring to trial some Catholics who entered a Protestant chapel with their hats on, insulted the pastor, threw the Bible on the floor, and trod upon it.

But these are by no means parallel cases. In the former, two pastors passively refrained from saluting what they considered an idolatrous pageant, which is not to be compared to the aggressive and scandalous behaviour which characterised the latter. We must not allow liberality towards Romanism to override justice to those who suffer for the truth.

The Madras Weekly Mail, of June 16, says that the following notice appeared in the previous Tuesday's Gazette:—

> Under Section 3 of Act xiv. of 1868 (The Indian Contagious Diseases' Act), His Excellency the Governor of Madras in Council hereby notifies, with the sanction of the Governor-General in Council, and in supersession of the notification published in The Fort St. George Gazette, of September 22, 1868, page 492, that from and after July 1, 1888, the provisions of the aforesaid Act and the rules framed thereunder and at present in force shall no longer apply to, or have effect in the town of Madras.

In a report upon the alleged over-pressure in public elementary schools, Sir J. C. Brown, M.D., who made the inquiry for the Education Board, asserts plainly that several diseases, such as water on the brain, and also insanity, are increasing year by year; and that it is to over-pressure in these schools we may look as the main cause of the increase. The fact is not a pleasant one to contemplate, but if the report leads to a modification of the system, the little martyrs will not have suffered in vain.

"HUMAN DESTINY."—Dr. Anderson's work bearing this title is an able treatise against the "larger hope" as expounded in "Salvator Mundi." It is published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on meetings by Mr. M. Steedman, in Perthshire and Fifeshire, till July 27; and for meetings afterwards in Militia Camp, Lanark.——For tent services being held at Hornsey Vale, N.

MR. DENHAM SMITH continues slowly to improve and gain strength, and it is hoped that warmer weather will once more permit of his getting out. We are informed, however, by his physician that, although his general state is thus, happily, altered for the better, yet, so long as certain conditions persist, which have throughout his long illness given rise to anxiety, the future course of the disease must be a matter of grave uncertainty.

FRENCH CHRISTIANS AND THE JEWS.—The Paris Committee for the Evangelisation of Israel is seeking to interest all Christians in its efforts on behalf of the Jews of France and Algeria who number about 130,000. Le Réveil d'Israël, published by M. Gustave A. Krüger, pastor, at Gaubert-par-Orgères, Eure-et-Loir, contains the official announcements of the committee, and also much well-digested information respecting evangelistic work among the Jews in all parts of the world.

INSANE CONVALESCENTS.—The annual meeting of the After Care Association for Poor Friendless Female Convalescents, upon leaving asylums for the insane, was held at 83, Lancaster-gate, W., on Wednesday, July 4, the Earl of Meath (President) in the chair. The report stated that good progress had been made in the work of the Association during the past year. Cases are received from all parts of the country. Full information to be obtained from the secretary, Mr. Thornhill Roxby, Emblewood, Osbaldeston-road, London, N.

THE CLOSING ALL-DAY MEETING for the season in the House of Rest, at Cambridge Gardens, Kilburn, took place on Friday last. Miss Mason, speaking from the Song of Moses, told of deliverances the Lord still vouchsafes for his people. Several present gave testimonies of such deliverances in their own personal experience. The three o'clock meeting was presided over by Major Swanson, of Wimbledon. Dr. Prochet, from Rome, gave a history of the Waldensian Church, showing how wonderfully it had been preserved, and what a powerful influence it had exercised in keeping alive and fanning the spark of religion in Italy for centuries. At the evening meeting, Bishop Gregorius gave a most earnest evangelical address, in which the claims of Syria were urged. Interesting addresses were also given by Mr. J. McDonald, of Wimbledon, and others.

THE NEW SOUTH WALES Criminal Law Amendment Bill has passed through its final stages in the Legislative Council.

HURON, DAKOTA.—A correspondent states that a Camp meeting in connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church, recently held in this part of the State of Dakota, was a time of much spiritual refreshing and revival. The Gospel tent in use at the meeting will be devoted during the summer to evangelistic work.

XV.—THE CRACK IN THE WALL.

A gentleman who had been converted to God in a mission, was very earnest in his first zeal to do good to others. He opened his drawing-room for Bible-readings, and invited his friends, far and near. Formerly he used to ask them to dances and parties for idle amusement, but now that he was changed, he desired more profitable gatherings in his house.

Between thirty and forty of his friends assembled again and again, to receive edifying instruction from the Word of God. Upon these occasions they asked questions, and encouraged one another in the Lord.

Not yet content, my friend took a room in a crowded part of the city for Gospel addresses, and by this means much good was done to the people of the neighbourhood.

This gentleman found time to attend to all these labours of love without in any way neglecting his usual business. I need not say that he was happy, and all the more so in his endeavour to make others as happy as himself.

After a few years, however, there came a change over the spirit of his dreams. The Gospel work began to decline, the Bible-readings were not so frequent, and otherwise it was plain to see that there was a falling back.

Astronomy, the microscope, chemistry, and other scientific pursuits which used formerly to occupy this gentleman's mind were coming back to the primary position they had held before his conversion.

In the midst of all this defection, there came an ominous crack in the side wall of his house. The builder was at once sent for. He said, "Oh, that is nothing more than an ordinary settlement, the house will be all the stronger for it—we can easily set that to rights."

However, soon after he had finished that work, there came another, and still more ominous crack. What is that?

"Oh," said the builder, "I do not like the look of that—it is very awkward."

Sending for his men, he had the ground dug up at various points round the house, and then discovered the cause of mischief. The foundation of the house was resting upon clay, and the weight of the superstructure was causing it to slip.

There was no time to lose, consequently the family were hastily sent away from home. Thereupon the builder and his men proceeded to underpin the foundation, that is to say, they removed the clay, and brought the house to rest bodily upon the rock beneath. Now it became secure, and no more cracks appeared in the walls, nor is there any further danger of collapse.

Here was an opportune parable, and an appropriate allegory, if it was only attended to. It is very easy to run up a house anywhere, either upon clay or sand; so is it easy in the first joy of conversion to set up Bible-readings, and Gospel meetings, or any other kind of religious works.

The very labour and responsibility of keeping them up sometimes presses hard, and often causes the regularity of the meetings to be broken, and the interest to decline; but should not cause them to be discontinued.

Work, however good, and even spiritual, fails if it is begun in the energy of the flesh. The flesh is slippery clay to build upon! It is well that it should fail; but the failure need not be a reason for discontinuing the work.

This gentleman's house was not left to fall because cracks were observed in it. The cracks were indicative of danger, and led to the discovery and removal of the underlying clay.

So our discouragements should be a reason for coming to the Lord, that He might show us the cause of failure, and the remedy. We should, as the builder did, have the clay removed, and get down to the rock foundation. Then we may be sure that the work will stand.

It is sad to see defection and backsliding; but more sad to hear the fault laid upon God, or his work, when all the time the failure is but the natural result of our own weakness.

Blaming the builder, or even discovering the cause of mischief did not save the house in question; but the application of the remedy.

There is only one way for this gentleman, and others like him, to be restored to a happier condition, and more lasting work. That is, for them to come to the Lord with their troubles, instead of giving up work, and going back to previous amusements, or occupations.

I remember the time when an ominous crack appeared in the wall of my work too. I was amazed and discouraged to be sure, and was sorely tempted to give up spiritual work, and go back to the ecclesiastical religiousness in which I had previously delighted.

But the burnt child dreaded the fire. I could not go back to that, so I cast myself before the Lord, and with my face on the ground, I besought Him not to forsake me, or take away the manifest working of the Holy Spirit from me.

I had observed that the interest of the people to whom I ministered was flagging, and that they did not care to come to the services as formerly. Besides this, those who did come were not so earnest and lively as they used to be.

There was an evident ebbing of the tide of power and blessing. The Lord showed me that I was preaching Salvation instead of the Saviour—Conversion instead of Jesus Christ and Him crucified. I was bringing the gift before the people and leaving out the Giver.

I thanked God for this revelation, it was a word for myself as well as for others.

What could I do but go forth to declare this, and lead the people to believe, not in salvation but the Saviour. Thus I was enabled to bring them to the true and only foundation, the rock, Christ Jesus, as their resting-place.

After this, I saw a permanent work of God in that parish. It was not so popular, or so exciting and noisy as formerly, but there was a reality about it which bespoke a firmer basis.

This, manifestly, was better than giving up my work in despair, or going back to beggarly elements for consolation.

Whenever work fails, there must be a cause or reason for it, and we should not rest until we have discovered what it is. God is ever ready and always willing to help us in this search. He can easily bring us out of darkness and perplexity and show us where our work is not according to his will.

THE HOUR OF PRAYER.—A correspondent who frequently attends the prayer-meeting held in the schoolroom adjoining St. Katherine Cree Church, 86, Leadenhall-street, from 1 to 2 o'clock each day, conducted by Mr. Wilmshurst, says he has derived more help than he can describe from the earnest words of the conductor, sending him back into the world cheered and comforted. He thinks that if City men would avail themselves of this rest by the way they would be greatly refreshed.

A GOOD EXAMPLE.—A former governor of one of our great prisons having gone to reside in Kent, a dozen miles from Essex, his daughter conceived the idea of inviting her former poor neighbours of the seventy thousand peopled parish of Clerkenwell to spend an afternoon and evening in the grounds of their country mansion. Once a week, in the "strawberry season," they go in batches of twenty-six to thirty. This new and inexpensive movement is a descent to the lowest depths of poverty and need. The poor Christians of the alleys and the slums are introduced to their well-to-do sisters on the "lawn tennis grounds." "The rich and poor meet together; the Lord is the Maker of them all." I am very anxious for the extension of this movement.

THE KING OF THE BELGIANS AND THE CONGO.

The London International Missionary Conference, at its last session on Wednesday evening, June 20, appointed a deputation to wait on the King of the Belgians in reference to the suppression of the drink traffic in the Congo Free State. It was found early in the following week that the King was actually in London, and an arrangement was made for an interview with His Majesty on the evening of Thursday, June 28. Owing to the difficulty of communication with the members of the deputation, only two of the four appointed were present, Rev. Dr. Murdoch, of Boston, Secretary of the American Baptist Missionary Union, which has a mission on the Congo, and Mr. H. Grattan Guinness, Hon. Director of the East London Missionary Institute.

As it did not seem probable that a larger number of the deputation could be present at the alternative time and place assigned by His Majesty for the interview, and as the chairman of the deputation had in his possession a properly certified copy of the resolutions passed by the Conference, it was decided to proceed with the interview at that time.

The members of the deputation were received with great cordiality by the Belgian King, and when the resolutions were presented he expressed his hearty thanks to the Conference for the kind sentiments expressed towards himself, and for the generous interest manifested for the people of the Free State. His Majesty declared that he was fully aware of the grave importance of the subject to which the Conference had so courteously invited his attention, and that he considered it his Christian duty to do all in his power to protect his Congo subjects from the dreadful evils of strong drinks. He also invoked the earnest co-operation of the Christian people of Europe and America in the attempt to suppress a traffic so injurious to the bodies and the souls of men. The audience was quite protracted, and His Majesty reiterated these sentiments in various forms of expression, leaving on the minds of the members of the deputation present a strong assurance of his sincere desire to do all in his power for the furtherance of the views of the Conference.

Let Christian people everywhere unite in earnest prayer to Him who has all power in heaven and earth, and in whose hand are the hearts of all men, that He will so order events and move human hearts as to save the poor people of Central Africa from the additional curse of strong drink.

THE LICHFIELD DIOCESAN CHURCH MISSION is showing much activity. Canon Wilberforce preached the annual sermon a few days ago in the Cathedral, to a congregation of 2000 people. At a large public meeting, Mr. H. A. Colville, the lay evangelist, said that in the Potteries and Black Country there are thousands of people outside all forms of religion; in fact, 80 per cent. of the population take no part in religious worship. Eighteen months ago he had only two evangelists working for him; but to-day there are twelve labouring in different parts of the diocese, and four others have been sent out from the Training Home at Hanley.

RUSSIA.—Efforts are being made to persuade the Russian Government to permit the holding of an Œcumenical Council, in which all the independent Orthodox Churches shall be represented, on the occasion of the approaching festival to be held at Kieff in honour of the 900th anniversary of the introduction of Christianity into Russia. It is proposed that the Council shall discuss the following questions:—(1) The definitive termination of the Bulgarian schism; (2) the relations between the Coptic, Abyssinian, and Oriental Orthodox Churches; (3) the organisation of the Armenian Church; (4) the abolition of the sect of "Old Believers"; (5) the reinstallation of the Servian Metropolitan Michael in his diocese

MILDMAY PARK CONFERENCE.

SMALLER GATHERINGS.

Morning Prayer Meetings.

As customary, there were early meetings held every morning at 7 o'clock, at each of which Sir Arthur Blackwood presided. They were well attended. At each meeting requests for prayer were submitted by Mr. J. E. Mathieson. On Thursday morning, Rev. Canon Christopher, of Oxford, gave a short address, in which he dwelt with great earnestness upon the memory of Rev. W. Pennefather, and hoped that many of those present would help to get Mr. Pennefather's Life circulated amongst young men. He fervently asked prayer for young men in Oxford, Cambridge, and elsewhere at universities and colleges, and also for the young in schools. Dr. H. M. Parsons spoke on the necessity for a baptism of the Spirit. Rev. F. B. Meyer directed the attention of the meeting to Philemon 21: "Having confidence in thy obedience I wrote unto thee." If Jesus Christ never sends any messages to us, and makes to us no fresh revelations, is it not because He cannot trust us to do what He bids? To those who obey, Christ comes and asks to be the tenant of their hearts by the Holy Ghost.

On Friday morning, the meeting was addressed by Rev. Jas. Bradley, of Leamington, on growth in love and in fruitfulness. On Saturday morning, Sir Arthur Blackwood said he hoped something of the fragrance of the Mildmay Conference would follow them to their homes and lives, so that they should become sweeter in disposition and more self-denying in action. Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, specially pointed out that the words in the text, "Whom He justified, them He also sanctified," are put into the past tense, because it is certain and true—also "whom He sanctified, them He also glorified." Is not the glory future? Yes; but He puts it into the past tense because it is so certain and true, and so inevitably to come to pass, that we can say it is done. This should lead us through all discouragement to step into the Lord's victory. Dr. Constantine, of Smyrna, gave a touching personal testimony. Dr. A. T. Pierson, of Philadelphia, sounded a warning note, saying: We cannot go down from this mountain into the valley below without peril. See what a warning we have in the case of Jehoshaphat, who went away from the field of victory to Jerusalem, with psalters, harps, and trumpets, and with the fear of God on the countries around, because God had given him victory. Yet what followed. Though Jehoshaphat was a holy and upright man, the high places were not taken away; the idols and idol-groves remained in the neighbourhood of the Temple of God. Then he formed an unholy alliance; so that Eliezer prophesied against him, saying, "Because thou hast joined thyself with Ahaziah, the Lord hath broken thy works. And the ships were broken, that they were not able to go to Tarshish." We must get idols out of the heart, out of the sanctuary's surroundings; we must not enter into evil compacts with the men of this world, in the interests of making money or reputation, and securing worldly position. If we do, may the Lord break our works, and show us that none of these compacts shall stand.

Missions to Israel.

MR. T. A. DENNY presided at a meeting on this subject in the Large Hall on Wednesday afternoon. Rev. JOHN WILKINSON said that Christians were asked to take no other interest in Jewish missions than the Word of God warrants. What does God say? To Abraham He said, "I will bless thee, and I will bless him that blesses thee." We have not fulfilled our mission yet. Although the Jews rebelled against God, He has not altered his purpose concerning them. He has the same feeling about them that a yearning mother has over a wayward son. Some people say we cannot reach the Jews, but everything is favourable. They believe three parts of our Bible, and from those portions they can be influenced to believe New Testament truths. Have the Jews done anything to show that they are less prepared to accept the Gospel than at Pentecost? and when Saul of Tarsus yielded? The Jews are easily reached. We have had missions to the Jews for the past three-quarters of a century. Thirty thousand to fifty thousand Jews have been baptized into the Protestant Christian faith. In Europe to-day there are hundreds of Jewish ministers and missionaries. The field was never riper than it is to-day. Jewish Rabbis are speaking in the most respectful terms of Jesus Christ as the greatest moral reformer the world has ever seen, and they read New Testament Scripture to an extent never known before in the Christian era. Mr. Wilkinson then gave a brief sketch of the various agencies connected with the Mildmay Mission to the Jews. In answer to a question by the Chairman, Mr. Wilkinson said they desired to have a Mission House in East London, where all the agencies could be centered. For this he asked £10,000.

Dr. BAEDEKER interpreted for Rev. W. FABER (Leipzig), who said that from Israel the Scripture went forth to all nations, therefore all nations ought to see that the Gospel message is given to Israel. The English nation is in the van in advancing this great object. Pastor Faber, who has made several missionary journeys in Galicia, Buckowina, Roumania, and Russia, related some interesting particulars connected with Rabbi Rabinowitch. He said that Professor Delitzsch, in connection with himself, had founded a Hebrew Missionary College in Leipzig in order to work as much for Israel as possible. Theological students who have gone through the usual course of University study are trained there for Jewish mission work among Gentile and Hebrew Christians. Prof. Delitzsch is desirous that the College should be upheld by the help of English Christians. There are unions among students of nine German Universities for the purpose of inquiring into mission work on behalf of the Jews; but the love for Israel is still in its infancy in Germany, and not strong enough to keep alive such an institution as this Hebrew Missionary College.

Dr. Pierson, having briefly spoken as to the great future in store for the Jews, the meeting was resolved into one of prayer on behalf of work and workers for the Jews in many lands.

French Protestant Missions.

REPORTS of the work being accomplished in heathen lands by French Protestant Missions were presented on Wednesday afternoon in Room No. 4; the chair was occupied by Mr. W. H. Seagram. Pastor GEORGE APPIA, of the Evangelical Mission of Paris, said that in France last year they had observed the Centenary of Toleration. That meant that in 1787 a French Protestant had no right to exist. As a Missionary Society, they have sent out to the foreign field a large number of missionaries. He gave a very hopeful and encouraging account of the work in South Africa, particularly in Basutoland and on the Zambesi. Last year they had the joy of sending to the Zambesi two young Christians from the Waldensian Valley. It is their intention to raise up in South Africa a large band of native preachers and teachers of the Gospel.

Pastor ALFRED BOEGNER, secretary of the Society, said that though they were a very small missionary society, he trusted they were a very useful one. Having given some statistics, he said they were anxious to establish new out-stations, and would be thankful for the help of their English brethren. The late Major Malan, who did so much for the missionary cause in South Africa, formed a committee in London which used to give help; but that committee has ceased to exist.

Rev. J. A. TAYLOR, a coloured pastor, described the work of the French Protestant Mission in Senegal. The prevailing religion is Mahommedanism, which is recognised and endowed by the Government. This invests the chief of that false faith with judicial authority in many matters. Instances are know of a whole tribe becoming Mahommedans in a single day through the fiat of the king. We have at last succeeded, remarked Mr. Taylor, in founding two stations—one at St. Louis, and the other at Dagana. At St. Louis our schools are well attended, and our evangelistic efforts have been so successful that the time has come to erect a small church for our members.

Rev. THEODORE MONOD described the origin of the Society's missionary house in Paris, which has been built during the year. The building, he observed, has been paid for, nearly the whole of the money being subscribed by the French people themselves. The main object of the institution is to train students for the foreign mission field. There are thirteen young men now preparing for heathen lands. In closing, Pastor Monod said: We want you to pray for us, and to help us. In France we are sometimes asked, "Why do you work for the Basutos? By so doing you are working for the English." We say we are not working for the English, but for Christ. We are glad if we are doing any service to the English. It is time that our work should be extended. Nothing is wanted to enable us to do this but funds. We ask you to contribute your share. I hope the outcome of this meeting will be that some one will take up the matter, and re-constitute the late Major Malan's committee.

Work among Seamen.

ON Wednesday afternoon, notwithstanding the rain, the tent was crowded by an assemblage of friends gathered to hear reports of work in connection with Sailors' Rests. Mr. R. C. MORGAN presided, and referred to the excellent address given at the morning meeting by Dr. Andrew Bonar, in which he mentioned various branches of Christian work, but omitted that amongst the men who "go down to the sea in ships." A few years ago many vessels were floating hells, and godly seamen were scarce, but now there are few ships on which some of the crew are not Christians. God has wrought great changes, and seamen are being converted in large numbers, and becoming missionaries to their fellows and to people in other parts of the earth where their vessels call. We cannot exaggerate the importance of helping to foster the missionary element in sailors.

Rev. Dr. CONSTANTINE said he was led to Christ through the influence of a sailor, and he is now engaged in work amongst them at Smyrna. Some particulars were given of the operations of the Smyrna Rest established by Miss Maria West. Ladies visit every ship that comes into port, and distribute religious literature amongst the men, who are invited to make free use of the Rest, where every necessary accommodation is provided for them, and where they hear the good news of salvation. Gospel meetings are held every evening at both the Smyrna and Constantinople Rests; these were attended during last year by nearly 6000 men, not without good results. A Rest is much needed at Galatz, and this would be a good opportunity for any lady seeking a sphere of work for the Master. Dr. KALOPOTHAKES, of Athens, gave a similar account of work at the Piræus, Greece. He said:—Piræus is the seaport of Athens, and, next to Marseilles, the most important port in the Mediterranean. All the mail steamers from the west of Europe and many freight steamers and sailing vessels going to the Black Sea touch at the Piræus, so that there is great work to be done among seamen there. Three years ago the Greek Evangelical Church in Greece undertook to carry on the evangelistic work, which was under the care of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, and among the stations occupied by its evangelists, Piræus was one. They had religious services there in a hall not very far from the shore, but there was no proper person to work among the seamen. Such a one God soon sent us in the person of a young woman well adapted for the work, whom we at once engaged. Her chief work consists in visiting ships, and praying with and distributing tracts among the sailors; in visiting private families, hospitals, and prisons, and reading the Gospel to the inmates. Upwards of thirty vessels are visited every week, and about 200 tracts in various languages are distributed, besides between 400 and 500 in Greek.

We hope soon to have a hall near the sea which will be more convenient for the sailors. We also want to place a Bible-women at Patras another very important seaport of Greece, and I believe God will send us a qualified lady worker for that post.

The "Strangers' Rest," Ratcliff Highway, was spoken of by Mr. J. T. Isaac. All the year round, he said, there are cases of decided conversion. The daily preaching of the Gospel in the notorious Highway may be truly said to be world-wide in its effects, for several now labouring for the Lord as missionaries and workers in foreign lands are known to have been brought to the Saviour at the Rest. The Strangers' Rest at Cardiff was briefly referred to by Miss Tilly.

Mr. Charles E. Faithfull appealed for workers for Marseilles. The port is visited annually by about 140,000 seamen, and amongst these there are only three Christian workers, who would be greatly cheered if Christian travellers passing that way would call in and render a little help.

Lady Beauchamp asked for workers for Hâvre, which is within twelve hours of London. It is not ladies that are wanted so much—the Rest is hardly fit for ladies to reside in—but young men, who will visit the cafés and work amongst the sailors. A terrible description was given of the condition of the town, and of the temptations to which the sailors are subjected. The last time she was in Hâvre a sailor said to her that he had never been in such a hell upon earth as Hâvre; Ratcliff Highway was a very paradise in comparison to it. Workers are also much needed in Honfleur and Antwerp, which is even worse than Hâvre for its wickedness. A Belgian gentleman has lately given £8000 for erecting a Sailors' Home in the latter place, and the Government are going to present a site for the building.

Mr. Robert Paton read several interesting letters from sailors who had been led to Christ through the work in Ratcliff Highway. One was from a man working in Missouri, who, during last year, was the means of the conversion of thirty persons. Mr. Paton emphasised the fact that those brought to Christ in the Rest are regularly written to by Christian ladies, and are never unmindful of the place where they were led to the Saviour.

Miss Annie Macpherson said God wants prepared instruments to do his work. Unless people have been used in their homes, they will not be any use in Ratcliff or abroad.

Two Christian seamen testified that the sailors thoroughly appreciate the Rests, and thanked the friends who support them. One of them, a "bargee," said that a few years ago he hardly knew a Christian bargeman; now he could count up over two hundred.

The Railway Mission.

Immediately following this, a meeting on behalf of the Railway Mission was held, presided over by Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard. Mr. D. Spencer, the secretary, said there are now in connection with the Mission two hundred and fifty branches, where work is carried on among railwaymen, their wives, and families; seventy-four of these have been formed since about this time last year. There are branches on all the main lines in England, Scotland, and Ireland. In South Africa and in India the work is opening up rapidly; Australia is calling for help; the Continent is beginning to move, and New Zealand too.

Two men from Bow gave some account of the work there. Indoor and open-air evangelistic services are regularly held, and souls are saved continually. Prayer is the mainstay of the work. A foreman porter at Liverpool-street station said God is blessing the work on every hand. At Stratford there are conversions at almost every meeting. Ladies are doing the greatest part of the work. A signalman from Kentish Town said that on his line there are now many Christian men, whereas two or three years ago he hardly knew of any.

Miss Grenfell, of Swansea, commenced her work because she once overheard a porter say to a mate, "Nobody cares for us railwaymen"; she has now spent several happy years in this service. She appealed to other ladies to take up this labour of love. She especially urged Christians when travelling and having to wait for trains to go into the porters' room and put in a word for Jesus. General Heath, referring to a remark by Mr. Spencer that ladies of all ages are engaged in this work, said the branch at Dover was started by a young lady, aged nineteen, who went there for the benefit of her health. They have had fifty-two conversions in two or three months. He believed that the reason why the Mission was so manifestly blessed was that it was conducted on strictly unsectarian lines, and if the churches were less sectarian and preached denominationalism less and the pure Gospel more they would be much more successful in gathering in the masses of the people.

Mr. Eliot Walton said a great evil to be fought against is intemperance; it has much decreased during recent years, but there is a great deal yet to be done.

Work among Factory Girls.

On Wednesday afternoon the meeting to consider work among factory girls, convened for the Mulberry Tree, was held in No. 6 Room, on account of the rain. It was intended to make the public acquainted with the Factory Helpers' Union—an organisation initiated for mutual help among workers in this much-needed branch of home mission work.

Mr. Herbert Tritton presided, and, in a brief opening speech, expressed his interest in the Union and its objects. Then Mrs. E. W. Moore explained the objects of the Union. It was intended to encourage and support small branches of work, and through district referees to find out quarters where factory girls were unreached, and stir up ladies to take up the work. Also to affiliate all branches, when this was possible, so that unnecessary energy should not be wasted by duplicate workers. She hoped that soon a book would be published, containing a complete list of branches in London and the country.

The closing address was by Miss Vansittart, who gave an interesting account of work among the City factory girls.

Gospel Work on the Continent.

A meeting on this subject was held in the Large Hall on Thursday afternoon. Mr. Donald Matheson, who presided, said: The Continent of Europe is the home of many different races; in particular of the Teutonic, the Slavonian, the Scandinavian, the Turkish, and the Latin. Our friends who are to address us are to do so only on Gospel work among the last—the Latin race—including France, Belgium, Italy, Spain, and Portugal. The reason of this is that the work of evangelisation is carried on chiefly among the Roman Catholic populations. It is intensely interesting to see among these the old martyr churches once more struggling into life and liberty, as they have been doing during the last forty years. On the other hand, while Russia professes to give complete liberty to all religions, there is a stringent condition that the orthodox religion—i.e. the Greek Church—must on no account be interfered with by Gospel work. Hence there is no liberty to evangelise, though we know God has his own ways of introducing the Gospel there. So in Austria, the martyred churches of Bohemia and Moravia are being revived, but under tremendous difficulties, as Austria upholds the Roman Catholic religion, and just tolerates a dry State Protestantism. In Germany, evangelical truth is struggling to burst the bonds of a State Lutheranism, and we wish those engaged in the work God-speed. As for Turkey, it is more intolerant than ever of any attempt to convert Mohammedans. In Scandinavia, there is a living Church to deal with its own people. Turning to the Latin races, as there was no one to speak of Belgium, the chairman said it was a land of martyrs in the days of Philip II., of Spain, but for the past forty years the Christian Missionary Church has been carrying on an excellent work of evangelisation.

Adapting the three subjects of conference to the Continental work, Mr. Matheson said that, as to "Progress," a comparison of the present time with forty years ago, when there was no evangelistic work allowed, will show a very great change indeed, with hopeful progress. As to "Hindrances," the evangelical Church and the world are in antagonism everywhere, but the peculiar allies of the Roman Catholic religion are ignorance, infidelity, indifference, and immorality, but most of all the Satanic power of Jesuitism. A sore hindrance is also to be found in the rivalry of denominations in the mission field. As to "Helps," the Bible is the great enemy of the Papal Antichrist. We want an army of living evangelists with the Bible in their hands, and Christ in their hearts; and we want to see the Continental Protestant churches aroused to more aggressive action. Government restrictions are being removed or greatly modified, and the names "Protestants" and "Evangelicals" are more popular and respected.

Rev. J. S. Bertrand (France) said the cry in the past had been Huguenots or Romanists, now it was Christians or Anarchists. This is the very time in which to evangelise France. God has opened up the way; the people are ready to hear the Gospel, and it is for Christian England to give it. France is to-day a most urgent and important mission field. The evangelical cause is spreading in the land of the Huguenots. Prayer is needed that God will raise up a great apostle of the truth to stir the country.

Pastor Fritz Fliedner, of Madrid, gave a most graphic picture of the spiritual state of Spain. First of all he recalled some thrilling memories, proving that the martyr blood of the nation had proved to be the seed of the Christian Church. The fact that in Spain the Gospel is now preached, and has won adherents, is one of the most wonderful signs of our times. Within the last three months even we have been astonished at the working of God's hand in overthrowing the barriers of fanaticism. Twice within that period, said the good Pastor, I have seen the whole Government and a representative of the royal family, under my pulpit in the spacious Protestant chapel, in connection with the death of the two German Emperors. Though the service was in German, the hymns sung and the Scriptures read were printed in Spanish, and all these distinguished hearers had the opportunity of reading the message of Divine love. If we did not know what an important step in advance has been made by this fact, we could learn it from the Roman Catholic papers in Spain and in Germany that are foaming with rage and indulging in personal abuse. But the battle of light and darkness has only begun. Where Rome has supreme sway she kills the conscience, and the results are seen in the daily life of the priests, who are held up to contempt in the comic papers, because of their unblushing transgressions of the moral law. The most degrading and blasphemous doctrine is also taught with respect to the powers vested in the Virgin Mary and her attributes, so that her Divine Son is virtually stripped of his glory. Still the work of God goes on, and Christian literature is being scattered about in all the Spanish-speaking lands. The first Spanish Protestant youths have lately been admitted to the Spanish University, and two of them have taken high honours. Pastor Fliedner proceeded to refer to his personal experiences in the work, and told how God had answered his prayer of faith in supplying the needs of the work at the very moment when they were required. Referring to the commemoration of the Spanish Armada, he said, the English people ought to continue that celebration by providing a fund with which to educate young Spaniards in the Gospel.

Dr. PROCHET, of Rome, delivered a most inspiriting and practical address, in which he made some startling statements respecting the priests. At seven years of age, the boy who is intended for a priest is snatched from his mother's side, and brought under the exclusive influence of the Romish system. For ten to fourteen years he is coached in error. He is taught to believe that black is white, and white is black. One of these priests has created a stir in Italy as an orator. He came to Florence, and confessed that he was a believer in evangelical doctrine. He would not go to the Protestant Seminary at Florence, because his mother had given him to the priesthood to secure her own salvation. If she heard that he had gone to Florence it would kill her. This man does not believe in any of the cardinal doctrines of Romanism. I said to him: "You have travelled all over Italy. Can you tell me if there are many priests, bishops, and others of your Church who believe as you do?" He straightened himself up, and answered without any hesitancy (in Italian), "All those that think, do think as I think." Ever since then priests have been coming secretly to confess their belief in the Christian faith. But they do not know what to do. They say, "If I knew how to earn my living, it would be easy. If I could sew a coat or mend a pair of boots, I could throw off the yoke. I cannot earn my daily bread." Dr. Prochet read extracts from a letter he had received from a priest, pathetically describing his state of mental and spiritual bondage, and expressing an earnest desire for a speedy release. In 1880 this priest's faith began to waver, and now he writes to say he believes in Jesus as the way, the truth, and the life. The letter concludes thus: "I have opened up my heart to you in the hope that you will take my case into serious consideration." Dr. Prochet said he had resolved to lay the case before the meeting. Fifty pounds would save this man, and he could enter the Protestant Seminary in Rome.

Mr. Vanorden briefly advocated the claims of Brazil.

A prayer-meeting on behalf of missions was held in Room 5, immediately after the larger meetings had closed. Mr. Alfred Pennefather led, and requests were received from many parts of the mission field.

German Protestant Missions.

THIS was the chief topic discussed at the meeting held on Thursday afternoon in room No. 6, which was well attended. Mr. Grattan Guinness, who presided, read some extracts from a paper he had received from Dr. GRUNDIMAN, who was unable to be present. In a clear and interesting manner he reviewed the missionary enterprise of Germany, pointing out that up to a recent period one of the strongholds of opposition to missionary work was the University of Jena; now a missionary society has been formed among the students there. The political press, which formerly was silent on the question, now freely ventilates the cause of foreign missions. Dr. Grundiman showed that the noble tree of the Moravian brethren, planted through the instrumentality of Count Zinzendorf, had for a considerable time stood alone. Fourteen other societies are growing up side by side with it, and many have already become strong. The Gossner Mission has in Ischutia, Nagpoor, among the Kolki tribes, more than 30,000 converts, and the Rhenish Mission has about the same number in South Africa and Dutch India. In Sumatra especially the mission among the cannibal Bataks has prospered in a marvellous manner. The Berlin South African Mission has likewise experienced blessed results. When the secretary visited the field twenty-one years ago there were something like 1600 converts at the different stations, but when, three years ago, he went back he found the number had increased to 16,000, and the latest report mentioned 19,000 converts. The Basel Mission, mainly supported by Christians in South Germany, in West Africa, India, and China, has something over 20,000 converts. The Leipsic Mission has in India 14,000 converts, and the Hermansburger Mission in South Africa 12,000 converts.

Rev. JOH. KNUSLI gave details and results of the North-German Mission in Western Africa, which, since its establishment, in 1847, has slowly but steadily developed. There are now altogether about 800 converts, who live in thirty-three towns and villages, under the care of native pastors and teachers. There are several hindrances to the progress of the work in Western Africa, as elsewhere. These 800 converts belong to a people who for centuries have been the slaves of idolatry and the worst of bad habits. When they become Christians they have to fight hard in order to resist the temptations of the devil and the attempts on the part of their heathen relatives and friends to lure them back to their old ways. The unhealthiness of the climate causes the premature death of many faithful workers. In many cases the ungodly lives of Europeans undo all that the missionaries have done. Mr. Knüsli described the striking contrast between the life and home of the native Christian and those of the heathen. While, on Sunday, the heathen are engaged in fishing or other work, the Christians meet together in their homes, and read the Gospel, which has been translated into their own language.

Rev. C. H. RAPPARD presented an account of the work at the two missionary training institutions at Basel and Chrischona, Switzerland. The Basel Mission House has generally between eighty and ninety students being prepared for the mission field. At Chrischona there are, as a rule, between sixty and seventy students. The young men must be thoroughly converted before they enter the colleges. They come chiefly from the artisan or farming class. The young brethren from Basel go to West Africa, India, and China; while those from Chrischona proceed principally to the United States. In thirty years about ninety students have been sent out to care for the spiritual welfare of the German-speaking population of North America.

Rev. B. ROMIG, of Herrnhut, Saxony, briefly told the story of the Moravian Missions, and spoke of their wonderful triumphs among the wild savage of North America, the stolid Esquimaux, the degraded Australian, and other primitive races. He concluded with a stirring appeal to Christians to do more for the salvation of the perishing heathen.

Mr. GUINNESS greatly edified the meeting by reading a long letter recently received from his daughter Geraldine, who is working at one of the stations of the China Inland Mission. Miss Guinness, in her communication, gives a graphic word-picture of the district in which she is located, and of one of the methods adopted in preaching the Gospel, and in winning the Chinese for Christ.

[The remaining reports of the smaller gatherings will be given in our next issue.]

MAJOR AND MRS. EVERED POOLE have been giving addresses at Clevedon, Clifton, Bath, and other places, on behalf of the Army Scripture Readers' Society.

"THE AIR OF MILDMAY."

GIVE me to breathe the air,
On the bright mountain's side;
Surely the Lord is there—
Let me abide.

There, blending all in one,
With love's potent power,
How full his grace has come
In that blest hour!

Nearness, my Lord, to Thee,
Glimpse of a happier day,
Bright with eternity,
Full on me lay.

Who that has known the spell
Coming from heaven there,
Can half its sweetness tell,
Its quick'ning air.

Hopes of more blessed days
Even on earth to be,
Power and sanctity
In Him for me.

Here would I then abide,
Breathing its heavenly air,
Till, by the Saviour's side,
More of it there.

INQUIRERS' COLUMN.

"FATHER IGNATIUS."

DEAR SIR,—As a reader of THE CHRISTIAN, permit me to ask through its columns the question is "Father Ignatius" a Protestant, or a Romanist in disguise? Seeing that so many are being captivated by the "Father's" preaching, it would be well to know whether he still believes in the supremacy of the Pope and in the worship of the Virgin?—I am, dear Sir, ANTI-ROMANIST.

IMPUTED RIGHTEOUSNESS.

What is the meaning of "The imputed righteousness of Christ"? and where is this phrase to be found in the Scriptures? A. S. A.

The following are extracts from books recently published. What they teach seems to me not easily distinguishable from the Romish doctine of works of supererogation, except that here the works are those of the Lord Christ, instead of those of Romish saints. But in either case the principle is the same, so far as I can see. They forcibly remind me of Cowper's lines:—

> Oh, how unlike the complex ways of man
> God's easy, artless, unencumbered plan.

I shall be much obliged, however, by being informed whether these may be regarded as fair statements of what is understood by imputed righteousness. The italics are mine. INQUIRER.

EXTRACTS.

In the tenth chapter of the Romans, Paul was inspired to make a very plain contrast between the righteousness of the law and the righteousness which Christ wrought through his faith...Paul describes the New Testament righteousness as being that which Christ wrought in this world, and that men are now required to place faith in, instead of the Old Testament plan of men having been required to keep God's law, as an act of righteousness on their part.

By his perfect obedience to the Father, even unto death, Christ acquired so much righteousness that it is sufficient to "make many"—as many as will appropriate it by faith—righteous in the presence of God, just as the pouring out of his one soul unto death is sufficient for the sin of the whole world.

THE POLAR REGIONS.—A whaling vessel, the Queen of the Dart, left Dundee last week, and before leaving the Arctic Regions will land two of her crew with the object of starting a Christian mission amongst the Esquimaux in the British territory on the west of Davis Straits, in connection with the British Christian Polar Mission, formed in Dundee in November last.

COMPREHENSIVE TEACHER'S BIBLE.

THE name of Samuel Bagster & Sons is honourably connected with Bible study, and all readers of the Bible are indebted to them for numerous invaluable helps of many kinds. They originated the fac-simile editions in various sizes. Their most recent contribution to what may thus be regarded as their special province, is entitled "The Comprehensive Teacher's Helps," and consists of a large mass of clearly arranged information, on subjects well chosen and ably treated. These include the structure, languages, and versions, of the Scriptures, and an analysis and summary of each book; the Jews and Related Peoples, and Jewish and other Sects; the geography, topography, and natural history of Palestine; and, indeed, instruction on every matter necessary to a Bible teacher. In addition, there is an Index of the Scriptures, a Concordance singularly comprehensive and easy of reference, and an Indexed Bible Atlas. This is a most useful and valuable addition to Messrs. Bagster's already ample provision for the teacher's needs.

"CURRENT RELIGIOUS PERILS."*

A BOOK of peculiar value lies before us—viz., the volume containing the twelfth series of the Boston Monday Lectures. It is of special interest, because, during the Down-Grade controversy at home, our American brethren were fighting a New Departure at Andover Theological Seminary.

Here the chief feature of the new theology was called the Larger Hope. In America a very similar error was advocated as Probation after death. Both are as dangerous as they are delusive. The former goes further towards Universalism, but the latter assumes a more compact and definite shape. It is therefore more easily grasped and more thoroughly refuted. For this result no small share of credit is due to the Boston lecturer. We therefore welcome and heartily commend this volume of his lectures. It is a handsome octavo, as cheap as it is excellent, and ought to be a familiar handbook with all who regard "a devitalised orthodoxy" as one of the deadliest perils of our time.

In this connection we may also mention "OUR DAY: A Monthly Record and Review of Current Reform," of which Mr. Joseph Cook is the editor. His associate editors are Miss Willard, on Temperance; Professor James, Ph.D., on Labour Reform; Professor Townsend, D.D., on Education; Mr. Anthony Comstock, on Suppression of Vice; Rev. C. S. Eby, on Missions; and Dr. Pentecost, on Church Work. Six numbers, comprising the first volume, have been issued. The yearly subscription is two dollars; "Our Day" Publishing Company, 28, Beacon-street, Boston, U.S.A. It contains what is freshest in American evangelical thought, as well as American opinion on English religious affairs. A single number costs 25 cents. Order one as a sample.

RECRUITS FOR THE CAPE.—At the monthly breakfast meeting of the Sunderland Y.M.C.A., on July 1, two of their number, Messrs. Olsen and Dawson, were present, who are leaving for Cape Town to preach the Gospel. The spiritual needs of Africa were very forcible brought before the meeting. This is the outcome of the Missionary Conference held in February last, and in response to the appeal of Mrs. Osborne, in conjunction with whom these two brethren hope to labour for the present, while earning a living by following their daily employment. Three young men from the same Association have already gone forth to the South African Colonies.

RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.

THE monthly workers' meeting was held on the 6th instant; it was well attended, and most enjoyable. Mr. W. F. A. Archibald, of Putney, presided. Mr. J. T. Isaac, secretary, spoke of the need of more workers, and said employment could be found for friends who can sing indoors or out of doors, speak to individuals, or in the meetings, or invite the men in from the the street. Helpers for the open air are specially needed just now, also amongst Germans and Jews. Mr. Wm. Noble, as a worker, bore testimony to the real and practical character of the work carried on.

The address was given by Rev. F. B. Meyer on "The Rest of the Grave, and the Rest of the Throne." He pointed out the importance of seeing that our outward service arose out of, and corresponded with, our inward rest. It is not our work for Christ, but his work by us. To realise this would save us from the worry and over anxiety which so often mar our service.

GRAY'S YARD RAGGED CHURCH.—Last week Mr. T. A. Denny laid the foundation-stone of a new "Ragged Church," in connection with the important and successful work carried on for so many years at Gray's Yard. Dr. Habershon stated that the present site had been occupied by dilapidated workshops, but in them souls had been born again. Short addresses were delivered by Mr. George Hanbury, Colonel Paget, and Mr. Mark Stewart, M.P. Of the £6000 to be paid for the site, £150 are still needed. The work is associated with the most blessed memories.

THE SALVATION ARMY celebrated their twenty-third anniversary at the Alexandra Palace on Monday, upwards of 30,000 persons gaining admission. All entertainments and the sale of intoxicants were suspended. A number of "soldiers," who had been imprisoned at Torquay, wore prison costume; there was an Indian camp; and models were exhibited illustrating "slum" houses and "sweating" work, by the side of which were placed representations of such houses after they had been purified by the "Slum Brigade." Meetings of all sorts were held all day, and the grand "march past" of 10,000 members in the evening formed an imposing sight.

VISITORS FROM NORTHFIELD.—A Quartette Choir from Mr. D. L. Moody's College, Mount Hermon, Mass., is about to visit this country. Five years ago, twelve boys, at Mr. Moody's request, were taken from the Cheetham Orphan Homes of the Boys' and Girls' Refuge, Strangeways, to the Mount Hermon College, and this band has since been augmented by members of the Band of Kindness. Three of the five young men who are thus about to spend their vacation in evangelistic work in and around Manchester, are among those who went from this district. Their earnest desire is to have opportunities of preaching the Gospel by song and testimony. They have already been much used of God in America, and prayer is asked for still greater blessing in this their native land. They will be assisted in the work by Messrs. Leonard K. Shaw and Gilbert R. Kirlew, of the Boys' and Girls' Refuges. Friends desiring to arrange meetings, should write at once to Messrs. Shaw and Kirlew, Boys' Refuge, Strangeways, Manchester.

MR. W. I. PALMER'S ANNUAL RECEPTION of the Help Myself and Help One Another Societies at Wellington College, took place on Saturday last, when there were 4000 people on the ground; 1800 of these went from London in four special trains. To provide for such a number of guests is no easy matter, in an out-of-the-way corner of a county; but on Saturday no hitch occurred. The dinner-tables were spread in banqueting halls with canvas roof and green grass carpet. Many of the guests dispersed through the surrounding woods and lanes, whilst the greater number remained on the ground. Several meetings were held during the day. In the monster marquee the assembly was presided over by Rev. F. Hastings, and addressed by Messrs. Rae, Noble, Lee, Wakely, Walker, Horrocks, Rev. C. Leach, Dr. Wade, and the host himself. One or two Gospel services were held outside, and the friends of the Salvation Army were in full force. This outing grows larger every year, and is an index of the progress of the societies, as well as an expression of Mr. Palmer's generosity and goodwill.

TRAVELLERS' AID.

SIR,—The aim of the "Travellers' Aid" Society is to protect friendless young women, as they move from place to place in search of employment, from the dangers to which they are exposed. This is chiefly effected by getting hold of them on their arrival at the different stations and landing stages, both at home and abroad. The various means by which this is done cannot, for obvious reasons, be made known in a public letter. As we cannot bring the details of our work before the public, we find it specially difficult for us to obtain the necessary means. We have about 500 volunteer lady workers in different parts of the world, and this great help enables us to keep the expenditure very low—only £350 having been spent last year.

We beg your readers to help us again this year. Our efforts involve the saving of hundreds of innocent country girls from the clutches of those who lie in wait to deceive them.—Your obedient servant, M. E. DIMOCK, Sec.

NOTES FROM THE FAR SOUTH.

MISS VON FINKELSTEIN

is winning golden opinions in South Australia. She is shortly to come to Melbourne, where her advent is expected with much interest. Glowing accounts of her dramatic power, and the large audiences she attracts, reach this city from time to time.

THE CENTENNIAL MISSION.

Preparations for the Centennial Mission, to be held in Victoria in July, are going on apace. Simultaneous services are to be held in all the churches in the colony, and already visitors from the church committees are going from house to house to remind the people of the services, and to try to obtain promises of attendance.

TROUBLES IN TONGA.

THE long-standing troubles in Tonga, which have caused the Australian Wesleyan Church so much anxiety, are apparently being happily solved. The South Wales Wesleyan Conference wished to support and to keep in Tonga their own representative, Rev. J. E. Moulton. But the Victorian Wesleyan Conference, while paying just and generous tribute to Mr. Moulton's unquestioned ability and self-sacrificing zeal on behalf of the Tongan people, have decided that it would be best for Mr. Moulton to leave Tonga, as he had become personally distasteful to the king. Mr. Moulton, therefore, retires to Sydney to pursue his task of Bible translation and other literary work for the Tongese. Rev. George Brown, an able and tried missionary, has been appointed by the Conference its Commissioner of Peace, and goes to Tonga to make inquiries into the state of affairs, and to pour oil on the troubled waters. C.

HOWARD-STREET MISSION, New-road, Wandsworth-road, S.W., is an agency whereby much truth and light are shed abroad in a needy region. The annual report gives details of evangelistic, educational, and philanthropic endeavour in many directions; but, like most others, it discloses an unsatisfactory financial condition. Mr. J. Soames is superintendent of the Mission.

REV. NEWMAN HALL.—The thirty-fourth anniversary of Mr. Newman Hall's pastorate of Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, has just been celebrated. It is forty-six years since Mr. Hall was ordained, and fifty-three years since he began to preach the Gospel. At a meeting held last week, it was stated that the church membership is considerably over 950. In the Sunday-schools 400 teachers instruct 5000 children. The local missions are zealously conducted, and the temperance societies full of vitality. Many other agencies cluster round the church, which has an excellent staff of faithful workers connected with it. For thirty-three years Mr. William Webb has been an elder of Christ Church, and last week his devotion was recognised by a testimonial presented by the ministers and congregation.

Letters to the Editor.

UNHOLY ART.

SIR,—Your Australian correspondent is alarmed at the announcement of a large display of French pictures at the forthcoming Centennial Exhibition, as he fears that indecent subjects will be included. Alas! we, too, live in glass houses. Had he had the opportunity of visiting the Royal Academy this season, he would have discovered in such pictures as "Cupid and Psyche," or "Bathsheba's Petition," that modern English art is unrivalled in the department which he characterises in such strong terms.

How are such representations obtained? Is it not by the actual exposure of the living human model in the studio? Can this be innocent? But even though this outrage upon female modesty could be dispensed with, can we think that it is pleasing in the eyes of a holy God that what he ever designates in his Word as our "shame" (Exod. xxxii. 25, &c.) should be depicted upon canvas and exhibited to public gaze? I feel sure that such an "unclean thing" must turn away his blessing (Deut. xxiii. 14).

I was deeply pained, a few days ago, to see a young lady, apparently just of age, pass by with indifference several pictures in one of the rooms at Hampton Court, and gaze with the most intent interest upon a highly indelicate representation of Adam and Eve, or some other unclothed figures. After leaving the spot, she returned, as though fascinated, once more, as it were, to taste of the forbidden fruit, which is only too congenial to the corrupt appetite of us fallen beings.

I trust, Sir, that you and your correspondents and your readers will not cease to denounce and protest against this class of picture and sculpture, which, however it may be justified by the principles and precedents of heathen art, will find no sanction in the tone and tenour of Scripture, and which, even though some may innocently pass it by, is yet to others provocative of impurity, or at least a source of much pain.—Yours faithfully,

G. W. B.

LORD ROBERT MONTAGU ON BEHALF OF PRIMITIVE METHODISM.

SIR,—The growth of Romanism, especially among the "upper classes" of this country, and the extraordinary spread of Ritualism are undeniable facts, which every lover of righteousness and truth must deeply deplore. The fact that the Government of the country, whichever political party is in power, fosters Ritualism throughout the Church of England is very well known. The Ritualistic appointments to bishoprics, canonries, and rich livings, has had the effect of spreading a taste for Ritualism; and the Church of England is now so penetrated by that leaven that she is quite incapacitated from combating Romanism, and defending our Protestant principles. The middle classes, alas! seek to follow the upper classes; and they play with Ritualism, and even Romanism in imitation of their betters. It seems as if the voluntary churches, which rest chiefly on the working classes, are the only ones that are available for the necessary combat in the near future. But they have little or no endowments, and are, in that respect, unable to cope with the wealthy Ritualists and Romanists, in house-to-house ministrations. Some voluntary churches, as the Primitive Methodists, are at a peculiar disadvantage.

Last Easter I had the pleasure of laying the first stone of a church of the Primitive Methodist Connexion, in a very poor district of the East of London (North Bow Circuit), I mean "The Tyndall Memorial Church," of which Rev. John F. Porter is the superintendent minister. It has been built on freehold land, just between a Ritualistic Church and a Roman Catholic place of worship. It has been so vested in trustees that it cannot ever be estranged from the use of Protestant Christianity. The intention in building the church is to combat the efforts of the Ritualists and Romanists to get hold of the poor in the East of London, and the minister is fighting a truly heroic battle. But he is fettered greatly by the balance of a debt for building the church, amounting to £500. If he could be freed from this incubus, he would devote all his energies to frustrate the progress of error and extend the kingdom of Christ.

The church is to be opened on Sunday, August 5, and I venture to hope that the readers of THE CHRISTIAN will send contributions to the Rev. J. F. Porter, 362, Old Ford-road, Victoria-park, E., who is the superintendent minister and president of the East London Christian Protestant Association. In the last eleven years he has received 764 persons into church fellowship, his own children in the faith; and there are 900 children in his Sunday-schools. I mention this to show that he has been helped in his work by the Lord Jesus, and I trust that he may be enabled speedily to pay off the church debt.—Your obedient servant,

ROBT. MONTAGU.

SIR W. HUNTER AND WOMEN IN INDIA.

DEAR SIR,—In your issue of March 16 is a report of some remarks made by Sir William Hunter on the position of women in India. The following sentences occur in the paragraph:—"In all the social relations which can be tested by statistics, the position of women in India is exceptionally high....A woman's life is safeguarded from poverty and crime in a manner which some of her English sisters might well envy." But the question has arisen whether Indian women do not purchase their safety at too high a price. I would respectfully submit that, if the above opinion is based wholly upon "statistics," then in this case statistics are exceedingly misleading. After a missionary life of nearly twenty-four years, I have yet to find the native woman whose "life is safeguarded from poverty and crime." I believe there is no missionary of any experience in India, and especially no lady physician, who will concur in Sir William Hunter's opinion. I have gone in and out among native women for nearly twenty-four years, and I know it to be a fact that the "home" and the "protector" Sir William speaks of, in a very large majority of cases, simply means an opportunity for leading an immoral life.

More than this, the widow thus "protected" is often compelled to such a life, that her relatives may live in ease and idleness on her gains. I here refer to Hindu women. Now, if statistics be searched for confirmation of this statement, they will fail to give me any support whatever, for the simple reason that no Hindu woman ever openly leads such a life. The licensed women (at least in the Punjaub) are, without an exception, Mohammedans. At one time, part of my work lay among these fallen women, and they assured me that no Hindu woman would lead the public life led by these Mohammedan women; but that, in secret, there was scarcely a Hindu widow in that particular large city who was any better than they. I have had abundant opportunity to verify this statement from other sources. There are at this moment intelligent Hindu ladies and gentlemen in London, who can, if they chose, not only confirm what I say, but give details which cannot be here entered upon. A Hindu widow once said to me, "When parents bid their widowed daughter put on her jewels, they have made her take the first step to destruction."

In the cases where a widowed member of a household (among the Hindus) is not thus driven to destruction, she is the drudge and slave of the entire family, and the youngest member of the household is free to abuse her without rebuke. Not only so, but so unlucky is a widow thought to be, that she must be ill-used, lest the gods should think the family condoned the terrible crime the poor thing is supposed to have committed in some former existence. A widow is always considered to be, directly or indirectly, her husband's murderer; for, if she had not sinned somehow, he would not have died! For this crime a widow is always liable to be repeatedly punished, whenever her relatives choose to inflict the chastisement. I speak for the Punjaub, my knowledge does not extend to the other provinces.

My object in writing is to prevent any such misunderstanding of the speech referred to, as would lead people to think that women in India are, after all, pretty well off, and need not be so anxiously laboured for. Should anyone feel inclined to think so, let them come and see for themselves. Or, if this be not possible, let them interview any missionary from India they can get hold of, and hear for themselves. Indian officials, who are obliged to depend upon statistics for their opinions, cannot possibly have the same opportunity for learning the truth about the social position of women who are so "safeguarded," as lady missionaries have, who go into the homes of the women, and see and hear things as they are. I enclose my card.—Yours truly,

Punjaub, India. A LADY MISSIONARY.

THE GOSPEL IN FRANCE.

DEAR SIR,—Allow me to state, in reply to the letter of Mr. Colquhoun on this subject, that my experience is quite different from his. I have had now the joy to work here in the dark Corrèze for the Master for eight years. The Lord is not without his faithful witnesses in this country, and the work of evangelisation is faithfully and patiently done by many.

That more could be done is only too true. That all our service is not what it ought to be is equally true, but is not this the case even in England? Such sweeping accusations against a whole body of Christian brethren are too lightly written. Not myself a Frenchman, I know in France many earnest workers in various parts of the country. I am specially connected with those attached to the Société Evangélique de France and the Mission McAll, and I know how earnestly and patiently they accomplish their work.

As to the fact that the Roman Catholic priesthood does not interfere, I could invite Mr. Colquhoun to visit us in the Corrèze, and he would soon be convinced that the Gospel has no more fiendish enemies than they. Here not a stone is left unturned; they use every means to prevent people from listening to the Gospel, or even purchasing the Scriptures. They burn the Bibles, they deprive people of their work, they even threaten children with their abominable persecution. In fact they would to-day burn us on the faggots if they had the power.

As for immediate conversions, I cannot speak of what I have not seen, but in my experience it is not the rule. The best and most devoted members of our church are Romanists who have gradually come to a knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, and have not abandoned Rome without much inward strife. Their number is but small, for they have at once to meet a dreadful persecution.—Yours faithfully, C. W. CREMER

Brive, Corrèze, July 3.

HINTS TO CHRISTIAN TOURISTS.

DEAR SIR,—As many are now going abroad for their summer holidays, may I be allowed to suggest through your paper what an advantage it would be to the Hospital Flower Mission if they would, whilst in Switzerland, press some flowers, which they could during winter mount on cards, and print texts neatly on them. During their tour they might get many to help in this excellent work, in printing or writing texts on cards, which, when finished, would be thankfully received, either at the Deaconesses' Home, Mildmay, or at Miss Gurney's, 11, Ladbrooke-terrace. The cards can be procured at the Deaconesses' Home, Mildmay, or Holness & Co., 14, Paternoster-row. Many ladies paint little views or insects on the cards, and make them very attractive, and thus the patients are tempted to carry home the card with them, which, with God's word on it, is doubly blessed. I have often found people glad to have these cards to print texts on at hotels as an occupation for wet days.

Whilst travelling, what a grand chance is offered of spreading God's word, either by distributing Gospels or tracts in various languages; supplies can be obtained from Messrs. Spittler, 4, Stapfelberg, Basle, or from Dépôt Central, 4, Place du Théâtre Français, Paris; or the Religious Tract Society, London; and beautiful cards with verses on them, in nearly all European languages, can be obtained from Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling, or Mrs. Grimké, Hilton-park, Prestwich, Manchester, at 6d. per 100. I also strongly recommend the lovely Gospel leaflets which can be had in all languages at 13, Warwick-lane, Paternoster-row, which I always find are highly appreciated.

As there is a great scarcity at most hotels of good sound literature, might I also suggest that those who take books out with them should, after reading, write the name of the hotel in the book, and then leave it behind them for the benefit of others.

Yours faithfully, T. R. F.

P.S.—The British and Foreign Bible Society has a depôt now in nearly every large town abroad, where supplies can be procured.

PROPOSED MISSIONARY INSTITUTE.—Young men in Woolwich and Plumstead are showing such an interest in foreign missions that funds are being collected with a view to providing a missionary institute, which, in addition to having a library and reading-room, shall promote study for mission work, and the dissemination of information as to the spread of the Gospel throughout the world. Mr. F. Ellis, 1, Mount-terrace, Eglinton-road, Plumstead, S.E., is hon. sec. to the provisional committee.

GENEROSITY.—PROVERBS xi. 24—27.

THE prime sin of humanity is probably selfishness, and a chief feature of selfishness is a desire to hoard. The selfish soul, like the leech's daughter, cries, "Give! give!" but it has no disposition to invite others to take. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, commenting on the words, "Ye cannot serve God and mammon," says, "We should have said, 'God and the devil,' but the Divine Teacher, to whom all hearts are open, declared that the alternative to the love of God is the love of money." Christianity strikes at the root of selfishness, and delivers men from an undue regard for temporal possessions. In the lesson we are now to consider we see how the practical and generous principles of Christ and his Apostles are foreshadowed in the book of Proverbs. Here we see—

(1) GENEROSITY EXEMPLIFIED.—"There is that scattereth." The generosity of these words is exemplified in delightful examples of benevolence. We see them in: (a) Nature.—Nature is beneficent. The clouds give rain, the sun gives light, the earth gives fruit. "The heart," says Mr. Spurgeon, "does not receive the blood to store it, but while it pumps it in at one valve, it sends it forth at another." "Avarice," says Dr. Thomas, "is an anomaly in nature; all else gives out what it receives, but this clutches and retains." (b) In the example of Christ.—"He gave Himself" (Gal. i. 4). (c) In the early Church (Acts ii. 44, 45). (d) In modern times.—Think of the munificence of George Peabody, Samuel Morley, and others.

(2) GENEROSITY EXTOLLED.—The generosity here set forth is: (a) Unstinted.—"Scattereth" (ver. 24). The generous man says not "How little?" but "How much can I give?" (Isa. xxxii. 8). (b) Profitable.—"Increaseth." A systematic giver says of such giving, "It pays as an investment, and is a fortune in business." If giving is prompted by a motive of temporal gain, it is base and sinful; but when inspired by right motives, it is often rewarded by a present and a bountiful return. One who was in business promised to give to the cause of God £1000 out of every £10,000 he made, and it is said that "he had ten times to fulfil his vow." "Withholding," on the other hand, "tendeth to poverty." If not poverty of purse, there will be poverty of soul. (c) Hearty.—"The liberal soul" (ver. 25). The hand may give what the soul grudges. (Comp. "not grudgingly," 2 Cor. ix. 7). (d) Healthy.—"made fat." "If," says a modern writer, "a man is growing large in wealth, nothing but constant and generous giving can save him from growing small in soul. Those who bring the tithes get the blessing (Mal. iii. 10), and it maketh rich" (Prov. x. 22). (e) Refreshing.—"He that watereth." Only a people living in a land of much drought can appreciate fully the promise, "He shall come down like rain" (Ps. lxii. 6). In such a land one who provides water for the people is a great benefactor (Josh. xv. 19; Judges i. 15). A generous act refreshes the soul, as does water the thirsty land (2 Cor. vii. 13; 2 Tim. i. 16). (f) Winning.—"Blessing upon the head." The heart is won by kindness. Edward Payson said when dying, "I long to give a full cup of happiness to every human being." The benedictions of his people were a chief part of his rich reward (comp. Job xxix. 13). (g) Painstaking.—"Diligently seeketh good." The friend of the needy does not wait till misery clamours at the door, but goes out and looks for the outlets of charity (comp. "to seek and to save," Luke xv. 10.)

SOUTHEND-ON-SEA.—A beneficent Christian work is being carried on in connection with Trinity Church, Southend (Reformed Episcopal Church of England), of which Bishop Gregg is the incumbent. Under his direction evangelistic services are regularly held in Union Hall. At the Christian Medical Mission over 12,000 cases have been treated medically since its opening, in the year 1885. A mothers' meeting, Dorcas society, coal and clothing clubs, a provident society of some 200 members, a penny bank with some 500 depositors, and other agencies are in full work. Unity, peace, and concord cheer and encourage both minister and people, and much blessing is the result.

FREE GIFTS FOR THE TABERNACLE.

EXOD. xxxv. 20—29; GOLDEN TEXT, 2 Cor. ix. 7.

LESSON POINTS.

(1) Those who give gladly to God, first receive freely from Him. Observe how this willing, joyful giving follows: (1) repentance (chap. xxxiii. 4, 6 and 7), (2) pardon (chap. xxxiii. 12—23), and (3) the renewing of the broken covenant (chap. xxxiv.). It is always so; we must learn how good God is, how really and wonderfully He loves us, if we would give as we ought. True knowledge of the pardon of sin has marvellous power to open heart and hand. "We love Him, because He first loved us."

(2) The people gave for the building of the Tabernacle, the place where God's honour dwelt, and the symbol of his presence was seen. What a privilege to have any share in building a place where God would dwell! Some pious Israelites felt this doubtless, and prepared their gifts with joy, and wonder that they were allowed to take part in work so high and honourable. But our privilege is higher. The heart is the temple God loves best, and we can give Him that.

> Two temples doth Jehovah prize,
>   Nor will from either e'er depart,
> One is above the starry skies,
>   The other is the lowly heart.

Better still, the Church of Christ—i.e., the entire company of redeemed men, all who have been, and are, and will be, saved by Jesus Christ—is the temple. Therefore, whenever we lead anyone to Jesus, we bring a new stone to God's tabernacle; and whenever we overcome a fault, or help anyone to love or serve Jesus better, we polish a stone for God's building. When we give labour or money to help the preaching of the Gospel, we are helping to build that tabernacle. If it was such an honour to help in the building of the Tabernacle in the wilderness, how much more so to help in this everlasting building.

(3) The offerings were made to the Lord, not to the Tabernacle. It makes all the difference whether we give merely to keep up our school, our missionary society, or our church, or whether we give unto the Lord. Observe that when God first spoke to Moses about this, He said: "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they bring Me an offering," &c. (chap. xxv. 1). See also the words, "the Lord's offering," in lesson (vv. 21, 24); and, "unto the Lord" (vv. 5, 22, 29). We should try and remember when we give to the poor, and to the cause of missions, "I am really giving this to God, and for his sake." If we do, we shall always want to give our very best.

(4) Everything depends on the heartiness of the gift. To be acceptable, the gifts must be willing and glad. "God loveth a cheerful giver." Extraordinary emphasis is laid on this truth in the passage before us; so we should lay it much to heart.

(5) Something was expected from everybody; each was to do what he could. The work was not left to a few rich folk—women as well as men (and, most probably, children too) joined in it. Some gave their wealth (vv. 22—24, 27—28) and their personal ornaments; some gave labour (those who cut and gathered in the Shittim wood which grew all around them in the desert, ver. 24); and some, who had already given precious ornaments (ver. 22), gave thought and skill as well (vv. 25, 26). The duty (and privilege) of everybody to give to God's cause largely, freely, and gladly, should be pressed home. Also, that we shall never do this properly unless we do it regularly. It must be a duty, a habit, and a joy.

(6) The words, "They came, every one whose heart stirred him up," suggest that some did not come. Amid all the zeal and work, and bustle and gladness, they were cold and unmoved—selfishly lost in their own concerns. Who would like to imitate these men? Yet, when we are careless about God and his Gospel, are we not like them? What are we doing to help the building of God's temple? When the Tabernacle was finished, and God's glory came down and filled it, who were the gladdest men in Israel? Surely, they who had given most. So will it be in the day of Christ's glory.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(1) Hohavnes, the blind missionary of Harpoot, tells of a place where the Board had spent much money with little result. To this very place he was sent. The people were to raise 600 piastres, and the Board to pay the balance of his salary. The people, who were extremely poor, said they could not raise so large a sum; while a neighbouring pastor declared it was impossible for them to do it. All this gave the missionary great anxiety, and led him to lay his case before God very definitely and earnestly. The answer to his prayer was a deep impression on his mind that each should be asked to give a tenth part of his income. He acted on this impression; the people agreed; and the entire sum, with a surplus to spare, was easily raised. But this was not all. God gave them plentiful crops, so that the people grew more prosperous than ever before. They were soon able and glad to support both their preacher and school teacher, and also to give 2000 piastres for other purposes.

(2) The writer remembers a poor woman who was a member of a church in his native village. One day his father, a deacon of that church, was sent to visit her, and he used to say he could never forget that visit. He spoke to her as to a dying women, but was startled with the earnestness with which she gave him a half-sovereign and said, "Take it, Mr. ——, it's for the Sunday-school!" "But I can't take this; it's so large a sum for you to give." She was very poor, earning a mere pittance by washing. "Oh! but you must take it," she answered; "it's the Lord's money. You must take it." He took it, of course, for he felt it was a sacred gift. Then he asked how she could possibly have saved so much out of her poor earnings? She explained that for a long time past she had gone without tea, almost her only luxury, probably. She had burnt her crusts, and soaked them in hot water, which she drank instead of tea. In this way she had saved ten shillings.

(3) "Ben Adam had a golden coin, one day,
Which he put out at interest with a Jew;
Year after year awaiting him it lay,
Until the doubled coin two pieces grew;
And these two four—so on, till people said,
'How rich Ben Adam is!' and bowed the servile head.
"Ben Selim had a golden coin that day,
Which to a stranger, asking alms, he gave,
Who went rejoicing on his unknown way.
Ben Selim died, too poor to own a grave;
But when his soul reached heaven, angels with pride
Showed him the wealth to which his coin had multiplied."

(4) "Give strength, give thought, give deeds, give pelf;
Give love, give tears, and give thyself;
Give, give, be always giving;
Who gives not is not living.
The more we give, the more we live."

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.—On Thursday some deeply interesting work was done by this Society amongst the fallen of the Strand and neighbourhood. About 150 women were gathered together in the Lower Hall, Exeter Hall, being entertained to ample refreshment by Mr. George Williams, who, with many workers connected with the Society, waited upon and conversed separately with them. They were also addressed in very feeling and suitable terms by Mr. Williams, Mr. Nixon, Mr. E. W. Thomas, and Mr. Christien. The attention and conduct of those assembled were very gratifying, promising the best results, some of which have been already realised.

BRUSSELS EXHIBITION.—With respect to a communication which recently appeared in our columns from Mr. J. G. Alexander, on evangelisation among the Flemish population of Belgium, we understand that Mr. Alexander did not intend to imply that efforts in this direction only date from 1880; as a fact the work goes back fifty years. As to the tent work near the exhibition at Brussels, it has not been undertaken by the Belgian Missionary Church and Pastor de Jonge only, but by the committee of the Brussels Evangelical Alliance, French and Flemish Christians of various denominations having joined to this end. Pastor Kennedy Anet, general secretary of the Belgian Evangelical Society, in a letter to us stating this fact, says, "The meetings at the tent attract numbers of hearers. All the pastors, and many members of the different churches, meet their regularly, and carry on the work with one heart and mind, co-operating in a true spirit of prayer and Christian love."

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

More than thirty bishops preached in London pulpits on Sunday last.

A site has been secured in Dean's Yard, Westminster, for the proposed "Church House" in London, and the foundation stone will be laid on the 21st inst.

A meeting was held in the Church Missionary House, Salisbury-square, on Tuesday week, to bid farewell to six missionaries, leaving for East Africa, China, Japan, and West Africa. By special invitation, Drs. Pierson and Ellinwood, both Presbyterians, were present, and delivered addresses. The former observed upon the characteristic and typical nature of the scene, where a clerical, a medical, a mechanical, and three lady missionaries were severally dismissed for the foreign field.

It would be well, says The English Churchman, if a Protestant lay missionary were located at Stowmarket, in Suffolk. That little country town is a centre for very zealous proselytising efforts on the part of the Church of Rome. Unfortunately, the Incumbent of Stowmarket is a Romaniser; in his parish church he gives his flock a certain amount of Popery, and then, when they have discovered a taste for that sort of thing, is it to be wondered at that they go to the Roman Catholic chapel, where they can get more of it, and in a legitimate manner?

The Rector of Brington, in Northamptonshire, says The Christian World, has a warm and sympathising heart, as well as a catholic spirit. On the death of Rev. J. C. Robinson, for twenty-two years pastor of the Baptist Church in Brington, the rector, Rev. H. H. Stewart, wrote a letter of tender condolence to the daughters on their bereavement, and intimated that whilst it was fitting that there should be a service in the chapel, he was willing, if desired, to conduct the whole funeral service in the church and at the grave. Rev. Thomas Arnold and Rev. G. Nicholson, Congregational ministers of Northampton, conducted the service in the chapel, the rector afterwards holding one in the church and churchyard, several Nonconformist ministers being present.

BAPTIST.

In the Manual of the church at East-hill, Wandsworth, the pastor, Rev. J. W. Ewing, says that the year 1887 has been a year of remarkable blessing in all directions. The statistics show a membership of 294, an increase of fifty-five on the previous year.

Mr. A. H. Baynes, general secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society, says he started ten years ago with the idea that the chief reason for the want of interest in missions is ignorance. He, therefore, proposed the scattering broadcast of The Missionary Herald. At that time its circulation was 6000 a month; now it is 38,000. Three years ago he made a calculation that £6000 had been received in that one year as the direct result of reading The Herald.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Over fifty members have recently been added to Crouch-hill Church (Rev. J. B. Meharry's).

Dr. Saphir's old congregation at Belgrave have unanimously decided to call Rev. J. E. Somerville, a son of Dr. A. N. Somerville, of Glasgow, to the pastorate.

Mr. J. T. Morton's latest offer is to support missionaries in connection with the Presbyterian Church of Canada. He has thus entered into similar undertakings with the Free and United Presbyterian Churches in Scotland, the English Presbyterian Church, the Irish Church, two Presbyterian Churches of America, and the Canadian Church.

The lady missionaries of the English and American Presbyterian Churches in Amoy have recently started a "Home" for destitute Chinese girls, who have been found deserted in the streets, or those who are being sold to beggars or disposed of for immoral purposes. The Chinese have contributed generously towards the support of the Home, which it is proposed to keep unconnected with any mission.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Elwood Scott expects to return to America about the middle of this month. He has rendered excellent service to Friends in England, and carries home with him their best wishes.

Five of the American yearly meetings have "adopted" or "accepted" the "Confession of Faith." If the thousands of adult scholars attending Friends' Schools were members, The Christian Worker thinks English Friends would be obliged to adopt a similar course. The other five American yearly meetings may be influenced by London and Dublin.

The Venerable Eli Jones, of Maine, a devoted minister among Friends, has been elected Major-General in the Maine Militia. In acknowledging the compliment, he said: "If he was in fact an exponent of the views of the Legislature on that subject, he would cheerfully undertake to serve the State in the capacity indicated. He would submit this suggestion in all candour. It was generally understood that he entertained peculiar views in respect to the policy of war; with much pleasure would he stand before the Militia of the Second Division and give such orders as he thought best. The first would be to 'Ground arms;' the second would be, 'Right about face; beat your swords into ploughshares, and your spears into pruning hooks, and learn war no more.'" He would then dismiss every man with an admonition to read daily his New Testament, and ponder on the tidings, "Peace on earth, goodwill to men."

METHODIST.

The announcement that Dr. J. M. Thoburn had been elected Methodist Bishop of India was hailed with joy in that country, both in his own and other communions.

Rev. Thomas Champness, in addition to a horse and van which he has long used in his Mission, and a bicycle for one of his colporteurs, has just added a tent to his plant, which he proposes to use for evangelistic services.

Nearly half of the entire working ministry of the Methodist New Connexion have joined an Evangelistic Union of ministers formed in the Connexion. Conventions which have been held have been the means of quickening spiritual life in several districts.

Rev. T. Tapley Short makes an earnest appeal on behalf of the Queen's College (Wesleyan), Taunton. £5000 is needed to put it upon a secure footing. If this is not at once forthcoming, the property will have to be sold, and will most probably be purchased by the Roman Catholics.

The work in connection with the Manchester Central Hall Mission is well sustained. Open-air services are frequently held; working men generally give the addresses, and speak with great force and fervour to their fellows. The workers are constantly cheered by numbers of conversions.

The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in New York City has adjourned, after a month's work. There has been gratifying progress during the past four years in all departments of work, and advance has been ordered all along the line. The term of itinerancy has been extended to five years, making it possible for a minister to get better acquainted with his flock and accomplishing more effective results.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Messrs. F. W. Walker and H. Dauncey, of Cheshunt College, have been ordained as missionaries to New Guinea, in connection with the London Missionary Society.

Rev. R. Cynon Lewis, late of Morriston, Swansea, commenced his ministry at Stockwell-road Church on Sunday week. Twenty-one new members were received into fellowship at the communion service.

Dr. Alex. Hannay and Mr. Henry Lee, of Manchester were to have left for Australia yesterday (Thursday). They go as the representatives of the English Congregational Union to the forthcoming centennial celebration of the Australian churches.

At a meeting held to celebrate the completion of his twenty-five years of ministry at Cambridge Heath, a warm tribute was paid to Rev. W. Marshall, for the zeal and faithfulness with which he has discharged his ministerial duties. During Mr. Marshall's pastorate 1526 persons have been received into church fellowship.

School buildings for about 700 children are about to be erected in connection with Brightside Church, Sheffield, which, under its minister, Rev. T. C. Deeming, is doing admirable work in a needy district. The present schools are filled to overflowing, and the growth of the congregation shows that the people are beginning to respond to the touch of true Christian sympathy.

Rev. J. Ossian Davies preached his farewell sermon on Sunday night at New Court Chapel, which was densely crowded, an overflow meeting being conducted by Rev. R. Balgarnie in the Lecture Hall, attended by some hundreds. Very tenderly and solemnly did Mr. Davies plead with those who had listened to his entreaties to come to Christ for five years and a half without heeding them. On Monday evening a farewell meeting was held to wish him God-speed at his new sphere at Bournemouth.

Rev. Professor Elmslie, D.D., of the London Presbyterian College, has been invited to preach the annual sermon for the Congregational Union, which holds its autumnal session in Nottingham, and has accepted the invitation. This is the first time this honour has been paid to a minister of the Presbyterian Church. The invitation was most cordially given by the Committee, and was tendered not only as a mark of goodwill to Dr. Elmslie, but of desire that the relations between the Congregational and Presbyterian Churches should be maintained with increasing amity.

The anniversary of Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, was celebrated last week. The pastor (Rev. Newman Hall) stated that that was the fifty-third anniversary of his beginning to preach, the forty-sixth of his being a pastor, and the thirty-fifth of his ministry in that church. The church numbers 950 members. There are in the various Sunday-schools attached about 5000 children. The agencies at work are numerous; 150 outdoor and 350 indoor services were held during the year, and 1000 visitors are engaged in the various societies, all of which, as well as the day school and almshouses, are well sustained. More helpers are needed.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Successful temperance meetings have recently been held in the Methodist Churches at Kilrush and Mallow.

A collection of books of great rarity and value has been presented to the Presbyterian College, Belfast, by Sir Thomas McClure, Bart.

Over a hundred Methodist ministers in Ireland change circuits this week, and enter on new fields of labour; all these are hopeful that the coming year will be one rich in spiritual power, and in the salvation of many.

The Belfast Female Mission is doing a good work. During the past month the missionaries have visited about 1500 persons in their homes, held over 100 prayer-meetings and Bible-classes, and gave temporal relief to fifty-six poor people.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. James W. Burrough, for over fifty years vicar of Totnes, Devon, a warm evangelical clergyman and a faithful preacher of the Gospel.—Mr. James M'Corkell, an old and honoured citizen of Londonderry, who was for ever busy labouring to extend his Redeemer's kingdom.—Rev. Thomas Fulcher, an earnest Protestant pastor for sixty-four years, first as curate, and afterwards as vicar of Old Buckenham, Norfolk.—Rev. John W. Dickinson, a missionary of the Church Missionary Society, after three years service at Lagos, West Africa. —Rev. J. C. Robinson, for twenty-two years pastor of the Baptist Church, at Brington, Northamptonshire.—At Dublin, Jane Hester, widow of the late Rev. John Frazer Mathews, Methodist minister, and for several years secretary of the Irish Conference.—Rev. Alex. Henderson, pastor of the East United Presbyterian Church, Perth.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. George King, during the last few weeks, has been holding evangelistic services at Lewisham, Blackheath, and Bristol, and at Weston-super-Mare, with Rev. Walter Bradbury. The Gospel of the grace of God has been proclaimed in its fulness, and blessing has attended all the meetings.

Burslem.—Mr. J. J. Browne, city missionary of South Norwood, has for the eighth year visited the "mother" town of the Staffordshire Potteries, at the invitation of Rev. Malcolm Graham, vicar of St. Paul's. During three days, in the festival known as the "Wakes," Mr. Brown held eight meetings, and the Gospel was listened to with great attention.

Richard Weaver.—Dr. Cranage, of Wellington, Salop, writes:—We have again been favoured with the services of God's much-honoured servant, Richard Weaver. He preached in the New Hall three Sundays, and several week days, with much unction of the Holy Spirit. Believers have been quickened, backsliders reclaimed, and a goodly number led to believe on, and find peace in, the Lord Jesus Christ. We praise God for the season of refreshing from his presence, granted us through the ministry of his dear servant.

Mr. Henry Varley gave two addresses on Sunday last, on the Common, Tunbridge Wells. In the afternoon there could scarcely have been less than four thousand persons present. As the preacher spoke from "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ," there was a very silent attention among the vast crowd, which comprised all social classes. Rev. William Guest assisted. Even larger, as it seemed, was the assembly at 8.15, at the close of the church and chapel services, and most impressive was the sight of the eager, waiting multitude in the clear, beautiful twilight of a summer evening. Many ladies and gentlemen of the town formed a choir to sing from "Sacred Songs and Solos."

Mr. E. P. Telford completed a month's mission in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile-end. Mr. Telford is a great favourite at the Hall, having held a month's services in it every year during the last twelve years. The attendance at the meetings during this visit have been above the average, and men and women have nightly found their way into the inquiry-room to be dealt with about their eternal welfare. Mrs. Telford has added her influence to the meetings by singing solos. The evangelists have now left with the hearty good wishes and prayers of the friends at the Mile-end for their future efforts in the Lord's work. After finishing their present engagements in England and Scotland, their intention is to return to America by way of Canada.

Ventnor, I.W.—The new Albert Hall has been secured for a twelvemonth, and is now opened on Sunday evenings for evangelistic services, in connection with "The Cow Cross Mission," London. The co-operation of evangelists visiting the island will be welcomed.

WILLIAM CATLIN.

17, Claremont-square, Pentonville, N.

THE FAR NORTH-WEST.—News has arrived from Rev. John W. Tims, C.M.S. missionary at Blackfoot Crossing, Saskatchewan, that after long patience the firstfruits of his labours have been gathered in. Mr. Tims has been steadily and devotedly toiling on since 1883 without any apparent results, the Indians, with few exceptions, having appeared to receive the proclamation of the Gospel with a stolid indifference, almost always saying at the close of the service, after being entreated to turn from the error of their ways, that they prayed as their fathers taught them, and that they were quite satisfied with their present religion and needed no change. Mr. Tims has prepared a dictionary and grammar of the local dialect, which will be philologically of great service, since the language is dying out, although there are still two or three thousand Blackfoot Indians.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

The open-air Sunday temperance meetings on Glasgow Green are largely attended. Tracts are freely distributed and willingly received.

In The Band of Hope Chronicle Rev. J. Storer Clarke, M.A., gives an interesting account of how he and his churchwardens came to use only unfermented wine at the Sacrament.

The annual fête of the Hibernian Band of Hope Union was held on Friday week at Ball's Bridge, Dublin. About 15,000 people were present. The prizes were distributed by Mrs. Whigham.

The annual conference of the British Temperance League has been held at Leeds. The proceedings were earnest and interesting. Mr. Stevenson's Sunday Closing Bill was specially commended to general support.

The Government having promised to give facilities for "Sale of Intoxicating Liquor on Sunday" Bill being fairly discussed, electors are asked to communicate with their representatives in Parliament, urging them to give Mr. Stevenson's Bill unflinching and constant support.

FOREIGN.

In Hungary there is said to be a great increase in the consumption of intoxicants.

An annual simultaneous temperance Sunday is proposed for all the Australian colonies.

The Indian Temperance Association founded at Bombay last year is making most encouraging progress.

In Russia the "Society of Temperate" has been formed, the members being total abstainers and active temperance workers. Count Tolstoï is president.

Last year no fewer than 22,000 drunkards were brought up at the police-courts of New South Wales. Out of these 6000 were unable to pay the fine imposed on them, and had to be sent to prison.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

THE NORWEGIAN DIET has granted a sum of about £200 towards the expenses in connection with the International Temperance Conference to be held in the Norwegian capital next year.

THE CONGO.—M. de Brazza is about to return to the Congo. He is negotiating the creation of a maritime service between Havre, Bordeaux, and Marseilles to the Congo, which he thinks will considerably extend traffic and commerce.

PROHIBITION LEAGUES are formed very rapidly around in the Scandinavian countries. The Norwegians especially are taking the matter up with enthusiasm. The temperance vote is fast becoming an important factor of a formidable character.

THE OPIUM CURSE IN THE SOUTH SEAS.—According to the report of the British Consul in Tahiti for the past year, attention has been drawn to the effects of the consumption of opium in the Archipelago, and appeals have been made to the Administration to take steps to prevent its sale. In the Marquesas, where the use of the drug is considerable among the natives, especially the women, they are rapidly diminishing in numbers, and it is feared that the result will be the same in Tahiti. The police have received stringent orders in consequence to prevent the Chinese from disposing of the drug to the natives. The cost of opium in San Francisco is about 16s. per lb.; in Tahiti it is sold for over £5!

Bethlehem.—Miss Edwards, Hardingham Lodge, Attleborough, makes an earnest appeal on behalf of a Girls' School and Orphanage being erected there in connection with the Society for Female Education in the East. A new building is absolutely essential for the growth of the work. Help may be sent to Miss Edwards; or to Miss Webb, 267, Vauxhall Bridge-road, S.W.

THE LIFE AND CONVERSION OF

CORNELIUS CAYLEY,

Clerk 140 years ago to the Princess Dowager of Wales's Treasury. Edited by J. P. WILSON, Author of "Scriptural Proofs of Full Salvation from Sin."

Extract from a letter from one well known in the churches as for upwards of forty years teaching very successfully by word and pen, and illustrating very beautifully in daily walk, the "Higher Christian Life."

"What a charming book 'Cornelius Cayley' is! What lessons of deep Teaching it has! I read it all the way home on Saturday and to ——. It is the book of all others I have ever seen, except the Word itself, for helping the sanctified Christian. I shall keep my copy going. I thank you for bringing me in contact with it. I see the greatest difficulty with those who know Jesus as their Saviour from Sin, in stopping at the experience they have at first, instead of going on into the deeper union. And, therefore, they have an up and down life in this life of full consecration."

May be obtained through any bookseller; or, in case of difficulty, by writing, with postal order for 2s., to J. P. WILSON, 88, North Side, Wandsworth Common, London, S.W.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Monday, July 9, 1888.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

The open-air Sunday temperance meetings on Glasgow Green are largely attended. Tracts are freely distributed and willingly received.

In The Band of Hope Chronicle Rev. J. Storer Clarke, M.A., gives an interesting account of how he and his churchwardens came to use only unfermented wine at the Sacrament.

The annual fête of the Hibernian Band of Hope Union was held on Friday week at Ball's Bridge, Dublin. About 15,000 people were present. The prizes were distributed by Mrs. Whigham.

The annual conference of the British Temperance League has been held at Leeds. The proceedings were earnest and interesting. Mr. Stevenson's Sunday Closing Bill was specially commended to general support.

The Government having promised to give facilities for "Sale of Intoxicating Liquor on Sunday" Bill being fairly discussed, electors are asked to communicate with their representatives in Parliament, urging them to give Mr. Stevenson's Bill unflinching and constant support.

FOREIGN.

In Hungary there is said to be a great increase in the consumption of intoxicants.

An annual simultaneous temperance Sunday is proposed for all the Australian colonies.

The Indian Temperance Association founded at Bombay last year is making most encouraging progress.

In Russia the "Society of Temperate" has been formed, the members being total abstainers and active temperance workers. Count Tolstoï is president.

Last year no fewer than 22,000 drunkards were brought up at the police-courts of New South Wales. Out of these 6000 were unable to pay the fine imposed on them, and had to be sent to prison.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

THE NORWEGIAN DIET has granted a sum of about £200 towards the expenses in connection with the International Temperance Conference to be held in the Norwegian capital next year.

THE CONGO.—M. de Brazza is about to return to the Congo. He is negotiating the creation of a maritime service between Havre, Bordeaux, and Marseilles to the Congo, which he thinks will considerably extend traffic and commerce.

PROHIBITION LEAGUES are formed very rapidly around in the Scandinavian countries. The Norwegians especially are taking the matter up with enthusiasm. The temperance vote is fast becoming an important factor of a formidable character.

THE OPIUM CURSE IN THE SOUTH SEAS.—According to the report of the British Consul in Tahiti for the past year, attention has been drawn to the effects of the consumption of opium in the Archipelago, and appeals have been made to the Administration to take steps to prevent its sale. In the Marquesas, where the use of the drug is considerable among the natives, especially the women, they are rapidly diminishing in numbers, and it is feared that the result will be the same in Tahiti. The police have received stringent orders in consequence to prevent the Chinese from disposing of the drug to the natives. The cost of opium in San Francisco is about 16s. per lb.; in Tahiti it is sold for over £5!

Bethlehem.—Miss EDWARDS, Hardingham Lodge, Attleborough, makes an earnest appeal on behalf of a Girls' School and Orphanage being erected there in connection with the Society for Female Education in the East. A new building is absolutely essential for the growth of the work. Help may be sent to Miss EDWARDS; or to Miss WEBB, 267, Vauxhall Bridge-road, S.W.

THE LIFE AND CONVERSION OF

CORNELIUS CAYLEY,

Clerk 140 years ago to the Princess Dowager of Wales's Treasury. Edited by J. P. WILSON, Author of "Scriptural Proofs of Full Salvation from Sin."

Extract from a letter from one well known in the churches as for upwards of forty years teaching very successfully by word and pen, and illustrating very beautifully in daily walk, the "Higher Christian Life."

"What a charming book 'Cornelius Cayley' is! What lessons of deep Teaching it has! I read it all the way home on Saturday and to ——. It is the book of all others I have ever seen, except the Word itself, for helping the sanctified Christian. I shall keep my copy going. I thank you for bringing me in contact with it. I see the greatest difficulty with those who know Jesus as their Saviour from Sin, in stopping at the experience they have at first, instead of going on into the deeper union. And, therefore, they have an up and down life in this life of full consecration."

May be obtained through any bookseller; or, in case of difficulty, by writing, with postal order for 2s., to J. P. WILSON, 88, North Side, Wandsworth Common, London, S.W.

REV. DONALD FRASER, D.D.,

Marylebone Presbyterian Church, London.

AMONG the many striking figures that were seen on the Exeter Hall platform during the meetings of the recent Pan-Presbyterian Council, few were more calculated to arrest the attention of the stranger than that of the West-end pastor whose portrait graces this page. For more than eighteen years Dr. DONALD FRASER has ministered with much acceptance to a large, well-to-do congregation at the church in Upper George-street, Marylebone, W., and has justly been regarded as one of the leaders of the Presbyterian body in London. The Presbyterian system has made wonderfully rapid strides in the Metropolis during the period covered by Dr. Fraser's pastorate, and its growth has been fostered to no small extent by his popularity as a powerful preacher of the old Gospel, and a platform speaker of the first rank.

Like the majority of the London ministers attached to the same religious community, Dr. Fraser hails from north of the Tweed. He was born in the beautiful capital of the Highlands in 1826. Common report hath it that, if one wants to take, at first hand, a draught from "the well of English undefiled," he must go either to Dublin or to Inverness. Whether or not his early associations moulded the manner of his utterance, the fact remains that Dr. Fraser is one of the very few Scotchmen who have attained to oratorical eminence, whose speech does not bewray them. The other day the Lord Chief Justice of England referred to "the graces of speech and even of elocution" as material elements of successful advocacy in courts of justice. If the subject of this sketch had elected to expound the law instead of the Gospel, it is a moral certainty that he would have been no mean getter of verdicts.

Dr. Fraser received an ample education, first by private tutors, then at Aberdeen University, where he took high honours; next (owing to family circumstances) at Knox College, Toronto; and finally at New College, Edinburgh. We suppose it was not so much the fashion in those days to include a visit to a German university in the curriculum of the Divinity student. It may be due to that fact that Dr. Fraser, though by no means a theologian of the "hard shell" order, has never shown any traces in his public teaching of the dry rot of rationalism. He is evangelical to a degree. We presume he would rank himself among the disciples of Calvin, but his interpretation of revealed truth, as viewed from the Divine side, is reverent and cautious, as well befitteth all who accept the dictum of a greater even than Calvin, that as yet we "know in part, and prophesy in part.'

(From Copyright Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry.)

In 1851 he was duly "licensed to preach," but before then his gifts of attractive and effective public address had been recognised, and he had received various prospective calls to the pastorate. He accepted that of the church worshipping at Cote-street, Montreal. During the eight years of his ministry there he proved himself an active and able servant of Jesus Christ and of the churches, being in constant request both for pulpit and platform work. For several years he successfully filled the office of clerk to the Montreal Presbytery. Meantime his fame had reached the land and the place of his nativity. He was induced to recross the Atlantic, and take the spiritual oversight of the flock gathered into the Free High Church in Inverness, a building which we believe stands almost on the spot where he first saw the light. The compiler of these notes can vouch, from personal knowledge, for the high quality and the widespread influence of the gifted preacher's eleven years' ministry in his native town. Dr. Fraser (he was plain "Mr." then, for it was not till his advent to London that Aberdeen University dubbed him D.D.) drew around him a large and intelligent congregation; and the teaching they received was of the most inspiring and fruitful kind. A congregational mission was planted, and heartily sustained in one of the poorer parts of the town. In due course it became strong enough to stand alone, and the Free High Mission has for many years been the Free West Church of Inverness. Dr. Fraser attracted large numbers of young people to his living and rousing ministry, by which they were thrust forth and directed into varied paths of Christian service. Some of his predecessors in the Free High Church had been men of mark, and it is not too much to say that he fully maintained the prestige of the church in all matters bearing on the highest life of the community. Every special movement for the promotion of spiritual revival in the North of Scotland had his heartiest sympathy and unstinted personal aid; and that at a time when Highland ministers generally, even in the Free Church, were far less friendly to what they were pleased to call "irregular" effort than they happily are to-day. We well recollect that the first time we saw and heard the far-famed Inverness pastor was as a speaker at one of those memorable gatherings near Huntly, associated so closely with the names of the Duchess of Gordon, Brownlow North, Duncan Matheson, John Murker, and others whose faithful service has long since been rewarded with the rest of Paradise.

At length, in 1870, Dr. Fraser succumbed to that mysterious influence which London exercises over so many of his hard-headed countrymen. Rev. W. Chalmers, minister of the Marylebone Church, had been appointed Professor in the Presbyterian College in Queen-square, and the congregation were set on having Dr. Fraser for his successor. Ultimately they had their way, and Inverness's loss was London's gain. In the northern capital, and even in the northern counties, he had in our judgment no pulpit compeer. In the capital of the world, with its wealth of intellectual talent and spiritual force, it is by no means easy to take rank as a leader among preachers and those who otherwise direct the loftiest thinking and best acting of the generation. From the beginning of his London career, Dr. Fraser took such a position, and has consistently maintained it these eighteen years and more. His strictly congregational work has been characterised by the same vitalising power as at Inverness. Under his oversight the church has not been content to be fed with the fine wheat, and the beaten oil of the sanctuary, but has expended its energy in many and practical ways. A flourishing mission has for years been sustained in Bell-street, Edgware-road, and the activities of the congregation have taken multiplied forms. The church building in Upper George-street has greatly enlarged; it is now reputed to be the most capacious structure connected with the Presbyterian body in England, and to constitute a home for the largest membership.

Dr. Fraser's gifts have received due recognition among his brethren, and he is a familiar figure in the Church Courts that periodically legislate in matters spiritual and ecclesiastical for the denomination. He has filled the highest post of honour, as Moderator of the English Presbyterian church parliament, and is an active honorary official both in Presbytery and Synod. Calls come to him from many parts of the country to preach at the opening of new churches—a tribute to his excellence as a popular expounder of the faith.

Foreign residence and travel are a sure antidote to sectional or provincial narrowness of feeling and sympathy. In Dr. Fraser's case these have aided the natural bent of his mind, and made him a cosmopolitan. There is no idea against which he more strenuously protests than the loose but commonly held opinion that Presbyterianism is a product indigenous only to Scottish soil. His relations with other sections of the Christian Church are of the most cordial and brotherly sort. At the same time we believe we do not misrepresent him by saying that, with respect to questions of Church order and inter-relation, as well as some great social movements, he is probably more conservative than most of his fellow Presbyters. As we understand his position, he upholds in theory the principle of an organic connection between Church and State, and in this respect he is at variance with the great majority of office holders in his mother Church. For a time he conducted The Outlook, then the weekly organ of English Presbyterianism, but the experiment was not a long lived one. It was no discredit to him to fail in combining the exigeant duties of a newspaper editor with the constant demands of a large London pastorate—a task, of the accomplishment of which, we believe history has yet to record a successful instance.

Dr. Fraser's voice was heard on several occasions at the recent world-wide Council in Exeter Hall, and always to profit. It was a noteworthy indication of his special proclivities that to him was entrusted the moving of a resolution, at the final business sitting, expressive of fraternal interest in the proceedings of the Pan-Anglican Synod. The words in which he supported the proposal were those of Christian statesmanship:—

> Presbyterians were now probably more resolute than ever against sacerdotalism and sacramentalism, but they did not want to quarrel over questions of Church government. They were willing to recognise the great value of the great Anglican Christian scholarship, and those elements of Christian thought, life, and devotion which the Church of England so successfully represented. Presbyterians claimed to have an Episcopal Church, and the difference between them was not in episcopacy, but in prelacy. Presbyterians valued order, while they also valued liberty. Why did not they shake hands with their Anglican brethren? Why those distant salutations, those closed doors, and peeping from behind one another out of shutters or windows, instead of meeting honestly and frankly upon the ground of common Christian labour? Why should they not live and work together in peace, working alongside one another with mutual respect, and Christian confidence and affection?

Almost every veteran Gospel minister of modern times is also an author, and Dr. Fraser is no exception. His books, however, have gone to the publisher by the way of the pulpit; that is to say, they are the fruit of his best and most consecutive expository preaching. His chief works are: "Synoptical Lectures on the Books of Holy Scripture," "Metaphors in the Gospels," and the "Speeches of the Holy Apostles." These volumes will be found to be a fair reflex of a fresh, well-informed, and Spirit-inspired ministry.

A PRESBYTERIAN SERVICE has been commenced this season at Grindelwald, Suisse. Messrs. Boss have given a room for the services in the new building of the Bear Hotel. Rev. Alex. Sutherland is the minister for this summer.

Priesthood: False and True.

We very much agree with our correspondent (p. 21) who deprecates the prosecution of the Bishop of Lincoln. This would naturally cause a stream of sympathy to flow towards him not only from extreme Ritualists, but from others also. A prosecuted man under such circumstances is regarded as a persecuted man. And even though deprivation should follow (which is highly improbable) the moral effect would rather be in favour of than against the sufferer. For here also the principle applies, "The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the Church."

Dr. King may be all our correspondent describes: but he, and all who claim to be priests, we would rather think ignorantly than wilfully, pervert the Gospel. They claim to be priests on earth after the old and vanished Aaronic pattern, which has been superseded by the untransferable and heavenly priesthood of Jesus the Son of God, declared in resurrection a Priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek.

The prosecution of Dr. King will not "ring out the old," much less "ring in the new." It will not enlighten professedly evangelical Christians as to the priesthood of Jesus Christ, of which the great majority of them are profoundly uninformed.

We have heard of late years, thanks be to God, much true teaching and exhortation as to sanctification in all the detail of life, illustrated sometimes by reference to Zechariah's prophecy that "'Holiness to the Lord' shall be upon the bells of the horses, and the pots in the Lord's house shall be like the bowls before the altar." But how seldom is this connected with the High Priest upon whose forehead was worn the plate of pure gold engraved with "Holiness to the Lord."

How few trembling saints are comforted by the reminder that the High Priest bare upon his shoulders, for security, all the names of the children of Israel according to their birth. How seldom are faithful ones encouraged, and presumptuous ones rebuked, by being shown that on the breastplate are presented before the Shekinah-glory the same names, for recognition and complacency, not according to their birth but according to their tribes. For Reuben, the firstborn, the beginning of strength, the excellency of dignity and the excellency of power, unstable as water, has not excelled, but has lost his priority; his birthright has been given to the sons of Joseph; and of Judah has come the chief Ruler.

The precious truth that the High Priest of his people is able to save to the uttermost from the minutest sin, those who come unto God by Him, because He ever liveth to make intercession for them, is turned from its proper mark, and permitted to be taken possession of by the evangelist, to show that He is able to save the wickedest sinner from the grossest crimes.

Jesus was the faithful and true Witness in the days of his flesh; He is now the First-begotten from the dead, constituted High Priest by Him who said, "Thou art my Son this day have I begotten Thee"; He will be manifested as the Prince of the kings of the earth. That is, He has been Prophet, He is Priest, He will be King. But of his present office of Priest how little is known or taught. If any of our readers can remember his having so been mentioned a dozen times in any pulpit during the past year, we fear they will be the exceptions which prove the rule.

A priest and a confessional are essential needs of the human soul. In the patriarchal age, the father was the priest, of which we have a signal instance in Job. Israel, but for their disobedience, would have been a kingdom of priests amid the surrounding nations (Exod. xix. 6); as it was, Levi became the priestly tribe; and the nation yet shall be the priests of the Lord to the far-off lands (Isa. lxi. 6; lxvi. 19). But now, we have a Great Priest over the house of God, of whose beneficent and ceaseless ministry, the special provision of our God and Father for our present need, our teachers teach us next to nothing. It is vainly, hoped by the prosecution of Bishop King, to stamp out the counterfeit of the ministry of our Great High Priest, who has passed through the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, and whose confessional is in the temple not made with hands, into which we enter by the new and living Way.

We earnestly hope that this useless prosecution will be given up, and that all evangelical Christians will set themselves to study and to teach the Melchizedek Priesthood of Jesus Christ, King of Righteousness and King of Peace. M.

AGED PILGRIMS.

To help, cheer, and comfort the Lord's aged poor in their declining years is truly a blessed service. Such is the object of the Aged Pilgrims' Asylum, Hazelville-road, Hornsey-rise, N., the seventeenth annual meeting of which was recently held. The building provides accommodation for 120 inmates, and is at present quite full. The oldest resident is 92 and the youngest 63; seven are men, and there are three married couples. One aged couple have been married fifty-eight years; several have formerly occupied positions of comparative affluence, and the life-story of many is full of the deepest interest and encouragement to those who are fellow-travellers to "a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." An infirmary and a chapel are attached to the building; the former is found to be a great boon to sick and infirm inmates. In the chapel services are regularly held; there is no permanent chaplain, but ministers of various denominations give their assistance gratuitously. The Asylum is open for inspection daily (Sundays excepted), and friends are invited to see the arrangements for themselves. A sight of the building will be its own best plea for support.

Sympathetic addresses were delivered at the seventeenth annual meeting by Mr. F. A. Bevan, who presided, Rev. James Ormiston, of Clifton; Rev. W. L. Holland, of Hatcham; Rev. W. J. Styles, of Islington; Rev. E. Doveton, of Holloway, and others.

THE SLAVE TRADE.—At a joint meeting of the committees of the Anti-Slavery and Aborigines' Protection Societies, it was decided, in view of the increased work lately thrown upon the Anti-Slavery Society by the extraordinary development of the slave trade in Africa, that the work of the two societies could be better carried on separately, as before.

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.—On Saturday last in St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, the Duchess of Albany distributed the prizes gained in the annual essay competition of the Society for the Prevention or Cruelty to Animals. The essays sent in numbered 36,000, which was about 10,000 more than last year. The judges were unanimous in their conclusion that the essays written in elementary schools were superior in matter, composition, and arrangement to those written in superior schools. The prizes were nearly seven hundred in number, and consisted of books, the special prizes being, in many cases, whole sets of authors' works. Those candidates from the various schools, who stood second in the lists, received their prizes and certificates from the hands of the Baroness Burdett-Coutts. At the annual meeting of the Society, held on the same day, Lord Aberdare presiding, it was stated that during 1887, no fewer than 4959 convictions for cruelty were obtained, being 749 more than in the previous year.

Dr. Marcus Dods on Scepticism.

The papers, addresses, and discussions in connection with the Pan-Presbyterian Council have in the main been helpful for the present, and hopeful for the future. The wisdom of the Committee, however, in delegating to Dr. Marcus Dods the preparation of a reply to the question, "How far is the Church responsible for present Scepticism?" may well be doubted. The treatment of such a theme should surely have come from a representative man, who could be relied upon to express the views generally held by the Presbyterian bodies. But the Committee must have known beforehand that Dr. Dods was not able to do so, and, if this were doubtful before, it was abundantly proved by the accumulated protests from Dr. John Orr, Dr. Pettigrew, Dr. Craven, Principal Cavan, Dr. Watts, Rev. John McEwan, Rev. J. Lynd, Rev. George Smith, Dr. Bannerman, Principal Douglas, Dr. Hall, and Dr. Murkland, leading men in Great Britain and Ireland, the United States and Canada. Principal Douglas plainly said that the Committee was to be blamed for committing a paper on such a subject into the hands of Dr. Marcus Dods.

It is, therefore, not quite candid of The Christian World to say:—

> It is pleasant to note the sympathy with which Dr. Dods's paper has been evidently received by the great Church to which he belongs....His paper, therefore, stands, as for the present, the voice of the Council and of enlightened Presbyterianism.

At all events, either Presbyterianism must show itself free of such complicity with error, or be content to slide down the Down-Grade into oblivion. To be applauded on account of its doctrine by The Christian World is about as equivocal a position as an evangelical body can well occupy.

Before pointing out any of the errors in a document, it is but fair, not to say gracious, to recognise what is true. We frankly confess that there is much truth in the following charge:—

> It is the unbelief within the Church that is mainly responsible for the unbelief outside. Were the supreme living power of Christ manifested in the life of his people, it would be as impossible for men to deny Christ's power as it is to deny the power of the sun or the tides. Sceptics are made chiefly by the worldliness and unreformed, poor lives of professed believers. Men acknowledge success, but despise whatever makes loud professions and does little. Therefore it is that religion is despised. This also it is that makes Christians shame-faced about religion, for there is a latent consciousness that it has not proved itself "mighty to the pulling down of strongholds."

It is the old complaint of Joel, "Why should they say among the heathen, 'Where is their God?'" Were the supreme living power of Christ manifested in the life of his people, we might incur their hatred, but not their contempt. They would either gnash upon us with their teeth, or they would cry, "Sirs, what must we do to be saved?" "In those days ten men shall take hold out of all languages of the nations, even shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, We will go with you: for we have heard that God is with you."

But does Dr. Dods in any wise help us toward this better state? On the contrary, all his counsels tend to weaken and paralyse our spiritual life. Instead of recalling us to forgotten or neglected truths, he would have us neglect them more. In times of declension in Israel God invariably rebuked them for forgetting and forsaking Him; for example, He complains by Jeremiah, "My people have committed two evils: they have forsaken Me, the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water." To backsliding Israel and treacherous Judah, He appeals again and again to turn and return. So far from finding out new ways the counsel is, "Go thy way forth by the footsteps of the flock, and feed thy kids beside the shepherds' tents." So speaks Solomon, and Jeremiah follows in the same tone: "Stand ye in the ways and see, and ask for the old paths and walk therein; and ye shall find rest for your souls."

So, likewise, the churches of the New Testament are not taught to depreciate old paths, or to seek for new ones. The first backsliding step is, "Thou hast left thy first love." Doctrines of Balaam and Jezebel follow; and the constant appeal to the churches is, "Repent, and do the first works." "Hold that fast which thou hast." "Be watchful and strengthen the things which remain." If one is tried, the exhortation is, "Be thou faithful unto death." If another is praised, it is because "Thou hast kept my word, and not denied my name." If the Apostle foretells the evils of the latter times, they are summed up in this, that "some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of demons." And if more definitely the perilous times of the last days are specified, the cause of all the boasting, covetousness, pride, blasphemy, disobedience, incontinence, is linked with this—"ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth."

Let anyone compare Dr. Dods's indictment against the churches, with the above and other exhortations, warnings, and rebukes, of the holy and inspired men who wrote the Scriptures, and say whether he is in line with the Prophets and Apostles, and with the Spirit writing to the churches, or in line with those whom they exhort, rebuke, and warn, as "ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth."

Dr. Dods says that by men of culture and knowledge,

> The Christian is represented as an obscurantist, afraid of light, and capable of swallowing the grossest absurdities; as a selfish, small-souled creature, whose object it is to save his own soul, and whose idea of saving his soul is escaping from punishment in a future life. For such misrepresentations the Church is responsible, in so far as it has not produced a type of Christianity which would make these misconceptions impossible; and in so far as it has allowed faith in Christ to become identified in the popular mind with faith in a number of doctrines regarding Christ, and has thus made faith needlessly difficult, and to many minds repellent and impossible.

This is his first charge. The second is that

> The Church is responsible for present scepticism by producing the impression that the Bible must either be accepted as throughout infallible or not at all.

Another charge is that—

> Thousands believe with Ingersoll, that Christianity stands or falls with the infallibility of the Old Testament; and the Church itself has no formulated doctrine of revelation, its methods and its progress, which accounts for the mistakes and the immoralities of the Old Testament on a principle which satisfies the thinking man.

In connection with his first charge, Dr. Dods declares that—

> What Christ required was that men should follow Him. He did not require them to accept a number of propositions about Him, but to prove their belief in Him by accepting Him as the true Ruler of their life.

When Jesus appeared He came to Israel

as their foretold Messiah. "Jesus Christ and Him crucified," "Jesus and the resurrection," was an impossible Gospel then. Yet He told his followers, "I have many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now." "When He, the Spirit of truth is come He will guide you into all truth." Before He suffered, He opened their understandings to understand what was written in the Scriptures concerning Himself. Then He was crucified, and God raised Him from the dead. The Spirit was poured out, and the Apostles so preached that thousands believed and were baptized, and "continued in the Apostles' doctrine and fellowship, in the breaking of bread and in prayers." But now we are counselled to go back behind Pentecost, and the resurrection, and the crucifixion. In contrast with this, the Apostle of the Gentiles declares that the Gospel which he preached at Corinth (where he abode eighteen months, because God had much people there), "which they received, wherein they stood, by which also they were saved," was this—

> For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that He was buried, and that He rose again the third day according to the Scriptures.

Here, on the other hand, is the Gospel according to Dr. Dods' conception of it:—

> Even though a man does not see his way to follow with us, yet if he shows that to him Christ is the highest authority, his true guide in all moral and spiritual matters, that man is a Christian, and whatever increase in his knowledge may be desirable, that increase will be reached as he follows Christ in his life. By confounding faith in Christ with faith in Scripture, or faith in a certain theory of the Atonement, or in this or that doctrine, and by giving the impression that without accepting these doctrines a man cannot accept Christ and be a zealous Christian, the Church not only needlessly increases the difficulties of faith, and so produces sceptics, but also leads men to misapprehend the real point at issue between faith and scepticism. The differentia of the Christian, that which distinguishes Christian faith from every other form of opinion or belief, is the one conviction that Jesus is at this moment conscious and tupreme. The question which separates men into the two great classes of Christians and sceptics is this: Did Christ rise from the dead? If He did, then there is a spiritual power stronger than the mightiest physical forces in nature; a spiritual power which can compel natural laws to subserve spiritual purposes. By His resurrection we are put in possession of God and immortality. But if, on the contrary, He still lies in his grave in "the lone Syrian town," if death terminated his living touch with this world, and if now He is helplessly separated from it, then the religion of the Apostles and martyrs is no more, and, for aught that Christianity can say to the contrary, Nature is God, and beyond the limits she imposes we have no outlook at all.

Here is no mention of our sins; almost a sneer at the Atonement; faith in the risen Lord Jesus, "who, when He had by Himself purged our sins sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high," is toned down to this—"that Jesus is at this moment conscious and supreme."

The fatal defect of all such teaching as that of Dr. Dods is that he does not describe man as a sinner, to be judged and saved according to the Scripture; but he sets the sinner on the judgment seat, or in the critic's chair, to judge the Scriptures, and to say how much, if any, is infallible, and how much is not.

In another passage he totally misrepresents the views of those who believe in an infallible Bible. We never heard of anyone who looked upon the Old Testament as depicting "a final stage in knowledge and righteousness," or who thought that belief in the infallibility of Scripture meant condonation of the mistakes and immoralities of Old Testament saints—if indeed that is what is meant by the loose and ambiguous expression "the mistakes and immoralities of the Old Testament."

With regard to our first quotation from Dr. Dods's paper, while we admit and deplore that "sceptics are made chiefly by the worldliness and unreformed, poor lives of professed believers," we are forced by Dr. Dods's contention to inquire whether the kind of Christian represented by him and his school have been par eminence the men who have manifested "the supreme living power of Christ in the life of his people," and who have "made it as impossible for men to deny Christ's power as it is to deny the power of the sun, or of the tides"? Are the men who repudiate "doctrines regarding Christ," and "the impression that the Bible must either be accepted as infallible throughout, or not at all"—are these the men who most of all "prove their belief in Him by accepting Him as the true Ruler of their life?" When an unhappy sceptic is gripped by the powers of the age to come, are these the men to whom he looks for "light and leading"? When he comes to die, are these the men he calls to comfort him? Or are the men to whom a convicted sinner, or a sinner face to face with death, turns for relief and instruction, those who, knowing "every man the plague of his own heart," have proved, by heart experience, that the written Word is God's own revelation of the personal Word?

Will Scotland forget Murray McCheyne and William Burns for Robertson Smith and Marcus Dods? Will lifeless, soulless eulogies of doubt repeat the hallowed days of Dundee and Kilsyth?

We have indeed come to a serious crisis in Christianity when the chief organ of one of the largest Nonconformist bodies has all to praise, and not a word to regret, in this manifesto of Dr. Marcus Dods. The Nonconformist and Independent approvingly quotes Dr. Dods when he says that Christ > did not require them to accept a number of propositions about Him, but to prove their belief in Him by accepting Him as the true Ruler of their life. We have no right to ask more. We have no right to put bars on the door which He did not put.

The writer then seems to commend a subscription to the Westminster Standards with reservation, in a way which would appear almost Jesuitical. He says:—

> The least we can infer from this is that Dr. Marcus Dods would have the Westminster Standards subscribed by ministers and elders only in such sense and with such reservation as might enable all who accept Christ as the Ruler of their life to enter the Presbyterian Church. We can only say that if this is indeed the position taken up by Presbyterians in England, we see no reason why the modus vivendi between Independents and Presbyterians, acted upon during last century, in virtue of which congregations gave calls to ministers belonging either to the one body or to the other—according to the Tooting arrangement—should not be resumed.

So that if Dr. Dods truly represents the Presbyterians, and if The Nonconformist and Independent truly represents the Independents, those two bodies are to go jauntily hand in hand, trampling on truths which all the best men of either body have held dearer than life; manufacturing Christians out of men who profess to believe that Jesus does not lie in the grave in the "lone Syrian town," but is risen from the dead, and is conscious and supreme, and is the highest authority, the true Guide in all moral and spiritual matters. The true Guide, that is, in distinction from the Holy Spirit in the Prophets and Apostles; for the Bible is not infallible, and doctrines about Christ and his Atonement (with which the Epistles abound) are useless (if not even mischievous) impedimenta.

Murray McCheyne used to say that "Only a broken-hearted sinner can receive a crucified Christ." The truth and wisdom in that one sentence pulverise the whole of Dr. Dods' fallacious argument.

THE Y.M.C.A. "WORLD'S CONFERENCE."

THERE are now nearly 4000 Young Men's Christian Associations scattered throughout the world. These are organised into an International Union, with a Central Executive Committee, consisting of a delegate from each nationality, with central offices and an International Secretary at Geneva. One of the functions of this Committee is to organise a Triennial Conference, to which the representatives of the Associations in all nations are duly invited. The last of these gatherings was held in Berlin, and received the kindly recognition of the aged Kaiser.

The next Conference in fixed for August 15 to 19, in Stockholm. The King of Sweden has, in turn, manifested much interest in the gathering so shortly to assemble in his capital city. An interesting and diversified programme has been prepared by the International Committee, the subjects being allotted to representatives of the various nationalities. Upwards of one hundred delegates from Great Britain and sixty from America have signified their intention to be present, in addition to large delegations from the Continent, and from Australia, Canada, &c.

An important feature in the Conference proceedings for British and American representatives is the journey outwards and home. Carefully prepared alternative plans have been laid before the delegates. Messrs. Cook & Sons, tourist agents, have issued a circular containing full particulars of various routes. Mr. Thomas Jameson, the enterprising secretary, lately transferred from the Bristol to the Liverpool Y.M.C.A., has gathered a considerable party, who have arranged to travel from Hull to Gothenburg, and on to Stockholm, through the Göta Canal. But the most popular project, which has secured about ninety adhesions, is a preliminary cruise amongst the Norwegian fiords and islands. The steamer Sirius leaves Leith on Friday, August 3, reaching the Norwegian coast on Saturday night, anchoring for the Sunday at Odde, at the head of the Hardanger fiord.

Day by day convenient passages are made along the coast to spots of special interest, until she disembarks her passengers on the following Saturday at Trondhjem, the most northerly European town. This arrangement allows ample time to reach the Conference at Stockholm, viâ Christiania, or by the more popular route, through the beautiful scenery of Northern Sweden, viâ Storlien, Ostersund, and Upsala. A considerable proportion of this large party hope to return by the Göta Canal, Copenhagen, Hamburg, Cologne, and Brussels.

Prayer is asked that the delegates may experience journeying mercies, and, very specially, that the Conference may redound to God's glory, and to the strengthening and extension of this vitally important work among the young men of the world.

THE CHINA INLAND MISSION.—China's Millions for July says of last year's labours: "Looking on the work of the whole year, we have to praise God for the addition of between five and six hundred members to the churches—a larger accession than we have ever yet had to report. We look for yet greater results this year. All the stations and out-stations can be better worked by our augmented numbers."

MR. MOODY'S SUMMER SCHOOL.

For the third time this "College of Colleges" has been conducted by Mr. Moody at his beautiful home in Massachusetts. Being vacation time at the Girl's Seminary, the various buildings connected with it were taken possession of by the students, while the hills about Northfield were dotted with tents, many of these being formed into line, and dubbed "Canvas Avenue." The number of students attending was a good deal in excess of last year, and everything showed a growing interest in this annual conclave of the flower of America's youth. In the absence of Mr. L. D. Wishard (who is now in Germany), his place as superintendent was taken by his co-Secretary, Mr. Ober, who made elaborate arrangements for the comfort and enjoyment of his special clients. Mr. Moody, of course, was general president of the Conference, and had gathered around him various able teachers to direct the thoughts and studies of the young men. Mornings and evenings were devoted to study, while the intervening hours were given over to varied forms of recreation or to rest The vale of Northfield looks its loveliest at this season of the year, and its beauties were enjoyed to the full.

Saturday, June 30, was the opening day, and by that time a large concourse of students had arrived, hailing from different parts of the States and from Canada. Prof. Towner led the praise at this and all the meetings of the Summer School; Mr. Sankey was also present, and occasionally delighted the boys with a solo. After the opening services, an address was given by Rev. H. Clay Trumbull, Editor of The Sunday School Times, on "Moral Colour Blindness," the text being "Take heed that the light which is in thee be not darkness." A man's natural conscience, he urged, is no sure test of moral light or darkness. Instruction in God's law must come from the outside before we can obey it. Ignorance is no excuse for violation of the law. It is a sad thing to be serving the devil conscientiously, and as ruinous as it is sad. God is the source of moral light, and every kind of teaching must be brought to his revelation in order to be tested.

Stone Hall was the scene of interesting assemblies morning, afternoon, and evening on Sunday. In the morning Mr. Moody preached on "Assurance," pressing home, with all his unique earnestness and power of illustration, the necessity of being fully persuaded of acceptance with God, in order to a happy and fruitful life. The afternoon was devoted to short addresses by college men on the growth of the students' missionary movement. Delegates from Oberlin, Cornell, Yale, Oxford, and Princeton Universities spoke. Mr. R. P. Wilder, who represented Princeton, gave a stirring talk. Full of enthusiasm for the work, fresh from the colleges and his association with J. N. Forman, who was at Northfield last year, and who is now in India, and with plenty of facts and figures, he made a strong impression upon the audience. He spoke of the money needed to support the 2500 pledged missionaries now going out, and described how Princeton had raised her ordinary subscription of $80 in two days to $1300; how the theological school was giving $850; how Union seminary, with its 133 men, gave $480 last year, and this year $1130. He further mentioned Hampden Sidney, in Virginia, whose 43 students have raised $625, and five members of the faculty pledged each $25 a year for life. He said that he had himself been sceptical of the evangelisation of the world in this generation, until he heard the strongly favourable testimony of the China missionaries. He answered the objections that the home field and the country would suffer by the facts that only 21 out of 100.000 communicants go abroad, and one man in 48 here is a preacher, lay or ordained, or a Sunday-school worker, and one in every five is a communicant. He closed with the declaration that he proposed to throw himself upon the main tract of the greatest need, and if God wished him to go anywhere else he would switch him upon a side track, but that a motionless engine couldn't be switched at all. Mr. Moody said that he hoped Mr. Wilder would be switched into the colleges and universities, so as to rouse more missionary enthusiasm, which was what the churches and educational institutions sorely needed.

In the evening there was a great gathering to hear Mr. Clay Trumbull preach on the Ten Commandments.

The need of constant enduement with power from on high is one of Mr. Moody's strong points of insistance, and on Monday morning he delivered an inspiring address on this subject to a goodly and interested company. He afterwards answered a shoal of questions sent up dealing with different aspects of the question. On the evening of the same day, Rev. G. A. Hall, of New York, gave a reading on what the Bible tells about itself, many well-known passages as to the uses of the Word of God being commented on. He counselled real study and meditation instead of cursory and surface reading. Mr. G. B. Studd, one of the British delegation, spoke briefly on the importance of having a willing heart in Christian service. A student from Siam and another from Japan followed with statements as to their respective countries. The Japan brother told of the marvellous changes taking place among his people, and asserted that if American and British churches were active enough Japan would be Christianised this century. Another rousing address, by Mr. Wilder, on the claims of India, brought the sitting to a close.

The chief speaker on the morning of Tuesday, July 3, was Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, who gave an acceptable address on Consecration. Many incidents relating to personal experience and the history of the China Inland Mission were given, showing that God invariably responds to the appeal of his fully consecrated servants, and makes provision for all their need. In the evening Dr. Trumbull took his hearers on a trip through Palestine, describing, by the aid of maps, the physical features of the land and various social customs. While speaking of Rephidim, where water was furnished to the people, he related the old rabbinical tradition that the rock which was struck followed the Israelites through their journey, and at every encampment stopped and poured out a stream for each tribe from one of its twelve mouths. This he declared to be the origin of the story of the angels troubling the pool at Bethesda, which was rejected by the revised version as unauthenticated, and it was to this which Paul referred when he said that the spiritual rock which followed Israel was Christ.

Many smaller meetings were convened in the course of the day, among them being a conference on Y.M.C.A. work, at Stone Hall, in the morning; and a gathering at Mr. Sankey's residence, in the afternoon, of volunteer workers, to whom the evangelist talked on the use of Gospel song.

July 4 is Independence Day with our American cousins all the world over. At Northfield it seems to have been ushered in and spent very sedately, compared with the lively proceedings of last year. In the afternoon a deep gloom was cast over the Conference by the accidental drowning, in the river, of Mr. C. L. Griggs, a young student from Cornell University. Every step was taken to recover the body, but it was not found till the middle of the following day. The evening meeting was altogether coloured by this unhappy event. Mr. Moody being busy with the searchers for the body, the meeting was conducted by Mr. Hudson Taylor, who spoke many words suitable to the occasion, and turned it to excellent purpose in counselling all to live so that even sudden death might not take them unawares. Another reminder of the uncertainty of sublunary things came from the death of Mr. Ober's mother, necessitating his absence for some time.

At the morning session, Professor Harper, of Yale University, delivered two able discourses. His words were crowded into one meeting, because he was compelled to leave, by another engagement. The first address was on Bible study, and was full of suggestion. He contended that much light has yet to be thrown on some parts of the sacred volume. While much has been done from age to age, there is much yet that we have to learn which intervening centuries have not given. The second discourse was on the prophecy of Amos.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. J. W. Moodie has been preaching at Cairo, Malta, and Gibraltar. The soldiers and sailors of the Mediterranean garrisons have received much blessing from the testimony.

Cradley Heath. — Messrs. Wharton and Weaver have been holding a five days' mission in this place. Each evening impressive and earnest addresses were given from the Bible van, and interesting Bible-readings every afternoon. Much Gospel literature has been circulated, and good accomplished.

Co. Derry.—A four weeks' Gospel mission has been held in a tent at Castledawson, co. Derry, by Messrs. Thompson and Nesbitt, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, with encouraging results. A good many persons have professed conversion, and Christians have been stirred up to take a more decided stand for Christ.

Peterhead.—A series of meetings, attended with much blessing is being conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Webster, in connection with Topping's Hall Mission. From the first a marked interest was observed, and many have been awakened and saved by the faithful preaching of Christ and Him crucified.
W. S.

Neasden.—In connection with the Railway Mission, a week of services have been conducted in a shed belonging to the Metropolitan Railway Company, to the men employed at their Neasden Works, by Mr. G. Hefford, of the Evangelisation Society. The meetings were held during the dinner hour; large numbers attended, and much interest was manifested.

Falmouth, Cornwall.—Three years ago a large marquee was purchased, with fittings and seating, for the purpose of preaching the Gospel to thousands who frequent the beaches here during the summer months, especially on Sabbath days The services have been attended by over 80,000 adults, and many have been brought to Christ. The marquee is now erected on Gyllingran beach, and is filled to overflowing on Sabbaths. The services are conducted by Mr. J. Lemas, town missionary, assisted by voluntary helpers. Children's services are also held.

CHRISTIAN WORK IN SALONICA.—By a letter from Rev. P. Crosbie, we learn that Salonica has for some time been a sphere of earnest Christian effort. An English service has been held regularly, and the Scottish National Bible Society has maintained colportage agencies for twenty-five years. There are three hospitals in the place—one Turkish, one Greek, and one French.

BETHEL SANTHAL MISSION.—Rev. A. Haegert writes: Twelve new village schools have been opened; four new churches were completed during the last few months. To-day we have seventeen churches in different villages, each seating 100 persons. In Bethel we have a tabernacle which seats 1000 people. Thirty-six men and women, on their profession of faith in Christ, coming from eighteen villages, have been baptized since we left Bethel.

PONTYMOILE CHRISTIAN MISSION. — The tenth anniversary of the Undenominational Mission, Pontymoile, was celebrated a few days ago. Alderman Cory, of Cardiff, presided over a large public meeting. Mr. T. M. Wintle, hon. superintendent, spoke of the remarkable development of the Mission, and of the blessed results that have attended the operation of its many agencies. The Bible carriage and colportage work was highly spoken of; up to the present time 30,970 religious books have been sold, and 6000 Bibles and Testament. Addresses were delivered by Rev. O. Tidman and Mr. Opie Rodway.

PAN-PRESBYTERIAN COUNCIL.

TUESDAY, JULY 10.

THE meeting to-day was presided over by Rev. Dr. Somerville, of Glasgow. Resolutions were passed putting the Alliance on a firmer basis. It was decided to appoint a paid general secretary, and to ask Rev. Dr. Mathews, of Quebec, to accept the post. A number of members and delegates delivered brief addresses on progress in the churches abroad.

THE CONTINENTAL CHURCHES

were first considered. Pastor Brandes, of Göttingen, Hanover, speaking of the Reformed Church of Germany, said that there are about 800 congregations in the Empire. Latterly something has been done in the direction of uniting them. Rev. Dr. Tollin, of Magdeburg, followed with an address in German, a résùmé of which was given by Principal Cairns. Not only has the Hohenzollern family protected the Huguenots, but it has done much to promote the Presbyterian order. Count Kuyphausen, of Friesland, referred with pleasure to the Protestant character of the new Emperor of Germany. Dr. Koch, of Emden, pastor of a church founded in 1544 by the reformer Alasco, also made a few encouraging observations.

Pastor F. Fliedner, from Madrid, spoke of Romanism as dominant in Spain. The Protestants of the country are working in unity, having no time to quarrel in face of the enemy. An outlook such as the most sanguine never anticipated, is now cheering those who are endeavouring to shed light in the dark peninsula.

Pastor Rochedieu, of Brussels, having told a tale of progress in Belgium, Pastor Kaspar, of the Reformed Church of Bohemia, addressed the Council, telling of much good work done. Professor Balogh, of Debreezen, Hungary, gave an account of Protestant testimony in that country, and Rev. Dr. Kalopothakes, of Athens, spoke of the sturdy endeavours of the Greek Evangelical Church.

COLONIAL DELEGATES

then addressed the Council. Rev. A. Yule, of Victoria, referred to the possibilities of Australasia. In the seven Presbyterian bodies represented, there are about five hundred ministers, and the ordinances of religion are maintained in from twelve to fourteen hundred different places. The rush of commercial enterprise affects the life of the people in every sphere. There is much newspaper-reading in Victoria, but the Scriptures are little known. Christian workers experience those difficulties which are common in great cities, and in the country places trouble arises from the fact that the ministers cannot be got to stay at their charges. He suggested that the Alliance might consider the wisdom of devising a plan for some ministerial arrangement between the established Presbyterian plan and the Methodist itinerant ministry, in order to meet the circumstances of bush districts, where the work is very lonely indeed.

Rev. Dr. Stuart, of Dunedin, spoke of the "Great Britain of the South," the southern island of which is, he said, "old Scotland over again." The people love the Bible, and they rally round it whenever it is appealed to. Men are eager to hear the Gospel, and, when plain, earnest preachers go to them, they will listen with the utmost loyalty. Some of the ministers visit from twelve to fourteen stations, and he hoped that, with the Bible in the family and life in the Church, a generation will rise up to bear a glorious testimony at the Antipodes.

Rev. Thomas Nisbet, of New South Wales, told of phenomenal progress in the colony. Churches have been largely multiplied, and preaching places also. He asked that when families leave Great Britain, the minister of the church which they leave should write to the minister in the colony informing him of the place of settlement. By this means many sad lapses would be prevented.

Rev. J. C. Reyneke, delegate from the Cape Colony, said that the Church of that region is mainly made up of descendants from the Huguenots. There are about 170 congregations, the communicants numbering 121,600, and the adherents about 286,000. The people are much scattered, and include a considerable Dutch element. Home mission work has been pursued for some years, and now something is being done in the way of sending out foreign missionaries. Education is highly appreciated, and Sunday-schools are in good order everywhere.

Present Intellectual Tendencies.

A discussion took place on the papers which were read last week on this subject. For the most part criticism was directed to the remarks by Dr. Marcus Dods on, "How far is the Church responsible for present unbelief?" Rev. Dr. Orr, of Antrim, declared the demand to be altogether unreasonable, that the Church should present such a type of Christianity as shall render misconception impossible. The Lord Himself presented a perfect type, but the Pharisees, Herodians, and Scribes, did not believe in Him. The light shone, but "the darkness comprehended it not." Remarking on the statement that the Lord did not require men to accept a number of propositions concerning Him, but rather that men should simply follow Him, the speaker asked: Is Christ to be followed as an example then, or as the great teacher? Is his word not to be also received, and likewise the word of the Father, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased"?

Rev. Dr. Petticrew, of Londonderry, took exception to the whole tone and character of Dr. Dods's paper. The writer seemed to take it for granted that there are mistakes in the Old Testament, and that its morality is not to be defended. He was satisfied, on the contrary, that the Old Testament is altogether from God, and that it must be received as it is. "Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." "The law of the Lord is perfect." The Old Testament Scriptures were the only Bible of the Saviour and his Apostles, who received them as infallible, never for a moment saying anything against the facts or the morality. If we give up the inspiration of the Old Testament, then we must also give up that of the New, for the claims are precisely similar in each case.

Rev. Dr. Craven, of Philadelphia, endorsed the sentiments of both the previous speakers. To say that faith in Christ is not bound up with faith in the Old Testament is a proposition he could not accept. Rather our faith is bound up with the infallibility of the Book. Injury has doubtless followed from the endeavour of the Church to hold by her fallible interpretations; but that is quite different from holding by the Book.

Rev. Dr. Cavan, of Toronto, maintained that while the Council had no authority to sit in judgment on such matters, members had a right to speak their minds. Faith in Christ must be intelligent. Questions as to Christ exhibit doctrine, and he could not conceive how they could be answered without an appreciation of doctrine. He maintained that in declining to define inspiration the Reformed Church had acted wisely. The Scriptures are not the less inspired because they tell us of the sins of the Old Testament saints.

Rev. Dr. Watts, of Belfast, gave the opinion of Christ as to the Old Testament. "Think not," He said, "that I am come to destroy the law and the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil. For verily I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." That is Christ's estimate of the Old Book. When charged with blasphemy for saying that He was the Son of God, He said: "Is it not written in your law, I said, Ye are gods? If He called them gods, unto whom the word of God came (and the Scripture cannot be broken), say ye of Him whom the Father hath sanctified, and sent into the world, Thou blasphemest, because I said, I am the Son of God?" His argument is, "The Scripture cannot be broken. This expression is in your law, and therefore it stands, because the Scripture cannot be broken." We have, continued the speaker, the authority of Christ for it, that there is not a single clause in the whole of that Book that is not given by inspiration of the Holy Ghost. Look at Paul's words: "He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ." Evidently the Apostle argues that the fact that the writer used the term "seed," and not "seeds," was proof that he was directed by the Holy Ghost.

Rev. John McEwan, of Edinburgh, declared the views of Dr. Dods as not touching any sympathetic chord in the hearts of people of the Free Church. Dr. Dods was mistaken when he said that the Church had no doctrine of revelation. Christ and Paul, and the churches also, have a doctrine of revelation, namely, that "all Scripture is inspired of God." Rev. George Smith, of Swatow, deprecated the tendency to find in heathen religions a preparation for the Gospel of Christ. Rev. Henry O'Neill, of New York City, argued for the integrity of the Scriptures. Rev. D. D. Bannerman, of Perth, thought that Dr. Dods had spoken unguardedly, and in a manner open to misapprehension. He affirmed the great and good influence of Dr. Dods in Glasgow, and asked that his words should be judged from the standpoint of practical apologetics. Young men were in his mind, and the question is how to deal with them. Dr. Dods was for asking men with difficulties to come to Christ notwithstanding, and not to be prevented by their intellectual difficulties. In conclusion, the speaker maintained that Dr. Dods quite agrees with a standard definition of inspiration.

Principal Douglas, of Glasgow, thought other men could have been found to deal to better purpose with the subject which was entrusted to Dr. Dods. While making no excuse for irreverent language in regard to Scripture, the speaker said that critics must put themselves in the place of Dr. Dods so as to judge from his point of view. Some things said by Dr. Dods were inconsistent and confused, and while the paper was calculated to raise questions it contained many statements that were more general than perhaps Dr. Dods himself intended.

Rev. Dr. Hall, of New York, thought that, as members had made it clear that the objectionable views were not theirs, the discussion might drop; and, after a few words by Rev. Dr. Murkland, of Baltimore, this course was adopted.

Reception by the Bible Society.

In the evening a reception of delegates was held by the President of the British and Foreign Bible Society—the Earl of Harrowby—at the Society's house in Queen Victoria-street. About 400 guests were present. Having inspected the premises of the Society, the company assembled in the Library, where Lord Harrowby delivered an address of welcome, in the course of which he referred to the conspicuous efforts of the Presbyterian body in defending the Bible and upholding its principles. Professor Blaikie, in thanking Lord Harrowby on behalf of the Council, said that it is emphatically true with the Presbyterians that the Bible is the basis of the Protestant religion. If Presbyterian doctrines are rigid, if the worship has a look of bareness, and if the whole style is somewhat simple and unadorned, then these characteristics have come from a regard for the Word of God. Rev. Dr. Waters, of New Jersey, replied on behalf of the American delegates; and Count St. George, of Geneva, on behalf of those from the Continent. All three speakers bore strong testimony to the value of the work carried on by the Bible Society.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 11.

Rev. Dr. Prochet, of the Waldensian Church in Italy, presided over the morning meeting to-day. A letter was read expressing the sympathy of the Religious Tract Society with the delegates in their deliberations and work, and intimating that a complete set of "Present-Day Tracts," as far as published, making several volumes, would be given to each member of the Council. Rev. Dr. Mathews accepted the post of General Secretary of the Council, and it was stated that the American delegates had nominated Rev. Dr. Roberts, of Cincinnati, as Secretary of their section of the Alliance.

STRONG DRINK IN AFRICA.

Rev. Dr. Ellinwood, of New York, drew attention to the ravages of alcoholic liquors on the Congo, and at other points on the West Coast of Africa. He suggested a united movement on the part of Christian peoples in all countries, with a view to securing joint action by the several Powers involved, and moved that the Council record its solemn remonstrance against the demoralisation of the native races of West Africa and the islands of the Pacific. Rev. Dr. Lindsay, of Glasgow, having said that the evil is also prevalent on the East Coast of Africa, and Rev. Dr. Somerville, also of Glasgow, that it is likewise felt in South Africa, the terms of the remonstrance were widened so as to take in those regions. A deputation was appointed to take the matter in hand, and also to make representations on the subject to the King of the Belgians.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

The General Secretary submitted a Committee's report on the subject of Sunday-schools, and a brief discussion ensued. More care in the teaching of Holy Scripture was enjoined by several speakers; also the careful selection of earnest and spiritually-minded teachers. Rev. Dr. Stuart, of Dunedin, urged the importance of periodical catechetical services, in which young folks should be encouraged to stand up in the congregation and speak right out. Such services offer many opportunities for a competent minister to give instruction, and may be made extremely interesting, as well as profitable, to all who attend them. Rev. Dr. Cole, of Yonkers, New York, spoke strongly in favour of a common scheme of doctrinal instruction, so that the children may be impressed with the truth in their tender years. The committee was reappointed.

Family Life and the Young.

The meeting this evening was one of the largest of the series, and great interest was shown in the discussion of the allotted subject. There were four addresses on the programme, a somewhat ponderous bill of fare for one session. If, however, all the speakers had been like Dr. Hall, of New York, in taking for granted the graceful introduction and the thrilling peroration, and going right into the heart of the subject, the chairman would have been relieved of the necessity of ringing the time bell.

Professor Ellis Edwards, of Wales, premised that he would give the audience little more than commonplaces, and it must be admitted that, to a large extent, he kept his word. He said some good things nevertheless, though they were more applicable to adult than to young life. As, for instance: There may be danger in too much subjectivity, but there is greater danger in the forgetting of self, which is a characteristic of our time. When we give up reading great authors, our own lives become small. Let a week be spent without reading the Bible, and all at once we begin to judge our fellow-men—to condemn them to this, and sentence them to that. We want our children to be better than Socrates or Plato, and to feel a red blush mounting to their cheeks when some things that these wise men taught, and even commended, are mentioned in their hearing. Self-reliance will not make our children heroes; what they need is reliance on truth and principle. The Church should be a home for our young people. The Church is not a home to them unless it takes cognisance of the whole of their life—dwellings, hours of labour, Parliamentary statutes, education, whatever it may be. If we sin in interfering with what are called politics, we sin in the company of many of the best men that have ever lived.

DR. JOHN HALL

dealt with the topic of "the Church and the young" in a very trenchant and practical way. The State, he said, has too often dealt with the intellect only and neglected the conscience. In America this system has produced an immense number of "smart" men, but occasionally they are not high-principled. They get into the police courts, the bankruptcy courts, and the divorce courts; sometimes they emigrate to Canada, which is known to be a large place. This failure on the part of the State carries its lesson for the Church. But before the Church there are the parents, and they must be taught to feel the solemnity of the vows they take upon them when they consecrate their children to God in baptism. Parents often do serious mischief by thoughtlessly sending their children to educational institutions where their church is habitually belittled; then they complain that the Church does not keep its hold on the young. Mrs. Brown visits Mrs. Smith, and when she is about to take her leave, Mrs. Smith says, "Do not go yet; it is lovely to have you here." When the visitor goes, Mrs. Smith says, "What a tiresome chatterbox that Mrs. Brown is." Jennie and Charlie hear that, and their moral sense is corrupted. The Church ought to take a more vital interest in the Sunday-school; it is part of her work. My ideal Sunday-school is that which I have seen in Wales, where old men and little children, mothers and maidens, are gathered together. There are two methods of preaching to the young. One is to give them a separate short sermon at the beginning of the service. The tendency of that is to make the children think they have got their share and can go to sleep. A better way is to make the sermon such that the children can understand it, throwing in an illustration here and there specially for them. Ministers should preach more missionary discourses to the young, and thus engage their interest. Imagine a man learnedly expatiating on the difference between sublapsarianism and supralapsarianism, and then announcing a collection for home missions; or giving an eloquent disquisition on "the experiences that modify the Christian consciousness," and then asking contributions for the foreign mission field. We are told to make our churches attractive to the young. Yes, but it must be done in the right way. Theatricals, æstheticism, sensational and fanciful expedients, may sometimes draw, but we buy our gold too dear when we buy it at that price. Moreover it is not all gold that glitters in such places; a good deal of it is brass. Let the church be so solemn, and pure, and tender in its whole atmosphere that young people will feel when they go there that God is present. The natural heart of man will always choose man's devices rather than God's appointments when the two come into competition, and, therefore, the Church is always at a disadvantage. The only power she has to counteract this, is to lift up Christ, who is the chiefest among ten thousand and altogether lovely.

In the course of a very rhetorical address, Dr. Holmes, of Albany, U.S., emphasised the mistake of leaving Sunday-school work to be done by immature and inexperienced persons.

REV. JOHN McNEILL,

of Edinburgh, concluded the speech-making in his characteristically pithy and practical fashion. He began with some touching reminiscences of his own home life, saying that the strong piety of his father and his way of conducting family worship had made a deep impression on his young mind. Several quotations were effectively made from Robert Burns' "Cotter's Saturday Night." With respect to his personal experience as a teacher in the Sunday-school, he declared that he was at first a dismal failure, because he put on airs and tried to play the parson. He kept himself apart from the class, as some ministers unfortunately do in dealing with the larger and more mixed class they gather around them. He soon discovered that if he would retain his class he must be interesting, and really go to them with something to say. He found out, also, that he must have more prayer for the work, and more faith in the Word of God. If Sunday-school work is ever to be what it ought to be, the Church must lay hold of it with both hands, and put into it far more spirituality, and far more crying to God for his blessing than she has yet done. We must get rid of the idea that our children do not need to be converted.

Mr. McNeill was so long over his preamble that his minutes were up before he even got to his special topic—some words to young men. The audience had no hesitation, however, in giving him some overtime. His first word was to the effect that in our Young Men's Associations and Fellowship Unions there is a danger of exalting the intellectual at the expense of the spiritual. This he very strongly protested against, giving it as his solemn verdict, arrived at from experience, that those hyper-intellectual young men are absolutely useless for real evangelistic or spiritual work among their fellows. Then followed a word of warning against excessive devotion to athletics. He missed the consecrated ring and tone that are needed if young men would really be the saviours of their brother young men, of whom there are such shoals that need saving in all our large cities. Turning for a moment to his fellow ministers, the speaker entreated them not to tamper with or seek to minimise the stupendous truths that relate to conversion, and heaven and hell. He told a very striking story of a young man in London, who went to a low-class theatre, and heard one actor on the stage say to another, in coarse jest, that he needed to be converted, and that if he went to Exeter Hall, they would do the thing for him in five minutes. These words, spoken in a devil's temple, evoked laughter from the crowd, but they went home to this young man's heart, and he took the profane actor's advice. He entered an evangelistic meeting in the Hall, and got truly converted. The six days' march round Jericho was graphically depicted by Mr. McNeill, and applied, as showing the importance of faith in the promise and power of God to accomplish great things for Him.

THURSDAY, JULY 12.

The morning meeting was presided over by Rev. Dr. Whigham, of Ballinasloe, Ireland. A committee, which had been appointed to consider a serious complaint received from the missionaries to the Nestorians, that the American mission had been opposed by Anglican clergymen sent out by the Archbishop of Canterbury, urged that the pre-occupation of the field by the American workers ought to be respected, and a minute to this effect was agreed to. A peace memorial having been received from the Society of Friends, advocating arbitration as a substitute for war, a resolution was passed expressing cordial concurrence with these sentiments, and commending them to the churches of Christ. Among other minutes adopted was one, suggested by the simultaneous sitting of the Lambeth Conference, recording the Council's recognition of all branches of the Anglican communion as sister churches of Christ, and expressing a desire for the maintenance of friendly relations with their clergy and people all over the world.

Several foreign and colonial delegates having delivered brief addresses on the progress of the Gospel, Rev. Dr. Chambers, of New York, and Rev. Principal Cairns, of Edinburgh, pleasantly reviewed the proceedings of the Alliance since its formation.

Valedictory Meeting.

In the evening the last meeting of the Council was held. There was a large attendance of the public, and the proceedings were largely of a farewell character. The chair was occupied by Rev. Dr. Blaikie, of Edinburgh, who is president of the Council for the next four years. For some time before the meeting began, the choir of the Royal Normal College for the Blind, Norwood, rendered musical selections, which were highly appreciated.

Rev. Dr. Spining, of Cincinnati, declared his firm belief that the Council has a long and eminently useful career before it. He was followed by Rev. Dr. Apple, of Lancaster, Ohio, who pointed out that the proceedings of the Council have furnished excellent evidence of Christian unity. In teaching there is variety, but in spirit there is oneness; the variety of opinion has called for the exercise of charity, while the manifestation of brotherhood in Christ has been a source of much joy. The example is one, he thought, which may be advantageously followed by other churches.

SIGNOR GAVAZZI, OF ROME,

was introduced by the Chairman as a veteran who has been labouring for many years for the spiritual good of his countrymen. He gave a short account of the doings of the Free Christian Church in Italy. There are fourteen ordained pastors, sixteen evangelists, a theological college in Rome, with several bright and promising students, thirty regular churches, and forty-six out-stations regularly visited. The communicants number 1600, and the catechumens three hundred, all of them native Italians and converts from Romanism. There are elders and deacons in good order and number, three colporteurs, a Bible-woman, and numerous Sunday-schools and day-schools, from whom it is hoped there will come many who will be faithful members of the Church of Christ. Speaking of the aggressive character of the work, Signor Gavazzi described it as fighting, without bloodshed, against Romanism on the one hand, and scepticism on the other. The battle is not against conscientious Papists individually, but against the many errors of the Romish Church in general—against the human impositions of Popery, whereby the truths of Holy Scripture are kept from the minds and hearts of the people. Going to the Italians with the sword of the Spirit, the Bible—only the Bible, and the whole Bible, the inspired and infallible Word of God—the Free Christian Church endeavours to preach the blessed Gospel of Christ and Him crucified, and intends to follow the Great Captain of Salvation, marching on to victory. The speech was delivered with much vigour, relieved by some welcome humour, and it was listened to with hearty attention.

REV. DR. SOMERVILLE, OF GLASGOW, was introduced as a fellow-student of Robert McCheyne, and one who has not only served a long and successful ministry, but has done much evangelising work in many parts of the world. Dr. Somerville delivered an address full of fervour, and aimed at turning the occasion to a definite spiritual account. He urged increased love for Christ by constraint of that great love which Christ Himself manifested towards sinners. Referring to the goodness of God in human redemption, the speaker dwelt with some fulness upon the atoning work of Christ, by whose shed blood we are redeemed. What we want, he said, on the part of every member of the Alliance, is a burning enthusiasm, a Divine enthusiasm, of love to Christ. If only that love pervaded us all, the city of London, mighty and unwieldy as it seems to be, would soon be changed, and, in fact, the face of the world would be changed—blessedly changed.

Rev. Dr. Cochrane, of Brantford, Canada, in moving a resolution (which was adopted), recognising the excellence of the arrangements made for the comfort of the delegates, and the success of the Council, expressed a sincere hope that the deliberations would result in much good. After hearty praise and fervent prayer, the Alliance rose.

MONTE CARLO TRAGEDIES.

We are indebted to the Secretary of the International Association for the suppression of the public gaming tables at Monte Carlo, who are continuing their efforts, for the following extract from The Piedmontese Gazette, written by its Monaco correspondent:—

"Suicides at Monte Carlo are of frightful frequency. Since the case of Juan Calvados there have been other thirty, which, with nineteen I have already mentioned, brings the sum total to no less than forty-nine in two and a half months.

"A tragic story was told me this morning. Mrs. Wad......, an attractive young widow, came to Nice for her health. Two months after her arrival, she went to Monaco, just 'to see the place.' Induced to play, she lost 25,000 fr., besides 15,000 fr. she succeeded in borrowing. Finding herself ruined and unable to meet her relatives, she yesterday committed suicide with a revolver.

"A German, possessing 40,000 fr. belonging to his employer, which sum he purposed remitting, went to Monaco with his young bride, where they had agreed to spend their honeymoon. One morning the husband went out to post a letter. On his return he found his wife had fled with his money. The distracted man rushed through the gardens, and then proceeded to Nice where he searched high and low for the fugitive, but in vain. Next morning his wife's body was found at the foot of a precipice from which she had leaped, and in her pocket was a note containing these brief lines: 'I commit suicide because I have gambled away my husband's money and ruined him. May God forgive me! Pray for me!"

Many suicides occur of which no notice appears in print. Every night the grounds are carefully searched by the police after the casino has closed. One man drags a covered spring cart, the wheels of which have india-rubber tires. When a body is found—for which a reward is given—it is immediately stripped of clothes and valuables, thrust into the cart and silently hurried away and buried. Next morning the sun shines again, the band plays, saloons and tables are thronged, and people gamble as usual. The laws of the Principality punish a man who steals to appease his hunger, but they afford every protection to the infamous casino.

The Secretary of the Association is Mr. R. Stewart Clough, 8, Adam-street, Adelphi, London, W.C.

MINERS IN NORTH FRANCE.

I would draw the attention of your readers to the Mission to Miners in the North of France. It has from time to time been my privilege to visit some of the stations in the Pas de Calais, and I gladly testify to the true work for God going on there. It has recently been greatly owned of Him.

In their daily toil there is an oppression resting on the poor miners. They work underground during long hours, and their wages are low. Moreover, they are held almost in bondage by the priests, and they fear to offend any of these, lest they should lose their daily bread. The power of the priests over the people is marvellous.

But God has been answering prayer that here his light may shine. In a small town called Hersin-Coupigny more than sixty families have in three years, through the faithful labours of a Protestant pastor, been led to accept salvation, and openly to renounce Popery; this, too, in the face of untiring persecution. There is great and pressing need for a building of some kind for worship at Hersin as a centre. There is but one piece of ground available (most Romanists objecting to sell to Protestants for purposes connected with religion), and this could now be secured. It is proposed to erect a simple structure, and the cost of ground and building would be covered by £900. (Miss) J. Bullock.

EDUCATION IN JAPAN.

I desire to thank the kind friend who sends me, all the way to Japan, the cheery and truly Christian Christian. It has come regularly for a year or more, and is a great comfort. No paper coming to my home is read with more care or pleasure. As you have correspondents from all parts of the world, furnishing news to your many readers, I desire to send them something in return. A little about our educational work in the city of Tokyo may be of interest.

Our College is situated in the southern part of the city—on one of the highest of the many hills through Tokyo. The work is extensive, and has three important departments in full operation. There is the Theological School, where young men are trained for the Christian ministry. There is the Academic Department, where a thorough secular education is given by Christian teachers.

During this academic year, about 400 young men and boys have been in attendance, about one quarter are Chistians and have been admitted to the church.

The Academic Department consists of the Boys' School and the Academy proper, in which there are six classes. All are respectful, most are good students and earnest in their study of truth. The young men who are Christians are splendid workers in the church, Sunday-school, mission classes, Y.M.C.Association, and in other ways. There are several of the academic students thinking about going into the Christian ministry. This school is under the management of Methodist missionaries and teachers from Canada.—Yours, E. Odlum.

MONTHLY TRACT SOCIETY.—Founded in 1837, this Society celebrated its jubilee last year. In a "Jubilee Volume" a brief account is given of the origin of the Society, and of its operations and results, both at home and abroad. To all who know of the good work done by the Society, this volume will have a real interest. The story is one of steady development, with a well-defined object in view, namely, to bring the great truths of religion under the attention of people of the middle and upper classes. The office of the Society is 181, Queen Victoria-street.

For the Young.

THE NIGHTINGALE'S SONG.

We were walking home by our lantern's light,
And slowly we climbed the steep hillside,
When suddenly spoke our peasant guide,
"Do you know why the nightingale sings at night?"

For long ago, when the world was young,
When the vines were green in the month of May,
The nightingale warbled the livelong day,
But never at night were her glad strains sung.

One night she slept on a budding vine
(She feared no danger and thought no ill).
In the dewy darkness when all was still
The clasping tendrils began to twine.

Her delicate feet in the snare were caught,
She knew it not till the morning came;
Then thrilled with anguish her slender frame,
When she saw the mischief the night had wrought.

But cries and struggles could nought avail;
Never again might her soft wings fly;
It was hard 'mid the budding vines to die,
Alas, for the captive nightingale!

Did some kind hand set the captive free?
Again was her voice of gladness heard?
Is the song we hear from the rescued bird
The rapturous song of liberty?

None knows. But now in the summer night,
Though the stars peep out and glow-worms shine,
She fears to rest on the budding vine,
She must watch and sing till the morning light.

In the midnight deep you may hear her song,
'Mid all its rapture a note of fear;
"Waken and watch, there is danger near Sing, for the darkness will not be long."

What the lesson, dear children, say,
Though all around you is bright and fair,
Would you keep your foot from the tempter's snare,
Remember the nightingale. Watch and pray.

CHILDREN'S SERVICES AT CROYDON.

A fortnight's mission, conducted by Mr. Josiah Spiers, was held in the skating rink, beginning July 1, in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission. All the schools belonging to the East Surrey Sunday-school Union were interested in the mission, and invitations were sent to all the schools, public and private, and to all the clergy and ministers of the town. Many prayers were offered for the success of the mission, and those prayers have been abundantly answered. The weather during the first week, was very unfavourable, so that the number attending was small; but at every meeting held there were some who decided for Christ. On the second Sunday afternoon there were 1500 present, and about 200 could not gain admission. During the last week the attendance was very large. The children listened attentively to the earnest appeals made to them which were accompanied by very telling and appropriate illustrations.

In all the after-meetings there were many inquirers, and the result was a considerable number found the Saviour. Some asked to sign the temperance pledge, and many gave their names as members of the "Scripture Union." At the last meeting small envelopes, which had been given out previously, containing an illuminated text of Scripture, were brought back with a contribution towards the expenses of the mission; by this means the whole of the cost was paid, and there was a small surplus, which will be given to the Children's Special Service Mission.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. G. L. Pilkington, Cheltenham, July 15—22.

Seaside Services.—The following are the arrangements for July:—Mr. Spiers, Blackpool, 27 to August 20; afterwards at Dover. Mr. G. Banaster, in the yacht Kingfisher, and Mr. Martin Hall, Llandudno. Mr. W. H. Roberts, Hoylake and West Kirby. Mr. H. Hutchinson, Spittal, Berwick-on Tweed, 14—28. Mr. G. H. Chaplin, Dunoon, N.B., 15—24. Mr. W. Huckett, Cleethorpes.

CAN'T LOVE JESUS.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse tells a touching story. Some years ago a little girl approached him, and said, "Sir, I can't love Jesus." Mr. Pearse remarked that that was a sad state of things. The little girl, moreover, went on to say that she did not know why she could not love Jesus. She had been trying to do so a long time, but all in vain. "Ah," said Mr, Pearse, "you'll never love Jesus by trying; I don't love my little maidens at home because I try, but because I can't help it." The little girl in astonishment asked, "Can't you help it?" Then Mr. Pearse said to her, "As you go home to-night say to yourself, 'Jesus loves me,' and you'll find by to-morrow night that you can't help loving Jesus."

The next night the little girl greeted Mr. Pearse with smiling face, and exclaimed, "I can say now that I love Jesus; I can't help loving Him, because He loves me."

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sunday, July 22, Zech. viii. 13—23; Monday, July 23, Zech. xiii. 1—9; Tuesday, July 24, Zech. xiv. 1—11; Wednesday, July 25, Ps. xlii. 1—11; Thursday, July 26, Ps. xliii. 1—5; Friday, July 27, Ps. xliv. 1—14; Saturday, July 28, Ps. xliv. 15—26.

IRELAND'S GREAT NEED.

It is peculiarly pleasing to know that not only is much effort being made to put the Gospel before the people of Ireland, but that in many directions a remarkable willingness is being manifested on the part of Papists and others to listen to the message of salvation by faith through the grace of God. The sixty-seventh annual report of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland contains many very encouraging statements as to the large amount of genuine work which the agents have been privileged to do.

The distinct object of the Society is to bring the Irish people under religious instruction, and care is taken that nothing shall be done to prejudice this good purpose. Earnest and humble Christian men are sent out to read the Scriptures and talk to the people. The periodical visits of the readers are coming to be looked forward to by those whose good is being thus sought, and many Christian workers declare that without such help as the readers render there would be a much greater spiritual dearth than there is in Erin's Isle.

Undoubtedly it is true, as stated in the report, that the real value of the Society's operations cannot be set out on paper. The outline that is presented in the report gives some hints of the important character of the work. An Ulster clergyman, Rev. W. A. Smyly, of Garvagh, co. Derry, bears the following testimony: "The lines upon which the Society and its agents work are peculiarly suitable to the exigencies of the country and the character of its people. It is non-controversial. It is not influenced by any party bias; nor is its work crippled by narrow, jealous, and exclusive pietism. It goes upon broad and truly catholic principle—its guide the Bible, and the Bible alone; its object, the making wise unto salvation."

The report contains deeply interesting statements by superintendents and readers. We observe that last year closed with a balance due to the treasurer. Christian friends of Ireland, and all friends of Christ, have here a well-known cause, fully worthy of support. The secretary is Captain James Kearney White, who may be addressed at the offices of the Society, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin. Mrs. White is hon. sec. of the Ladies' Auxiliary, which has many liberal supporters in the three kingdoms.

TEMPERANCE IN VICTORIA.

Possessed of power by polling a majority on a Local Option vote, to keep the licenced houses down to a statutory minimum, the people of some parts of Victoria have given unmistakeable evidence of their determination to control the drink traffic to the utmost of their ability. A correspondent writes from Ballarat:—

We set to work to reduce the number of hotels in Ballarat East. The number was 72, while the statutory limit was 27, a reduction of 45. We formed ourselves into a Local Option Alliance, which was principally our blue ribbon committee. The other side was very energetic and confident, but our committee worked hard, and while the liquor interest only polled 590 votes, we polled 995, thus winning with a majority of 405. Then we all felt rewarded for our efforts, and greatly stimulated to go on. It was remarked on all sides that this result was owing to the earnest labours of God's servants in the persons of Mr. William Noble and Mr. Lucas; they sowed the seed, and we have been permitted to reap the harvest.

This victory will, I hope, encourage workers in general. The lessening of the drink shops will lead to less drinking: so men's hearts will be more ready to receive the truth, and we may reasonably expect to see a large addition to our ranks. We hope next year to try Ballarat West.

CARE OF DESTITUTE CHILDREN.

The inmates of the training ships Arethusa, and Chichester, lying off Greenhithe, Kent, and carried on under the management of the Committee of National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children, had a specially happy time recently, on the occasion of the annual inspection and distribution of prizes. In the course of the proceedings it was stated that during the past twenty years no fewer than 4669 lads have been received. At present the inmates number 160. The number would have been 300, but for the difficulty experienced in getting berths for the lads after training; this difficulty arises from the fact that cargo steamers are now taking the place of sailing vessels.

The prizes were distributed by the Earl of Jersey, assisted by Lady Northcote, who, with much grace and kindness, decorated the boys with medals. Some "old boys" were present, and were also decorated with medals. One of these, who left the ship fourteen years ago, and had just passed his examination as chief mate, received his certificate from the hands of Lord Jersey, who exhorted the other lads to follow so good an example. The Countess of Jersey addressed a few words of sympathy to the lads, as did also Rev. Newman Hall.

Captain Willan, R.N., superintendent of the Arethusa, is about to give up that charge. He spoke some homely words to the lads, being followed by Mr. W. Williams, the secretary of the institution. The proceedings were pleasant throughout, the singing of the boys being as hearty as their general behaviour was creditable.

CRUELTY TO CHILDREN.—The Committee of the London Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, 7, Harpur-street, Bloomsbury, W.C., is anxious to secure a greatly extended knowledge of its existence, of its willingness to form branches, and to take up cases everywhere. It appeals to the interest of all good citizens in the putting down of the shameful abuse of children to further this desire by circulating its report. Copies will be furnished, on application, for circulation, or sent to persons whose addresses may be furnished. The income of the Society is only £2000 a year; while, for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, £15,000 a year is raised; yet cruelty to children is more common than to animals, more difficult to get at, and far more costly to punish.

THE RUSSIAN PEASANTRY.*

A GREAT POPULAR RELIGIOUS MOVEMENT IN RUSSIA.

The author of "Underground Russia" has produced an important work on the condition of the Russian Peasantry, with especial reference to a great religious movement which has spontaneously arisen amongst them, and which has in a few years spread so rapidly as to number millions of adherents. Before giving its details, it is necessary to say a few words on the circumstances of the Russian peasant, who it would seem has arrived at a crisis in his history. Will he rise to a higher level with the prospect of still further moral and intellectual progress? or will he sink into a state more miserable, more brutal than any he has known while in a state of serfdom?

THE UKASE OF ALEXANDER II.,

which, on March 3, 1861, rendered to 23,000,000 of souls their natural liberty, was by far the most revolutionary act of our time, for it introduced throughout the vast rural districts of Russia the system of competition and commercialism which rules in Western Europe. The Russian Government saw that without land the enfranchised peasantry would rapidly sink into a wretched and dangerous proletariat, but, fearing the ill-will of the nobles, it only gave the peasants enough to keep them in existence. Once landowners, they came under that ever-increasing taxation characteristic of the modern European system. In 1871, ten years after their emancipation, half of the peasants were paying 92·75 per cent. of the net produce of their land in taxes, the other half 198·25 per cent., or nearly double the net produce of their land. Not to starve they must do other work. But between them and this fate stands for a time the Mir, or Village Commune, an ancient institution which manages all the economical concerns of the village, and especially the land, to which, according to the universal idea among Russian peasants, no individual right can possibly be asserted. The Mir is the incorporation of all the families of the village into one great family, presided over by an elder, whose authority is recognised by the Government, and religiously respected by the people. Every year the Mir of the village, each family receiving a portion in accordance with its size and needs.

REDISTRIBUTES THE LANDS

But this ancient institution is doomed to death, and in fact the agony has already begun. The Imperial Government, wishing to make Russia a powerful member of the European system, fully able to compete industrially and commercially with Germany, England, and the United States, employs its despotic organisation to bring about this result as rapidly as possible. The ancient institutions of the country are watched over and worried, goaded and driven, by a vast system of police, often composed of persons of doubtful character, and who, as direct representatives of the Imperial Government, terrify the local authorities, and make all the exactions, laws, and regulations of their masters, ten times more oppressive and vexatious than they otherwise would be. Under this terrible system, the Russian peasant is sinking.

Accustomed for generations to depend on a society which has occupied to him the place of a father, he now finds himself more and more exposed to the competition of the world and to the operation of those laws which govern the labour-market. "Each for himself," he now says, "and God and the Mir for us all." But each for himself is a faith that grows rapidly in the hot-bed of modern civilisation, while that in God and the Mir wanes. Those who knew the peasantry a few years ago are shocked at the way in which the power of self-restraint on behalf of the community has given place to indifference to the woes of others, and they note with sorrow the progress of that egoism which preludes the entire dissolution of the old social ties. The new system is rapidly into two classes—the few, shrewd, cunning, and energetic, find ample means in the disasters of the unsuccessful to improve their individual fortunes. Every village has peasants who are virtually its usurers and pawnbrokers, and into whose hands everybody's property is gradually finding its way. The other class, which numbers the vast mass of the population, tends to insolvency, nearly one-half having reached that stage.

In this unhappy condition of things, drink and arson, the usual temptations of desperate and infuriated peasants, make progress. But there is

A RIFT IN THE DARK CLOUD.

God appears to be revealing Himself to them, and it would seem as if it were his intention to give that new force and energy which will enable them to deliver themselves out of this bondage. The Rascolniks, as the great body of Russian Dissenters are called, number some twelve millions of people, and have existed since the middle of the seventeenth century. Those who wish to know their history cannot do better than consult Stepniak's book, which is full of information concerning them, and of certain other religious sects that have long had a name and a place in Russia.

These sects, as the Russian people generally, have had to depend on their teachers and on the tradition of the elders, the New Testament having been until recent times a rare book in Russia. The Greek Church does not refuse the Scriptures to laymen, or object to their being translated, nevertheless such was the inertia of the Russian clergy, that they took no trouble in the matter, but left the duty of providing a Russian translation of the New Testament to some of our countrymen, who, in connection with the St. Petersburg branch of the Bible Society, brought out in 1813 a parallel Russian and Sclavonic Gospel, and in 1824 a Russian version of the New Testament. Two years later, in April 1826, this by the Emperor Nicholas; the Minister of Public Instruction denouncing it as "a revolutionary association, intended for the overthrow of thrones and churches, of law, order, and religion throughout the world, with a view to establishing a universal republic."

It was forty years before it was allowed to resume operations in Russia, and then only under the inoffensive name of "Society for the Encouragement of Moral and Religious Reading." For the next eighteen years it had the opportunity of spreading the Scriptures, but the Government of the present Czar apparently shares the opinion of that of his grandfather, and feels instinctively that there is something in the Bible inimical to its existence, for on April 24, 1884, the Emperor Alexander III. suppressed the above-named society and all its branches.

The Daily News of Nov. 24, 1887, contained a telegram from St. Petersburg, stating that there was much excitement among the Don Cossacks, "caused in great measure by the religious persecutions to which a large number of them have been subjected on account of their leaving the orthodox faith for the so-called 'Stundist Sect.' The sect is," the telegram went on to say, "very similar to the Reformed Church, and numbers many millions of members in Southern Russia.".

An almost unknown Church, numbering several millions of members, calling themselves "Evangelicals," and described as "very similar to the Reformed Church," suffering persecution at the hands of a despotic Government, surely this ought to interest English Christians. It has been Stepniak's object to arouse that interest by collecting all the information he can on the subject.

Michael Ratushny, a peasant of Osnova, a village in the Odessa district, had for several summers worked in the German colony of Rizbuch. He was invited by his master, a German Stundist, to take part in their services was evidently a name given from outside, and refers, we learn from elsewhere, to the practice among German Protestant and Mennonites of devoting certain hours (Stunde) to meditation and prayer. Ratushny was impressed by what he saw and heard, and, on returning home for the winter, talked much on the subject with his fellow-villagers. They began to discuss the spiritual questions raised, and asked the priest to explain them; but he was unable to give them satisfaction. "Thereupon," Ratushny said—apparently on the occasion of one of his trials as a criminal—"I felt within myself with my own mind, and to explain them to others. There were many people desirous of hearing me, and I went on teaching the Gospel, as I understood it myself, to all of them." This was about the year 1864.

A BURNING DESIRE TO UNDERSTAND GOD'S WORDS

The German Protestants had lived a hundred years among these Russians without showing any desire to make converts, and even when Ratushny and other Stundists came as inquirers, none of the Germans felt it their duty to go and preach to the vast masses around them.

Nevertheless, these newly awakened Russians were not deterred; but, with the Scriptures in their hands, and the help of the people among whom they had found the sacred fire, they carefully sought to understand the way of God. At first they accepted the Protestant catechism, sacraments, and ritual, but in a short time they rejected the sacraments. The earlier Stundists preserved them as simple rites, but the new Stundists relinquished them altogether, and likewise abolished the dignity of the elder brother, or elected Presbyter. On the other hand the idea of "brotherhood" was very powerfully developed amongst them, the members regarding each other in daily life as belonging to the same earthly family. The explanation of their anti-ritualistic, anti-sacerdotal tendencies would be better understood if there were room to explain the views of the older Russian Dissenters. The great difference between the old and the new with reference to ritualism, sacerdotalism, and asceticism, combined with a reproduction on the widest scale, and under religious sanctions, of the social character of the Mir, may be some of the reasons which have caused the Stunda to spread like wild-fire.

THE CONVERSION OF THE VILLAGE OF OSNOVA

was immediately followed by that of the neighbouring villages, and congregations were soon formed in other villages of the Odessa district. It next appeared in the Elisavetgrad district of the same province of Kherson, and then in the course of three years it spread over those of Ekaterinoslav, Kharkoff, and Poltava, passing into Tchernigov, Mogilev and Kieff, reaching St. Petersburg in 1877, and then going on to Moscow.

The whole thing is the more extraordinary as neither Ratushny nor any of his early followers discover peculiar talent for propagandism; to say nothing of the very striking circumstance that no trained religious preacher of any sort appears to have been connected with the movement. Never it would seem has anything of the kind been more spontaneous, or more wholly nourished by the study of the New Testament. Stepniak says the Stundists are the Protestants of the New Testament, meaning by that to contrast them with the great body of the older Russian Dissenters, who gathered their ideas as much from the Old as the New Testament. The Stundists look to the Gospels for general principles of faith and morals, and to the Acts and Epistles for those on which Christian communities should be based. The first thing done with a convert, after he has been taught to read, is to place a New Testament in his hands, with the passages considered most important marked. It is stated in The Cherson Diocesan Messenger that there are Stundists, otherwise illiterate, who know whole chapters of the New Testament by heart, and can give chapter and verse of all the more important texts.

* The Russian Peasantry: Their Agrarian Condition, Social Life, and Religion. By Stepniak. 2 Vols. Swan Sonnenschein, Lowrey & Co. 25s.

A Stundist thus versed in Scripture enters the house of an acquaintance, often that of a stranger, and begins to read from the Gospels. A discussion naturally ensues, in which the Stundist soon begins to speak of his own experience, affirming that he once was in darkness, but now sees the light; that the orthodox faith is not that which Christ taught, but that the priests, for the sake of money, have invented ceremonies and rites, introduced idolatory, and concealed the true Gospel. Then, taking the orthodox teaching, he shows it to be contrary to the Scriptures, and finally concludes by speaking of the persecution the Stundists have to endure for asserting these things, but that having seen the light, they would rather die than return to darkness.

The religious meetings of the Stundists appear to be simply Bible-readings which those in each congregation most versed in the Scriptures take it in turn to conduct. At intervals, and at the opening and closing of the meeting, psalms and hymns are sung by a choir. All this is very fresh and delightful and we seem to have returned to

THE GOLDEN AGE OF OUR RELIGION.

But Stepniak tells us nothing more definite concerning their doctrine than that "the Stunda do not seem to differ in any way from orthodox Christians." This, of course, is vague and unsatisfactory; after having our interest so deeply aroused it is tantalising not to be able to learn what the Stundist conception of the Gospel really is. Certainly a movement so vast and so spontaneous, that stands so little on human learning or ecclesiastical dogmas, and so much on the workings of the human conscience and the study of the New Testament must have much to teach us. It would be a most useful work, if some who possess in a remarkable degree the gifts of sympathy, intelligence, and courage, would learn the Russian language and live for a time among these people. Who knows if God, even in our day, has not hidden his Word from the wise and understanding and revealed it unto babes?

R. Heath.

A TWENTY-FIVE YEARS' PASTORATE.—On Thursday evening, June 28, a meeting was held in Cambridge Heath Congregational Church, to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. William Marshall, and also the Pastor's silver wedding. A statement read by the secretary showed that during the past twenty-five years the work in connection with the church has been full of abundant blessing. The union between Pastor and people has been emphatically a union of sympathy and love. Mr. Marshall's first sermon was preached in June, 1863, when the church numbered fifty-four members. An iron church erected in 1861 was soon found too small, so that a new and handsome structure was built and opened in 1866. The spirit which Mr. Marshall infused into his flock led them to works of Christian service, and now there are three Sunday-schools in connection with the church. In the three schools no less than 115 teachers are engaged, and 1000 scholars are taught. The crowning effort of the church, however, was the purchase of the Morley Hall, the total cost of which amounted to £13,500. During the twenty-five years 1472 members have been admitted into the church. But figures give no adequate conception of the faithful and Christlike ministry of the Pastor, whose labours have been quiet, but incessant, during the past quarter of a century, and who has proclaimed the Gospel in all clearness, fulness, and simplicity. Short addresses were delivered by Revs. William Cuff, Dr. W. Tyler, J. Knaggs, T. Evans, T. C. Udall, W. J. Woods, and other ministers.

AMONG AUSTRALIAN ABORIGINES.

The work of Mr. Daniel Matthews, superintendent of the Maloga Aboriginal Mission, Murray River, New South Wales, is very trying indeed. Amid many drawbacks and great discouragements, this Mission has now been carried on for twelve years.

In the report just issued Mr. Matthews says that his love for the black people of Australia yearly grows more and more intense. This being the case, good fruit may certainly be expected from his toil. There are 120 blacks and half-castes on the Mission. Some of the girls are out in service, and giving tolerable satisfaction. Among the causes of anxiety are laziness, quarrelsomeness, and intractableness, A brief extract from the report will illustrate the weakness of the people:—"Monday, August 23.—Difficulty in getting the men to engage steadily in work. Complaint of insufficiency of sugar. Some go out hunting; others spend four or five hours in footballing, a more laborious engagement than any work we can give them. Our patience is so much tried that we at length refuse rations and meat to them. Disaffection the result, and a spirit of rebellion manifest. This course of treatment generally has a persuasive effect, better than words, or any line of argument. We soon come to terms, and matters go on satisfactorily. In the meantime, we are often perplexed, and have to apply to God for wisdom and patience to bear, until deliverance comes."

Mr. Matthews remarks with satisfaction upon the robustness of the rising generation, who, it is hoped, will be "trained up in the way they should go."

THE BRETON MISSION.

A recent issue of Le Trémélois contained a contribution by an English lady, entitled, "A Trip to Tremel." After referring to the many natural attractions of Brittany, the writer points out that not only is that province of France easily accessible to English people, but that living there is very cheap. Calling attention then to the Breton Mission, of which Pasteur G. Lecoat is director, she says:—

"M. Lecoat has translated the whole Bible into the grand old language. And he is proclaiming the glorious Gospel as far through Brittany as it can be taken with the aid of but two schoolmasters, three colporteurs, and one evangelist; and that in the face of 1800 priests and twice as many nuns. He is even transmitting it to the many thousand Breton labourers in Havre and Jersey. This untiring pasteur finds in Mme. Lecoat an invaluable coadjutor. Many a destitute orphan finds in her a mother tender and true. Not only is her house a veritable orphanage; she has near it a hospital, under her charge. And at length she has the wish of her heart—a school for girls, needing only furniture and a mistress's salary to become a seminary of true evangelical Christianity and industrial training."

About £36 per annum will be required as salary for a teacher. The Mission has land for a large room, but about £350 is needed before the building can be erected. The lady concludes:—

"It is impossible for one who loves the Lord to stay at Tremel without becoming deeply interested in the Breton Mission. And it has none of the drawbacks that from time to time stagger a critical mind in some other missions. (1) No extravagance.—There is literally no useless or careless expenditure. (2) No worldly position to maintain.—Here the example of Christ and his first missionaries is followed too nearly for that! (3) No insincerity or over-profession.—Absolute honesty and downright straightforwardness permeate its every ramification.'

A PILGRIM'S SONG.

Sometimes under stormy skies,
  Sometimes 'neath the sun,
Day by day I travel on,
  Till the crown be won.
For the sunlight always falls
  On life's rippling sea,
And where'er my Saviour calls
  He will walk with me.

Storms may come and clouds may lower,
  He is with me still;
In the time of fainting, too,
  He my cup can fill.
Fill, and bless, and satisfy,
  Give me songs to raise,
Even in the darkest night,
  Father, to thy praise.

Though I cannot still the storms,
  I in Thee can rest,
When the darkness gathers round,
  Leaning on thy breast.
Thou hast conquered death, the world,
  Satan, too, and sin;
Opened wide the gate of life,
  To let the weary in.

Thou a table here hast spread (Foes around may be);
Oil and wine anoint my head,
  Joy flows down from Thee.
Earth affords no resting-place,
  'Tis a desert drear,
Yet a home Thou mak'st with me,
  Lord and Saviour, here.

So I follow, joyfully,
  With my hand in thine,
Thou to me art Shield and Sun
  On my path to shine.
Though life's storms may rage around,
  And the waves roll high,
Thou, O Lord, art still with me
  For eternity.

DEACON ABRAHAM'S WORK.

Writing from Oroomiah, Persia, on June 9, Deacon Abraham tells of having held Sunday services with audiences of 300 and 400 people. The meetings were held in the open air, under the trees of the old church. The Deacon says in his letter:—

Last Wednesday while I was breakfasting with five guests from the mountains, a Moslem visited me. He said he had come from a village he named, two or three miles distant. It is the month of Ramadan, and he ate his fast with us, and was very cordial. He said he was seeking Christ. I read to him all the first chapter of John's Gospel, translating and explaining in Turkish. Having placed before him salvation in Christ only, I prayed with the man, who left to come again. He said that his mind was quite enlightened. Being a workman, and poor, I thought it likely that he would ask for some charity; this would have shown that his intentions were not right. But he asked for nothing.

Just before I commenced to write this, a poor man, a Nestorian, came to me with his three bright boys, and a note in his hand from American missionaries. He asked that I would undertake to keep the boys. He had come off a journey of twenty-one days. Though it is not my rule to receive children who have a father, or indeed, generally speaking, having a mother living, I could not help taking these poor lads as they came from such a distance. It will, I believe, be a good thing for the Gospel of our Lord in those benighted places. Will Christian friends pray for us that the Lord's work in our hands may be prospered?

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the late Rev. Canon Battersby, of Keswick.

An able article in the July Westminster Review, on "Mental Deterioration," presents facts of a somewhat startling nature. In 1859 the total number of lunatics and idiots in England was 36,762. On January 1, 1881, the number had grown to the enormous figure of 73,113, and the estimated number at the present time is 80,000. The growth is far in excess of the increase of population, and the advance is traced mainly to the use of alcoholic drinks as beverages, even when they do not produce intoxication.

The article refers also to a general agreement of authoritative writers as to mental deterioration from the use and nature of tobacco. Smoking is shown to hinder the growth and development of the higher nervous centres. The injury from this cause to youths during the developmental period is one of the most serious facts of our times. Young men urge that distinguished writers smoke: they lose sight of the probability that many more would have been distinguished had they not smoked. An experienced observer states his belief that fifty per cent. of men utterly fail, through the habit of smoking, in reaching the literary, commercial, or religious distinction which was the promise of their youth.

In view of the present movement amongst the Jews, and of their increasing disposition to "take pleasure in the stones" of Jerusalem and "favour the dust thereof," a recent report from Mr. Consul Moore on "The Trades and Industries of Jerusalem" is not without interest. Although no accurate statistics can be compiled it appears that two-thirds of the goods landed at Jaffa go to Jerusalem, which is the market for the villages of the interior, and for the Bedouins; the chief industries of the city are said to be the manufacture of a coarse soap for export to Egypt, and of "objects of devotion" in mother-of-pearl and olive wood, the annual value of these latter articles being estimated at £20,000.

The immigration of the Jews to Palestine (which has, however, been lately checked by the Turkish Government) has increased the value of land in Jerusalem sixfold; the cultivation of the vine is being carried on with fair success in Palestine, the orange trade is steadily increasing, and the traffic between Jaffa and Jerusalem has become much greater of late years. Such particulars, though to some they may appear trivial, are nevertheless noteworthy, as being possible steps in the development of God's purposes with regard to his chosen people and their land.

"Popery," it has been well said, "is baptized Paganism." Among the Egyptian antiquities—the result of Mr. Petrie's explorations in the Fayoum—now on exhibition in Piccadilly, by no means the least interesting are the two heathen Madonnas. Except that the heathen child-god is in a somewhat different position to the Papal imitation, and is represented as rather older, the figures are essentially the same as those of the Mother and Child which are such familiar objects of worship by Roman Catholics. Does not this furnish a striking practical illustration of the truth of the proposition so ably elaborated by Mr. Hislop in "The Two Babylons," that the grand objects of Romish worship, her festivals, doctrines and discipline, rites and ceremonies, are derived from Paganism. In Babylon, as he shows, a goddess mother and son, the latter represented in pictures and images as a child in his mother's arms, were the objects of supreme worship; and thence the cult spread to all parts of the earth, Egypt adoring them under the names of Isis and Osiris.

A correspondent in India writes to us:—

> I think that notice should be taken of the new move in the London produce markets, whereby a system of disguised gambling is openly countenanced and recognised by the great majority of the leading London produce brokers and merchants. I refer to the new system of business now being introduced from the Continent, whereby gambling in what is called "time bargains" will be facilitated and organised. What hope lies before us in the future, when so-called commercial operations are facilitated which lead the young men of the present day to quit the upright paths of honest commerce, as being too slow and behind the age, and not at all such as to satisfy the restless cravings of those who "make haste to be rich"?

We regard the Syren song of the so-called Larger Hope as the most mischievous, the most unreasonable, of current delusions. It is but a thinly veiled Universalism. For what is the profession of belief in the larger hope, but the profession of a belief that all will be saved? The hope that "whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap" is a lie, is surely too wild for any man to entertain. The two great hindrances to decision on the part of those who hear the Gospel are indifference and delay. To arouse men out of these the Word of God speaks with solemn threatening, earnest invitation, and urgent appeal. But what can better strengthen men in these than the delusion of "the Larger Hope"?

Rev. Dr. G. F. Pentecost arrived in London last week, accompanied by his wife and several members of his family. He proposes to spend some time in rest and travel, and hopes to commence evangelistic work in Dublin in the autumn, when Mr. Stebbins will probably join him. Letters for Dr. Pentecost should be addressed to Sunnyside, Kingswood-road, Upper Norwood, S.E.

A Conference upon Evangelical Preaching is to be held in London in November. Persons desiring to take part in the proceedings should communicate with the Rev. Dr. Newth, New College, South Hampstead, London, N.W. The Conference is to be open to all evangelical communions. Revs. Dr. Allon; Dr. S. G. Green; Dr. Clifford; J. Guinness Rogers; E. E. Jenkins; R. F. Horton; Dr. Parker; Hugh Price Hughes; Dr. Monro Gibson; Dr. Elmslie, and others, have signified their intention to be present.

We are glad to observe that in the wide range of topics on the programme of the approaching Church Congress, such practical subjects as the following are down for discussion:—Gambling and Betting; Social Purity; Demoralisation of Heathen and Uncivilised Races by the Drink Traffic; Bearing of Democracy on Church Life; the Desirableness of Reviving the Common Religious Life of Men; and the Closing of Public-houses and Opening of Libraries, &c. If adequate attention be given to such matters, the reproach of ecclesiastical assemblies will cease, viz., that they have been like men at sea who cared more about the ship's tackle than her navigation and whither she was going.

The Lambeth Episcopal Conference has at least done this—it has brought together bishops, who have added valuable information to that lately presented by the Missionary Convention. We specially note the following: Women form the key of the fortress which the Church of Christ is called to attack in India; without the enlightenment of the women the upheaval of Indian society is hopeless. India wants more ladies of high education and Christian love. Concerning the Chinese in Guiana, Dr. Austin said, They surpass in intelligence any whom I have ever met during a lengthened ministry, and the women among them, who have become Christians, reflect the warmth and zeal of the holy women of the Bible. Dr. Bickersteth, from Japan, repelled the opinion lately set forth by a writer in The Spectator that the Japanese were destitute of the religious sentiment, and said the attitude of their educated classes towards Christianity was that of respectful hesitation.

The authorised English translation of the latest Encyclical letter from the Pope, which has been published, is by no means a remarkable document, looked at from a purely literary point of view, and such a passage as the one in which it is asserted that "it is in no way lawful to demand, or to grant, unconditional freedom of thought, of speech, of writing, or of religion," comes to us like an old acquaintance. We are not surprised either when we find his Holiness speaking a kind word as to democratic forms of government, "if only the Catholic doctrine be maintained as to the origin and use of power." One cannot but be astonished, however, at the audacity of such a passage as this:—

> Neither does the Church condemn those who, if it can be done without violation of justice, wish to make their country independent of any foreign or despotic power. Nor does she blame those who wish to give to the State the power of self-government, and to its citizens the greatest measure of prosperity.

This is just the course taken by the Italians in ridding themselves of the dread incubus of that despotic government of the Papal States. Surely, in those States the Romish Church had for years unopposed rule; but no one, without wilfully ignoring the facts of history, could say that "municipal prosperity, wealth, and glory" resulted. Yet the Pope ventures to claim those things as the inevitable result of the "salutary power" of that Church, which, he says, "has always fostered civil liberty." What a pity he did not boldly point to Spain as a modern example!

While in England we are with open arms welcoming the troops of foreign monks and nuns who are invading the country, on the Continent, in Italy and France, the feeling against them appears to be intensifying. The French Senate the other day, after a debate, the adjournment of which was moved out of regard to public decency, declared urgent, by a majority of thirty-five votes—254 against 219—a Bill for the suppression of the male religious orders in France. In Italy, the Council of State has just given a decision which takes away from the Vatican that privilege of "Extraterritoriality" under which contracts undertaken within the Vatican hitherto have been regarded as performed on non-Italian soil. In future, therefore, all such agreements must be stamped by a public notary. Speaking of Italian matters, The Weekly Register says that "the Catholic cause has lost heavily in the chief cities in Italy following the example of Rome," Lucca being noteworthy as being on the side of "the very small minority electing a Catholic Municipal Council."

If any unprejudiced person has still a lingering idea that the race-course in any way contributes to the good of the community, such an idea will surely have been dispelled by the recent libel case, in which a jockey, with an income as large as that of a Chancellor of the Exchequer, was plaintiff. Yet many of the daily papers, whilst containing on one page leaders commenting adversely upon race-course morality, on another devote ample space to pandering to the vicious wants of the betting public. A bishop once told some working men at a Church Congress that betting was "a damnable practice;" and assuredly no language can be too strong in condemning this growing social evil, which is corrupting the most innocent pastimes, and ruining hundreds of men and youths. It is high time for the legislature—which, however, contains many owners of racehorses and patrons of the turf"—to apply the knife to the root of the sore by rigorously forbidding the daily publication of betting "odds" and racing news.

Mr. John Law, the author of a recent book called "Out of Work," which is creating considerable interest, as a dark, yet true picture of the miseries of the thousands of unemployed (amongst whom he has himself lived), in a long letter to The Morning Post, says:—

> One of the saddest aspects of the "unemployed" question is the fact that so many children now inherit their parents' drinking habits....Instead of the men working to support the women, the women must now support the men, and both must only too often depend on the labour of little children....The evils of enforced idleness are even now undermining the whole of society by spreading discontent, drunkenness, and dissolute habits. I am intimately acquainted with the capitals of Europe, and I say with sorrow, but conviction, that the condition of the poor is worse in London than in any other European city....I consider that the present state of the London poor gives the lie to our nineteenth century Christianity. The curses of a million men out of work, mingled with the tears of the women and the cries of the children, are rising up to our confusion here, and will rise up to our condemnation hereafter.

We fear there is too much truth in these words. The great problem of how best to meet the requirements of the deserving poor without demoralising industry, enriching imposture, or encouraging improvidence, is yet unsolved; and it is complicated by the fact that "the unemployed" are composed not only of the workless, but also of the worthless, and the thriftless. But it is becoming more and more evident that no remedy can be real or lasting which is not based upon a true application of the principles of justice and love, as laid down in the New Testament. The Sermon on the Mount is not yet obsolete, as Mr. Francis Peek has pointed out. The moral condition of "the masses" must be raised; the body must be touched through the soul; and this can only be done by "individual contact with individual souls;" by the free outpouring of human love and sympathy.

Notwithstanding our boasted civilisation and advancement, the most cruel social abuses are still rife amongst us. At the recent Salford Hundred Sessions, a report was read from one of the Inspectors of Prisons, which disclosed a disgraceful want of humanity and decency in the accommodation for prisoners awaiting trial at the Manchester City Court. It was stated that in a room measuring twenty-one feet by fifteen as many as thirty men were habitually placed, and twenty women in a room measuring fifteen feet by fourteen feet. The rooms used for male prisoners sentenced or under remand are about eighteen feet by fifteen feet, and for females eighteen feet by eight feet:—

> In one of these (says the inspector) I saw thirty-seven men huddled together, some sitting, others standing or leaning against the iron bars, looking out, talking and muttering words to one another that sounded very like oaths. In the middle of this crowd was a soldier in uniform, standing as far from the others as he could. In the women's room there were eighteen associated. The whole scene reminded one of the barred cages at the Zoological Society's gardens occupied by the lions and tigers, with the difference that the wild animals are far better off. As many as forty or fifty men and from twenty to thirty women occupy these rooms at a time.

It further appears from this report that the present accommodation in the cells of the Metropolitan and City Police Courts is extremely defective, and that Manchester, Liverpool, Hull, and Sheffield—four of the wealthiest towns in the kingdom—have the unenviable distinction of providing the worst, the local authorities having for the last two years disregarded all representations made to them on the subject. Even the most evil offenders against law and order are not to be treated like brutes and herded together like cattle; and to subject those who have made but the first, and perhaps a slight, step downwards, to indiscriminate contact with hardened and depraved characters cannot but have demoralising results, and make the work of reclamation and reformation more difficult. It is high time that the persons or bodies responsible for such scandals as are above described, should, even on the lowest grounds, be compelled to abate them forthwith.

The discussion in the House of Lords on East Central Africa has served a good purpose in drawing public attention to the serious dangers to which, by reason of recent events at Zanzibar and on the Zambesi, British commerce and missionary enterprise are now exposed, and also in eliciting from the Government a declaration of its intention to protect these interests. The civilising and Christianising of this vast tract of country must, as the Prime Minister intimated, be mainly the work of individuals and private organisations; but these agencies have a right to demand that the Government shall render them all possible legitimate and peaceful assistance and protection, and especially shall do all that honourable statesmanship can do in suppressing the cursed spirit-selling and slave-hunting, the latter of which is said to be now displaying renewed vitality. The assurances of Lord Salisbury on this point were on the whole satisfactory, but the official attention having now been roused on this subject it must not be permitted to slumber again. Readers of Prof. Drummond's "Central Africa" will remember that he recommends that as a means of pacifying the whole Equatorial region a firm and uncompromising stand should be taken at Zanzibar, which is one of the keys of the situation.

That Germany is not too much engrossed with the maintenance of a huge and burdensome military system to concern herself with schemes for the practical welfare of her working population, is evidenced by a Bill recently drawn up for making provision for workpeople who may become incapacitated by age or illness. The system proposed is one of compulsory insurance, the necessary funds being provided: (1) By State assessment, (2) by premiums paid by employers, (3) by payments from the employed, each man paying twopence halfpenny per week, and each woman one penny three farthings. Every man becoming invalided will receive an annual allowance of £6, and every woman £4, the pensions of aged workpeople commencing at the age of seventy-one with an allowance of £9. If some such scheme could be established amongst ourselves, it would not only be beneficial in encouraging those habits of thrift in which we are as a nation deficient, but it would be the means of saving many an honest and deserving man or woman, who is no longer able to work, from the justly dreaded and abhorred workhouse.

A Y.M.C.A. OUTING.

THOSE who think that English Christians cannot enjoy themselves, or must take their pleasures sadly, should have been one of the party that sailed from Temple Pier to Richmond last Saturday. The occasion was the annual competition of the Y.M.C.A. Rowing Club, on the course from Putney to Hammersmith. Four crews, representing Aldersgate-street and Exeter Hall, started in the race, and each did its best to win. The crew that looked like winning came in last, however, mainly, as it seemed, through injudicious steering. This incident, though unpleasant to those concerned, may read a lesson to all for the time to come.

The sail up the Thames was beguiled by much friendly converse, and was greatly enjoyed. Richmond being reached, an adjournment was made to Petersham Park, where an ample tea, laid in a tent, was discussed. At the close, Mr. R. Burn presented the prizes to the winning crew, besides other prizes to those who had won in previous competitions during the season. He added some kind and impressive words on the vital importance of being in the race whose goal is "the exceeding weight of glory." Everybody joined in heartily thanking Mr. Putterill, who had arranged the happy outing. The return trip down stream to London was pleasantly and safely made.

HOMELESS AND DESTITUTE.—The address of the Boys' London Home and the Secretary's Offices is now Shaftesbury House, Shaftesbury Avenue, New Oxford-street, W.C. All communications to be addressed as above, to Mr. William Williams, secretary.

THE LAND OF HUSS.—A long-needed and much-neglected work has been inaugurated in Prague, Bohemia, by the establishment of a Home for Fallen Women. The institution only provides accommodation for four inmates, but such is the weakness of the moral conscience of the region, the little Home must, in some measure at least, be a charge upon the Christian community in general. The president of the committee is Mrs. A. W. Clark, 280, Smichov, Prague.

CAROGH ORPHANAGE.—The twenty-second report of this Home, with its associated crèche, at Naas, county Kildare, shows that the management is as successful as the object is admirable. There are at present twenty-four children in the Institution, and they are instructed in the truths of religion, as well as educated to fill useful positions in life. The accounts show a deficit of £172, out of the pocket of the manager, Rev. S. G. Cotton, whose address is Carogh Glebe House, Naas.

ABRAHAM: GOD'S FRIEND.

By Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

XIX.—A Bit of the Old Nature.

Gen. xx.

For long years an evil may lurk in our hearts, permitted and unjudged, breeding failure and sorrow in our lives, as some unnoticed and forgotten sewer may secretly undermine the health of an entire household. In the twilight we overlook many a thing which we should not allow for a single moment if we saw it in its true character; and which, amid the all-revealing light of the perfect day, we shall be the first to fling away in horror. But that which escapes our ken is patent in all its naked deformity to the eye of God. "The darkness and the light are both alike to Him." And He will so direct the discipline of our lives as to set in clear prominence the deadly evil which He hates; so that, when He has unbared the cancerous growth, He may bring us to long for and invite the knife which shall set us free from it for ever.

These words have been suggested by the 13th verse of this chapter, which indicates an evil compact, into which Abraham had entered with Sarah some thirty years before the time of which we write. Addressing the king of the Philistines, the patriarch let fall a hint which sheds a startling light upon his failure, when first he entered the Land of Promise, and, under stress of famine, went down into Egypt; and upon that repetition of his failure which we are now considering. Here is what he said: "And it came to pass, when God caused me to wander from my father's house, that I said unto my wife, This is thy kindness which thou shalt show unto me; at every place whither we shall come, say of me, He is my brother."

In a certain sense, no doubt, Sarah was his sister. She was the daughter of his father, though not the daughter of his mother. But she was much more his wife than his sister; and to withhold that fact was to withhold the one fact that was essential to the maintenance of his honour, and the protection of her virtue. We are not bound to tell the whole truth to gratify an idle curiosity; but we are bound not to withhold the one item, which another should know before completing a bargain, if the knowledge of it would materially alter the result. A lie consists in the motive quite as much as in the actual words. We may unwittingly say that which is actually false, meaning above all things to speak the truth, and, though a lie in form, there is no lie in fact. On the other hand, like Abraham, we may utter true words, meaning them to convey a false impression, and, in the sight of Heaven, we are guilty of a deliberate and damning untruth.

This secret compact between Abraham and his wife, in the earliest days of his exodus, was due to his slender faith in God's power to take care of them, which again sprang from his limited experience of his Almighty Friend. In this we may find its sole excuse. But it ought long before this to have been cancelled by mutual consent. The faithless treaty should have been torn into shreds, and scattered to the winds of heaven. It was not enough that they did not act on it for many years, for it was evidently still in existence, tacitly admitted by each of them, and only waiting for an emergency to arise from the dusty obscurity into which it had receded, and to come again into light and use.

But the existence of this hidden understanding, though perhaps Abraham did not realise it, was inconsistent with the relation into which he had now entered with God. It was altogether a source of weakness and failure. And, above all, it was a secret flaw in his faith, which would inevitably affect its tone, and destroy its effectiveness in the dark trials which were approaching. God could afford to pass it over in those early days, when faith itself was yet in germ; but it could not be permitted, when that faith was reaching to a maturity in which any flaw would be instantly detected, and would be an unsuitable example in one who was to become the model of faith to the world.

The judgment and eradication of this lurking evil were therefore necessary, and were brought about in this wise.

The day before Sodom's fall, the Almighty told Abraham that, at a set time in the following year, he should have a son and heir. And we should have expected that he would have spent the slow moving months beneath the oak of Mamre, already hallowed by so many associations. But such was not the case. It has been suggested that he was too horrified at the overthrow of the cities of the plain to be able to remain any longer in the vicinity. All further association with the spot was distasteful to him. Or it may have been that another famine was threatening. But in any case "he journeyed from thence toward the south country, and dwelled between Kadesh and Shur, and sojourned in Gerar."

Gerar was the capital of a race of men who had dispossessed the original inhabitants of the land, and were gradually passing from the wandering shepherd life into that of a settled and warlike nation; afterwards to be known to the Hebrews by the dreaded name, Philistines. A title which, in fact, gave to the whole land its name of Palestine. Their chieftain bore the official title of Abimelech, "My Father the King."

Here, the almost forgotten agreement between Sarah and himself offered itself as a ready expedient, behind which his unbelief took shelter. He knew the ungoverned licence of his time, unbridled by the fear of God (ver. 11). He dreaded, lest the heathen monarch, enamoured with Sarah's beauty, or ambitious to get her into his power for purposes of State policy, might slay him for his wife's sake. And so he resorted to the paltry policy of calling her his sister. As if God could not have defended him and her, screening them from all evil; as He had done so often in days gone by.

His conduct was very cowardly.—He risked Sarah's virtue, and the purity of the promised seed. And, even if we accept the justification of his conduct proposed by some, who argue that he was so sure of the seed promised him by God that he could dare to risk what otherwise he would have more carefully guarded, his faith leading him into the licence of presumption, yet, it was surely very mean on his part to permit Sarah to pass through any ordeal of the sort. If he had such superabundant faith, he might have risked his own safety at the hand of Abimelech rather than Sarah's virtue.

It was also very dishonouring to God.—Amongst those untutored tribes Abraham was well known as the servant of Jehovah. And they could not but judge of the character of Him whom they could not see, by the traits they discerned in his servant, whom they kne in familiar intercourse. Alas! that Abraha standard was lower than their own; so mu so that Abimelech was able to rebuke hi saying, "Thou hast brought on me and m people a great sin. Thou hast done unto deeds that ought not to be done." Such a opinion, elicited in such a way, must have be an unpropitious preparation for any attempt so," we can hear him saying, "I have h

some experience of one of its foremost rep sentatives, and I prefer to remain as I am."

It is heart-breaking, when the heath

And you, on the other hand, who aspire for he crown of saintliness, to which ye are truly alled, take heart. There is nothing which God has done for any soul that He will not do or you. And there is no soil so unpromising hat He will not compel it to yield his fairest esults. "What is impossible to man is possible to God." Only put your will on God's ide. Yield to Him without reserve. Cease from your own works, and keep always on God's "lift," refusing each solicitation to step ff its ascending energy, or to do for yourself what He will do for you so much better than you can ask or think.

Let us ponder, as we close, these practical essons:—

(1) We are never safe so long as we are in this world.—Abraham was an old man. Thirty years had passed since that sin had shown itself last. During that time he had been growing and learning much. But, alas! the snake was scotched, not killed. The weeds were cut down, not eradicated. The dry-rot had been checked, but the rotten timbers had not been cut away. Never boast yourself against once-cherished sins; only by God's grace are they kept in check; and if you cease to abide in Christ, they will revive and revisit you, as the seven sleepers of Ephesus re-appeared to the panic-stricken town.

(2) We have no right to throw ourselves into he way of the temptation which has often mastered us.—Those who daily cry, "Lead us not into temptation," should see to it that they do not court the temptation against which they pray. We must not expect angels to catch us every time we choose to cast ourselves from the mountain brow. A godly fear will avoid the perilous pass marked by crosses to indicate the failures of the past, and will choose a safer route. Abraham had been wiser had he never gone into the Philistines' territory at all.

(3) We may be encouraged by God's treatment of Abraham's sin.—Although God had a secret controversy with his child, He did not put him away. And when his wife and he were in extreme danger, as the result of his sin, their Almighty Friend stepped in to deliver them from the peril which menaced them. "He reproved kings for their sakes, saying, Touch not my anointed, and do my prophets no harm." He told Abimelech that he was a dead man, arrested him by the ministry of an ominous disease, and bade him apply to the intercession of the very man by whom he had been so grievously misled, and who, in spite of all his failures, was a prophet still, having power with God.

Have you sinned, bringing disrepute on the name of God? Do not despair. Go alone, as Abraham must have done, and confess your sin with tears and childlike trust. Do not abandon prayer. Your prayers are still sweet to Him, and He waits to answer them. It is only through them that his purposes can be fulfilled toward men. Trust, then, in the patience and forgiveness of God, and let his love, as consuming fire, rid you of concealed and hidden sin.

"THE POLAR REGIONS."—Mr. James N. Tait, seamen's missionary, Dundee, writes to us, contradicting the report mentioned in our last issue that the Queen of the Dart whaling vessel would leave some of her crew at Davis Straits to found a mission among the Esquimaux.

XVI.—CATCHING MEN.

AN officer of the army who had retired from active service, and it would appear from Christian work also, built for himself a house by the sea-side. I say he had retired from Christian work, because he used to hold meetings and Bible-readings, but had discontinued them.

It so happened that he and his wife were invited to a drawing-room address which I had been asked to give in their locality. They came to it and were much impressed, so much so that they stayed behind, not to refresh themselves with a cup of tea, but for the purpose of having conversation.

The Colonel coming up to me said, "How are we to catch men? You have brought before me a new thought this afternoon as to catching men, to live."

"Such," I said, "is the import of the Greek word in the text. Natural fish are caught to be killed, whereas men should be caught to live."

"But how," repeated the Colonel, "are we to catch them? I used to have meetings and Bible-readings too, but people did not care to come to them. What more could I do?"

I replied, "Your story is very like that in the Gospel. We read in the fifth chapter of St. Luke, that Peter toiled all night and took nothing; but after the Lord came upon the scene, the result was different.

"Finding the ship empty (for the fishermen were gone out of it) the Lord took command. Tired as the fishermen were, He said to them, 'Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught.' (See Luke v. 4.) They were not told to let down their nets in the hope of getting something perchance; but for the definite purpose of getting a draught of fishes."

"Yes," said the Colonel, "I see that that is a point very often overlooked. We do not sufficiently expect result; but rather wonder when we have it."

I continued, "Peter and his partner had gone out the night before in their own wisdom, and at their own bidding. This is why they failed. The next time they went, it was in the sunshine of day with the Lord's presence, and at His word. Do you see the difference?"

"Yes," said the Colonel, "You mean that when Peter commanded the ship, he took nothing; but when the Lord was Master, the net could not hold together for the multitude of fishes that were in it."

"That is my meaning," I replied. "The world is a deep sea, and when we launch out into the deep to win souls we have to go against the god of this world. Obviously for this work we need a power and presence greater than that of Satan."

"When we preach the Gospel, it is not merely to enlighten people and get them to understand the plan of salvation; but to compel them to come to Christ. For the accomplishment of this great work we require what the Lord calls a net. You do not put bait before fish without a hook, nor do you expect to catch fish by persuading them to come to you." The Colonel laughed and said, "That is what I have been doing, and they would not come; but tell me about the net and the hook."

I replied, "You must so arrange your words as to bring conviction upon the souls you are speaking to. When they are thus convicted by the word of the Spirit, they will yield, or if they get away, it will be with a barbed harpoon in them.

"It is the Lord's will that you should catch men, let that suffice. Let Him come into the empty ship; let Him be Captain. That is, put yourself wholly under Him."

"Thank you," said the Colonel.

Soon after this we heard, that the house by the sea-side was sold, and that the Colonel and his wife had removed to a more populous place.

Their new house was opened in the name o the Lord, and for the good of as many people as they could reach. It was the Colonel's desire and intention to be a winner of souls. He set his whole heart upon this object, and expected the Lord to crown the work with his presence and blessing.

For many years that was the one desire of his life, and, his eye being single for God's glory, success has followed him in every place; sometimes more and sometimes less, but continually he has received blessing and encouragement in his labour of love.

The question may be asked, why should he, being a layman, undertake such work?

I would reply, It should be the work of every believer to win souls, and only laymen who can do this should be set apart or ordained to a more accredited ministry. Too often we see that men are appointed to the office as ministers of the Gospel who are not thus qualified, and laymen who have no such official position doing the work.

The primary object of ministry should be to bring souls to God. If it fails in this, it is unprofitable.

Saul of Tarsus, when first converted, was but a layman, and upon his surrendering himself to God, saying, "Lord, what wouldst Thou have me to do?" he was told to rise and stand upon his feet, and was made a minister and witness of the things he had seen. The command laid upon him was to open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan to God, that they might receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith." (See Acts xxvi. 16, 18.) He spent his whole life in this service.

Our friend the Colonel saw that the opening of eyes exactly corresponded with the first work of the Spirit which is to bring conviction upon the sinner—in other words to let down the net.

Previously he had been labouring to impart light and give knowledge; but this knowledge did not convict or apprehend anyone. There was no hook, or harpoon, or net in the work, consequently it failed. But now, acting according to the word of the Lord, success follows; and the Colonel is the centre of continued blessing.

CONNEMARA ORPHANS' NURSERY.—The report for last year gives an encouraging account of work at Ballycouree and Glenowen. The boys and girls are practically instructed, as well as carefully trained, and there has already been much evidence of real good resulting to those who have been inmates. The enlargement of the girls' nursery, Glenowen, which has for some time been a very pressing matter, is now to be proceeded with. The cost will be about £200 more than the sum at present at the command of the Committee, and an appeal has been issued for special contributions. The hon. secretary is Dowager Lady Lighton, The Cottage, Broekhampton, Ross, Herefordshire.

VINE-STREET JEWISH MISSION.—This Mission is the outcome of labour amongst the Jews for many years. The honorary secretary, Mr. Colin Young, has for nearly fourteen years given the Lord's Day to this work in Houndsditch and the neighbouring districts, discussing with the people and distributing the Gospels. He has had no meeting-place but the street, nor shelter but in a shop or house if invited to enter. Last year, however, one missionary and then another attached themselves to him, premises had to be provided, and funds secured, to meet the necessary expenditure. The treasurer, Mr. F. W. N. Lloyd, of Bromley House, Bromley, Kent, kindly supplied the means for the year's support of the first missionary, who has a wife and family. Other demands are pressing at present, as many poor young Jews come to the Mission asking food and shelter. The mission-room is at 4, Vine-street, Minories, E.C. Meetings with inquirers are held every afternoon, and a Bible-class every Lord's Day from 3 p.m. Gospels and Testaments are given to the Jews on the streets, in their homes, and in the mission-room. Every effort is made to get employment for the young Jews. The address of the hon. secretary, Mr. Young, is 7, Adelaide-road, N.W.

AMERICAN NOTES.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

It is reported of General Bidwell, a California millionaire, that at one time he was engaged in the manufacture of wine; but, seeing the evil effects of this business, he ploughed up his vines, gave away what wine he had on hand to a San Francisco charitable institution, binding the directors to the pledge that it should be used only for medical purposes, and gave up all connection with its further manufacture. General Bidwell is now a prominent worker in the Prohibition cause, and was one of the delegates to the great Prohibition Convention, recently held at Indianopolis.

. . . .

Notwithstanding the many exposures of Rome's assumptions, her agents are neither asleep nor inactive. The Jesuits are securing scholars from the families of senators and representatives, and their college at Georgetown, near Washington, D.C., is well patronised by the heads of Government.

. . . .

Cardinal Gibbons recently laid the cornerstone of the new Catholic University at Washington. Respecting the aims of the University, Bishop Ireland, of St. Paul, said:—

> The faculty will be from within the Church, and the influences thrown around those who enter this school will be distinctly Catholic. I am frank to say the purpose of the University is to build up and strengthen the Church in this country, and the Church will remain prominent in all the great work of the school.

When the nunnery schools make bids for Protestant girls, disclaiming any intention to proselytise, the meek sisters nevertheless remain faithful daughters of the Church. The first gift, for this first Catholic University in the United States, of 300,000 dollars was contributed by the daughter of a Protestant, brought up at the feet of the nuns in a convent school. It is the old story of the spider and the fly.

. . . .

Meantime Monsignor Bouland, formerly Canon of St. Michael the Archangel, Rome; President of the Avocats de Pierre, in North America; Member of the Academy des Arcades, Rome; Canon of the Metropolitan Church at Rheims; Commander of the Order of the Holy Sepulchre; and Private Chamberlain to Pope Leo XIII., has written a rather startling letter to His Holiness announcing his decision to withdraw from the Roman faith. His letter, dated from New York, thus closes:—

> My decision to withdraw from the Roman Church is not a thought of recent origin. It is the mature result of convictions forced upon me during my travels in both hemispheres, and of my study for ten years of the chief religious and social questions which agitate our time—questions to which the Christian Fathers furnish solutions wholly at variance with the Syllabus and policy of the Ultramontane Court.

Monsignor Bouland has joined the Protestant Episcopal Church, but neither this step nor his respectful letter to Father Leo has shielded him from violent attacks on the part of Romanists. Archbishop Corrigan having questioned the validity of his titles, Bouland's reply has thus far silenced the enemy.

While penning these lines, a brother minister from Colorado called on me, and gave a very stirring description of the proselytism done by Romish schools and agents in that and other western States. Large numbers of Protestant girls attend these schools, and become converts to Rome. On one occasion no less than seventy girls were at the Denver railroad depôt waiting for their respective trains, going to different Romish schools throughout the State, nearly all of whom were members of Protestant families. They were carefully chaperoned by lay sisters of the said Church. There is now a movement on foot on the part of the Baptists to build a female college at Denver, based on the Word of God, akin to the Northfield Seminary.

It has been already publicly hinted at by Romanists that as the seat of Government may eventually move westward towards the geographical centre of the country, all the great Government buildings, Capitol and White House, at Washington, will come into the hands of the Romish hierachy. Many of course regard this dream on their part a wild and impossible hope. But the fact that such an utterance has been given publicly at least indicates the intense aggressiveness of Jesuitism in this country.

. . . .

Grover Cleveland has been re-nominated for the Presidency of the United States by the Democratic party. Gen. Benjamin Harrison, of Indianapolis, has been nominated by the Republicans. It is the writer's privilege to have a personal acquaintance with Gen. Harrison. He is a thorough Christian gentleman. An elder of the Presbyterian Church, a teacher of a Bible-class, and an earnest, active worker for the Master, he has proved himself to be more than a merely nominal Church member. At present no infidel could be elected to the Presidency; the voice of the majority is for the recognition of religion. But what a change it will be if the good hand of God places such a noble man and devoted Christian, as Gen. Harrison, at the head of this great nation; a man who is not only religious, but evangelical and spiritual. As much can be said of Gen. Fisk, the nominee of the Prohibition party, who is well known to many Christians in Great Britain.

. . . . .

Summer schools for Bible study are multiplying all over this broad land. Evangelists are chiefly the leaders in co-operation with aggressive pastors, and Y.M.C.A. workers. Our honoured brother, Mr. Moody, leads at Northfield, Dr. Munhall at Ocean Grove, Messrs. Erdman at Niagara, Mr. G. C. Needham at Denver, Colorado, &c. The doctrines made specially prominent are the Atonement of Christ, the person and work of the Spirit, the Inspiration and Power of the Bible, and the Second Coming of our Lord. Of course other aspects of truth and plans of work are discussed.

. . . . .

The marvellous volunteering of students for the foreign missionary field seemed in danger of cessation through lack of funds, the various Boards being already overburdened. But the golden link is forthcoming in large measure from the very colleges which have already given the students. The contributions from class-mates are considerable, and may well put to shame many of our wealthy Church members whose interest in mission work is not so intense as might be expected. When all the colleges are heard from there will be a splendid total. Besides, what an experience of self-denial on the part of the boys and girls does this movement demonstrate.

REV. DANIEL GUNN has given a series of Bible-readings during the past week at the daily prayer meeting of the Central Y.M.C.A., Exeter Hall. The meetings have been largely attended and much appreciated.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.—At the noon-day prayer-meeting on Monday last at the Y.M.C.A.' 186, Aldersgate-street, Dr. Barnardo attended with thirty-four lads, about to leave for Canada. This is the last party to cross the water this year, and it is gratifying to know that a number of the lads have made confession of Christ. Dr. Barnardo stated that there are now 2570 children under his care. During the past twenty-two years 11,381 children have been received into the Homes, and more or less prepared for the battle of life. During the past twelve months a larger number of the children have accepted Christ as their Saviour than has been the case in any similar period previously. On an average Dr. Barnardo now receives two letters daily from lads in various parts of the world, either stating that they have found the Lord, or that they are "abiding in Christ."

INQUIRERS' COLUMN.

IMPUTED RIGHTEOUSNESS.

Dear Sir,—In your issue of July 13 your correspondent, "A. S. A." asks two questions on the above subject, which, in my judgment, are worth asking and answering. The phrase, "The imputed righteousness of Christ," as far as I am aware, is nowhere to be found in Scripture. And Christ's righteousness is never said to be imputed or reckoned to us. It is faith which is imputed for righteousness. See Romans iv. 3—9; Gal. iii. 6; James ii. 23.

Imputation really means the reckoning of the consequences of another's act to us. Thus the consequences of Adam's transgression are reckoned to us, and the consequences of Christ's righteousness are reckoned to the believer. This is, I believe, the Scriptural teaching of imputation.

If I should be in error on this point, nothing will please me better than to be put right by some kind friend.

Mr. Wesley takes it as another way of denying human merit, and affirming that we are justified solely for Christ's sake. I thank you for having in the corner of your paper an Inquirers' Column.

Oldham. P. E. M.

[Other communications on this subject have also reached us; some of them are too long, and others irrelevant. We shall be glad to receive communications discussing and expounding this subject in a brotherly and scriptural way.]

BISHOPS AND TEMPERANCE.

The Bishops of the Anglican Communion attending the Lambeth Conference breakfasted one morning last week as the guests of the Council and Executive of the Church of England Temperance Society. The Bishop of London presided over the proceedings. Several speakers referred to the world-wide character of the temperance movement, and its importance seemed to be fully appreciated.

The Bishop of Sydney moved a resolution maintaining that the importation of spirituous liquors from England and other European countries is having a disastrous effect upon native races in the colonies and dependencies of the British Empire. He urged the formation of diocesan branches of the C.E.T.S., and said it was absolutely impossible to exaggerate the disastrous effects of the liquor traffic. The Bishop of Cork, in seconding, advocated the combination of temperance with thrift associations. The Bishop of Zululand said that the chief of his diocese woke up some years ago to find that the nation was fast degenerating into a race of drunkards, but influence was brought to bear, and a crusade was preached by a native chief, and now the people may be said to have obtained a new lease of life. The resolution was adopted.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND BOOK SOCIETY.—Mr. F. A. Bevan presided over the annual meeting of this Society, held last week. A very useful branch of the Society's work is that of making free grants of theological books to poor clergy and missionaries in the colonies and foreign lands. Last year grants of this kind amounted in value to £2752. Mr. Bevan said he wished all evangelical Churchmen would make themselves acquainted with the Society's operations. Mr. F. P. de Labilliere and Sir John Coode also testified to the increasing importance of the Society's work.

EAST CENTRAL AFRICA.—Dr. Smythies, Bishop of the Universities' Mission to Central Africa, complains strongly, in a letter to The Times, of the way in which German influence has been allowed to spread in the country lying to the north of Zanzibar. The Universities' Mission was founded on the faith that English influence would continue paramount, but suddenly, not long ago, the German Government began to exercise a protectorate. The Bishop says:—"We only ask to be left free to minister to the people whom we love and among whom our mission has worked so long, and that that influence in restraining violence which has hitherto been used for the good of the people by the Sultan of Zanzibar, at the suggestion of Her Majesty's Consul, should still be used for that end. Failing that, we would ask why, when Germany claims a free hand in an enormous territory of thousands of square miles, it should not be granted that the line of demarcation which delimits British influence be drawn some thirty or forty miles lower down, so as to include this country in which English missionaries are the only European residents of any kind."

MILDMAY PARK CONFERENCE.

SMALLER GATHERINGS.

Bible and Prayer Union.

THE first gathering in the tent on Thursday afternoon was in connection with this Union. Mr. ROBERT PATON, who has been a member ince it was organised in 1876, presided. He aid it had been a great help to him, when eading the chapter day by day, to know that housands of others, the wide world over, had heir thoughts concentrated upon the same passage. Light was constantly thrown upon God's Word in a remarkable way; this was, no doubt, a result of the united and often simultaneous prayers which ascend to the throne of grace. If ever there were a time when men needed to study the Scripture, it is in these days, when so much doubt is cast upon it. It s not to books about the Bible that we want to go to find out whether it is divinely inspired, but to the pure and undiluted Word of God tself. By diligent meditation upon it, we find hat there are the same unchangeable truths running right through; and, by close and constant study, we are brought into direct communion with the living and Divine Author Himself.

Rev. T. S. WYNKOOP, of Washington, U.S., Secretary of the American Branch of the Union, n the course of a somewhat lengthy address, aid: I come to you with fraternal greeting, n the name of nearly fifty-thousand members of the American Branch of the Bible and Prayer Union. We have been reading with you day by day, the same chapters of the Bible; we have been quickened by your prayers for us, and it has been our happiness to pray for you. And so our hearts are closely bound to you in this beautiful fellowship of Bible study and prayer. We believe with you, that the Bible, from beginning to end, is the Word of God, inspired of the Holy Ghost. We recognise that the nfallible interpreter of God's Word is his Holy Spirit, whose guidance and wisdom are promised to all who ask in the name of Christ. It is our experience that, in connection with the Bible and Prayer Union, we have enjoyed some of the most helpful Bible studies, and some of the sweetest scenes of communion with God, which we have ever known. Reference was made to other organisations more recently commenced, and working upon lines similar to those of the Bible and Prayer Union, and especially the plan of daily home readings in connection with the International S.S. Lessons, which are used in nearly all the Sunday-schools n the United States and Canada.

There are many, said the speaker, to whom the associations of the Union are of peculiar value. Out on a ranche in Colorado is a young man, far from home, and surrounded by influences uncongenial to spiritual life. The nearest church is sixty miles away; Christian associates he has none. What a great thing it is for him to open his Bible day by day in the solitudes of those far-spreading plains, and feel the touch of a hundred thousand souls praying God to bless that chapter to his personal need. In the woods of Northern Michigan is a young civil engineer, the only Christian among a party who are marking out the lines of a railway that shall penetrate the wilderness. What a help to him that his card of the Bible and Prayer Union points out the particular chapter he is to read, and calls him to prayer, perhaps in some moment of quiet during the busy day; or it may be at night, when his comrades have retired to rest, and the fading light of the camp fire loses itself amid the deep recesses of the forest. On the frontier in Texas, in one of those godless towns which may be found here and there upon the outskirts of civilisation, a Christian physician is the only man, so far as he knows, who loves the Lord and reads the Bible. A letter was lately received from one of our members in the South Sea Islands, whose only communication with the world is by the annual visit of the mission ship. The card for 1887 did not reach her until the month of August, and her reply, written immediately, was not received until the following May. In consequence of the delay, she says, they got astray in their reading. "We thought you would not attempt Psalm cxix. at one reading, so we took it up by sections; but we have made up, and are with you again." She adds: "I have been but a year in the mission, leaving my home in Boston, Mass., in 1886, and am but twenty-three years of age. But I am looking forward with a joyous heart to the many years which, God willing, I hope to give to Him on this field." Such are some of our noble associates in this Union of Bible and Prayer. Is it not a privilege and an honour to be identified with them in this hallowed fellowship?

Mr. BARNETT, of Rosario, Argentine Republic, opened a branch of the Union two or three years ago at Rosario, which has about a hundred members, and is gradually growing in size. Many in South America rejoice at the existence of the Union, and find it very useful in keeping them steady in their reading of the Bible. A minister from the south of Ireland mentioned that the agents of the Irish Evangelisation Society are endeavouring to push forward the movement at every place where they hold missions, and are meeting with a fair amount of success.

Rev. THOMAS RICHARDSON, the originator of the Union, gave some account of the early history of the movement. It would now be difficult to find in the whole world a country where there are not earnest and faithful members of the Union. It has penetrated to at least one place where no missionary ever went—to Pitcairn Island. The people on this island were all brought to the knowledge of the truth through a single copy of the Bible, left there by a passing boat, and now nearly all the adult population are members of the Bible and Prayer Union. There may be counted among its members daughters of savage chiefs in Central Africa, inmates of workhouses and penitentiaries, and princes and princesses in royal palaces. Mr. Richardson urged members to introduce the movement to the notice of their friends so as to extend it as far as possible. A gentleman from South America, staying in one of the large hotels in London, a few days back spoke to one of the waiters, who was a Christian; he asked him if he was a member of the Union, and immediately on the man having his attention directed to it he sent in his name for membership. The Union has stimulated study, teaching, and preaching; it has instrumentally revived and converted many, and has been the means of inspiring several to go abroad as missionaries. Friends wishing to join should send their name and address, together with a penny stamp, to Rev. Thomas Richardson, vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., when a card of membership (which gives the calendar of chapters for the year) will be forwarded.

Christian Police Association.

At the close of the Prayer Union meeting, the tent was taken possession of by this Association, the chairman being Rev. E. W. MOORE, of Wimbledon. Mr. A. B. STONEY described the work carried on by the Association. It has been in existence for five years, during which the work has been wondrously blessed, and has prospered beyond all expectation. It is a distinctly spiritual agency, its one object being to reach the unsaved, and to help the men of the force in their Christian life. The Association has about 170 branches scattered over the United Kingdom, with a membership of over 4000. The work, through the active efforts of Christian friends, has also spread to Singapore, Tasmania, South Africa, and other colonies. It is almost impossible for the police to attend the usual means of grace in churches or chapels, being generally on duty during the hours of service, so that it is necessary to hold special meetings and Bible-classes for them at times when they are at liberty. The speaker concluded with an earnest appeal to friends to pray for the policemen, and to help them in every possible way.

General Sir ROBERT PHAYRE, as an old Indian soldier, said that since he had retired from active service he had always taken the warmest interest in the policemen, especially because many of them are old soldiers. The CHAIRMAN gave some good practical advice to those intending to undertake Christian work. The subject of this year's Conference was "Progress"; as the policeman repeatedly cries, "Move on!" so it is the duty of Christians to move on, and all who have been called through grace should be actively engaged in labour for the Lord.

Several bright and interesting testimonies followed from members of the force—inspectors, sergeants, and constables. One of the latter said he was converted through being spoken to by a lady while on duty at the south door of the Conference Hall a couple of years ago. Miss GRENFELL, of Swansea, who is interested in the welfare of the policemen, gave practical hints and suggestions to the ladies present how they might favour the work of the association by sending them Christian periodicals monthly, getting a little cottage here and there, where the men might meet when off duty, read, and attend Bible classes. She had little garden parties to which she invited the men, who were ready to appreciate any kind attention shown them. To her there was no more pleasant Christian work than that among the police.

Rev. THEODORE MONOD, in some closing words, remarked that people generally considered the policemen as so many lamp-posts at the corners of the streets. We should remember what we owe to them as the guardians of society. There are many Christians who practise only one text, "Do thyself no harm." There is no self-denial in their religion, and no true interest in others. People go about saying, "What can I do?" You do not need many contrivances to find out what to do if the love of Christ is in the heart. Good policemen have grand opportunities for evangelising. They can get down to the most miserable and the lowest—doing their duty as policemen, yet trying to lift these poor victims of sin and crime out of their sin and guilt. Let us strive to do all that is possible to have Christian policemen, and to secure the great object of the Christian Police Association. Interesting references were made to the good accomplished by Miss C. Gurney in this work.

Rescue Work Among Children.

The disappointment was great during the first two days that the rain prevented the customary meetings under the familiar old mulberry tree, whose dripping foliage offered a cold reception to those who would fain have sat under its shadow with delight. On the second day the people who wanted to hear about the work among destitute children crowded into No. 6 Room, which proved far too small, and even the largest basement room (No. 4), to which an adjournment was made, was not equal to the occasion.

Mr. JAMES E. MATHIESON, who presided, alluded to the revival of thirty years ago as producing all kinds of mission work. He then touched upon the great evils of great cities, especially in the waste of child-life; and retold with good effect the touching story of the Pope of Rome, who, seeing some fair flaxen-haired children for sale, inquired who they were; and being told they were Angli, replied, "Not Angli, but angels, if they should be Christians." But badly as those children were treated in ancient Rome, they are treated no better in modern London. He thanked God for the noble men and women who are caring for the children, and giving so many of them a fresh start in life.

Mr. LEONARD K. SHAW, of Manchester, said this rescue work was deeply important and interesting. He saw before him two long lines of children—one hedged in on either side and cared for in every way, the other with a precipice on either side, over which the children were perpetually falling. The work of the Boys' and Girls' Refuges was begun nearly nineteen years ago. The special features were that none but homeless and destitute children were received: that they were received at once, without election or recommendation; and that they were admitted without respect of creed. He amused the audience by saying it was a work of art to get the truth from a destitute boy, and that the readiest way was first to gain his confidence. They had a large central Refuge and sixteen different Homes. On Sunday they took the children to church and chapel alternately, and in the Homes the Scriptures were read every morning and evening. Among the institutions there was a Girls' Home, seven small Orphan Homes, a Seaside Home at Lytham, an All-night Shelter, a Day Nursery, a City Camp for Summer Holidays, and a Prison Gate Mission. Since last September 9000 discharged prisoners had passed through their hands, many of whom had signed the pledge.

Dr. BARNARDO rejoiced to know that in a gathering of Christians for fellowship there was reserved a place to listen to the cry of the children. He and his helpers were engaged in seeking to save the children from sin and misery, but chiefly to bring them to the knowledge of Christ. He gave several illustrations of the kind of children rescued, and then touched on the improved legislation in reference to the imprisonment of children. Twenty years ago there were 16,000 in prison, now only 1000. The great aim of his institutions was to keep the doors so widely open that children should easily be secured. Referring to his emigration scheme he said what an immense comfort it was to have so large a sphere as Canada for placing out children. Emigration was hopeful. He sent off 166 on the last day of May; all over twelve were placed out at once, and more were wanted. His next point was the boarding-out system at home, by which children are placed in cottage homes, and well looked after by proper visitors. He animadverted strongly on the folly of Boards of Guardians who continue to erect costly buildings in which to bring up pauper children (one parish having recently decided to spend £70,000 on such a school), instead of boarding the children out. Last year alone the number received with the various institutions was 1668. Although this meeting lasted two hours its interest was maintained to the close.

Christian Post-Office Association.

This meeting was held immediately after the United Communion, on Friday. The tent was filled. Sir ARTHUR BLACKWOOD presided, and there were present many Post-office officials from London and the suburbs. On one form sat lads from the newspaper department, on another a dozen bright-looking lads in well-brushed uniforms representing the telegraph messengers.

The speeches and testimonies were limited to two minutes each, although, in the case of Revs. F. B. Meyer and E. W. Moore the rule was honoured in the breach by an extension to five minutes. Mr. Meyer, in encouraging the workers, suggested that, whenever we hear the postman's rap, we should remember the Christian Post-office Association, and offer a prayer for a blessing on the work. The testimonies of the men and lads were bright indeed. Some of them spoke of persecution and ridicule, which they are enabled to bear, and gave encouraging testimony to the good resulting from personal Christian example in departmental service. All expressed a deep thankfulness for the blessings the Association had brought through its organisation of services and Bible-classes. The speaking was interspersed with lively singing.

Open-air Preaching.

Only on the closing day of the Conference did the weather allow meetings to be held in the open air, when, with singular appropriateness, the subject of "Open-air Preaching" was down for consideration. Three hundred extra seats had been placed round the mulberry tree for Dr. Barnardo's meeting of the previous day, when the rain held sole possession. But now they were filled with eager occupants, and a large number remained standing, all rejoicing that, in the providence of God, they could once more carry away fresh memories of a place where many hallowed hours have been spent at former Conferences.

Mr. EDWARD TROTTER made a capital chairman, merely guiding the meeting, save for a brief incident at the close, in which he told of a meeting he and his wife held in an out-of-the-way camp on a recent visit to New Zealand. Rev. T. S. WYNKOOP, of Washington, U.S., modestly and briefly told of his open-air efforts in India and in Washington, where he had had much encouragement in seeing sinners converted. Mr. CHARLES COOK, of Hyde Park Hall, told something of the open-air mission at Epsom during "the Derby" week, in which he paid a well-merited tribute to a choir of twenty-four London city missionaries, who co-operated with the open-air mission on "the Derby" and "the Oaks" days. This was a new departure, and he believed that more good was done than in the previous five years' efforts. Some of this work was done on the course itself before the racing commenced. The second part of his speech related to his well-known work in Hyde Park, where he has been preaching almost every night since the beginning of May, with most encouraging results. He urged his hearers to take up this work in towns and villages.

Mr. W. HIND SMITH told how the work was being taken up by the branches of the Y.M.C.A.'s, and what a fine field of labour it afforded these Christian young men. Dr. BAEDEKER, who had just returned from Russia, said that in that land, where religious liberty was unknown, he had spoken in the open-air in twenty degrees of frost. He urged his hearers to pray that the word of the Lord might have free course in that country.

Dr. A. J. GORDON, of Boston, U.S., related the fact that George Whitefield had preached under an elm-tree on Boston Common to vast crowds of people. After being free to preach thus for 200 years they wanted to keep up the tradition. But the city government had decided that there should be no open-air preaching without a permit from the Mayor, and one of their ministers was now in prison for violating this ordinance. He declined to ask for permission to do that which their fathers had done freely, so he was fined heavily, and, refusing to pay the fine, was sent to prison. This was last October. The speaker had himself been brought before the court, and fined for doing the same thing. Now they were agitating for the repeal of this ordinance, and a supreme court in one of the States had decided in favour of this free preaching. But this prosecution in Boston had been overruled of the Lord to the furtherance of the Gospel, for it had brought out many more open-air preachers. Dr. Gordon is evidently an ardent, able, and successful preacher "Beneath the Blue Sky," to quote the title of a new work on open-air preaching to be published shortly. He related several incidents in which the word thus spoken had been blessed to the conversion of sinners.

Teaching by Pictures.

There were scores of open-air preachers in the crowd, all of whom would have testified to the value of this mode of evangelisation; but time fled all too fast, so the Chairman introduced the next item in the programme, by calling upon Mr. GAWIN KIRKHAM to expound his Dutch picture of "the Broad and Narrow Way," which was suspended on a frame between the mulberry-tree and the pear-tree. It is 12 ft. long and 9 ft. wide, and prettily painted in dulled oils, and can be shown indoors or out. Mr. Kirkham has expounded it in public 995 times. The popularity of the picture was proved by the fact that since it was published, five years ago, more that 50,000 copies have been sold.

Other Meetings.

Each morning at nine the deaconesses, servants, orphans, stewards and a few visitors gathered in No. 6 room for what might be called family worship, when the children sang sweetly, and learned divines like Dr. A. J. Gordon and Dr. Andrew Bonar discoursed so simply that the same children could understand them. Another unique meeting must be alluded to. On the last morning, after the stewards' breakfast in the tent, the waiters, nearly fifty in number were gathered to hear an address and receive a book as a memento of the Conference. The former was given by Mr. Kirkham, who selected as his topic the subject of "Waiting," as illustrated in the Bible, and the distribution of a volume of "Faithful Words" was made, after prayer, by Dr. Partridge.

Thanksgiving Meeting.

On Saturday the usual morning Thanksgiving Meeting was held in the Large Hall, when Lord RADSTOCK presided. Mr. J. E. Mathieson read over the numerous requests for prayer, and laid them before the throne of grace. The CHAIRMAN delivered an address based on Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians. After a brief exposition, he said that at the first Conference of the kind there were about two hundred present, and what made it such a wonderful blessing was the attractive power of the beloved and saintly Mr. Pennefather, so that the weak ones felt, though they were cold-shouldered by other people, they got a welcome of love from him. That was the mighty power that overshadowed them in those early days of Conference, so that scores of men were to be seen broken down simply by the revelation of the love of Christ. His was a healing, feeling ministry. It was just the ministry of love that made him such a power to the Church of God throughout the land.

Mr. HENRY EDWARDS developed the thought that as Christ is already in the glory, and his glory is our glory, therefore we as believers are there also. See what comes out of this position: what a sense of dignity, what a standard! In whatever calling we are, whatever we do is to be done in the style that becomes those who are with Christ in glory. We shall be courtly in heaven to each other in our glorified bodies, and very graceful, always full of love. Then we are responsible to be here in that respect what we shall be there; and, if we are responsible, then we have the power. If we believe that we are wanting in power, and our heart is set upon it, we will not be long till we find out that power belongeth unto God, and we can find it whenever we need it.

Rev. THEODORE MONOD said that if we glorify Christ He will glorify us. As for peace, we have been told several times that it will not do to stop at peace, though that is a wonderfully sweet blessing. Three-fourths of our hymnology s about peace. But let us take for our last message what the same Apostle, who speaks of the God of peace, says, "My God shall supply all your need, according to his riches in glory by Jesus Christ." God shall supply all your need that you think so much of, that you feel so sore at times—in your special difficulties, your circumstances, your health in the place that you live in, that is perhaps so Godless. Bring all the vessels, and He shall fill them with oil. Is there more need than you thought? Then there is more grace than you thought. God will supply, not according to our need, but according to his riches in glory. How much do God's riches go beyond our need! Let us not think too much of ourselves. It is a good thing to be sick of self; let us not talk to Him about our desires, or about our own unworthiness so much as about Himself. Speak about his riches in glory, according to which our God shall supply all our need.

NOTES FROM THE MISSION FIELD.

A STRIKING SCENE.

A CORRESPONDENT residing among the Neilgery Hills, India, writes:—I lately had the privilege and honour of taking a small part in a baptismal service on these Indian Hills. A native of the hill tribe called "Badaga" came forward for baptism in the very teeth of the organised and determined opposition and open persecution of all the people of his tribe. Simply and unobtrusively this man offered a noble testimony to the power of the grace of God. Before being baptized, he challenged all his assembled tribesmen to come forward and question or prove the sincerity of his motives, or to point him out anything better than what he now sought. All the people were dumb and seemed awe-struck and only able to gaze with astonishment at his Christ-like bearing. Then he made an earnest appeal to all present, and closed with the striking words—"He that is born once, dies twice; but he that is born twice can die but once."

MRS. AMANDA SMITH.

Mrs. Davis, of Foxrock, Dublin, has received a letter from Mrs. Smith, dated Monrovia, Liberia, May 6, in which she says:—

I left Cape Palmas last Sunday, and arrived here on Thursday morning. If I were a settled missionary in one place and not an evangelist, so often called to go here and there after a few months or weeks, so far as my mail or a box reaching me, it would be best for me; but as a loyal subject to my King, when I feel moved by Him to go, no matter how much I want to stay, I feel it my bounden duty to go at once and trust all to Him. In your letters I found the bank orders you speak of. I praise the Lord for his loving mercy, and thank the donors and you for your kindness.

An English steamer has passed down and may have on board the box you mention having sent to Cape Palmas consigned to Mr. J. S. Pratt for me, or, in case of my absence, for Miss McNeill, who is at Plukie. I hope it is so, for everything at Cape Palmas is most scarce and expensive at this time; they are expecting to engage in war very soon, unless God shall interpose and avert it in some way, so that everything is in a very unsettled state just now. But Miss McNeill is calm and for herself has no fear, but is trusting in the Lord Jehovah, and going ahead.

I will write to you before I leave; I do not see my way further than Sierra Leone just now; a kind friend has invited me to Sherbro, the Shangey Mission. I am afraid I have not means to come direct to England. I may go to Sherbro and rest awhile and see what the Lord will do.

A MOHAMMEDAN CONVERT.

Rev. James Lyon, missionary in charge, M. E. Hindustani Mission, Hyderabad D., India, writes on June 19: It will interest your readers to learn that God has given to us a convert from Mohammedanism. I baptized the man yesterday. About one month ago God gave us our first convert. We now praise Him for another. Please join us in praise and prayer.

SALVATION ARMY IN CEYLON.

We have been in Ceylon now some four or five years, and, although there have been discouragements and difficulties, the outcome is sufficient to make us thank God and take courage. Nothing, perhaps, tells more for the solidity of our work than the band of devoted native workers we have been enabled to raise up, especially during the last two years. The native officers now number over forty, all of them fully engaged in the work.

One of our native lads, in charge of a station, states in a recent letter that nearly a hundred have been enrolled as soldiers. Nearly the whole of these have been drawn from the ranks of Buddhism, and the freedom with which the Captain is enabled to mix with them enables him to ascertain very readily if it is a real work of grace, manifesting itself in the daily life, or simply an empty profession. The work is apparently very real and satisfactory. Not less pleasing is a work among drunkards and other notorious sinners in Kandy. It is of such a powerful character that even Europeans and Burghers have been attracted and converted.

There are in the Colombo prisons alone some 2000 prisoners, and amongst these we are projecting a special rescue work by means of a "Prison-gate Brigade."

Both inside and outside our ranks there is a great desire to perpetuate the memory in the Island of the late Colonel Weerasooriya in some permanent form. This proposal has met with great favour, even the Buddhist paper advocating it. The idea is to build a hall in Colombo to seat 1000 persons, at a cost of some £1000 to £1500, including land, which will be known as the "Weerasooriya Memorial Congress Hall." AMONG THE JEWS IN RUSSIA.

THE town of Wilna, in Russia, is an important centre of Jewish influence, perhaps the stronghold of modern Rabbinism. It has a Jewish population of at least 95,000, and has been called the Russian Jerusalem. It is a significant fact that the New Testament is now being read by many of its Rabbis, and that among the students in its colleges there is a growing knowledge of Him who is the hope of Israel.

Rev. John Wilkinson, director of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, writes to us in terms of great joy, describing the remarkable success which has attended the efforts of Mr. Adler and others in distributing Hebrew New Testaments among the people. In a recent letter Mr. Adler thus speaks of a day's proceedings: "Jews and Jewesses, old and young, artisans and scholars, came in large numbers asking for books. We had them twenty, and sometimes more, at a time. Those who passed the Hebrew examination were presented with a copy of the Hebrew New Testament. But we let none of them go until we had explained our object and the contents of the book. We are longing for the Judeo-Polish Scriptures, as many Jews and especially Jewesses do not know Hebrew. A poor old Jew fell the other day, and was taken to the hospital. A portion of our New Testament was found on him. The doctor remonstrated, but the old man simply replied, 'I like it; it tells me how to come to God.' Incidents of great interest frequently come under our notice, the result of our distribution of New Testaments."

VILLAGE HOMES AT ADDLESTONE.

THURSDAY last week was "Commemoration Day" in connection with the Princess Mary Village Homes at Addlestone. The weather being unpropitious, the proceedings were not attended by such a numerous company as would otherwise have been present to encourage Mrs. Meredith and her band of helpers in their noble work.

It need hardly be said that the purpose of the Institution is the bringing up of children whose parents have been convicted of crime, or who are peculiarly exposed to demoralising influences. The average number of children in the Homes last year was 200; they were of all ages, from infancy to fourteen years. There were children of hardened criminals, and children who had been rescued just in time from vicious surroundings. In the Homes they are trained for lives of usefulness, as well as brought up in "the nurture and admonition of the Lord."

Princess Mary, Duchess of Teck, takes a lively interest in the Homes, and several influential ladies and gentlemen accompanied her to Addlestone on the day already named. After a short service in the chapel, the Princess distributed the prizes to the children. A number of "old girls," who had kept their situations for a specified time, were also rewarded. Applications for admission to the Homes increase in number, and this may fairly be regarded as evidence of the great need of such institutions.

In the course of some cheering remarks after the prize distribution, Lord Radstock asked that the many encouragements and successes of the past should be regarded as pledges for the future. He showed what a sad need there is for good women to give themselves to such work as this, and expressed a hope that one practical result of the afternoon's proceedings would be that more helpers would come forward.

BILLINGSGATE CHRISTIAN MISSION.

THE speaker at the monthly Gospel service, in the Subscription Rooms, Billingsgate Market, on Tuesday week, was Rev. Mark Guy Pearse. The hon. treasurer, Mr. W. H. Williamson, made a statement in reference to the new Building Fund. In addition to munificent gifts from the City and Fishmonger Corporations, as well as private individuals, smaller amounts have been given, which bring the total amount up to £700. It is desired to begin building as soon as possible, and the Christian public are invited to help.

Mr. PEARSE gave a short address from the words, "Jesus said unto them, Come and dine" (John xxi. 12). The address appealed to the men engaged in the market. It savoured of the sea, its perils, and its lessons; the sympathy it expressed with those who do business on the water enabled the preacher to command instant and earnest attention. Referring to the narrative that surrounds the text, the preacher said: Christ never takes a man at his worst, and there is nothing worse than having to work hard, and yet accomplish nothing. The men spoken of had been fishing all night. They were cold, wet, hungry, and fagged. Christ did not say then, "Lovest thou Me?" Simon was too miserable to care for anybody or anything. Christ first said, "Come and dine." Then Simon became warm; he felt comfortable. He had forgotten the cold when dinner was over; then came the memorable question, "Lovest thou Me?" when He was glowing with gratitude and love.

Mr. Pearse drew three vivid word pictures, with a view to impress on the men the realities of the Christian life. We must not only know the truth about Jesus, but must receive Him into our hearts. Whilst the past may loom up behind us, Christ is ready to wipe it away, as the waves smooth out the sand-heaps upon the seashore. An earnest Gospel appeal closed the interesting and impressive utterance.

A VISIT TO THE LOCK HOSPITAL,

HARROW ROAD, W.

AMONGST the curiosities that have attracted my attention in London I have seen few objects of more interest than the beautiful old-fashioned building called the Lock Hospital, placed as it is in the midst of a lovely garden, within five minutes' walk of the Royal Oak Underground Railway Station.

It was founded in 1746 for the medical treatment of our "unfortunate" sisters, and, strange to say, it is the only Institution precisely of the sort in this great Metropolis.

Arriving at the Hospital, we are shown into the reception room, where there is some quaint old furniture, and upon the walls of which are some handsome portraits of the founders and benefactors of the institution. This room opens into the secretary's office, where we find Mr. Algernon Coote; prompt, courteous, and effective in business, while full of sympathy for those in trouble, he kindly offers to accompany us through the building.

The Hospital is under the care of Mrs. Kydd, the matron. About one thousand of our fallen sisters annually avail themselves of the medical aid, and of the shelter afforded to them by this Institution; and many of them show a hearty appreciation of the sympathy and kindness which they receive, as well as of the efforts that are made to reclaim them.

Attached to the Hospital is a Home, founded in 1787 by Rev. Thomas Scott, the great English commentator. Into this department all are welcomed who are desirous to leave the paths of sin and shame, and who are willing to prove their sincerity by remaining for a year, during which time they have an abundance of hard work at laundry and other useful and bread-winning occupations. The laundry, where such are employed, is a model of industry, order, and contentment.

During the past five years some 450 young women have availed themselves of this Home, and have thence either been placed with their friends, who are communicated with wherever such is practicable, or else have been placed out in comfortable and respectable situations, experience having proved that in the great majority of cases their subsequent careers have been entirely satisfactory.

Moreover, workers from the Evangelisation Society and city missionaries have meetings from time to time for the reading of God's Word and for prayer, and these efforts are earnestly supplemented by Mrs. Algernon Coote's weekly Bible-class, as well as by the visits and classes of other lady workers, who have been much encouraged by finding amongst many of those who attend an earnest and heartfelt longing for better things.

This Home is under the immediate care of Miss McNiven, who, directed by the Ladies' Committee, faithfully carries out the philanthropic wishes of the Governors, and of the chairman, Lord Kinnaird.

In addition to the Hospital and the Home, a visitor should see the chapel, a handsome building, where Divine service is held weekly by Rev. Dr. Flavel Cook, the chaplain of the Institution, a man at once distinguished as a preacher, and gifted as an exponent of the Word of God.

At one time the Hospital was in receipt of £1400 a year from the Government; but since the repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts this contribution has been withdrawn. One result, of course, has been to place the Institution in serious financial difficulties, though, upon the other hand, many Christian people felt a conscientious objection to subscribing to an Institution deriving Government support in connection with those Acts. But this hindrance to their munificence no longer exists.

I asked the secretary, Mr. Algernon Coote, how much money the Governors want. He said, to clear off the debt, £6000; to reform and repair the buildings, £4000: total, £10,000. And about £1400 a year in addition to their present income, which is about £5500 a year.

There is an abundance of genuine sympathy, where the facts are known, for this class of suffering humanity, as was evidenced lately by the splendid efforts made by philanthropists, by journalists, and by churches, to awaken the conscience of Christian England to a sense of her responsibility towards our fallen sisters.

A Pioneer Missionary.

AN excellent and timely addition to the missionary biographical series published by Messrs. Partridge & Co. is ROBERT MORRISON, the pioneer of Chinese Missions, by Rev. W. J. Townsend. Dr. Morrison's invaluable labours in connection with Bible translation deserve to be had in continual remembrance. They were frequently alluded to in the recent Missionary Conference (1s. 6d.).

The Expositor.

The half-yearly volume of this serial is full of instruction and suggestion. There is "strong meat" here, and plenty of it. When writers such as Principal Brown (of Aberdeen), Professors A. B. Bruce, T. K. Cheyne, A. B. Davidson, F. Godet. and W. G. Elmslie do their best, we shall be wise in giving them a good hearing. A capital etched portrait of Professor Davidson, supplemented by a literary sketch by Professor Elmslie, written in a very spirited and suggestive style, gives additional value to an otherwise weighty volume. (7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.)

John Colville, the Evangelist.

JOHN COLVILLE THE YOUNGER: A MEMOIR. By his Widow. 3s. 6d. Andrew Elliot, Edinburgh. The son of a gentleman of means, at Campbeltown, Ayrshire, the late Mr. John Colville, junior, gave his life, without reserve, to the service of Christ in the sphere of evangelisation. This account of his life and work is very well compiled, and contains a hearty preface by Rev. Peter Leys, who was for many years his close friend. The volume is enriched with an excellent portrait, and will assuredly be read with pleasure and profit by Christian workers in general, as well as by the large circle of those who were Mr. Colville's personal friends. Some sermons, notes, and letters by Mr. Colville form a useful appendix to the memoir.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE BOY'S OWN PAPER Summer Number (6d. Religious Tract Society) is full of very readable poems and stories, which will beguile many a weary moment during the coming holidays. The illustrations are good, and the whole contents bright and lively.

GREAT THOUGHTS FROM MASTER MINDS. 4s. 6d. A. W. Hall. Volume 9 of this attractive serial contains a number of illustrations as well as an admirable collection of "thoughts" usefully arranged. The popular is combined with the profound throughout, and if the title of the paper invites readers, it is certain that the pages are well filled with healthy and noble sentiments.

SPIRITUAL WORKINGS AND MANIFESTATIONS. By William Ramsey. A thoughtful work on this subject, edited, with useful additions, by Mr. H. L. Hastings, forms Nos. 22 and 23 of the Anti-Infidel Library. We have already spoken in terms of praise of this excellent series of pamphlets. These two publications are quite up to the standard already attained, and should be read by all who require information on the subject of spiritualism. (3d. each. Marshall Bros.)

THE GLEANER PICTORIAL ALBUM. This, the second of the series of three volumes surveying the work of the Church Missionary Society, deals with India, Ceylon, and Mauritius. Profusely illustrated, and got up admirably in all respects, the book is likely to prove very useful in the promotion of missionary interest. The peoples among whom the Society's agents labour, and the work which, under God, has been done by the Society's instrumentality, are set forth in very entertaining detail, and it is to be hoped that many will, by reading, be stimulated to have a part in these efforts to evangelise the world. (5s. Church Missionary Society's House.)

The City of London Association News (the monthly organ of the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A.) has in its current issue some deeply interesting "news from distant battle-fields," embracing Africa, China, and India. As we must look to the Associations for a large proportion of our future foreign missionaries we hope The Association News will continue to keep this theme well to the front.

CURED BY AN INCURABLE. By Rev. P. B. Power. Illustrated by Edmund Fitzpatrick. Second edition. 6d. Elliot Stock. Crowquill and Pencil point have combined to produce a touching tale of humour and pathos, "half sunshine, half tears," which no one can read without profit to themselves, and few without profit to the Palace of Pain, whose incurable inmates unconsciously effect the cure of a mind diseased.

In "ROUGH DIAMONDS" (2d. Morgan & Scott) an account is given of the founding of the Shaftesbury Institute, Harrow-street, Lisson-grove, N.W., and of work amongst factory girls by Miss Meredith Brown, and other ladies. The story is, undoubtedly, one of much loving effort, put forth under very trying circumstances, and it is hoped that many kind friends will come forward and help in the development of the various branches of the work of the Institute.

BABYHOOD is an excellent monthly serial for mothers. Devoted exclusively to matters relating to the care of infants and young children, parents and guardians will find in its pages much good counsel and many useful suggestions. The contributors in the departments of hygiene and nursing are practical, as well as cultured; and the less technical departments of the magazine are eminently readable and instructive. 6d. each number. Babyhood Publishing Company, 92 & 93, Fleet-street.

WHY ARE WE PROTESTANTS? By Emily S. Holt. This is a vigorous penny tract, published by the Church Association, 14, Buckingham-street, Strand. It is an address to the women of England, and well sets forth not only what evangelical Christians protest against, but what they witness for. We trust it will be very widely circulated.

In "SAVED BY CHRIST ALONE," a neat little tract just published from Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling, there is an account of "a Roman Catholic who was brought from blindness and bondage to light and liberty." It speaks to Roman Catholics, Ritualists, and false teachers, and is also calculated to warn the careless, guide the anxious, and confirm young believers. The story originally appeared in these columns. (1s. per doz.)
